Remington for some years has "fair traded" firearms and ammunition throughout the United States where fair trade laws existed. It entered into retail fair trade contracts with numerous Massachusetts dealers, stipulating minimum retail prices for its products. In substitution for previous contracts, early in February, 1957, eighty dealers executed retail fair trade contracts governing the sale of firearms, and forty dealers executed similar contracts governing the sale of ammunition. These were executed in this Commonwealth by the dealers and at Bridgeport, Connecticut, by Remington. Lechmere did not sign such a contract although sent a blank form. Remington sells only to wholesale houses. It has no company stores in Massachusetts and does not solicit or sell to the retail trade.

[Affirmative Defense]

Lechmere's violation of the fair trade law is conceded. Its sole contention is that the omission of Remington, as a foreign corporation, to comply with G. L. c. 181 deprives it of the right of resort to the courts of this Commonwealth. See G. L. c. 181, § 5. Remington has not filed annual certificates of condition under G. L. c. 181, § 12 (as amended through St. 1953, c. 351), or a copy of its charter and other information under § 5, or appointed an attorney for the service of process under § 3 (as amended through St. 1955, c. 611, § 6). Remington's position is that these sections do not apply to it. Upon this affirmative defence set up in its answer, the burden of proof is upon Lechmere. Friedenwald Co. v. Warren, 195 Mass. 432, 435.

["Transacting Business"]

Remington's home office and principal place of business are in Bridgeport, where its ammunition is manufactured. Its rifles are manufactured at factories in Ilion, New York, and Findley, Ohio. It has no factory, plant, or warehouse in this Commonwealth, and renders no repair service here. It has maintained an office in Boston for many years. Its name is in the telephone and city directories, and appears on the building listing of tenants and on the office door. Also on the door is "Thomas F. Parker, Manager."

All the office furniture and equipment are owned by Remington. These include filing cabinets, which contain correspondence, stationery, activity reports, duplicates of orders, shipping documents pertaining to business originating in New England, and miscellaneous papers pertaining to the work of the office. The letterheads for local use bear in conspicuous type the name "Remington," a statement of its business, and the address, "Bridgeport 2, Conn." Some bear the words "District Office," others "District Sales Office," and the location in Boston. Six or seven sample guns are kept on the premises for exhibition to interested callers and for display by Parker in his field canvass of wholesale houses. With this exception, Remington does not keep or store in this Commonwealth any inventory of guns, ammunition, or spare parts. In the office there are chevrons or brassards for skeet and trap shooting which are supplied on request to gun clubs for awards to members. The only other property here is two automobiles "registered in Massachusetts with mail addresses in Boston and Bridgeport."

The office is maintained for Parker as Remington's New England district manager. He is a resident of this Commonwealth. The only person with full and regular time attendance at the office is a woman secretary. Approximately one half of Parker's time is spent on the road in the various New England States. He has the assistance of two field men, one a resident of Maine and the other of western Massachusetts. Principally engaged in soliciting the wholesale trade, the latter call at the office infrequently, and attend three or four conferences a year at which the program for soliciting business from wholesale dealers in the New England States is discussed. Parker swears to bills in equity brought against Massachusetts violators. In cases instituted against violators in the Superior Court, Suffolk County, one in 1956 and the other in 1957, venue, otherwise lacking, was had by alleging that Remington had a usual place of business in Boston.

Parker's principal activity, requiring the major part of his time, is the solicitation of orders from wholesalers throughout New England. He and his two assistants from time to time call on some of the larger retail dealers to observe the display of Remington products, feel the pulse of the trade, and check fair trade prices to be sure that they are maintained. They discuss with those dealers any sales problems, and generally endeavor to promote good will, but they do not solicit retail business or effect sales. On rare occasions Parker receives a complaint from a wholesaler concerning a late shipment or quality. He generally discusses the complaint with the one making it, and tries to straighten the matter out. In some cases he reports the matter to Bridgeport to be dealt with direct.

Every year each of Remington's wholesale customers receives a "prices and terms" sheet setting forth the terms of sale of its firearms or ammunition. Sales are effected in the following manner: The customer mails an order to Bridgeport, where all orders are accepted or rejected. There an order form is made up, a copy sent to Parker, and an acceptance sent to the customer. Shipments are made f. o. b. the factory. No deliveries are made by, from, or through the Boston office. Invoices are sent the customer from Bridgeport. All remittances are made by the customer to Bridgeport.

The field men have instructions not to accept orders. No payments are made to, and no collections are made by, the Boston office. Parker does not intervene in an effort to induce customers to pay overdue bills. Parker and the employees are paid from Bridgeport. Few customers visit the Boston office. From time to time telephone calls seek information as to where Remington products can be purchased. These inquiries are referred to its wholesale dealers in the area.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Remington holds no meetings of stockholders or of directors in this Commonwealth. No corporate books and records are kept here. It does not advertise in Massachusetts newspapers. Its principal bank accounts are in Bridgeport. There is a $300 bank account in a Boston bank in Parker's name which is used to pay the office rent, telephone bills, postage, and petty expenditures.

[State Statute—Compliance as Condition to Use of State Courts]

Section 5 of c. 181 provides that "Every foreign corporation of the classes described in section three, before transacting business in this commonwealth, shall, upon payment of the fee provided by section twenty-three,[1] file . . . a copy of its charter . . . certified . . . by-laws, and a certificate" of certain information as to the corporate officers, meetings, and stock. For failure to comply with §§ 3, 5, and 12 officers are subject to fine and to joint and several liability "for all debts and contracts of the corporation, except such as relate to interstate commerce, contracted or entered into within this commonwealth or for the purpose of being performed therein, so long as such failure continues. Such failure shall not affect the validity of any contract with such corporation, but no action shall be maintained or recovery had in any of the courts of this commonwealth by any such foreign corporation so long as it fails to comply with said sections."

By § 3 (as amended through St. 1955, c. 611, § 6) "Every foreign corporation, [1] which does business in this commonwealth or [2] which has a usual place of business in this commonwealth, or [3] owns real property therein without having such a usual place of business, or [4] which is engaged therein" in certain construction work "shall, before doing business in this commonwealth," appoint the commissioner of corporations and taxation its agent for the service of process "in any action or proceeding against it." In case of noncompliance with § 3, § 3A (inserted by St. 1928, c. 98, § 1) provides that a foreign corporation "in relation to any cause of action or proceeding arising out of such business" shall be deemed to have appointed the commissioner its agent. This means business arising in this Commonwealth. Trojan Engr. Corp. v. Green Mountain Power Corp., 293 Mass. 377.

Section 12 (as amended through St. 1953, c. 351), which prescribes the filing of an annual certificate of condition, applies to "every foreign corporation, other than one which is required . . . to make annual returns to the department of public utilities."

Other penalties may be visited under c. 181. For failure to comply with §§ 3 and 5 the foreign corporation may be enjoined from doing business (§ 19). For failure to file a certificate of condition under § 12, daily amounts may be forfeited to the Commonwealth (§ 21), and the corporation may be enjoined from doing business (§ 22).

[Corporations Engaged Solely in Interstate Commerce]

The plaintiff concedes that it might be subject to the service of process in this Commonwealth. See Wyshak v. Anaconda Copper Mining Co., 328 Mass. 219; Jet Mfg. Co. Inc. v. Sanford Ink Co., 330 Mass. 173. Its contentions are (1) that the qualification requirements of §§ 3, 5, and 12 do not apply to foreign corporations engaged solely in interstate commerce, and (2) that it is such a corporation.

Our cases have held most definitely in accordance with the former contention. Attorney Gen. v. Electric Storage Battery Co. 188 Mass. 239, 240-241 (§ 3). Garvey v. Wesson, 258 Mass. 48, 51-52 (§ 5). Lever Bros. Co. v. Commonwealth, 232 Mass. 22, 26 (§ 12). See Pacific Wool Growers v. Commissioner of Corps. & Taxn., 305 Mass. 197, 208.* We have not been asked to reconsider whether in the light of subsequent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States there should be a broadening of the scope of c. 181 on the ground that it now appears that the constitutional limitations on State legislative power could have been more narrowly construed. See Wyshak v. Anaconda Copper Mining Co., 328 Mass. 219, 223. The decisions in the first three cases cited, so far as they now concern us, were rested in the main upon legislative intent. We would not be inclined at this late date to make a retroactive reinterpretation of that intent on a matter which is largely one of legislative policy. See Pulson v. American Rolling Mill Co., 170 F. 2d 193 (1st Cir.).

[1] Seventy-five dollars. For filing all other certificates and statements, including the annual certificate of condition required by § 12, $25. § 23, as amended through St. 1957, c. 698, § 18.

* Accord: Bank of America, Natl. Trust & Sav. Assn. v. Lima, 103 F. Supp. 916 (D. C. Mass.). Cf. Canadian Pac. Ry. v. Sullivan, 126 F. 2d 433 (1st Cir.).

The principal issue is whether the plaintiff is engaged exclusively in interstate commerce. Most of its activities have been held not to amount to more than interstate commerce. "The keeping of an office and a local bank account and the employment of a stenographer are incidental instrumentalities reasonably necessary to the conduct of this interstate commerce, and hence inseparable from it." Marconi Wireless Tel. Co. of America v. Commonwealth, 218 Mass. 558, 569. Alpha Portland Cement Co. v. Commonwealth, 248 Mass. 156, 159.[1] McCall v. California, 136 U. S. 104, 108-109. In the same category are the employment of salesmen and the presence of the six or seven sample guns. Cheney Bros. Co. v. Commonwealth, 246 U. S. 147, 153.[2]

[Advertising]

There are two novel features of the present case. One of slight import is the supply of chevrons and brassards to be donated, as we infer, to gun clubs, which were not its customers. These trifling gifts are in the nature of advertising and are insufficient in themselves and in their manner of distribution to amount to the doing of a local business.

[Fair Trade Contracts]

The other feature is the fair trade contracts made with Massachusetts dealers. These contracts were made in protection of the good will of the plaintiff's interstate business. Bulova Watch Co., Inc. v. Anderson [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,036] 270 Wis. 21, 26. As we said in General Elec. Co. v. Kimball Jewelers, Inc. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,291] 333 Mass. 665, 669-670, "The fair trade law permits producers of trade marked commodities to protect their trade marks and good will from damage resulting from cut rate competition by fixing the prices at which their merchandise may be resold by the dealers."

[Enforcement Methods]

Remington's fair trade enforcement methods are set forth in the master's report. Violations are reported to the manager of products at Bridgeport. A telegram to the alleged violator calls upon him to discontinue. This is followed by a confirming letter, enclosing a copy of Remington's current price contract and a price list. At the same time a letter to the person reporting the violation advises that "it is definitely the intention of Remington to strictly enforce the maintenance of fair trade prices with every means permitted by law." In most cases the alleged violator makes denial or promises to comply. If no reply is received in thirty days, another letter is sent. In many instances Parker or one of the field men gets in touch with the alleged violator and attempts to achieve compliance. Cases where continued violations are reported are referred to Remington's legal department, which hires a professional shopper, and, upon receipt of his report, refers the matter to local counsel. From time to time suits have been brought in various States. In each of the years 1956 and 1957 three suits were brought in this Commonwealth, in some of which preliminary injunctions served the purpose. In one case a consent decree was signed, and in two the defendant signed a fair trade agreement.

The activities of Parker, the field agents, or the professional shoppers are a part of the plaintiff's interstate business and a necessary prelude to court enforcement. See International Textbook Co. v. Pigg, 217 U. S. 91; Crenshaw v. Arkansas, 227 U. S. 389. Resort to the courts similarly is not to be regarded as intrastate business. Sioux Remedy Co. v. Cope, 235 U. S. 197, 202-203.

[Injunction Granted]

There should be a decree enjoining the defendant in accordance with the first two prayers of the bill, with costs to the plaintiff.

So ordered.

---

[1] Reversed on other questions in Alpha Portland Cement Co. v. Commonwealth, 268 U. S. 203.

[2] Reversing the portion relating to Cheney Brothers Company in Marconi Wireless Tel. Co. of America v. Commonwealth, 218 Mass. 558, 569-571.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[¶ 69,348] Wybrant System Products Corporation, et al. v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. No. 268—October Term, 1958. Docket No. 25302. Argued April 17, 1959. Decided May 5, 1959.

On petition to review an order of the Federal Trade Commission.

Federal Trade Commission Act

False Advertising—Medicinal or Curative Properties of Hair Preparation—Male Pattern Baldness—Dissemination of Advertising in Interstate Commerce Likely To Induce Indirect Purchase of Products for Home Use—Federal Trade Commission Jurisdiction—Expert Testimony.—A Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting respondents from disseminating any advertisement which represents that the use of their hair preparations will prevent or overcome excessive hair fall or cause new hair to grow, unless such representation is limited to cases other than those arising by reason of male pattern baldness, and the advertisement reveals the fact that the great majority of cases of excessive hair fall are the beginning and more fully developed stages of male pattern baldness and that the preparations will be of no value in such cases, was affirmed. The Federal Trade Commission's jurisdiction under Section 12(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act was sufficiently established by evidence that advertisements were placed in newspapers with interstate circulation, and that the advertisements, though designed primarily to sell hair and scalp treatments, were "likely to induce * * * indirectly the purchase of" the preparations that were also sold in substantial quantities for home use. It was not determined whether the use of the preparations in connection with an office treatment constituted a sale under Section 12 of the Act. The testimony of the Commission's several expert witnesses that the preparations and treatments cannot cure male pattern baldness provided ample basis for the conclusion that the advertisements were false. Since these witnesses freely conceded that some authorities had expressed somewhat contrary views, the refusal to receive in evidence the medical treatises that the respondents offered did not constitute reversible error.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5087.31, 5201; False Advertising, Vol. 2, ¶ 6005.15, 6005.20, 6005.61; FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611.27.

For the petitioners: Edward F. Howrey, of Howrey & Simon, Washington, D. C. (John Bodner, Jr., of Howrey & Simon, on the brief).

For the respondent: Francis C. Mayer, Attorney, Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D. C. (Earl W. Kintner, General Counsel, and James E. Corkey, Assistant General Counsel, FTC, on the brief).

Affirming a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order in Dkt. 6472.

Before: CLARK, Chief Judge, and SWAN and MOORE, Circuit Judges.

Petitioners seek review and the setting aside of an order directing them to cease and desist from certain advertising practices.

[FTC Order affirmed]

PER CURIAM [In full text]: Petitioner's advertisements were placed in newspapers with interstate circulation; and though designed primarily to sell their hair and scalp treatments, the material clearly was "likely to induce * * * indirectly the purchase of" the preparations that they also sold in substantial quantities for home use.[1] This is sufficient to establish the Commission's jurisdiction under § 12(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 52 (a)(1). Mueller v. United States, 5 Cir., [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,219] 262 F. 2d 443. The firm testimony of the Commission's several expert witnesses that petitioners' preparations and treatments cannot cure male pattern baldness provides ample basis for the Trial Examiner's conclusion that the advertisements were false. And since these witnesses freely conceded that some authorities had expressed somewhat contrary views, we do not think the Trial Examiner's refusal to receive in evidence the medical treatises that petitioners offered constituted reversible error. See Dolcin Corp. v. F. T. C., D. C. Cir., [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,791] 219 F. 2d 742, 747-749, certiorari denied 348 U. S. 981.

[1] Neither the Commission nor the Trial Examiner determined whether the use of preparations in connection with an office treatment constitutes a sale under § 12 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. § 52. We construe the Commission's order—directed at advertisements by petitioners "in connection with the offering for sale, sale or distribution" of their preparations—to be similarly limited.

Affirmed.

[¶ 69,349] Elliot Knitwear, Inc., a corporation; Elliot Import Corporation, a corporation; and Herman Gross, individually, and as an officer of said corporation v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. No. 158—October Term, 1958. Docket No. 25239. Submitted March 13, 1959. Decided May 6, 1959.

Petition to review and set aside an order of the Federal Trade Commission to cease and desist from using a certain trade name on sweater products. Opinion below reported at 1957-58 TRADE REGULATION REPORTER [Transfer Binder] ¶ 27,199 (April 25, 1958). Reversed and remanded.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Unfair Practices—Misrepresentation of Fiber Content of Products—Use of Trade Name Implying Cashmere Content—Label's Disclosure of Actual Fiber Content—Deception—Sufficiency of Evidence—Validity of Order Prohibiting Use of Trade Name.—A Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting the use of the word "Cashmora" on all wool sweaters not made or comprised of a substantial amount of cashmere was vacated and the proceeding remanded to the Commission on the ground that the Commission's finding that the use of the trade name on labels was deceptive per se was not based on substantial evidence. The Commission submitted only the label into evidence, claiming that the trade name was deceptive per se. Under ordinary circumstances, the trade name, without more, might well be considered deceptive per se. However, this was not true with respect to the label in the instant case when considered in its entirety, since the label disclosed the actual fiber content of the sweaters. The specification of the fiber content of the sweaters precluded the Commission from holding the label deceptive per se.

On the basis of the record, the reviewing court also was of the opinion that the Commission abused its discretion in choosing a remedy, namely, the virtual excision of the trade name. However, since the case was to be remanded on the merits and further evidence adduced might have a bearing on the choice of remedy, the court made no final holding on the questions "whether the Commission made an allowable judgment in its choice of the remedy," and more specifically "whether the Commission abused its discretion in concluding that no change 'short of * * * excision' of the trade name would give adequate protection." The court, among other things, noted that complete excision may no doubt be ordered in cases in which a qualifying clause on the label would not clarify, but would only confuse the public and create a complete contradiction in terms; however, where qualifying phrases do not lead to a contradiction in terms, they may be allowed and complete excision of the trade name will not be ordered.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5081.797, 5201.341; Wool Labeling, Vol. 2, ¶ 6525.11; FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611.91, 8621.635, 8621.690.

For the petitioners: Martin C. Barell and Jack Verschleiser, of Goldstein, Golenbock & Barell, New York, N. Y.

For the respondent: Earl W. Kintner, General Counsel; James E. Corkey, Assistant General Counsel; and Frederick H. Mayer, Attorney, FTC, Washington, D. C.

Reversing and remanding a Federal Trade Commission ruling in Dkt. 6637.

Before: WASHINGTON,* WATERMAN and MOORE, Circuit Judges.

---

*Sitting by designation pursuant to 28 U. S. C. § 294(a).

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Label on Sweaters]

WASHINGTON, Circuit Judge [In full text]: The issue in the present case is whether the label appended to the sweaters sold by the petitioners is a violation of Section 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act,[1] which declares unlawful "Unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce * * *"[2]

The sweaters in question contained a blend of fibers consisting of 30% Angora rabbit and 70% lambs wool. Although containing no cashmere, this blend had many of the desirable characteristics of cashmere. Petitioners' products sold for about one-third the price of cashmere sweaters. The label used displayed the word "Cashmora" in large script-like letters. Below in smaller letters were the words "By Elliot." On the bottom of the label in much smaller letters were the Wool Products Labeling Act registration number and the designation of the fiber content: "30% Angora—70% Lambs Wool."

[FTC Findings and Order]

The Federal Trade Commission found (1) that the sweaters contained no cashmere—a fact admitted by petitioners, (2) that the use of the name "Cashmora" served as a representation that the product so labeled contained cashmere, and (3) that, as used, the name "Cashmora" was false, misleading, and deceptive in violation of Section 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act. The Commission ordered the petitioners to cease and desist from using the word "Cashmora" on all wool sweater products not made or comprised of a substantial amount of cashmere. The label was allowed to be used, however, if the sweater did contain a substantial amount of cashmere, and if the label designated the actual percentage by weight of cashmere therein.

[Issue]

Under Section 5(c) of the Act "The findings of the Commission as to the facts * * * shall be conclusive," but only "if supported by evidence." Petitioners urge that there is no substantial evidence on the whole record to support the Commission's findings. The only testimony adduced was that of the petitioners' witnesses. The Commission submitted only the label into evidence, claiming that the name "Cashmora" was deceptive per se.

[Deception]

Under ordinary circumstances, the word "Cashmora" without more might well be considered deceptive per se. Cf. C. Howard Hunt Pen Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,286], 197 F. 2d 273, 280 (3d Cir. 1952); Perloff v. Federal Trade Commission [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,337], 150 F. 2d 757, 758 (3d Cir. 1945); Country Tweeds, Inc., 50 F. T. C. 470, 473 (1953). But this hardly can be said of the label in the present case when it is considered in its entirety. A label reading "Cashmora—30% Angora—70% Lambs Wool" is very different from one which does not contain a content specification. Both courts and the Commission have indicated that specifying content does much to remove a label's possibilities of deception.

In Jacob Siegel Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,451], 327 U. S. 608 (1946), a fabric coat, labeled "Alpacuna," contained approximately 50% alpaca, 20% mohair, and 30% wool, but no vicuna. The Federal Trade Commission had ordered the label to be completely excised. 36 F. T. C. 563 (1943). The Third Circuit affirmed. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,313] 150 F. 2d 751 (1944). The Supreme Court reversed, and remanded the case for the Commission to consider whether another remedy could be employed in order that the trade name be saved. Upon remand the Commission held that "nothing * * * shall prohibit use of the word Alpacuna to refer to respondent's garments if in immediate connection and conjunction therewith, wherever used, there appear words clearly and conspicuously designating all the constituent materials of fibers therein contained." 43 F. T. C. 256, 259-60 (1946).[3]

[1] 38 Stat. 719 (1914), as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 45 (a)(1) (1952).

[2] The complaint in this case is also brought under the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939, §§ 3-4, 54 Stat. 1129 (1940), 15 U. S. C. §§ 68a-b (1952), and the Commission rules thereunder. Since the Commission decided that the petitioner violated the Federal Trade Commission Act, it did not reach the question of whether there is any difference in the discretion of the Commission in choosing the appropriate remedy to correct deceptive practices under the two acts. See FTC opinion in 1957-58 TRADE REGULATION REPORTER [Transfer Binder] ¶ 27,199, at 36,603 (Apr. 25, 1958).

[3] Even prior to the remand of the case, the Supreme Court observed that "Petitioner now uses labels reading 'Alpacuna Coat—contains no vicuna' and specifies the fibre content of the cloth. * * *" 327 U. S. at 613, n. 4.

[Order Vacated]

If the specifying of the fiber content was sufficient to cure the deception in Jacob Siegel, it must follow that a similar specification of the fiber content in the present case precludes the Commission from holding the label here used deceptive per se. Let us compare the two words: Alpacuna and Cashmora. Each of the names suggests a truth: Alpacuna contains alpaca, and Cashmora contains angora. Each also suggests a falsity: Alpacuna dos not contain vicuna, nor does Cashmora contain cashmere. But, in view of the specification of the actual contents of the product, a finding that the label as a whole is deceptive must be based on substantial evidence. Such evidence may perhaps be obtainable, but it does not appear in the present record. The order must accordingly be vacated, and the case remanded to the Commission.[4]

[Excision of Trade Name]

We are constrained also to comment on the form of remedy chosen by the Commission in this case, namely, the virtual excision of the trade name. In Federal Trade Commission v. Royal Milling Co. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,022], 288 U. S. 212, 217 (1933), the Supreme Court held that the complete excision of a trade name

> "should not be ordered if less drastic means will accomplish the same result. The orders should go no further than is reasonably necessary to correct the evil and preserve the rights of competitors and public; and this can be done * * * by requiring proper qualifying words to be used in immediate connection with the names."

This principle was reaffirmed in the Jacob Siegel case, supra at 612.

Complete excision may no doubt be ordered in cases in which a qualifying clause on the label would not clarify, but would only confuse the public and create a complete contradiction in terms. Thus, in Federal Trade Commission v. Algoma Lumber Co. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,041], 291 U. S. 67 (1934), the product was yellow pine, but the label was "California White Pine." The Commission ordered, and the Supreme Court affirmed, the complete excision of the word "White," because presumably a qualifying phrase such as "not made of white pine" would have been completley contradictory. Similarly in Federal Trade Commission v. Army and Navy Trading Co. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,144], 66 App. D. C. 394, 88 F. 2d 776 (1937), few of the goods sold in the store were army and navy goods. The court held that the qualifying phrase "we do not deal in army and navy goods" would have been contradictory and would have tended to contuse. Therefore it affirmed the Commission order of complete excision, with certain minor exceptions.[5]

Where, however, qualifying phrases do not lead to a contradiction of terms, they have been allowed, and complete excision

[4] Our decision in E. F. Drew & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,408], 235 F. 2d 735 (1956), cert. denied, 352 U. S. 969 (1957), relied upon by the Commission, is not to the contrary of what we have just said. There, of course, oleomargarine was the product. The seller did his best to create a public impression that his oleomargarine was butter. Here, the seller is no doubt doing his best to persuade the public that his product could be cashmere, or at least is like it. The difference is quite clear, however. Drew advertised in ordinary English that his product was "churned to delicate, sweet creamy goodness," that it was "country-fresh," and that it had "the same day-to-day freshness which characterizes our other dairy products." The thrust of the Commission proceeding there, at least as we interpreted it, was directed to the misleading advertising in words of common English connotation. And the advertising was of the sort banned by a special act of Congress. Here the seller has thought up a label name which does not misrepresent in ordinary English words anything about his product. If the label also contains a statement of what actually is in the product, it will not necessarily mislead even "that vast multitude which includes the ignorant, the unthinking and the credulous, who, in making purchases, do not stop to analyze, but are governed by appearances and general impressions." Florence Manufacturing Co. v. J. C. Dowd & Co., 178 Fed. 73, 75 (2d Cir. 1910). See also Harsam Distributors, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,280], 263 F. 2d 396 (2d Cir., Feb. 13, 1959).

[5] See also Gold Tone Studios, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,665], 183 F. 2d 257 (2d Cir. 1950) (gold tone process for finishing pictures not employed by studio); El Moro Cigar Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,248], 107 F. 2d 429 (4th Cir. 1939) ("Havana Counts" name for cigars excised because cigars made entirely of domestic tobacco); Marietta Manufacturing Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 50 F. 2d 641 (7th Cir. 1931) (name "Sani-Onyx, a Vitreous Marble" excised because product neither marble nor onyx); Masland Duraleather Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 34 F. 2d 733 (3rd Cir. 1920) ("Duraleather" exercised because product not made of real leather).

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

of the name has not been ordered. See Jacob Siegel Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, supra ("Alpacuna"; coats contained no vicuna; qualification: specifying fiber content).[6] The Commission maintains that "Cashmora" cannot be cured by qualification, since any qualification would be a flat contradiction in terms. But Jacob Siegel (Alpacuna) and Country Tweeds (Kashmoor) were similar cases in which the Commission held that qualifications would cure deception.[7] Nor can the Commission fairly maintain that Elliot did not have a vested interest in the label of sufficient value to be considered in balancing the interests of the company vis-a-vis the public. The business interest was at least as strong as in Country Tweeds, Inc. (the "Kashmoor" coat case). Under the circumstances, and on the present record, there seems no sufficient basis for applying the contradiction doctrine to Cashmora, as the addition to the label of the phrase "contains no cashmere" might well be a permissible and sufficient remedy, if the Commission finds that the label as presently composed is in fact deceptive.

[Court's Power]

Section 5(c) of the Act gives this court power "to make and enter * * * a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside the order of the Commission, and enforcing the same to the extent that such order is affirmed * * *" See also Section 5(d). "[C]ourts will not interfere except where the remedy selected has no reasonable relation to the unlawful practices found to exist." Jacob Siegel v. Federal Trade Commission, 327 U. S. at 613. The question is "whether the Commission made an allowable judgment in its choice of the remedy," and more specifically "whether the Commission abused its discretion in concluding that no change 'short of * * * excision' of the trade name would give adequate protection." Id. at 612.

[No Final Holding]

On the present record, we think the Commission abused its discretion in choosing a remedy. But, inasmuch as the case is to be remanded on the merits, and further evidence adduced may have a bearing on the choice of remedy, we make no final holding on either issue.

[Remanded]

The case will be remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

So ordered.

---

[6] See also Federal Trade Commission v. Royal Milling Co., supra ("Milling Co.," "Mill"; companies did not grind flour; qualifications: "Not a grinder of grain."); Bear Mill Manufacturing Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,189], 98 F. 2d 67 (2d Cir. 1938) ("Mill," "Manufacturing"; company did not manufacture; qualification: "Converters, not manufacturers of textiles"); M. Fluegelman & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 37 F. 2d 59 (2d Cir. 1930) ("Satimaid," "Satinized"; product had satin weave, but had cotton, not silk, content; qualification: "a cotton fabric," "no silk," etc.); Country Tweeds, Inc. supra ("Kashmoor"; coats contained no cashmere; qualification; "contains no cashmere"). See also Federal Trade Commission v. Good-Grape Co., 45 F. 2d 70 (6th Cir. 1930); Federal Trade Commission v. Casoff, 38 F. 2d 790 (2d Cir. 1930). Contra, Cohen Brothers Corp., 27 F. T. C. 923 (1938) ("Kashmoor"; Knitted dresses containing no cashmere; complete excision).

[7] As the Commission explained in Country Tweeds, Inc., supra at 474:

"If the trade name were 'Cashmere' itself, the absolute excision would appear to be inescapable. A complete contradiction of terms such as 'Cashmere—contains no cashmere' would not clarify the meaning, but would only tend to confuse. However, this is not true of the phrase 'Kashmoor—contains no cashmere.' While the trade name Kashmoor is a simulation of cashmere and while its use falsely implies a cashmere content in the garments so labeled, it is subject to clarification. An explanation that the garment so labeled is designed to imitate cashmere in appearance and softness, but does not contain any cashmere fibers, is not a flat contradiction of terms, but is a reasonable explanation which would remove the capacity and tendency toward deception inherent in the trade name Kashmoor used alone."

[¶ 69,350] B. B. Rogers, et al. v. The Douglas Tobacco Board of Trade, Inc., et al.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. No. 17401. Dated May 5, 1959.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Georgia.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Allocation of Tobacco Auction "Selling Time"—Necessary Allegations—Interstate Commerce—Public Injury—Prejudice to Public as Part of Test of Unreasonable Restraint of Trade.—In a tobacco warehouseman's treble damage action charging that a local board of trade violated the Sherman Antitrust Act in allocating auction "selling time" among warehouses, the trial court improperly instructed the jury that the warehouseman, in order to recover, had to prove, as "ultimate facts," that a 3½ per cent limitation on yearly increases or decreases in allotted selling time (1) affected interstate or foreign commerce, (2) tended to prejudice the public, (3) constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade, and (4) damaged the warehouseman. The trial court's first "ultimate fact" was either erroneous or misleading since, as a matter of law, auction sales of tobacco are "in" interstate commerce, and the court should have so instructed the jury. Where goods are purchased in one state for transportation to another, the commerce includes the purchase as much as it does the transportation. Also, prejudice to the public is not a separate ultimate fact, but a part of the test of an unreasonable restraint of trade. Specific public injury need not be proved; however, before it can be said that the particular conduct is forbidden as unreasonably restraining trade under the Sherman Antitrust Act, it must appear that such conduct tends or is reasonably calculated to prejudice the public interest. The "rule of reason" applies to restraints like the present one and the jury, under proper instructions, must decide the reasonableness of the limitation. Upon a re-trial, the warehouseman has the burden of proving that the limitation constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade and that he suffered a private injury as a direct result of that limitation.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.315, 2005.468; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.475, 9009.600, 9014.35.

For the plaintiffs: Charles J. Alexander and Norman M. Littell, Washington, D. C.; and John G. Kopp and J. Edwin Peavy, Waycross, Ga.

For the defendants: E. Kontz Bennett, Waycross, Ga.; Harold F. Baker, Washington, D. C.; R. Glenn Key, Winston-Salem, N. C.; and Montgomery L. Preston and George E. Maddox, Douglas, Ga.

For a prior opinion of the U. S. Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, see 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,706.

Before Rives, Jones, and Wisdom, Circuit Judges.

[Treble Damage Action—Prior Proceedings]

Rives, Circuit Judge [In full text]: This action is for treble damages for alleged violations of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act[1] in the allocation of selling time among the tobacco warehouses on the Douglas, Georgia, market. Most of the facts out of which this case arises, together with a description of the tobacco auction system, are set forth in our opinion on former appeal[2] and need not be repeated at length. The original complaint had involved only the 1954 and 1955 tobacco market seasons. The first appeal was from the judgment of the district court sustaining the motions of the defendants for judgment on the pleadings. As to the year 1954, the decisive question was whether the provision for the allocation of selling time to a new warehouse was an unreasonable, and hence illegal, restraint of trade. We agreed with the district court that it was not shown to be such. In the year 1955, the plaintiff was affected for the first time by a 3½ per cent limitation provision on increases and decreases in selling time as that limitation was construed and applied. We reversed as to the 1955 tobacco market season and remanded the cause for further proceedings, saying:

[1] See 15 U. S. C. A. Sections 1, 2, and 15.

[2] Rogers v. Douglas Board of Trade [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,706], 5th Cir. 1957, 244 F. 2d 471.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

"The 3½ per cent limitation, we think, practically froze the seven warehouses in their 1954 competitive positions, eliminated in major part the hope of gain and the risk of failure inherent in a true performance system, and, if further evidence which may be taken upon remand shows that such limitation tends to prejudice the public interest,[9] it may constitute an undue and unreasonable restraint of trade and commerce.

"[9] See Hudson Sales Corp. v. Waldrip, 5 Cir., 211 F. 2d 268, 272; Kinnear-Weed Corp. v. Humble Oil & Refining Co., 5 Cir., 214 F. 2d 891, 894, and cases cited; Shotkin v. General Electric Co., 10 Cir., 171 F. 2d 236, 238."

(Rogers v. Douglas Tobacco Board of Trade [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,706], 244 F. 2d 471, 482-3).

[Supplemental Complaint]

On remand a supplemental complaint was filed covering the 1956 and 1957 tobacco market seasons. After trial before a jury and verdict and judgment for the defendants, this appeal was taken.

[Interstate Commerce]

On the first appeal, the question as to whether the tobacco auction sales on the Douglas Market were in interstate commerce was not argued by any of the parties, and we had assumed that they were. On remand, at the commencement of trial, the plaintiffs moved the district court to "declare, as a matter of law, that the auction sale of tobacco on the Douglas Market at Douglas, Georgia, is in interstate commerce." In response the court ruled: "That is a question of proof. I will leave that up to you as a question of proof." A considerable part of the evidence centered around that question. For example, the plaintiffs' first witness testified:

"A. Well, all of the tobacco, I believe, is eventually shipped into other states. I believe we have one concern which does some redrying on the Douglas Market, which happens to be the Douglas Tobacco Company which redries a small percentage of the tobacco there, but the most of it on the same day of sale, or the following day, is shipped by car or by truck to North Carolina or Virginia and some of it even goes into Kentucky to redrying plants and manufacturing and storage plants."

[Effect on Interstate Commerce]

The facts thus testified were not controverted, but the defendants sought to prove that the 3½ per cent limitation did not affect interstate commerce by inferring that at the time of the local auction sale the interstate character had not been impressed on the commerce, for example:

"Q. Mr. Royster, what effect does the three and a half percent limitation on the warehousemen have on the flow of tobacco through the market and into interstate commerce?

"A. It doesn't have any effect on that at all.

"Q. Will you state why you make that statement? What are your reasons for making that statement?

"A. Well, going back to the testimony already given, there are a certain number of baskets allotted to each market and it doesn't effect interstate commerce, or the flow of tobacco whether it is sold in A house or B house, two houses or six houses. As soon as the sale is completed and the market has sold its allotment of tobacco, of course, the tobacco, as soon as possible, is moved out, and from the Georgia area, there being only one redrying plant in Georgia and it a very small one it moves into principally North Carolina and to some extent into the State of Virginia for redrying and processing."

"Q. Now, Mr. Loftis, what effect, if any, does this three and a half percent rule have on the flow of tobacco through the Douglas Tobacco Market?

"A. None that I can see.

"Q. Why do you make that statement?

"A. Because the Douglas Tobacco Market, as it has been shown, has allocated to it 4400 baskets per day, which it may sell, and the three and a half percent has no bearing whatsoever to the amount of tobacco allotted to the market.

". . .

(On cross-examination)

"Q. Mr. Loftis, if one warehouse on the Douglas Tobacco Market was to get 4400 baskets of tobacco—concede that now, it is possible, is it not? (No answer.) Would that have any effect on Interstate Commerce as between those other warehouses there?

"A. If one warehouse was to get it all?

"Q. Yes, sir.

"A. And the others couldn't get it?

"Q. Yes, sir.

"A. The companies would buy every bit of it and ship it right out.

"Q. Would that affect commerce in any way?

"A. It might affect the individual, but I don't see where it would affect commerce because commerce would have it all in the trade."

[Charge to Jury—Ultimate Facts]

In its charge to the jury, the district court repeated five times that, in order to recover, the plaintiffs must prove by a preponderance of the evidence four ultimate facts:

"First, that the three and one-half per cent limit affects interstate or foreign commerce;

"Second, that the three and one-half per cent limit prejudices or tends to prejudice the public interest;

"Three, that the three and one-half per cent limit constitutes an unreasonable restraint of trade; and

"Four, that the plaintiffs have suffered a private injury and been damaged as a direct result of the three and one-half per cent limitation."

The plaintiffs' counsel objected ". . . to the continued mentioning of the four elements in the charge throughout as being prejudicial to the plaintiffs. It was a continued repetition, if Your Honor please, and it placed an undue burden on the plaintiffs." In response, the district court further instructed the jury:

"Now, gentlemen of the jury, I did not want to give undue emphasis to the four ultimate facts which I read to you. I read them to you two or three times, but I did not mean to give it any undue emphasis. I was just trying to explain the law to you as I see it, and don't give the charge as to those four ultimate facts any more emphasis than you do the balance of the charge."

[Additional Instructions to Jury]

After the jurors had deliberated for about two hours, they asked for additional instructions:

"The Court: Did you gentlemen want some additional instructions?

"A Juror: Yes, sir. We want a restatement of those four points, the exact wording of those four points.

". . .

"A Juror: We would like to write it down.

"The Court: All right, you can write it down, gentlemen. I charge you that in order to carry their burden of proof, the plaintiffs must prove four ultimate facts:

"(Note: The Court reads slowly while the jury writes down the instructions.)

"1. That the three and one-half per cent limit affects interstate or foreign commerce. That is No. 1.

"2. That the three and one-half per cent limit prejudices or tends to prejudice the public interest.

"3. That the three and one-half per cent limit constitutes an unreasonable restraint of trade.

"4. That plaintiffs have suffered a private injury and been damaged as a direct result of the three and one-half per cent limitation.

"Now, I charge you that if the public has been damaged it might be an unreasonable restraint of trade. That is a question of fact for you gentlemen to determine. Now, those four facts have to be proved. Not just three, but all four. Not one, not two, not three, but all four of them have to be proved by a preponderance of the testimony. Is that what you gentlemen wanted?

"The Jury: Yes, sir."

The jurors retired to deliberate further, but did not reach a verdict on that day. The following morning they again returned for additional instructions:

"The Court: Did you gentlemen want some additional instructions?

"The Jury: Your Honor, would you read or explain the Anti-trust Act, the part of the law that would affect interstate commerce?

"The Court: Do you want a definition of interstate commerce?

"The Jury: Yes, sir, or explain it to us.

"The Court: I will give you a definition of interstate commerce. This is from Black's Law Dictionary:

" 'Traffic, intercourse, commercial trading, or the transportation of persons or property between or among the several states of the Union, or from or between points in one state to points in another state. Commerce between two states is between places lying in different states.'

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

"Now, I will give you another definition in another book. This is 'Words and Phrases':

"'Interstate Commerce: Commerce among the states cannot stop at the boundary line of each state but may be introduced into the interior. It is not intended to say that these words comprehend that commerce which is completely internal, which is carried on between man and man in the state or between different parts of the same state which does not extend to affect other states. Interstate Commerce or commerce among the several states is commerce that concerns more than one state.'

"The Court: Now, is that what you gentlemen wanted?

"The Jury: Read that first definition again.

"The Court: 'Traffic, intercourse, commercial trading, or the transportation of persons or property between or among the several states of the Union, or from or between points in one state to points in another state.'

"Now, is that what you gentlemen wanted, or is there anything else that I might be able to help you gentlemen on?

"The Jury: No, sir."

The plaintiffs' counsel then noted the following objection:

"We except to the Court's definition in defining Interstate Commerce in not instructing the jury that the auction sale of tobacco is interstate commerce. Citing as our authority the case of Curry v. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, 301 United States."

[Applicable Legal Principles]

The applicable legal principles have been so long settled as to have become commonplace. For example, in Dahnke-Walker Co. v. Bondurant, 1921, 257 U. S. 282, 290, 291, the Supreme Court said:

"The commerce clause of the Constitution, Art. I, § 8, Cl. 3, expressly commits to Congress and impliedly withholds from the several States the power to regulate commerce among the latter. Such commerce is not confined to transportation from one State to another, but comprehends all commercial intercourse between different States and all the component parts of that intercourse. Where goods in one State are transported into another for purposes of sale the commerce does not end with the transportation, but embraces as well the sale of the goods after they reach their destination and while they are in the original packages. Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 419, 446-447; American Steel & Wire Co. v. Speed, 192 U. S. 500, 519. On the same principle, where goods are purchased in one State for transportation to another the commerce includes the purchase quite as much as it does the transportation. American Express Co. v. Iowa, 196 U. S. 133, 143. This has been recognized in many decisions construing the commerce clause."

Practically the same thoughts were repeated in Federal Trade Commission v. Pacific Paper Ass'n., 1927, 273 U. S. 52, 64.

[Tobacco Inspection Act]

Coming more specifically to the particular transactions involved in this case, the Tobacco Inspection Act of 1935, 7 U. S. C. A. § 511, et seq., and the decision of the Supreme Court upholding the constitutionality of that Act, Currin v. Wallace, 1939, 306 U. S. 1, are pertinent. The first section of that Act provides:

"(i) 'Commerce' means commerce between any State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, and any place outside thereof; or between points within the same State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, but through any place outside thereof; or within any Territory or possession, or the District of Columbia. For the purposes of this chapter (but not in any wise limiting the foregoing definition) a transaction in respect to tobacco shall be considered to be in commerce if such tobacco is part of that current of commerce usual in the tobacco industry whereby tobacco or products manufactured therefrom are sent from one State with the expectation that they will end their transit, after purchase, in another, including, in addition to cases within the above general description, all cases where purchase or sale is either for shipment to another State or for manufacture within the State and the shipment outside the State of the products resulting from such manufacture. Tobacco normally in such current of commerce shall not be considered out of such current through resort being had to any means or device intended to remove transactions in respect thereto from the provisions of this chapter. For the purpose of this paragraph the word 'State' includes Territory, the District of Columbia, possession of the United States, and foreign nations." 7 U. S. C. A. § 511(i).

Subject to a referendum as to the desire of the tobacco growers affected, the Secretary of Agriculture "is authorized to designate those auction markets where tobacco bought and sold thereon at auction, or the products customarily manufactured therefrom, moves in commerce." 7 U. S. C. A. § 511d. The Douglas Market is such a "designated" market where the Department of Agriculture's Grading Service inspects, certifies the weight of, and grades tobacco sold at auction.

[Auction Sale Part of Interstate Commerce]

In Currin v. Wallace, 1939, 306 U. S. 1, tobacco warehousemen and auctioneers in Oxford, North Carolina, attacked the constitutionality of the Tobacco Inspection Act. Their counsel argued:

"The transaction of offering for sale tobacco at auction on warehouse floors is not a transaction in interstate commerce.

"After the tobacco has gone through the auction sale the farmer may, and often does, reject the offered price and take his tobacco away.

"The tobacco acquires interstate character only when the sale is consummated and possession passes from grower to purchaser. Tobacco, moving from the fields to the curing barns, and from the curing barns to the warehouse floors, is no part of interstate commerce. Observe that the inspection is required prior to the offering for sale. Control over commodities up to the point of sale is reserved to the States by the Tenth Amendment." Summary of argument by petitioners, 306 U. S. 3.

In response to that argument, Mr. Chief Justice Hughes speaking for the Court said:

"Plaintiffs urge that tobacco 'is not inherently an interstate commodity'; that the auction transaction is not a sale as title is not passed until the grower accepts the price; that after the auction the grower may, and often does, reject the bid and he may take his tobacco away; that the inspection required by the Act is done prior to the offering for sale; and that until sale and delivery to the purchaser the tobacco is not in interstate commerce and its control is reserved to the State. These objections are untenable. The record shows that the sales consummated on the Oxford auction market are predominantly sales in interstate and foreign commerce. The principal purchasers are few in number and in the main are engaged in the export trade or in the manufacture of tobacco products in other States. It appears that in a given week, shortly before the beginning of this suit, approximately 2,000,000 pounds of tobacco were sold on the Oxford market, only 15.3 per cent of which were definitely destined for manufacture in North Carolina. About 14 per cent were in part for manufacture in North Carolina and in part for other States, and about 62 per cent moved directly into foreign commerce. The fact that the growers are not bound to accept bids, and in certain instances reject them, does not remove the auction from its immediate relation to the sales that are consummated upon the offers that the growers do accept. The auction in such cases is manifestly a part of the transaction of sale. So far as the sales are for shipment to other States or to foreign countries it is idle to contend that they are not sales in interstate or foreign commerce and subject to congressional regulation. Where goods are purchased in one State for transportation to another the commerce includes the purchase quite as much as it does the transportation. Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375, 398, 399; Dahnke-Walker Milling Co. v. Bondurant, 257 U. S. 282, 290, 291; Lemke v. Farmers Grain Co., 258 U. S. 50, 54; Stafford v. Wallace, 258 U. S. 495, 519; Flanagan v. Federal Coal Co., 267 U. S. 222, 225; Shafer v. Farmers Grain Co., 268 U. S. 189, 198; Foster-Fountain Packing Co. v. Haydel, 278 U. S. 1, 10."

Currin v. Wallace, supra, 306 U. S. 9, 10.

It is only because there has been so much apparent confusion over this issue in the district court that we have not disposed of it as briefly and succinctly as did the Fourth Circuit in the recent case of Asheville Tobacco Board of Trade, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,254], No. 7678, decided January 20, 1959:

"Petitioners further contend that the adoption of regulations governing 'the internal allocation of selling time, to the several warehouses is not in interstate commerce. The Commission has no jurisdiction to proscribe unfair methods of competition that merely affect interstate commerce; they must be in such commerce. F. T. C. v. Bunte Bros., 312 U. S. 349; cf. Chamber of Commerce of Minneapolis v. F. T. C., 8 Cir., 13 F. 2d 673, 684. Tobacco auctions are an integral and indispensable part of interstate commerce in tobacco. Currin v. Wallace, 306

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

U. S. 1, 10, aff'g Wallace v. Currin, 4 Cir., 95 F. 2d 856, 859, 863. The practices of the Board and its members at issue in this case are an essential part of such commerce. American Federation of Tobacco Growers, Inc. v. Neal, 4 Cir., 183 F. 2d 869."

[Question Improperly Left to Jury]

The district court should have instructed the jury that auction sales of tobacco on the Douglas Market are a part of, in, and themselves constitute interstate commerce, and should not have left that question to plague and confuse the jury.

[Reasonableness of Restriction]

It is a question for the jury to decide as to whether the 3½ per cent limitation as construed and applied[3] constitutes an unreasonable restraint of trade or commerce within the meaning of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. That is, of course, a mixed question of law and fact, but its resolution, under appropriate instructions, difficult as they may be, must ultimately be left to the jury. Fleitmann v. Welsbach Co., 1916, 240 U. S. 27; Thomsen v. Cayser, 1917, 243 U. S. 66, 88, 89; Ring v. Spina, 2nd Cir. 1948, 166 F. 2d 546, 550; Raytheon Mfg. Co. v. Radio Corporation of America, 1st Cir. 1935, 76 F. 2d 943, 950, aff'd 296 U. S. 459 [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,092]. The strong language which we used on the former appeal in describing the effect of the 3½ per cent limitation, and which has been quoted near the beginning of this opinion, should not be construed as any indication of how the jury should decide that issue, nor permitted to influence the jury's verdict.

In Asheville Tobacco Board of Trade v. Federal Trade Commission, supra, the Fourth Circuit sustained the Commission's condemnation of a similar 3½ per cent limit, but further observed:

". . . . There are, however, a number of reasons why it may be desirable that there be some limit on the possible gain or loss to an individual warehouse in a single year. Loss or damage to a warehouse by fire or other casualty, illness of the warehouseman, or other fortuitous circumstances, may cause an abnormal reduction in the business of a warehouse in a particular year, which should not be perpetuated by a performance rule without some limiting proviso. Again, a warehouseman with large financial resources might attempt to monopolize the market through advertising campaigns, bidding in farmers' tobacco at prices above those which his competitors can afford, and other methods, which could be used for several years until his selling time is abnormally increased, and his competitors of more limited means are driven from the market, even though they have rendered adequate service and have helped to build up the market over the years. A reasonable limitation on the percentage of gain or loss in any one year would not violate the antitrust laws."

The testimony in the present case tends to sustain the Fourth Circuit's view that some limitation on the percentage of gain or loss in any one year is reasonable, and, we think, that question, together with the reasonableness of the particular 3½ per cent limit, as construed and applied by the defendants, must be left to the jury under proper instructions.

[Prejudice to the Public Interest]

In our opinion on former appeal, we said that the plaintiffs upon remand must produce evidence to show that the 3½ per cent limitation tends to prejudice the public interest. In the Sherman Act Congress has determined that certain prohibited activities are injurious to the public. Radovich v. National Football League [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,628], 1957, 352 U. S. 445, 453. As to classes of restraints which from their "nature or character" are unduly restrictive, Congress has determined its own criteria of public harm. Klor's Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc. [1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,316], U. S. No. 76, October Term 1958, decided April 6, 1959. In restraints, like the present one to which "the rule of reason" applies, while the jury should not, and cannot properly, reject the policy of the Sherman Act which has been determined by Congress, it must still decide whether the particular conduct is reasonably calculated to prejudice the public interest which that Act is designed to protect. Wilder Mfg. Co. v. Corn Products Co., 1915, 236 U. S. 165, 174; Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 1940 [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,039], 310 U. S.

[3] There was testimony tending to prove that it was construed and applied even more restrictively than was indicated on former appeal. See 244 F. 2d at 482 [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,706].

469, 493; Mandeville Farms v. American Crystal Sugar Co. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,251], 1948, 334 U. S. 219, 242, 243. That does not mean that specific public injury must be proved before a private person can recover; but before it can be said that the conduct is forbidden as unreasonably restraining trade or commerce within the meaning of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act it must appear that it tends or is reasonably calculated to prejudice the public interest.

Upon the former appeal we upheld, under the circumstances there disclosed, the reasonableness and validity of the new warehouse provision intended to discourage overbuilding by limiting the amount of selling time which a new warehouse might receive for its first year, and we adhere to that decision. Our holding was, however, limited to the first year, 1954, and was not intended to prevent consideration of the new warehouse provision in determining whether the 3½ per cent limitation for the years 1955 and those following is an unreasonable restraint on trade. For example, that 3½ per cent limitation might be unreasonable if, combined with the new warehouse provision, it would operate to unduly discourage desirable building operations. See Asheville Tobacco Board of Trade v. Federal Trade Commission, supra.

[Reversed and Remanded]

Number one[4] of the four so-called ultimate facts upon which the district court placed so much emphasis is either erroneous or misleading,[5] and should not be submitted to the jury, because, as a matter of law, the auction sales of tobacco are in interstate comerce. Number two[6] is not a separate ultimate fact, but is a part of the test of an unreasonable restraint of trade under number three.[7] On that and on number four,[8] the plaintiffs, upon a re-trial, have the burden of proof.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded.

Reversed and remanded.

[¶ 69,351] Service Stages, Inc. v. The Greyhound Corporation & Greyhound Bus Depot of Atlanta, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia, Atlanta Division. Civil Action No. 5446. Filed January 8, 1959.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—When Recovery May Be Barred—Statute of Limitations—Applicable Statute—Accrual of Action.—A Georgia four-year statute of limitations, rather than a twenty-year statute which was enacted for rights of action given to individuals by special legislative acts, was held applicable to a treble damage antitrust action brought in a Federal District Court in Georgia. The Federal four-year statute of limitations, since it was enacted after the occurrence, was not applicable. However, Federal authorities determined the question as to when the cause of action arose. The plaintiff, alleging that it was forced to sell its franchise as a common carrier for an inadequate sum by reason of the defendants' conspiracy in violation of the antitrust laws, contended that the Georgia four-year statute did not begin to run until May 25, 1952, the date when it was paid the balance of the consideration for its franchise. That date was within the four-year period preceding the filing of the complaint on December 6, 1955. However, the contract of sale was entered into on March 13, 1951, and the plaintiff discontinued operations on May 25, 1951. It might be said that the statute of limitations began to run when the plaintiff was forced to sign the contract of sale, because the overt acts of the defendants had ceased. However, there was less doubt that the cause of action accrued when the plaintiff actually surrendered its business and ceased

[4] "That the three and one-half per cent limit affects interstate or foreign commerce."
[5] It might be only misleading because "affects" might be construed to mean "burdens."
[6] "That the three and one-half per cent limit prejudices or tends to prejudice the public interest."
[7] "That the three and one-half per cent limit constitutes an unreasonable restraint of trade."
[8] "That the plaintiffs have suffered a private injury and been damaged as a direct result of the three and one-half per cent limitation."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

operations. It was difficult to see how any further damage could have been done to the plaintiff; certainly the mere payment of the purchase price after that date would not constitute either an overt act or the accrual of damages.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.100, 9010.200.

For the plaintiff: Arnall, Golden & Gregory; Hal Lindsay; and Randolph Hayes; Atlanta, Ga.

For the defendants: Gambrell, Harlan, Russell, Moye & Richardson, Atlanta, Ga.

Order of Court

[Corrected Opinion]

FRANK A. HOOPER, District Judge [In full text]: The Opinion of this Court dated September 22, 1958 containing certain errors which have been pointed out to the Court, said Opinion is vacated and the following inserted in lieu thereof.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

[Statute of Limitations]

In this action plaintiff seeks to recover from defendants damages allegedly suffered by plaintiff when it sold out its franchise as a common carrier to the defendants for a sum of money allegedly inadequate, having been forced to make such sale by reason of acts and conduct of defendants in violation of the anti-trust laws (15 U. S. C. § 15).

Defendants filed a motion for summary judgment, based upon allegations in the pleadings and affidavits. There is no substantial issue of fact between the parties, and the able counsel for each party has assisted the Court in its task by complete discovery procedures and stipulations as to the controlling facts in the case.

Plaintiff's counsel insists that the applicable statute of limitations in this case is twenty years, defense counsel contends it is four years. Plaintiff contends that even if the Court should find the applicable period to be four years, plaintiff's claim is still not barred, for the reason as alleged by plaintiff that there were overt acts together with the infliction of damages occurring within a four-year period preceding the filing of this action.

While the motion for summary judgment is also predicated upon acts of estoppel and of release, it is not necessary for the Court to pass upon the same, as the Court is ruling that plaintiff's alleged cause of action did accrue more than four years prior to the date of filing this suit, and that four years is the applicable period of limitations under Georgia law for this particular action. The pertinent acts in the record will be given in connection with the Opinion. The Court however, is overruling defendants' motion for summary judgment based on such grounds.

OPINION

(1) The Applicable Statute of Limitations Under Georgia Law is Four Years.

[Georgia Twenty-Year Statute of Limitations]

Plaintiff contends that the proper period of limitations to be applied in this case is based upon Georgia Code § 3-704, which reads as follows:

> "All suits for the enforcement of rights accruing to individuals under statutes, acts of incorporation, or by operation of law, shall be brought within twenty years after the right of action shall have accrued."

Plaintiff's counsel in their comprehensive and carefully prepared brief cite to this Court decisions from various courts in this land, also statements by the general authorities, which indicate clearly that statutes in various states quite similar to the Georgia statute just quoted have been construed by the courts to cover actions of the same nature as the one here involved. A reading of the aforesaid statute and of the cases cited by plaintiff's counsel would demand a ruling in favor of plaintiff on this question, were it not for the particular legislative history of the aforesaid Georgia law.

This Court could rest its ruling entirely upon the thoughtful opinion written by Judge William Boyd Sloan, my colleague in this District; see William Greene v. Lam Amusement Company, et al. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,309], 145 F. S., 346. Among other cases therein cited is the case of Hendryx v. E. C. Atkins & Company (5 Cir.) 79 F. 2d 508, written by the distinguished Judge Samuel H. Sibley, then of that court, in which it was pointed out that the period of limitations contained in that statute "was enacted for rights of action given to individuals by special legislative acts, such as a statute of incorporation." There was also cited the case of Harvey v. Booth Fisheries Company of Delaware, et al., 228 F. 782, at page 786, where the court pointed out that an action under the Anti-Trust Act (15 U. S. C., § 15) was based upon "an invasion of the personal rights of the plaintiff, rights which are relative and general, and embrace rights which are common with all other persons, and as a part of the public he has a right of action for injuries sustained. There is no liability to plaintiff by reason of any trespass which is expressly created in his favor, but only as it affects the public, by reason of which he suffers damages."

But counsel for plaintiff here insist that the Supreme Court of Georgia in the case of Nixon v. Nixon, 196 Ga., 148, has placed a different interpretation upon the statute under consideration, so that it now should be interpreted to include actions such as this.

It is true that the Georgia Supreme Court in the case just cited did overrule and explain a number of earlier decisions upon this question, and did rule that the twenty year period of limitations applies in Georgia to an action by a widow for a year's support out of the estate of her deceased husband. However, the Georgia Supreme Court still recognized that the twenty year statute still "identifies and classifies the persons upon whom the right is conferred, as distinguished from the general public," and that "the right to a year's support is conferred upon a restricted and limited class of persons." By way of contrast the court points out that the Georgia statute of distribution providing for inheritance, makes no restriction as to persons who may qualify as an heir "whether male or female, minor or adult, dependent or non-dependent."

It is now well established that this court is under a duty to interpret the Georgia statute in the same way it is interpreted by the Supreme Court of Georgia. The mere fact, if it is a fact, that the foregoing decision by the Georgia Supreme Court might indicate a more liberal construction of the code section in question does not justify this court in "second guessing" the Georgia Supreme Court by further liberalization of the statute in question. Let it be added that a period of limitation of twenty years is a long period and one granted by law in Georgia to very few situations, including special legislative acts and instruments under seal.

[Four-Year Period]

(2) Plaintiff's counsel, while not agreeing with the foregoing interpretation, contends that this action accrued within a period of four years prior to the filing of the same. It will therefore be necessary to give a brief outline of the pertinent dates which are involved.

It is not necessary to recount the various elements of the alleged conspiracy and the acts done pursuant to the same prior to March 13, 1951, that date being without the four year period. On that date the plaintiff entered into a contract whereby it agreed to sell to Crescent Stages, Inc. its certificates of convenience and necessity covering the route from Atlanta, Georgia to Anniston, Alabama, via Rome and Gadsden. This transfer of course was made subject to approval by the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Georgia and Alabama Commissions. On April 10, 1951 plaintiff filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission an application for authority for the purchaser to operate temporarily over the aforesaid route, and also filed an application for approval of transfer of all of plaintiff's certificates to the purchaser. The Interstate Commerce Commission by order of April 27, 1951 approved such temporary operation, and on May 25, 1951 the plaintiff ceased operation as a motor bus carrier and has not conducted such business since that date. On March 4, 1952 the Commission approved the purchase of said certificates but ordered that the balance of the purchase price be paid in full immediately rather than in installments as agreed originally between the parties. In May, 1952 the parties modified the agreement of March, 1951 in accordance with the directions by the Commission, and the balance of the purchase price was paid to plaintiff, this being within the four year period prior to filing this action, and plaintiff contends it may be considered as the beginning of the four year period.

As the plaintiff agreed to sell its lines to Crescent Stages, Inc. by contract in March of 1951, and as the plaintiff on May 25, 1951 ceased its operations and turned its business over to Crescent Stages, Inc., should either of said dates be taken as a beginning point, the action would be barred because each of them are outside the four year period prior to filing suit. However, should May 25, 1952 be the pertinent date (this being the date on which plaintiff was paid the balance of the $70,000.00 consideration for the sale of its lines, pursuant to approval by the Commission) plaintiff's action would have been filed within the four year period.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

(2) The Statute of Limitations Began to Run No Later Than the Date Plaintiff Disposed of Its Business.

[Accrual Date]

Many decisions have been rendered by the courts involving the question as to when the statute of limitations begins to run in a civil suit for damages for violation of anti-trust acts. To avoid confusion one must eliminate all those decisions which differ upon their facts from the case sub judicie. Under some factual situations there are repeated illegal acts done by the defendant with damages following soon thereafter. There are other instances where an overt act is done from which damages flow for a considerable time.

It is important to note in the instant case that the plaintiff, allegedly on account of illegal acts of the defendants, was forced to sell and release to purchasers affiliated with defendants its franchises to operate busses over the two routes described, whereupon plaintiff discontinued operations on May 25, 1951 and filed this complaint on December 6, 1955, more than four years after the plaintiff ceased its operations.

As pointed out below, there is some confusion in the authorities as to whether the statute begins to run from the last overt act of the defendant, or from the date of the infliction of the damages caused thereby. In the opinion of this Court, however, all overt acts (within the definition of that phrase applicable to such situations) and all damages caused thereby were fixed and established not later than May 25, 1951, on which date the plaintiff ceased its operations and delivered its business over to the purchasers under terms of a contract which plaintiff has never sought to be declared invalid, fixing plaintiff's sales price at $70,000.00.

[Rule Applicable to Antitrust Actions]

The general rule upon the question of statute of limitations is thus stated in 54 C. J. S., § 168, p. 122:

> "Broadly speaking, an action sounding in tort accrues at, and limitations begin to run from, the date on which the tort is committed, from the date on which there is a wrongful invasion of personal or property rights, or from the time when the injured person acquires a present right to sue. In the absence of a statutory provision to the contrary or of fraudulent concealment, this rule may apply even though plaintiff was then ignorant of the injury sustained or could not ascertain with certainty the amount of his damage. The test to determine when the statute of limitations begins to run against an action sounding in tort is whether the act causing the damage does or does not of itself, constitute a legal injury, that is, an injury giving rise to a cause of action because it is an invasion of some right to plaintiff."

The foregoing general rule applies in cases involving violation of anti-trust statutes. The Georgia statutes of limitation apply here, this occurrence having been prior to the enactment of 15 U. S. C. § 15(b) fixing a four year statute of limitations. The federal authorities, however, determine the question as to when plaintiff's cause of action accrued.

A great deal of the confusion which exists upon this question has been dispelled by the Court of Appeals of the Ninth Judicial Circuit in the case of Steiner v. 20th Century-Fox Film Corporation [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,304], 232 F. 2d 190 (1956). The court there stated:

> "In a civil conspiracy, the statute of limitations runs from the commission of the last overt act alleged to have caused damage."

The court pointed out certain language used by the court in the case of Suckow Borax Mines Consolidated v. Borax Consolidated [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,714], 185 F. 2d at p. 208, to the effect that > ". . . private civil antitrust actions are founded, not upon the mere existence of a conspiracy, but upon injuries which result from the commission of forbidden 'overt acts' by the conspirators."

The court at page 195 stated:

> "In a continuing conspiracy causing continuing damage without further overt acts, the statute of limitations runs, as we have noted, from the time the blow which caused the damage was struck. Any further internal injury affects the problem of how much should be claimed in damages, not the problem of when the statute of limitations commences to run."

[Two Conspiracies Charged]

In the instant case the original complaint alleged two separate conspiracies, the first one in point of time being clearly barred by statute of limitations. By amendment the two alleged conspiracies were set out as constituting one conspiracy which culminated in the abandonment by plaintiff on May 25, 1951 of its entire business. The instant case is therefore on its face similar to the case of The Crummer Company, et al. v. DuPont, et al. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,042], 223 F. 2d 238 in which the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals points out that there was in that case "but a single cause of action which did not accrue and upon which limitation did not commence to run until every wrongful act had ceased." The Court of Appeals pointed out:

"The fact that the complaint alleges that by 1944 their business was completely destroyed and all their damages had accrued." See 223 F. 2d 238, supra, p. 248.

Counsel for defendants cite other cases, ruling that a plaintiff after going out of business has no further business which might suffer damages by illegal acts of the defendants.

[Surrender of Business]

It is alleged that certain things were done by the defendants after the plaintiff had delivered its business to the purchasers, but these acts were not illegal overt acts such as would constitute the start of the running of the statute of limitations. Subsequent to May 1951, the Interstate Commerce Commission having approved the sale by the plaintiff to Crescent Stages, Inc., the latter paid the balance of the purchase price named in the original contract between the parties dated March 13, 1951. It might even be said that the statute of limitations began to run on March 13, 1951 for the reason that on that date the alleged overt acts of defendant had ceased and the plaintiff allegedly suffering from the blows inflicted thereby, was forced to sign a contract of sale for the sum of $70,000.00. At any rate the amount of the purchase price was determined on March 13, 1951 and the contract signed subject to approval by the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Alabama and Georgia Public Service Commissions. However, there is less doubt that plaintiff's action accrued on May 25, 1951 when plaintiff actually surrendered its business to Crescent Stages, Inc. and ceased operations. It is difficult to see how any further damage could have been done to plaintiff subsequent to that date and certainly the mere payment of the purchase price after that date would not constitute either an overt act or accrual of damages.

(3) Defenses of Estoppel and Release.

[Summary Judgment Denied]

If the Court should be correct in the foregoing rulings it will not be necessary to pass upon the motion for summary judgment in favor of defendants based upon alleged estoppel by the plaintiff, and also based upon an alleged release executed by plaintiff.

However, should the ruling of this Court be reversed as to the statute of limitations it would be highly desirable that the merits of these two defenses urged by defendant be adjudicated on the same appeal.

After careful consideration this Court is ruling that defendants are not entitled to a summary judgment based upon Ground One (A) entitled "Estoppel" or upon Ground One (B) entitled "Release, Waiver, Accord and Satisfaction, Compromise and Settlement," each contained in defendants' motion for summary judgment filed February 14, 1958.

Counsel for defendants may submit appropriate Judgment.

[¶ 69,352] United States v. Guerlain, Inc. United States v. Parfums Corday, Inc. United States v. Lanvin Parfums, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil Action Nos. 93-267, 93-268, and 93-269, respectively. Filed March 31, 1959.

Case Nos. 1195, 1196, and 1197, respectively, in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Civil Suits for Injunctive Relief —Government's Motion to Dismiss After Successful Prosecution in Trial Court.—The Government was granted a motion to dismiss its civil actions against three perfume companies after a trial court had found that the companies monopolized the importation into, and sale within, the United States of trade-marked toilet goods by utilizing Section 526 of the Tariff Act of 1930 to exclude potential competitors from dealing, in the United States, in the products sold abroad by their French affiliates. After successfully prosecuting the suits in the trial court, and before argument of the appeals in the United States Supreme Court, the Government moved to vacate the judgments in order that, on remand, it might move for dismissals. It was represented that previous disagreement within the Executive Branch of the Government had been reconciled, and that the public interest would be better served by an attempt to get a legislative resolution to the same effect as the decision of the trial court. The decision of the Department of Justice to abandon the suits was a policy decision within its discretion. However, since the defendants would have been deprived of an opportunity to prevail on appeal, it was only fair that the dismissals be with prejudice, a decision to which the Government consented.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2510.250, 2515, 2530.10, 2540, 2580, 2610.340, 2610.550; Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8229.100.

For the plaintiff: Richard B. O'Donnell, Special Assistant to Attorney General.

For the defendants: Shearman & Sterling & Wright for Guerlain, Inc.; Joseph L. Hochman for Parfums Corday, Inc.; and Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison, for Lanvin Parfums, Inc., all of New York, N. Y.

For the remanding order of the U. S. Supreme Court, see 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,211. For a prior opinion of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,771.

Memorandum

EDELSTEIN, District Judge [In full text]: After a successful prosecution of these suits in the District Court, and before argument of the appeals in the Supreme Court, the Government moved in the Supreme Court to vacate the judgments in order that, on remand, it might move for dismissals. The basis for this unusual and perhaps unique procedure is said to be a policy decision, arrived at only during the pendency of the appeals, that the main problem involved was inappropriate for judicial resolution in antitrust litigation. It has been represented that previous disagreement within the Executive Branch has been reconciled, and that the public interest would be better served by an attempt to get a legislative resolution to the same effect as the decision of this Court.

[Tariff Act]

The "main problem" referred to is the meaning of § 526 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U. S. C. § 1526), the Government having contended that it did not make protection available against imports of trademarked goods, where the American concern seeking such protection is affiliated with the foreign company whose legitimately marked goods it seeks to exclude. There is certainly no doubt that the attempt to resolve this issue in antitrust litigation was clumsy, particularly in view of the fact that the Government was, through the Collector of Customs, allowing the exclusion that it claimed, through the Antitrust Division, to be illegal. Further, there is certainly no doubt that this Court suggested the inappropriateness of such litigation. There is no doubt that the Government elected to proceed nevertheless, and it is hardly to be presumed without careful study and advisement, the complaints having been filed some two and a half years earlier. There is considerable doubt that anything new transpired to cause the singular and abrupt change of heart during the pendency of the appeals. At least counsel for the Government was unaware of any new factual information having come to light since the filing of the complaints. There is, finally, no doubt that the suits were prosecuted at length, with tenacity, talent and vigor. One may be forgiven a degree of perplexity in the circumstances.

The one thought that obviously suggests itself is that the Government has reconsidered the validity of the decisions. But it is not the position of the Solicitor General that the decisions were in error and the Government denies that it has employed a stratagem for the confession of error. There is, indeed, no reason at all why a straightforward confession of error could or should not be made if the Government believed itself and the Court to be in error.

It is the duty of the Department of Justice to enforce the antitrust laws and it is the duty of this Court to decide the issues properly presented to it for decision. If the Department of Justice in its discretion adopts a policy of enforcement, it is not within the judicial realm to interfere. The decision to abandon these suits is a decision of policy within the discretion of the Department of Justice. But the dockets of this Court are congested to the point of public expressions of concern by the Department of Justice and these proceedings have constituted an unfortunate aggravation of that condition.

[Motion to Dismiss Granted]

The motion to dismiss will, of course, be granted. And inasmuch as the defendants will thereby be deprived of an opportunity to prevail on appeal (an opportunity they are eager to take advantage of), it is only fair that the dismissals be with prejudice, a decision to which the Government consents.

[¶ 69,353] Revlon, Inc. v. Wagonfeld.

In the New York Supreme Court, New York County, Special and Trial Term, Part XV. 141 N. Y. L. J., No. 76, page 13.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Defenses to Enforcement Action—Manufacturer's Operation of Retail Establ shment as Bar to Fair Trade Enforcement—Agreements Between Competitors—Horizontal Price Fixing.—A manufacturer of beauty products was not precluded, by its ownership and operation of a single salon in which its products were demonstrated and sold at retail prices, from enforcing its fair trade program against retailers which sold its products below established fair trade prices. The retailers contended that the manufacturer, by entering into competition with them and other retailers, had removed itself from the protection of the fair trade statutes. The manufacturer's exhibition sales salon, however, was the only place of its kind operated by the manufacturer in the United States and was operated at a substantial loss. That salon, a small incident to the major enterprise of manufacture and wholesale operations, was a part of the manufacturer's general advertising and publicity campaign. Therefore, the manufacturer was not acting as a retailer and there was no horizontal price fixing.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3100.34, 3390.34.

[Fair Trade Action]

EPSTEIN, Justice [In full text]: These are eight actions comprising identical facts and a single issue, tried simultaneously by agreement of counsel. Findings and conclusions were waived. Plaintiff, manufacturer of Revlon beauty products, sues to enjoin defendants from selling its products at less than the retail minimum selling prices fixed in its contracts with its customers. Defendants have purchased Revlon products from sources unknown to plaintiff and have sold them for less than the prices fixed by Revlon in its contracts with its retail customers. In these cases, too, preliminary injunctions were issued but no certified copies were served on defendants. Defendants were fully aware of Revlon's "fair trade" contracts and had been notified by letters to that effect by registered mail. They do not deny such knowledge nor do they deny the fact of such sales, which were also proved and not contested. There are some forty-five states where fair trade laws are in effect. Plaintiff seeks to protect its good will, symbolized by its trade marks, built up at great expense over the years. Defendants all try to evade the effect of the Fair Trade Law of New York with the defense that plaintiff engages in sales at retail in competition with defendants and is therefore outside the scope of the defenses under federal and state laws.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[New York Fair Trade Act]

The New York Fair Trade Act is contained in Article XXIV-A, of the General Business Law, the applicable provision of which reads:

> "369b. Unfair competition defined and made actionable. Wilfully and knowingly advertising, offering for sale or selling any commodity at less than the price stipulated in any contract entered into pursuant to the provision of section 369-a, whether the person so advertising, offering for sale or selling is or is not a party to such contract, is unfair competition and is actionable at the suit of any person damaged thereby."

State enactments like the above have been sanctioned by the Congress of the United States in the Miller Tydings and McGuire Amendments to the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (50 Stat. 693, 1937; 15 U. S. C. section 45). The 1952 Amendment, known as the "McGuire Act" has been upheld in Schwegmann Brothers Giant Super Markets v. Eli Lilly & Company [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,516], (205 F. [2d] 788, certiorari denied 346 U. S. 856; General Electric Company v. Masters, Inc. [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,776], 307 N. Y. 229 [1954]).

In the instant cases plaintiff has shown extensive inquiries at considerable expense to seek out the defendants as violators of the laws by selling its products below the fixed prices. Defendants have no contracts with plaintiff and have purchased from unrevealed sources. Their books of account do not reveal the sales of such products. Testimony of plaintiff establishes loss of trade by contracting purchasers with whom defendants compete in neighborhood sales of cosmetic products; sales freely made by defendants at less than the fixed prices, sometimes at no more than one-fourth or one-half such fixed retail prices. These are generally in combined sales of other articles. Plaintiff's products are the "come-on" for such customer inducement. Defendants' purchases of Revlon products total some $18,000. No records of the specific items sold are available. Plaintiff's cost of the investigations occasioned by protests against defendants' violations of the statutes to plaintiff's damage total some $5,139.47. No contradictory evidence was presented. Counsel for defendants stipulates that counsel for plaintiff would testify that his services, required by defendants' actions, were of a value of $500 for each case, without conceding that such would be taxable damages.

[Defense—Fair Trader Competing as Retailer]

The defendants all rely upon the identical defense—that plaintiff, by operating and owning the Revlon Salon at No. 745 Fifth Avenue, in New York City, where one may purchase Revlon products at retail prices, has entered into competition with defendants and other retailers and thereby removed itself from the protection of the fair trade statutes.

[Advertising]

The facts do not support defendants' conclusion. Plaintiff Revlon's beauty salon at No. 745 Fifth Avenue is the only place of its kind operated by plaintiff in the whole United States. There its products are demonstrated for operators of beauty parlors and the public is invited and taught how to use Revlon's products. It is a business operated at a substantial loss (the single shop) and is part of the general advertising and publicity campaign of plaintiff. Similar salons on Fifth Avenue are operated by Elizabeth Arden, Helena Rubinstein, Coty and others. One may also purchase Revlon products at retail in this exhibition sales salon. It is this last fact, a fact prevailing in only this one place in the whole United States on which defendants rely. This defense has been held inadequate in a number of cases involving this and other plaintiffs similarly situated. On January 30, 1959, in two cases temporary injunctions were granted by Mr. Justice Hofstadter. In a brief opinion in Revlon v. Modell [1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,271], (N. Y. L. J. January 30, 1959), he held the identical defense to be insufficient and that the salon on Fifth Avenue on the same facts herein revealed not to constitute a retail establishment in competition with the defendant. In eight other cases Mr. Justice Levey granted temporary injunctions (N. Y. L. J., March 3, 1959). A host of other cases brought by other plaintiffs, similarly placed, in the years from 1956 to 1959 evidence this court's support of plaintiff's position. The single case relied upon by defendants is U. S. v. McKesson & Robbins, Inc. [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,368], (351 U. S. 305). Study of that case and the facts there revealed show it to be wholly unrelated to the instant cases. The vertical trade agreements were there not questioned. There it was the competition of defendant with independent wholesalers that was attacked. Revlon is not acting as a retailer and there is no horizontal price fixing by Revlon, whose salon on Fifth Avenue is a small incident to the major enterprise of manufacture and wholesale operations. Neither the facts nor the law offer defendants an escape from their flagrant violations of the statutory protection accorded plaintiff's products. Permanent injunctions will issue against each defendant. Damages are assessed against the defendants jointly in the sum of $5,139.47, and in addition thereto the defendants are severally liable in the sum of $500 for legal expense incurred by plaintiff in the prosecution of this action. Judgment accordingly.

[¶ 69,354] Ramo v. Excel Pharmacy, Inc.

In the New York Supreme Court, Nassau County. May 1, 1959. 141 N. Y. L. J., No. 8, page 16. Dated May 8, 1959.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Indirect Methods of Price Violation—Trading Stamps Issued With Sale of Fair-Traded Merchandise—Legality—Defense to Enforcement Action—Enforcement Activity or Policy.—Retail pharmacists were denied a temporary injunction to prohibit another pharmacist from issuing trading stamps in connection with the sale of so-called fair trade merchandise. Individual retailers were attacking another retailer for a method of merchandising which had been in existence, in all of the states, for many years, and had never been successfully attacked anywhere on the ground that it violated the fair trade laws. The thing which is protected by the fair trade law is the good will of the manufacturer in his brand name; the goods themselves are the absolute property of the purchaser, and he can resell them at any price he pleases. Therefore, unless the statute is to degenerate into an instrument of oppression by one individual against another, it is necessary to find a pattern of enforcement before issuing an injunction which singles out the pharmacist as the one person in the United States who cannot distribute trading stamps. The inactivity of the manufacturers, in the face of such a widespread practice, might indicate that they did not consider it detrimental to their good will. Therefore, until the question is decided by an appellate court, a temporary injunction is inappropriate.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3294.34, 3440.34.

[Fair Trade Action]

GULOTTA, Justice [In full text]: The plaintiffs are retail pharmacists operating at Farmingdale, Long Island, who have sued the defendant, who is also a pharmacist in the same community, to permanently enjoin him from issuing S. & H. Green stamps in connection with the sale of so-called Fair Trade merchandise.

[Injunction Sought]

The plaintiffs have applied for the temporary injunction sought on this motion, on the theory that it is needed to preserve the status quo and on the further theory that their case is so clear cut, that a trial will be a formality and that therefore they should have their relief, before it is held. to prevent irreparable damage.

Since the defendant has been operating the store in question under the Green Stamp method since he took it over in October, 1958, enjoining him forthwith would not be to preserve the status quo, but to destroy it.

Neither do I regard the plaintiffs' case as so overwhelming, that the results of a trial are to be considered a foregone conclusion.

[Case Distinguished]

The plaintiffs' chief reliance is upon the case of Bristol-Myers Company v. Picker [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,755] (302 N. Y. 61), which is a case that also originated in this area.

It was held there after trial, that at the suit of the manufacturer, the defendant druggist would be restrained from selling the plaintiff's products at the Fair Trade price and at the same time issuing cash register receipts redeemable in merchandise, at 2½ per cent of their face value at his own store, or the stores of a small group of merchants in the same community, who had joined the defendant's plan.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Enforcement Activity]

The difference here is that in this case we have an individual retailer, or a few of them, attacking another retailer for a method of merchandising, which we are told has been in existence for sixty years in all states of the Union, with 65,000 licensees, 6,500 in the State of New York, including 265 drug stores and has never been successfully attacked on the ground that it violates the Fair Trade Laws anywhere in the United States.

While a retailer is given a right under the statute (sec. 369-b of the General Business Law) to maintain an enforcement action, not to be lost sight of, is the fact that the thing which is being protected, is the good will of the manufacturer in his trade brand. The goods themselves are the absolute property of the purchaser and he can resell them at any price he pleases.

Therefore unless the statute is to degenerate into an instrument of oppression by one individual against another, it is necessary to find a pattern of enforcement against the very thing which defendant is doing, before issuing an injunction, which singles him out as the one person in the nation who cannot distribute Green Stamps.

I appreciate that enforcement must start somewhere, but the inactivity of manufacturers throughout the country in this respect, in the face of such a widespread practice, may very well indicate that they do not consider it detrimental to their good will, nor harmful to their property rights in their trade names.

This question of course, was not an issue in Bristol-Myers v. Picker (supra), and until it is decided by an appellate court, I do not deem a temporary injunction appropriate.

A somewhat similar question was discussed in Automotive Electric Service Corporation v. Times Square Stores (175 Misc. 865, 24 N. Y. S. 2d 733), and the conclusion there reached after trial, was to the effect that the plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction.

Additionally, the Special Term calendar is up to date, and plaintiffs may have a trial without any more delay than they wish.

[Injunction Denied]

Motion denied. Short form order signed.

[¶ 69,355] Paper Mate Manufacturing Co. v. Hess Brothers, Inc.

In the Pennsylvania Court of Common Pleas of Lehigh County, September Term, 1957, No. 18. Dated April 22, 1958.

Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act

Fair Trade—Constitutionality of Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act—Sufficiency of Act's Title—Alleged Failure to Clearly Express Subject Matter of Act in Title—Putting "Non-Signer" Upon Notice.—The Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act, entitled "An Act to protect trade-mark owners, distributors, and the public against injuries and uneconomic practices in the distribution of articles of standard quality under a distinguished trade-mark, brand, or name," does not violate a section of the Pennsylvania Constitution providing that the subject matter of all bills must be "clearly expressed" in their titles. It was contended that the title of the Act was insufficient to put "non-signers" upon notice that the legislation was applicable to them. However, to any merchant of a "reasonably inquiring mind," it was immediately apparent that the title of the Act was applicable to any person engaged in the distribution of certain types of articles. Nonsigners could not have been misled by the title. Also, the non-signer provision was nothing more than an incidental provision which did not have to be enumerated in the title if it was germane to the legislation as a whole. The court noted, moreover, that it considered itself bound by a decision of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court sustaining the constitutionality of the Act, without discussing its title, under a Pennsylvania rule that, where an appellate court has passed on any constitutional objection to any act, it is presumed to have passed on all constitutional objections to that act.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3085.40.

For the plaintiff: Donald E. Wieand.

For the defendant: Orrin E. Boyle.

Preliminary Objections to Complaint in Equity

[Fair Trade Action]

Koch, Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, Paper Mate Manufacturing Company, filed a complaint in equity against defendant, Hess Brothers, Inc., which is a retail distributor of merchandise in the City of Allentown. It is alleged that on two occasions defendant advertised, offered for sale and sold writing instruments bearing plaintiff's trade-marks, brands or name at prices below the minimum retail prices stipulated therefor with other retailers in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in violation of the Fair Trade Act of June 5, 1935, P. L. 266, 73 PS § 7-11, as amended. Upon the filing of the complaint we issued a rule to show cause why defendant, who is a so-called nonsigner of a fair trade contract, should not be enjoined from these and other violations of this act.

[Sufficiency of Title to Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act]

The matter before us consists of defendant's preliminary objections and amendments to preliminary objections comprising 14 issues. However, the only contention pressed, both at oral argument and in the brief of counsel, concerns the demurrer which questions the sufficiency of the title to the Act of 1935, as amended.

[Constitutional Provision]

Article III, sec. 3 of the Constitution of Pennsylvania provides:

> "No bill, except general appropriation bills, shall be passed containing more than one subject which shall be clearly expressed in its title."

The title to the Act of 1935 is as follows:

> "An Act to protect trade-mark owners, distributors, and the public against injuries and uneconomic practices in the distribution of articles of standard quality under a distinguished trade-mark, brand or name."

This act was amended as of June 12, 1941, P. L. 128, the title of which is:

> "An Act to amend sections one and two of the Act approved the fifth day of June, one thousand nine hundred and thirty-five (Pamphlet Laws, two hundred sixty-six), entitled, 'An Act to protect trade-mark owners, distributors and the public against injuries and uneconomic practices in the distribution of articles of standard quality under a distinguished trade-mark, brand or name' by extending the provisions thereof to vending equipment used in distributing such articles, and further defining parties having a right of action for unfair competition."

A further amendment of May 25, 1956, P. L. 1756, is titled as follows:

> "An Act amending the Act of June five, one thousand nine hundred thirty-five (Pamphlet Laws 266), entitled, 'An Act to protect trade-mark owners, distributors, and the public against injuries and uneconomic practices in the distribution of articles of standard quality under a distinguished trade-mark, brand or name,' further regulating exceptions to contracts of sale and actions at law for unfair competition."

[Alleged Defect in Title]

Defendant maintains that the title of the Fair Trade Act of June 25, 1935, P. L. 266, as amended, is defective for this reason: The subject of the act is not clearly expressed in the title in that there is no reference or expression that the legislation is intended to establish an innovation in the law of contracts by binding strangers, nonsigners, to the contracts of others to which they have not in any manner agreed. It is urged that this portion of the act is in derogation of the common law, and therefore we are obliged to place a strict construction upon it: Statutory Construction Act of May 28, 1937, P. L. 1019, art. IV, sec. 58(8), 46 PS § 558(8); Bristol-Myers Co. v. Lit Brothers, Inc., 33 D. & C. 52.

[Controlling Decision]

In spite of any legal or economic concepts which are advanced by this defendant, we cannot disregard the clear holding of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in Burche Co. v. General Electric Company [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,078], 382 Pa. 370, which sustained the constitutionality of this legislation.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

While it is true that the Burche case contains no discussion concerning the title to this act of assembly, we agree with Judge Van Dusen's holding in General Electric Co. v. Hess Brothers, Inc. [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,807], 155 F. Supp. 57, 61:

> "The objections to the Act based on the Pennsylvania Constitution should be presented to the Pennsylvania Supreme Court in view of the decision of that court holding the Act constitutional and the Pennsylvania rule that, where an appellate court has passed on any constitutional objection to an Act of Assembly, it is presumed to have passed on all constitutional objections to that Act."

Our research has failed to disclose any case which overrules Wheeler v. Rice, 4 Brewster 129 (1871), which held that where an act of assembly has been decided to be constitutional, an inferior court is bound by that judgment, notwithstanding new reasons are set up against it. The presumption of law is that all the existing reasons were considered and held insufficient. See also Swatara Township School District's Appeal, 1 Pa. Superior Ct. 502; Black's Constitutional Law, 3d ed., page 61.

This act was the subject of Supreme Court decisions on other occasions and even though constitutional questions were not involved, we must accept the fact that fair trade, or price fixing as defendant chooses to designate it, is the settled law of Pennsylvania in spite of the abandonment of the policy by many well known manufacturers in recent months: Bristol-Myers Company v. Lit Brothers, Inc. [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,227], 336 Pa. 81; Lentheric, Inc. v. F. W. Woolworth Co. [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,033], 338 Pa. 523. Chief Justice Kephart said in Turco Paint and Varnish Company v. Kalodner, 320 Pa. 421, 428:

> ". . . it is fair to assume that had there been any constitutional objections such as are here being considered, they would have been raised and the court would have passed on them."

Even though we believe that we would not be obliged to delve further into the constitutional question raised, nevertheless we will present our views on the precise problem.

[Principles]

In construing this constitutional provision, we are governed by the well settled principles reviewed in Boyertown Burial Casket Co. v. Commonwealth, 366 Pa. 574, 590:

> "It is well settled by a multitude of cases that the title need not be an index nor a synopsis of the contents of the Act. On the contrary, all that is required is that the title shall contain words sufficient to cause one having a reasonably inquiring state of mind to examine the Act in order to determine whether or not he may be affected by it and that, unless a substantive matter entirely disconnected with the named legislation is included therein, the Act does not fall within the constitutional inhibition.
>
> "As said by the Supreme Court in Commonwealth v. American Gas Company, 352 Pa. 113, 118-9. 'In Commonwealth v. Stofchek, 322 Pa. 513, 185 A. 840, Kelley v. Earle, 325 Pa. 337, 190 A. 140, and Gumpert's Estate, 343 Pa. 405, 23 A. 2d 479, we had occasion to review this constitutional provision and to assert the principles governing its application. As stated in Gumpert's Estate, at page 407, by Mr. Justice Horace Stern: "It is unnecessary to elaborate upon the oft-repeated principle that all the Constitution requires is that the title should put persons of a reasonably inquiring state of mind on notice of the general subject matter of the act. The incidental provisions of the statute need not be enumerated or indexed in the title if they are germane to the legislation as a whole. 'Unless a substantive matter, entirely disconnected with the named legislation, is included within the folds of the bill, the act should not be declared as a violation of the Constitution by reason of its title offending Section 3 of Article III.'" ' ".

The expressed purpose of the legislature was to protect trade-mark owners and others against uneconomic distribution practices relating to articles of standard quality having a distinguishing trade-mark, brand or name: Bristol-Myers Co. v. Lit Brothers, supra, page 85. Defendant, however, contends that the title is insufficient to put it, a nonsigner, upon notice that the legislation is applicable to those in this category. If the title to the act made any reference to voluntary contracts, there might be merit in this position. However, to any merchant of a reasonably inquiring mind, it is immediately apparent that the title of the original act and its amendments is applicable to any person who is engaged in the distribution of certain types of articles. Furthermore, we are of the opinion that defendant and others in his category could not be misled by the title and that it meets the test set forth in Provident Life & Trust Company v. Hammond, 230 Pa. 407, 411, wherein the Supreme Court held that > ". . . the purpose was to prevent fraud and deception by requiring the title of the bill to disclose fully and clearly its subject so that all interested parties could be heard for and against the proposed legislation if they desired."

See also Commonwealth v. Stofchek, 322 Pa. 513, 517, where Chief Justice Kephart said:

> "The real purpose of section 3, of article III, must be considered in answering the question raised by appellant. The provision was not intended to exercise a pedantic tyranny over the grammatical efforts of legislators, nor to place them between the horns of a constructional dilemma, namely, that the title of an act must be so general or so particularized as to include all of its subject-matter, and yet not so general as to give no indication of its purpose, nor so particular as to inferentially exclude from its scope any items inadvertently omitted. As stated in Soldiers and Sailors Memorial Bridge, 308 Pa. 487, citing Car v. Aetna A. & L. Co., 64 Pa. Superior Ct. 343, at 349, the provision is not applicable 'unless a substantive matter, entirely disconnected with the named legislation, is included within the folds of the bill.' It is intended to operate to exclude from the measure that which is secret and unrelated: Beckett v. City of Allegheny, 85 Pa. 191. The history of this section indicates that this is its true purpose."

[Alleged Change in Common Law]

Equally untenable is the position that since the act made a change in the common law, it must be specifically spelled out in the title. We might well question the soundness of the contention that this statute makes a change in the common law. The act does not make a nonsigner a party to a contract in the strict sense. All that a contract does in any given case is to serve as a foundation stone for fixing the established prices so as to prevent unfair competition. This is a legitimate and not completely new legislative objective. In any event the portion of the Act of 1935 regarding nonsigners is nothing more than an incidental provision and it need not be enumerated or indexed in the title if it is germane to the legislation as a whole: Gumpert's Estate, supra.

[Decisions of Other Jurisdictions]

Authority for the sufficiency of the title to the Pennsylvania legislation is to be found in the decisions of several States which have fair trade acts with identical titles.

In Weco Products Co. v. Sam's Cut Rate, Inc. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,080], 296 Mich. 190, 295 N. W. 611, the constitutionality of the Michigan act was upheld upon attack by a "nonsigner" on the grounds that the title failed to confrom to this constitutional provision: "No law shall embrace more than one object which shall be expressed in the title." The title to the act is as follows: "An act to protect trade-mark owners, distributors and the public against injurious and uneconomic practices in the distribution of standard quality under a distinguished trade-mark, brand or name." * The Michigan court said:

> "'While it (the Covert Act) contains various related provisions not directly indicated or enumerated in the title, under the construction of this constitutional requirement, as many times reviewed by this court, if the act centers to one main general object or purpose which the title comprehensively declares, though in general terms, and if provisions in the body of the act not directly mentioned in the title are germane, auxiliary, or incidental to that general purpose, the constitutional requirement is met.
>
> "'A title is but a descriptive caption, directing attention to the subject matter which follows.'
>
> "[2] A title which directs attention to the protection of trade-mark owners, etc., against injurious and uneconomic practices in the distribution of articles of standard quality under a distinguished trade-mark is expressive of the purpose and scope of the enactment. Consideration of the language of the act does not show any objects which are foreign to the statement in the title and contains matter which should be expected in an act bearing such a title. We are satisfied

* The Pennsylvania act is identical except that it uses the term "injuries" instead of what we deem the more appropriate word "injurious."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

that the title of the act in question does not violate the constitutional requirement."

Defendant seeks to distinguish the Weco case on the ground that the Michigan Constitution uses the term "object" whereas the word "subject" appears in the Pennsylvania provision. While we appreciate the grammatical significance of this position, it is not persuasive in the light of the principle that the only requirement in this Commonwealth is that the title should put persons of a reasonably inquiring state of mind on notice of the general subject matter: Gumpert's Estate, supra, page 407. Defendant, therefore, is put on notice of the provisions of the act regardless of whether it deals with an object or a subject.

The title of the South Carolina act was upheld in Miles Laboratories, Inc. v. Seignious, 30 F. Supp. 549. There, too, the title and constitutional provisions are identical to the Pennsylvania act.

In General Electric Company v. Wender [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,718], 151 F. Supp. 621, 622, the district court considered the title to the Fair Trade Act of West Virginia which was titled as follows:

> "'An Act to protect trade-mark owners, producers, distributors and the general public against injurious and uneconomic practices in the distribution of competitive commodities bearing a distinguishing trade-mark, brand or name, through the use of voluntary contracts establishing minimum resale prices and providing for refusal to sell unless such minimum resale prices are observed.' W. Va. Laws 1937, c. 123."

The court held that the act insofar as it applies sanctions to nonsigners, was void as in violation of the West Virginia Constitution, the title provision of which is similar to the Pennsylvania Constitution. We cite this case for the reason that it makes reference to the fact that four States use the term "through the use of voluntary contracts" in the title and points out that a large number of States, including Michigan and Pennsylvania, do not have this phrase in the title. The court distinguished Weco Products Co. v. Sam's Cut Rate, supra, only because the Michigan act does not contain the restrictive words, "through the use of voluntary contracts."

[Presumption of Constitutionality]

The Fair Trade Act of 1935 is cloaked with a presumption of constitutionality and it has withstood the attacks of many constitutional arguments. We find no merit in the present assault through the medium of article III, sec. 3, of the Pennsylvania Constitution upon what we deem a properly drafted legislative enactment.

Order

And now, April 22, 1958, defendant's preliminary objections are overruled and it is ordered that it file an answer on the merits within 20 days after service of this order upon its counsel. Either party may apply to the court to fix a date for the hearing on the application for a preliminary injunction.

[¶ 69,356] Court Degraw Theatre, Inc. v. Loew's Incorporated, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York. Civil No. 12921. Dated May 1, 1959.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Who May Be Liable—Successor Corporation—Transferee Liability.—In a private antitrust action, a motion picture distributor was denied a summary judgment where it had contended that there was no basis for either direct or transferee liability as to any claim asserted against it. The court was not satisfied that there was no question of fact on the issue of transferee liability.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9006.

For the plaintiff: Sperry, Weinberg & Ruskay (Joseph A. Ruskay, of counsel).

For the moving defendant: Louis Phillips (E. Compton Timberlake, Bernard E. Kalman, and Marvin Ginsky, of counsel) for Paramount Pictures Corporation.

For prior opinions of the U. S. District Court, Eastern District of New York, see 1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,297, 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,014, and 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,634.

Memorandum

JOSEPH C. ZAVATT, District Judge [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]:

* * *

III

[Transferee Liability]

The motion of the defendant Paramount Pictures Corporation for summary judgment is denied without prejudice. The motion is grounded in part upon the fact that there is no basis for either direct or transferee liability as to any claim asserted against the defendant. The court is not satisfied that the affidavit upon which the motion is based sufficiently establishes that there is no question of fact upon the issue of transferee liability. Cf., Gordon v. Loews, Inc. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,573], 147 F. Supp. 398 (D. N. J. 1956). The question now presented was not passed upon in Leonia Amusement Corp. v. Loew's, Inc. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,592], 117 F. Supp. 747 (S. D. N. Y. 1953), upon which the defendant relies.

This is an order.

[¶ 69,357] Gilbar Pharmacy, Inc. v. Morse.

In the New York Supreme Court, Westchester County. 141 N. Y. L. J., No. 92, page 15. Dated May 13, 1959.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Defenses to Enforcement Action—Enforcement Activity or Policy.—A retail pharmacy was granted a temporary injunction restraining a mail order house from selling trade-marked products at less than the prices established under the New York Fair Trade Act. In defense, it was contended that (1) other competitors were engaged in "price cutting," (2) the pharmacy was conspiring with other competitors to injure the business of the mail order house, (3) there was no allegation or proof that the manufacturers of the products were presently enforcing such minimum resale prices, and (4) the pharmacy made no showing of actual damages. Also, the mail order house requested the court to "take judicial notice of the fact that price cutting, and discounting of drug and sundry products at retail is rampant and notorious." Those assertions were extremely general, inconclusive, and, in prior cases, had been held insufficient as a matter of law.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3440.34.

[Fair Trade Action]

BRENNAN, Justice [In full text]: This is a motion for a temporary injunction in an action for a permanent injunction pursuant to the Fair Trade Law of this State, known as the Feld-Crawford Act (General Business Law, section 369-a et seq.). The plaintiff owns and operates a drug store in the City of Yonkers and the defendants conduct a mail order business in said city wherein they offer for sale (by the distribution of circulars, order forms and self-addressed envelopes) well advertised, trade-marked and brand named drugs, toiletries and other like articles at stated discounts. With a few exceptions, the plaintiff handles and sells the same merchandise. It appears to be clear that by the defendants' methods, they are knowingly offering the aforesaid products for sale at less than the regular, legal prices established under the Fair Trade Law.

[General and Inconclusive Assertions]

In this court's view the plaintiff has established a clear case for a temporary injunction. The contentions of the defendants as set forth in an opposing affidavit by one of them are to the effect that other competitors in the area have violated said law by "price cutting"; that the plaintiff is conspiring with said other competitors to injure and destroy the defendants' business so that the plaintiff and said other competitors will be free to sell the subject products at prices below the prices established pursuant to law; that the plaintiff has failed to show that any customers of the plaintiff or any person in the area which plaintiff services, has purchased any of the subject products from the defendants or has been solicited by the defendants; that there is no allegation or proof that the manufacturers, owners or distributors of the subject products are presently enforcing such minimum retail prices; that the court is requested to "take judicial notice of the fact that price cutting and discounting of drug and sundry products at retail is rampant and notorious"; and that plaintiff has made no showing of actual damages.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Not only are these assertions extremely general but they are inconclusive and such like assertions were made, considered and passed upon by Mr. Justice Eager in the case of Whitaker Pharmacy, Inc. v. Pinkiert Supply Store, Inc. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,879], (N. Y. L. J., December 9, 1957), and by Mr. Justice Fanelli, in the case of Chester Hill Pharmacy, Inc. v. Westchester Union Drug Plan, Inc. [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,092], (N. Y. L. J., June 16, 1958), and were held to be insufficient as a matter of law.

[Temporary Injunction Granted]

Accordingly, the motion is granted. Settle order on notice providing for a bond in the sum of $5,000 and a direction that the plaintiff notice this case for trial for the next available term of court.

[¶ 69,358] Baldwin-Lima-Hamilton Corporation and Edward E. Simmons, Jr. v. Tatnall Measuring Systems Company and The Budd Company.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. Civil Action No. 23505. Dated December 1, 1958. Supplemental Opinion dated December 24, 1958.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies—Patents—Restricting Use of Patented Article After Sale—Allocation of Markets in Patented Articles—Test of Legality.—An exclusive licensee of a "strain gage," a device for measuring "strain" in materials, was barred from enforcing the patent against an infringer where the patented gages were sold to "licensees" under agreements which provided that the gages could be resold only as an element in apparatus manufactured by the "licensees." Since only one "license" was issued for each field of use, "licensees" were able to sell equipment embodying the gage in fields which were noncompetitive with each other. As to unpatented articles, agreements among competitors to allocate marketing territories are unreasonable per se and void under the Sherman Act. Therefore, if the gages had been unpatented, the arrangements between the licensee and its "licensees" could not have survived the Sherman Act. However, the patent laws afford no authority for a patentee to control the use to which a patented article may be put after the patentee has sold it. Hence, the restriction imposed upon the "licensees" and "purchasers" was an effort to enlarge the patent monopoly beyond the point contemplated by the patent laws and had to be tested as a matter of general contract law, rather than as an incident of the patent grant. So tested, the allocation of fields of use was illegal per se under the Sherman Act.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2013.500; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9040.05.

Exclusive Dealing Under Clayton Act, Section 3—Patent Misuse as Bar to Infringement Action—"Tying" Other Apparatus to Sale of Patented Device.—An exclusive licensee of a "strain gage," a device for measuring "strain" in materials, was barred from enforcing the patent, even though it was valid and had been infringed, because the licensee misused the patent in "tying" the use of other apparatus to the use of the patented gage. The licensee, by selling the gages to "licensees" under agreements which provided that they could resell them only as an element in apparatus manufactured by the "licensees", used the patent monopoly to further the sale of other apparatus with which the patented device could be used. Anyone who desired to use the patented gage as an element in an apparatus of the type manufactured by the licensee or its "licensees" was compelled to buy from them the other apparatus as well as the patented gage. By that marketing policy, the licensee was able to reduce or eliminate the competition that might have been encountered in selling such other apparatus. That misuse barred the infringement action in a court of equity, regardless of whether the "tying" arrangement resulted in a violation of the antitrust laws. Furthermore, it was not material whether the "tied" apparatus was covered by other patents of the licensee. The monopoly which the patent law grants with respect to an article covered by one patent may not be utilized to aid the patentee in exploiting another article, even though it is covered by another patent.

In addition, the tied product was not a part of a patented combination and hence subject to the monopoly of the patent. Also rejected was the contention that 35 United States Code 271(d) (a section of the patent statute providing that it is not misuse for a patentee to license the doing of acts that, without his consent, would constitute "contributory infringement") barred the misuse defense. An unauthorized sale of that apparatus would not constitute "contributory infringement" because the "tied" apparatus was not "a material part of the invention."

See Exclusive Dealing, Vol. 1, ¶ 4007.275, 4007.725, 4009.600.

Exclusive Dealing Under Clayton Act, Section 3—Restrictive Trade Practices—Requirements Contracts—Effect on Competition.—An exclusive licensee of a "strain gage," a device for measuring "strain" in materials, did not violate Section 3 of the Clayton Act by including requirements provisions in "licensing" agreements. Typical of those agreements was one which granted to an aircraft company a non-exclusive right to manufacture 10 per cent of its annual gage requirements, but which required it to purchase the remainder of its requirements from the licensee. That obligation to buy exclusively from the licensee was tantamount to an agreement not to use or deal in the goods of the licensee's competitors. However, to contravene Section 3, a requirements contract must provide a potential or actual clog on competition. The "licensing" agreements, since they did not prevent "licensees" from buying gages that did not infringe the licensee's patents, were, in effect, undertakings not to infringe those patents. Since the Clayton Act has no interest in fostering illicit competition, an agreement to refrain from infringement is beyond its reach. Furthermore, competition in non-infringing gages was not restrained by the requirements provisions. The "licensees," having acquired gages from the licensee under terms which gave them no authority to resell, could not have been potential competitors of the licensee. "Purchasers" from the licensee, in theory at least, might have competed for the aircraft companies' trade if those companies had not been required to purchase their requirements from the licensee. Viewed realistically, however, those "purchasers" could not have competed unless they paid the licensee less than the aircraft companies had to pay. No such price distinction could be assumed since it would have been prima facie illegal under the Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act.

See Exclusive Dealing, Vol. 1, ¶ 4007.275, 4007.550, 4009.100, 4009.475.

For the plaintiffs: Arthur Littleton and Robert C. McAdoo (of Morgan, Lewis and Bockius), Philadelphia, Pa.; Walter J. Blenko, Sr., and Walter J. Blenko, Jr. (of Blenko, Hoopes, Leonard & Buell), Pittsburgh, Pa.; and Edward A. Hathaway, Waltham, Mass., for Baldwin-Lima-Hamilton Corp.

For the defendants: Joseph W. Swain and Thomas N. O'Neill, Jr. (of Montgomery, McCracken, Walker & Rhoads), Philadelphia, Pa.; Dexter N. Shaw and John C. Dorfman (of Howson & Howson), Philadelphia, Pa.

Opinion

[Patent Infringement Action]

STEEL, District Judge [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: Simmons, a patentee, and his licensee, Baldwin-Lima-Hamilton Corporation (hereinafter "Baldwin"), have sued The Budd Company (hereinafter "Budd") and its wholly owned subsidiary, Tatnall Measuring Systems Company (hereinafter "Tatnall"), for infringement of Claims 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8 and 9 of Patent No. 2292549 (hereinafter "Simmons patent"). The patent relates to a gage for measuring strain in materials.

Baldwin has marketed "bonded wire strain gages" under the Simmons patent since 1940. Without license from plaintiffs, Tatnall has manufactured, used and sold "foil type" strain gages and Budd has used "foil type" strain gages manufactured by Tatnall. The "foil gages", plaintiffs charge, infringe the Simmons patent.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Defenses]

In defense the defendants have pleaded (a) noninfringement; (b) invalidity because of (i) anticipation, (ii) lack of invention and obviousness, (iii) inadequacy of patent description, and (iv) inclusion of new matter in amendment to application; and (c) unclean hands because of (i) fraud on the Patent Office, and (ii) patent misuse.

* * *

* * *

(b) Patent Misuse

[Clayton Act, Section 3]

1. Requirements Licenses. Defendants assert that Baldwin imposed a contractual obligation upon a number of its licensees which required them to purchase all or substantially all of their strain gages exclusively from Baldwin. This requirement is said to violate § 3 of the Clayton Act.[25] If this is true the patent may not be enforced. A patentee who attempts to expand the patent monopoly in derogation of the anti-trust laws is estopped to enforce it. Mercoid Corp. v. Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co. [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,202], 320 U. S. 680, 684 (1944).

The agreements containing the requirements provisions were entered into by Baldwin between 1944 and 1949 with a number of aircraft companies. Each of these agreements constitutes both a license and a sales contract, although it is designated a "license". The license between Baldwin and North American Aviation Company is typical. By this license Baldwin granted to North American a non-exclusive right to manufacture for specified limited uses and disposition a wire-type strain gage embodying the invention of a number of patents, including the Simmons patent. The quantity which North American was authorized to manufacture was limited to 10% of its annual requirements; North American was required to buy the remainder of its requirements from Baldwin. North American was free to manufacture gages which were not subject to Baldwin's patents. The purchase requirement pertained to patented gages only. The license ran from year to year and was subject to annual termination by either party upon notice.

Analyzing the requirements provision in the terms of § 3 of the Clayton Act, it appears that the contracts are "for sale of goods", Radio Corporation of America v. Lord, 28 F. 2d 257 (3d Cir. 1928); cert. den. 278 U. S. 648; that the obligation to buy exclusively from Baldwin is tantamount to an agreement "not (to) use or deal in the goods . . . of a competitor or competitors . . ." of Baldwin's, Standard Oil Company of California v. U. S. [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,432], 337 U. S. 293, 297-298 (1949); and that the Clayton Act by its terms applies to both patented and unpatented articles.

[Agreement Not to Infringe Patents]

It is to be noted that the licenses do not prevent the licensees from buying gages of any kind, in any quantities, and from whomsoever the licensees please, so long as the gages do not infringe Baldwin's patents. In effect, the agreements are undertakings not to infringe the Baldwin patents.

[Effect on Competition]

To contravene § 3 of the Clayton Act a requirements contract must provide a potential or actual clog on substantial competition. Standard Oil Company of California v. U. S., supra. But the competition which the Clayton Act is designed to encourage is legitimate competition. It has no interest in fostering illicit competition. Yet, defendants' argument presupposes that the contrary is true and that an infringer is the object of the same Congressional solicitude as an honest trader. Since the patent laws subject an infringer to an action for an injunction and damages, an agreement to refrain from infringement is beyond the reach of the Clayton Act.

["Tying Clause" Cases Distinguished]

International Business Machines Corporation v. U. S. [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,112], 298 U. S. 131 (1936) does not point to a contrary conclusion. There, the Court held

* * *

[25] Section 3 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. § 14) reads:

"It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to lease or make a sale or contract for sale of goods, . . . whether patented or unpatented, for use, consumption, or resale within the United States . . . on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, . . . of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale or such condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce."

that § 3 of the Clayton Act had been violated by a lease of a patented tabulating machine which provided that the lease should terminate if cards not manufactured by the lessor were used in the leased machine. It was assumed by the Court that the licensor owned patents which gave it a monopoly to manufacture and sell the cards separately and in combination with tabulating machines.

International Business Machines involved the validity of a tying clause; the requirements provisions of the Baldwin licenses do not. What the tying clause cases condemn is the extension of the monopoly of one patented product to create a monopoly or restraint of competition with respect to a second product not countenanced by the patent applicable to the first product. Automatic Radio Co. v. Hazeltine [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,634], 339 U. S. 827, 832 (1950); Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. U. S. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,494], 345 U. S. 594, 614 (1953). Neither the rationale nor the doctrines involved in a tying clause case can be utilized to dispose of a case involving a requirements provision. Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. U. S., supra, p. 614. This was implicitly recognized in Steiner Sales Co. v. Schwartz Sales Co. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,187], 98 F. 2d 999, 1010-1011 (10th Cir. 1938); cert. den. 305 U. S. 662 (1939) when the Court sustained a requirements clause pertaining to the purchase of a patented article the terms of which are substantially indistinguishable from that in the Baldwin license. In the copyright field a result comparable to that in Steiner was arrived at in Cardinal Films, Inc. v. Republic Pictures Corporation [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,584], 148 F. Supp. 156 (S. D. N. Y. 1957).

[Validity of Patents]

Defendants argue that by the requirements provisions in its licenses Baldwin has protected itself from infringement without putting the validity of its patent in hazard as it inevitably would have done if it had sued the licensee or its vendor for infringement. This contention is based upon the following statement in the International Business Machines opinion (p. 137):

> ". . . The only purpose or effect of the tying clause, so far as it could be effectively applied to patented articles, is either to prevent the use, by a lessee, of the product of a competitor of the lessor, where the lessor's patent, prima facie, embraces that product, and thus avoid judicial review of the patent, or else to compel its examination in every suit brought to set aside the tying clause, although the suit could usually result in no binding adjudication as to the validity of the patent, since infringement would not be in issue. . . ."

Regardless of what was said in the International Business Machines case when a tying clause was involved, later decisions make it clear that when an agreement otherwise offensive to the anti-trust laws is sought to be sustained upon the ground that its terms are consistent with the monopoly conferred by a patent to which the agreement pertains, the validity of the patent can be assailed in connection with the assault upon the agreement. Sola Electric Co. v. Jefferson Electric Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,245], 317 U. S. 173 (1942); MacGregor v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,525], 329 U. S. 402 (1947); Katzinger Co. v. Chicago Metallic Mfg. Co. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,524], 329 U. S. 394 (1947). Under these decisions, if Baldwin had sued under the requirements provision of its license to enjoin an aircraft company from purchasing an infringing gage, the aircraft company could have pleaded the invalidity of the Simmons patent and obtained an adjudication thereon.

[Potential Competitors]

At oral argument the contention was advanced for the first time that Baldwin had sold Simmons gages to "purchasers" and "licensees" other than the aircraft companies under terms which permitted their resale to the aircraft companies. These non-infringing gages, defendants assert, would have been potentially competitive with the gages which Baldwin was selling to the aircraft companies had not the competition been prevented by the requirements provisions of the aircraft company licenses.[26]

[Competition Not Restrained]

The "licensees" of Baldwin to which defendants refer as potential competitors with Baldwin for the business of the aircraft companies, presumably included the individuals, educational institutions, and industrial organizations other than the aircraft companies, to which Baldwin had issued a wide variety of licenses. Some of these licenses, such as the so-called "experimental and research" licenses, confined the use of the gages to the licensees personally and expressly prohibited resale. These licensees could not possibly have been potential competitors of Baldwin's for the business of the aircraft companies even if Baldwin's licenses with the latter had contained no requirements clauses. Other so-called "commercial licenses" granted by Baldwin contemplated the incorporation of the Simmons gage as an integral part of equipment of various kinds which the licensees were manufacturing and selling.[27] These licenses conferred no authority upon the licensees to sell strain gages per se. These licensees were, however, free to sell equipment embodying the Simmons gage to the aircraft companies for the requirements provisions of the aircraft companies' licenses were not applicable to equipment embodying strain gages but applied only to strain gages per se. Competition between Baldwin and its "commercial licensees" for the aircraft company business was therefore in no way restrained by the requirements provisions in the aircraft companies' licenses.

[26] Transcript of argument, October 10, 1958, at p. 157.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

The "purchasers" of Baldwin gages which defendants cite as potential competitors of Baldwin for the aircraft company business acquired their gages from Baldwin accompanied by a notice which stated that the gages could be used only in a temporarily expendable manner for testing purposes. Plaintiffs and defendants both agree that the notice did not prevent a resale of the gage to anyone—including the aircraft companies—provided the gages were used within the limitations of the notice.[28] Most of the aircraft company gage useage was within the area of use authorized by the notice. So that in theory at least purchasers under notice might have competed with Baldwin for the aircraft companies' strain gage trade had the aircraft companies not been burdened by the provision in their licenses requiring them to make all purchases of patented gages from Baldwin. The record, however, does not reveal the price which the purchasers under notice or the aircraft companies paid Baldwin for their gages. Viewed realistically, unless the purchasers under notice paid Baldwin less than the aircraft companies paid it, they could not have been potentially competitive with Baldwin. Certainly a price differential in favor of notice purchasers as against the price paid by the aircraft companies cannot be assumed, especially in view of 15 U. S. C. § 13 which would have made such a price distinction prima facie illegal.

2. Restrictions on Use of Gages after Sale. Baldwin was an exclusive licensee of the Simmons patent with the right to sublicense. Nevertheless, Baldwin chose to exploit the patent primarily by manufacturing and selling the gages. The gages were subject to two general categories of use: first, in the field of structural testing or stress analysis when the gage was used in a temporary expendable manner; and second, as a part of some other machine or apparatus in which the gage performed a permanent operating, controlling or service function.

[Allocation of Markets]

Baldwin sold the Simmons gages accompanied by notices and under "licenses". Vendees of gages sold with notices were prohibited from using the gages except in a temporary expendable way for testing or stress analysis purposes. By the notices Baldwin reserved to itself all fields in which the gages could be permanently used as an operating, controlling or service function as part of a machine, apparatus or device. Some of the reserved fields were exploited

[27] Examples of commercial licenses granted pursuant to these policies are as follows: Byron Jackson Company (D-311)—restricted to the field of oil field tools and equipment; Waugh Equipment Company (D-277)—restricted to the field of weighing airplanes by permanently applying the gauge to the surface of a normally existing structural element; Brown & Sharpe Mfg. Co. (D-312)—restricted to certain machine tools and dimensional measuring tools; Cox and Stevens Aircraft Corporation (D-319)—restricted to compression cells for aircraft weighing and platform scales; Industrial Electronics (D-323)—restricted to certain torsional vibration pickups, linear vibration pickups, and fluid pressure sensitive units; Polyphase Instrument Company (D-346)—restricted to the field of spark plugs for internal combustion engines; Instron Engineering Corporation (D-347)—restricted to certain enumerated equipment to be sold only for use in testing textiles and other non-metallic fibrous material; the Foxboro Company (D-351)—restricted to the field of fluid pressure measuring devices of the diaphragm type; Fredric Flader, Inc. (D-365)—restricted to the field of accelerometers and fluid pressure pickups of the sylphon bellows type.

[28] Transcript of argument, October 10, 1958, pp. 157, 180.

by Baldwin by the manufacture and sale of equipment and devices which utilized the Simmons gage to perform an operating, controlling or service function. Fields not so exploited by Baldwin were the subject of so-called "commercial licenses" which Baldwin granted to other manufacturing concerns. While these licenses were non-exclusive, Baldwin's policy was to issue only one of these licenses for each field of use. (See footnote 27, p. 65, supra). Under each license Baldwin sold gages to the licensee but with a provision that the gages could be resold only as an element in apparatus manufactured by the licensee. The result was that Baldwin was able to manufacture and sell devices embodying the Simmons gage as an operating, controlling or service element without competition from others, and its commercial licensees were able to sell equipment embodying the Simmons gage as a permanent element in fields which were non-competitive with each other.

[Patent "Status" Lost]

Agreements among competitors to allocate or divide marketing territories for unpatented articles are unreasonable per se and void under the Sherman Act. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. U. S., 175 U. S. 211 (1899). The arrangements between Baldwin and its vendees could not survive the Sherman Act if the gages had been unpatented. Defendants say that although the Simmons gages were patented, the monopoly of the patent was exhausted by the sale of the gages, and that thereafter they had the status of unpatented articles of commerce. The validity of this argument depends upon whether under the patent laws a patentee who sells a patented article may validly restrict the use which the vendee may make of it.

The Supreme Court has said on many occasions that the monopoly of a patentee remains so long as he retains ownership of the patented article, but that the monopoly ends with the sale of the article and that the patentee may not thereafter, by virtue of his patent, control the use of the article. The statement in U. S. v. Univis Lens Co. [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,208], 316 U. S. 241, 250-252 (1942) is typical:

". . . His monopoly remains so long as he retains the ownership of the patented article and the patentee may not thereafter, by virtue of his patent, control the use or disposition of the article. Bloomer v. Mcquewan, 14 How. 539, 549-50; Adams v. Burke, 17 Wall. 453; Hobbie v. Jennison, 149 U. S. 355. . . ."

". . . The first vending of any article manufactured under a patent puts the article beyond the reach of the monopoly which that patent confers. . . ."

Equally terse statements to the same effect are found in U. S. v. General Electric Company, 272 U. S. 476, 489 (1926); U. S. v. Masonite Corporation [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,209], 316 U. S. 265, 277-278 (1942); Bauer & Cie v. O'Donnell, 229 U. S. 1, 17 (1913); and Keeler v. Standard Folding Bed Company, 157 U. S. 659, 666 (1895).

It is true that these statements were made either in cases such as Keeler v. Standard Folding Bed Company, supra, which involved a sale without a restraint on use, or in cases such as Bauer & Cie v. O'Donnell, supra; U. S. v. General Electric Company, supra; U. S. v. Univis Lens Co., supra; and U. S. v. Masonite Corporation, supra, in which patentees attempted to fix the resale price of patented articles; and that cases in each of these groups may possibly be distinguished from that at bar wherein a limitation on use is sought to be imposed in connection with an initial sale by a patentee. Nevertheless, the consistency with which the Supreme Court has asserted for over half a century that the patent laws afford no authority for a patentee to control the use to which a patented article may be put after the patentee has sold it, and the failure of the Supreme Court to qualify in any way the reach of this principle make me disinclined to write exceptions into the principle at odds with its inherent comprehensiveness.

[Allocation Illegal Per Se]

So that what the Supreme Court has said on the subject ends the matter. The restrictions which Baldwin imposed upon its licensees and purchasers under notice find no support in the patent laws and constitute an effort by Baldwin to enlarge the patent monopoly beyond the point contemplated by the patent laws. The validity of the restraint on use to which Baldwin's vendees were subjected must be upheld, if at all, not as an incident of the patent grant, but as a matter of general contract law. So tested, the allocation of fields of use are illegal per se under the principle enunciated in Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. U. S., supra, in construing the Sherman Act.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

["Tying" Apparatus to Patented Article]

Furthermore, Baldwin's policy of limiting the use of its gages after their sale had a more basic vice. Baldwin realized from the beginning that profits on the sale of Simmons gages per se would be minimal and that if it was to secure a reasonable return it would have to be obtained from the sale, either by itself or by its licensees, of apparatus in which the Simmons gage was embodied as a permanent, operating, controlling, or service element. Accordingly Baldwin established a policy for the marketing of its gages which compelled anyone who desired to use a Simmons gage as an element in an apparatus of a type manufactured by Baldwin or by its licensees, to buy the apparatus from Baldwin or its licensees, regardless of whether similar apparatus could be obtained from other manufacturers. To illustrate, if anyone desired to use a Simmons gage as an element in a load cell (a device for weighing airplanes) he could do so only by purchasing both the load cell and the gage from Baldwin. Similarly, if anyone desired to use a Simmons gage as an element in a weight indicator, tong torque indicator, or drilling fluid pressure indicator for use in connection with oil field tools or equipment, he could do so only by purchasing both the indicator and the gage from Byron-Jackson, one of Baldwin's commercial licensees.[29] Had Baldwin not restricted the use which could be made of the gages which it sold, the buyer of the gages could have purchased load cells or indicators from any supplier of his choice and used the gages in connection with them.

When Baldwin himself was the seller, as in the case of the load cells, the competitive benefit which it received in the restraint on the use of its gages is obvious. But Baldwin obtained additional rewards from the enhanced competitive position which some of its licensees obtained by virtue of the use restriction. Thus, Baldwin not only made a profit when it sold strain gages to Byron-Jackson, but when Byron-Jackson sold weight indicators embodying the gage as an element, Byron-Jackson was required to pay Baldwin a royalty on all "attachments" and "measuring and/or recording instruments" which it sold for use with the indicators.[30]

[Patent Misused]

By thus conditioning the right to use Simmons gages as a permanent element solely with equipment purchased from Baldwin or its licensees, Baldwin has used the monopoly of the Simmons patent to further the sale of apparatus with which the gages can be used. The Simmons patent was issued as a reward to Simmons for disclosing his strain gage discovery to the public. The monopoly which Simmons received from the Patent Office for this disclosure was the full recompense which the patent laws contemplated he should have. Baldwin has, however, utilized the patent so as to obtain a benefit beyond the purview of the patent statute. By its marketing policy of the gages Baldwin has been able to reduce or eliminate the competition which it and its licensees might otherwise have encoutered in selling devices such as load cells and weight indicators not covered by the Simmons patent. Under the rationale of Morton Salt Co. v G. S. Suppiger Co. [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,176], 314 U. S. 488 (1942) and International Business Machines Corp. v. U. S., supra, the manner in which Baldwin has "tied" the use of the Simmons gage to the use of apparatus not covered by the Simmons patent sold by it and by its licensees, constituted a misuse of the Simmons patent. That misuse bars the enforcement of the patent against the defendant in a court of equity regardless of whether the "tying" practices resulted in a violation of the antitrust laws. Morton Salt Co. v. G. S. Suppiger Co., supra, p. 494; see also Transparent-Wrap Machine Corp. v. Stokes & Smith Co., [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,532], 329 U. S. 637, 641 (1947).

[Status of "Tied" Products]

The record is not clear whether all of the products to which the Simmons gages were "tied" were covered by other Baldwin patents. This, however, is not material. The monopoly which the patent law grants with respect to an article covered by one patent may not be utilized to aid the patentee to exploit another article even though it is covered by another patent. Ethyl Gasoline Corporation v. U. S. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,013], 309 U. S. 436, 459 (1940). Compare U. S. v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244], 334 U. S. 131, 157 (1948); Automatic Radio Manufacturing Co., Inc. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,634], 339 U. S. 827, 831 (1950).

[29] See footnote 27 at p. 65, supra, for a list of other licensees which received similar competitive benefits from Baldwin's marketing policy.

[30] The license between Byron-Jackson and Baldwin is typical of the commercial licenses listed in footnote 27, p. 65. Under each the licensee was required to pay royalties to Baldwin based on the licensee's sales price of the machine embodying the Simmons gage or the instrumentation sold for use with the Simmons gage or upon the embodying machinery and the instrumentation.

35 U. S. C. § 271 is not inconsistent with the foregoing views.

[Action Dismissed]

The action must therefore be dismissed notwithstanding the fact that the Simmons patent is valid and infringed.

The statements herein are intended to serve as findings of fact and conclusions of law under Rule 52.

Let an order be submitted accordingly.

Supplemental Opinion Sur Petition for Reargument

[Patent Misuse]

STEEL, District Judge [In full text]: A few supplemental observations appear warranted in view of the arguments made by plaintiffs in their petition for reargument.

["Tied" Product—Alleged Part of Patent "Combination"]

In contending that Baldwin has not misused the Simmons patent by tying the gage per se to the various types of strain sensitive apparatus which it and its licensees sell, plaintiffs assert that the apparatus is part of the patented combination and hence the entire structure—apparatus and gage—is subject to the monopoly of the patent. Plaintiffs point out that at p. 2 [not reproduced] of the opinion filed on December 1, 1958 the test body is found to be an element of claim 5 of the patent. This finding is now retracted. A closer reading of claim 5 discloses that the test body is not an element of Simmons' invention. While claim 5 mentions the test body, the reference is simply to explain what strain the gage measures and to describe the bonding of the filament. This reference to the test body does not, without more, make it an element in the claim. Compare Williams Manufacturing Co. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 316 U. S. 364, 369 (1942).

The distinction between a patent which merely covers a gage per se and combination patents which cover a gage per se and the apparatus with which the gage is used, is disclosed by comparing the patent in suit with other patents of Simmons' under which Baldwin grants licenses. The patent in suit states that it is "directed to my improved type of strain gage per se". Divided out of the application for this patent are patents covering the combination of a strain gage per se and specific types of apparatus with which the gage per se is used as a component. These divisional patents cover the combination of the gage per se when used in conjunction with a dynamometer (Patent 2,316,203), with an explosion pressure gage (Patent 2,327,935), and with a torque measuring apparatus (Patent 2,350,072). In each of the latter three patents the specific type of apparatus with which the gage per se is used is an element of the combination patent. In the patent in suit the "test body" with which the gage per se is used is not.

[Patent Statute—Bar to "Misuse Defense"]

Plaintiffs contend that because of the limitations on use which are expressly imposed when Baldwin sells its gages, Baldwin's relationship with its purchasers under notice and its commercial licensees is legally no different than if the arrangement involved a license. Accordingly it is asserted that 35 U. S. C. § 271(d) is a bar to the misuse defense.

[Contributory Infringer]

Conceding arguendo that a sale with a restriction on use is indistinguishable from a license limiting use, still 35 U. S. C. § 271(d) will not sustain Baldwin's tying policy against the charge of misuse. Section 271 (d) does not define the elements of misuse. It simply states what is not misuse. It says that it is not misuse for a patent owner, otherwise entitled to relief for infringement or contributory infringement, to derive revenue either from acts or from licensing others to perform acts which, if performed without the patentee's consent, would constitute contributory infringement. Plaintiffs argue that an unauthorized sale of apparatus to be used with the gage which Baldwin has sold under the notice restriction would constitute contributory infringement; hence, plaintiffs assert, by the terms of § 271(d) the tying of the apparatus to the gage cannot be a misuse of the patent.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

The premise of this argument will not withstand analysis. Section 271(c) defines a contributory infringer. Under its definition one is a contributory infringer only if a combination of several factors exists. To be liable for contributory infringement under the statute (1) a person must sell a component of a patented combination, (2) the component must constitute a material part of the invention, (3) the seller must know that the component has been especially made or especially adapted for use in an infringement of the patent, and (4) the component must not be a staple article or commodity of commerce suitable for substantial non-infringing use. Assuming that in the case of an unauthorized sale of apparatus for use with the Simmons gage factors (1), (3) and (4) were proven, the seller still would not be a contributory infringer because the apparatus would not be "a material part of the invention". The divisional action in the Patent Office supports the view that the combination of the strain gage per se and specific types of strain sensitive apparatus constitute inventions distinct and independent from the invention of the strain gage per se. 35 U. S. C. § 121. Furthermore, in paragraph 54 of plaintiffs' proposed findings of fact it is stated that "the gage element manufactured and sold by Baldwin, and built by others under license, is the heart of the Simmons invention . . .". And at page 3 of plaintiffs' brief dated September 20, 1958 plaintiffs say that the "gage in all its forms, as sold, is . . . a special device constituting the heart of the patented combination". The evidence supports these statements, and forecloses a finding that the apparatus sold by Baldwin and by its licensees, even though they be deemed to be components of the patented combination, are material parts of the invention.

Since then an unauthorized sale of a strain sensitive apparatus for use with a strain gage per se would not constitute contributory infringement, § 271(d) does not require a denial of the misuse defense.

In view of the finding that "the test body" in the Simmons patent is not a component of the patent, or, if it is, that it is not a material part of Simmons' invention, Hunt v. Armour & Co., 90 F. Supp. 767 (N. D. Ill.); aff'd 185 F. 2d 722 (7th Cir. 1950), relied upon by plaintiffs, is inapposite.

[Effect on Competition]

Plaintiffs argue that the record contains no evidence to support the statement which is found at page 74 of the December 1 opinion:

> "* * * By its marketing policy of the gages Baldwin has been able to reduce or eliminate the competition which it and its licensees might otherwise have encountered in selling devices such as load cells and weight indicators not covered by the Simmons patent. . . ."

While there may be no direct evidence to support this statement, it is a fair inference to be drawn from all the evidence. Moreover, the record leaves no room to doubt that for years it has been Baldwin's policy to refuse to sell its gages per se to persons who might desire to use them with strain sensitive apparatus of a type manufactured by Baldwin or by its licensees unless the persons bought both the gages per se and the apparatus from Baldwin or its licensees. This policy was enforced regardless of whether the buyers were in a position to manufacture the apparatus themselves or to buy it from others. The enforcement of this policy constituted an illegal expansion of the monopoly conferred by the Simmons patent on the gage per se beyond that contemplated by the patent grant. This misuse is a bar to the enforcement of the patent against the defendants regardless of whether plaintiffs' activities constituted a violation of the antitrust laws.

The foregoing shall constitute supplemental findings of fact and conclusions of law in accordance with Rule 52.

[Order]

An order will be entered denying the petition of plaintiffs for a reargument.

[¶ 69,359] Baldwin-Lima-Hamilton Corporation and Edward E. Simmons, Jr. v. Tatnall Measuring Systems Company and The Budd Company.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. No. 12,846. Argued May 7, 1959. Filed May 20, 1959.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. STEEL, District Judge.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Exclusive Dealing Under Clayton Act, Section 3—Patent Misuse as Bar to Infringement Action—"Tying" Other Apparatus to Sale of Patented Device.—A ruling that an exclusive licensee of a patented device for measuring "strain" in materials had "misused" the patent and was, therefore, barred from enforcing it against an infringer was affirmed upon the opinion, and particularly upon the supplemental opinion, of the trial judge. In those opinions, the trial court found that the licensee refused to sell its patented device to prospective purchasers desirous of using it with apparatus of a type manufactured by the licensee or its "licensees" unless the purchase included such other apparatus. The trial court was clearly right in holding that such misuse constituted an illegal expansion of the patent grant and was a bar to the enforcement of the patent, regardless of whether it violated the antitrust laws.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2013.500; Exclusive Dealing, Vol. 1, ¶ 4007.275, 4007.550, 4007.725, 4009.100, 4009.475, 4009.600; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9040.05.

For the appellant: Walter J. Blenko, Pittsburgh, Pa.

For the appellee: Joseph W. Swain, Jr., Philadelphia, Pa.

Affirming a decision of the U. S. District Court, Eastern District of Pennsylvania, 1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,358.

Before MCLAUGHLIN, KALODNER and STALEY, Circuit Judges.

Opinion of the Court

[Patent Misuse Ruling Affirmed]

PER CURIAM [In full text]: Plaintiff appeals from the finding of misuse of the suit patent.

We agree with the district court that the test body is not an element of the patent which is for a gage per se.

The limitation on use of the gage imposed by appellant, as found by the district court, consists of a flat refusal to sell it to prospective purchasers desirous of using it with strain sensitive apparatus of a type manufactured by Baldwin or its licensees unless the purchase included such apparatus from Baldwin or its licensees. The district court was clearly right in holding: "The enforcement of this policy constituted an illegal expansion of the monopoly conferred by the Simmons patent on the gage per se beyond that contemplated by the patent grant. This misuse is a bar to the enforcement of the patent against the defendants regardless of whether plaintiffs' activities constituted a violation of the antitrust laws."

The judgment of the district court will be affirmed upon the opinion and particularly the supplemental opinion of Judge Steel.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[¶ 69,360] Beacon Theatres, Inc. v. The Hon. Harry C. Westover, Judge of the United States District Court of the Southern District of California, Central Division, et al.

In the Supreme Court of the United States. No. 45—October Term, 1958. Dated May 25, 1959.

On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Declaratory Judgment and Equitable Relief—Counterclaim for Treble Damages Under Antitrust Laws—Separate Trials—Right to Jury Trial on Antitrust Issues.—A trial court improperly denied an antitrust treble damage counterclaimant the right to a jury trial by ordering, in advance of a jury trial of the issues raised by the counterclaim, a separate trial to the court, without a jury, of a motion picture exhibitor's complaint in which it sought (1) a declaratory judgment sustaining the reasonableness, under the antitrust laws, of its "clearances," and (2) an injunction prohibiting a competing exhibitor, the counterclaimant, from instituting an action under the antitrust laws. The counterclaim charged the exhibitor with conspiring to restrain trade and monopolize "first-run" pictures in violation of the antitrust laws. A common issue of both causes was the "reasonableness" of the clearances granted to the exhibitor. Thus, by way of res judicata or collateral estoppel, the court's prior determination of the equitable cause might limit the counterclaimant's opportunity to try, in a later trial to a jury, every issue which had a bearing upon its treble damage suit. Assuming that the pleadings could be construed to support a request for an injunction against threats of lawsuits, and assuming additionally that the complaint could be read as alleging the kind of harassment by a multiplicity of lawsuits which would traditionally have justified equity to take jurisdiction and settle the case in one lawsuit, under the Declaratory Judgment Act and the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, neither claim could justify denying the counterclaimant a trial by jury of all the issues in the antitrust controversy.

Under the Federal rules, the same court may try both legal and equitable causes in the same action. Thus, while giving the counterclaimant a full jury trial on the antitrust issues, a temporary injunction could be issued to protect the exhibitor from any irreparable harm. If, however, there should be cases where such protection could not be given while a legal cause was being afforded a jury trial, the trial court would have to use its discretion in deciding whether to try the legal or equitable cause first. The right to a jury trial, however, is a constitutional one; hence, that discretion is very narrowly limited and must, where possible, be exercised to preserve jury trial. Only under the most imperative circumstances can the right to a jury trial of legal issues be lost through prior determination of equitable claims.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9046.40, 9048, 9048.275, 9060.

For the petitioner: Jack Corinblit, Fred A. Weller, and Elwood S. Kendrick, Los Angeles, Cal.

For the respondent: Frank R. Johnston and Hudson B. Cox, Los Angeles, Cal.

Reversing a judgment of the U. S. Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit, 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 68,923.

[Right to Jury Trial]

Mr. Justice Black delivered the opinion of the Court [In full text]: Petitioner, Beacon Theatres, Inc., sought by mandamus to require a district judge in the Southern District of California to vacate certain orders alleged to deprive it of a jury trial of issues arising in a suit brought against it by Fox West Coast Theatres, Inc. The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit refused the writ, holding that the trial judge had acted within his proper discretion in denying petitioner's request for a jury. 252 F. 2d 864 [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,923]. We granted certiorari, 356 U. S. 956, because

> "Maintenance of the jury as a fact-finding body is of such importance and occupies so firm a place in our history and jurisprudence that any seeming curtailment of the right to a jury trial should be scrutinized with the utmost care." Dimick v. Schiedt, 293 U. S. 474, 486.

[Prior Proceedings]

Fox had asked for declaratory relief against Beacon alleging a controversy arising under the Sherman Antitrust Act, 26 Stat. 209, as amended, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2, and under the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 15, which authorizes suits for treble damages against Sherman Act violators. According to the complaint Fox operates a movie theatre in San Bernardino, California, and has long been exhibiting films under contracts with movie distributors. These contracts grant it the exclusive right to show "first run" pictures in the "San Bernardino competitive area" and provide for "clearance"—a period of time during which no other theatre can exhibit the same pictures. After building a drive-in theatre about 11 miles from San Bernardino, Beacon notified Fox that it considered contracts barring simultaneous exhibitions of first-run films in the two theatres to be overt acts in violation of the antitrust laws.[1] Fox's complaint alleged that this notification, together with threats of treble damage suits against Fox and its distributors, gave rise to "duress and coercion" which deprived Fox of a valuable property right, the right to negotiate for exclusive first-run contracts. Unless Beacon was restrained, the complaint continued, irreparable harm would result. Accordingly, while its pleading was styled a "Complaint for Declaratory Relief," Fox prayed both for a declaration that a grant of clearance between the Fox and Beacon theatres is reasonable and not in violation of the antitrust laws, and for an injunction, pending final resolution of the litigation, to prevent Beacon from instituting any action under the antitrust laws against Fox and its distributors arising out of the controversy alleged in the complaint.[2] Beacon filed an answer, a counterclaim against Fox, and a cross-claim against an exhibitor who had intervened. These denied the threats and asserted that there was no substantial competition between the two theatres, that the clearances granted were therefore unreasonable, and that a conspiracy existed between Fox and its distributors to manipulate contracts and clearances so as to restrain trade and monopolize first-run pictures in violation of the antitrust laws. Treble damages were asked.

[Common Issue]

Beacon demanded a jury trial of the factual issues in the case as provided by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 38(b). The District Court, however, viewed the issues raised by the "Complaint for Declaratory Relief," including the question of competition between the two theatres, as essentially equitable. Acting under the purported authority of Rules 42(b) and 57, it directed that these issues be tried to the court before jury determination of the validity of the charges of antitrust violations made in the counterclaim and cross-claim.[3] A common issue of the "Complaint for Declaratory Relief," the counterclaim, and the cross-claim was the reasonableness of the clearances granted to Fox, which depended, in part, on the existence of competition between the two theatres. Thus the effect of the action of the District Court could be, as the Court of Appeals believed, "to limit the petitioner's opportunity fully to try to a jury

[1] Beacon allegedly stated that the clearances granted violated both the antitrust laws and the decrees issued in United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 66 F. Supp. 323 [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,470], 70 F. Supp. 53 [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,526], affirmed in part and reversed in part, 334 U. S. 131 [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244], subsequent proceedings in the District Court, 85 F. Supp. 881 [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,473]. The decrees in that case set limits on what clearances could be given when theatres were in competition with each other and held that there should be no clearances between theatres not in substantial competition. Neither Beacon nor Fox, however, appears to have been a party to those decrees. Their relevance, therefore, seems to be only that of significant precedents.

[2] Other prayers, aside from the general equitable plea for "such further relief as the court deems proper" added nothing material to those set out.

[3] Fed. Rules Civ. Proc., 42(b) reads: "The court in furtherance of convenience or to avoid prejudice may order a separate trial of any claim, cross-claim, counterclaim, or third-party claim, or of any separate issue or of any number or claims, cross-claims, counterclaims, third-party claims, or issues." Rule 57 reads in part: "The court may order a speedy hearing of an action for a declaratory judgment and may advance it on the calendar."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

every issue which has a bearing upon its treble damage suit," for determination of the issue of clearances by the judge might "operate either by way of res judicata or collateral estoppel so as to conclude both parties with respect thereto at the subsequent trial of the treble damage claim." 252 F. 2d, at 874.

[Jury Questions]

The District Court's finding that the Complaint for Declaratory Relief presented basically equitable issues draws no support from the Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U. S. C. §§ 2201, 2202; Fed. Rules Civ. Proc., 57. See also 48 Stat. 955, 28 U. S. C. (1940 ed.) § 400. That statute, while allowing prospective defendants to sue to establish their nonliability, specifically preserves the right to jury trial for both parties.[4] It follows that if Beacon would have been entitled to a jury trial in a treble damage suit against Fox it cannot be deprived of that right merely because Fox took advantage of the availability of declaratory relief to sue Beacon first. Since the right to trial by jury applies to treble damage suits under the antitrust laws, and is, in fact, an essential part of the congressional plan for making competition rather than monopoly the rule of trade, see Fleitmann v. Welsbach Street Lighting Co., 240 U. S. 27, 29, the Sherman and Clayton Act issues on which Fox sought a declaration were essentially jury questions.

[Plea for Injunction]

Nevertheless the Court of Appeals refused to upset the order of the district judge. It held that the question of whether a right to jury trial existed was to be judged by Fox's complaint read as a whole. In addition to seeking a declaratory judgment, the court said, Fox's complaint can be read as making out a valid plea for injunctive relief, thus stating a claim traditionally cognizable in equity. A party who is entitled to maintain a suit in equity for an injunction, said the court, may have all the issues in his suit determined by the judge without a jury regardless of whether legal rights are involved. The court then rejected the argument that equitable relief, traditionally available only when legal remedies are inadequate, was rendered unnecessary in this case by the filing of the counterclaim and cross-claim which presented all the issues necessary to a determination of the right to injunctive relief. Relying on American Life Ins. Co. v. Stewart, 300 U. S. 203, 215, decided before the enactment of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, it invoked the principle that a court sitting in equity could retain jurisdiction even though later a legal remedy became available. In such instances the equity court had discretion to enjoin the later lawsuit in order to allow the whole dispute to be determined in one case in one court.[5] Reasoning by analogy, the Court of Appeals held it was not an abuse of discretion for the district judge, acting under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 42(b), to try the equitable cause first even though this might, through collateral estoppel, prevent a full jury trial of the counterclaim and cross-claim which were as effectively stopped as by an equity injunction.[6]

Beacon takes issue with the holding of the Court of Appeals that the complaint stated a claim upon which equitable relief could be granted. As initially filed the complaint alleged that threats of lawsuits by petitioner against Fox and its distributors were causing irreparable harm to Fox's business relationships. The prayer for relief, however, made no mention of the threats but asked only that pending litigation of the claim for declaratory judgment, Beacon be enjoined from beginning any lawsuits under the antitrust laws against Fox and its distributors arising out of the controversy alleged in the complaint. Evidently of the opinion that this prayer did not state a good claim for equitable relief, the Court of [4] See, e.g., (American) Lumbermen's Mut. Cas. Co. v. Timms & Howard, Inc., 108 F. 2d 497; Hargrove v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 125 F. 2d 225; Johnson v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 238 F. 2d 322. See Fed. Rules Civ. Proc., 57, 38, 39.

[5] Compare Enelow v. New York Life Ins. Co., 293 U. S. 379, with American Life Ins. Co. v. Stewart, 300 U. S. 203. See also City of Morgantown v. Royal Ins. Co., 337 U. S. 254; Peake v. Lincoln Nat. Life Ins. Co., 15 F. 2d 303.

[6] 252 F. 2d, at 874. In Ettelson v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 317 U. S. 188, 192, this Court recognized that orders enabling equitable causes to be tried before legal ones had the same effect as injunctions. In City of Morgantown v. Royal Ins. Co., 337 U. S. 254, the Court denied at least some such orders the status of injunctions for the purposes of appealability. It did not, of course, imply that when the orders came to be reviewed they would be examined any less strictly than injunctions. 337 U. S., at 258.

Appeals construed it to include a request for an injunction against threats of lawsuits. This liberal construction of a pleading is in line with Rule 8 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. See Conley v. Gibson, 355 U. S. 41, 47-48. But this fact does not solve our problem. Assuming that the pleadings can be construed to support such a request and assuming additionally that the complaint can be read as alleging the kind of harassment by a multiplicity of lawsuits which would traditionally have justified equity to take jurisdiction and settle the case in one suit,[7] we are nevertheless of the opinion that, under the Declaratory Judgment Act and the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, neither claim can justify denying Beacon a trial by jury of all the issues in the antitrust controversy.

[Adequacy of Legal Remedies]

The basis of injunctive relief in the federal courts has always been irreparable harm and inadequacy of legal remedies.[8] At least as much is required to justify a trial court in using its discretion under the Federal Rules to allow claims of equitable origins to be tried ahead of legal ones, since this has the same effect as an equitable injunction of the legal claims. And it is immaterial, in judging if that discretion is properly employed, that before the Federal Rules and the Declaratory Judgment Act were passed, courts of equity, exercising a jurisdiction separate from courts of law, were, in some cases, allowed to enjoin subsequent legal actions between the same parties involving the same controversy. This was because the subsequent legal action, though providing an opportunity to try the case to a jury, might not protect the right of the equity plaintiff to a fair and orderly adjudication of the controversy. See, e. g., New York Life Ins. Co. v. Seymour, 45 F. 2d 47. Under such circumstances the legal remedy could quite naturally be deemed inadequate. Inadequacy of remedy and irreparable harm are practical terms, however. As such their existence today must be determined, not by precedents decided under discarded procedures, but in the light of the remedies now made available by the Declaratory Judgment Act and the Federal Rules.[9]

Viewed in this manner, the use of discretion by the trial court under Rule 42(b) to deprive Beacon of a full jury trial on its counterclaim and cross-claim, as well as on Fox's plea for declaratory relief, cannot be justified. Under the Federal Rules the same court may try both legal and equitable causes in the same action. Fed. Rules Civ. Proc., 1, 2, 18. Thus any defenses, equitable or legal, Fox may have to charges of antitrust violations can be raised either in its suit for declaratory relief or in answer to Beacon's counterclaim. On proper showing, harassment by threats of other suits, or other suits actually brought, involving the issues being tried in this case, could be temporarily enjoined pending the outcome of this litigation. Whatever permanent injunctive relief Fox might be entitled to on the basis of the decision in this case could, of course, be given by the court after the jury renders its verdict. In this way the issues between these parties could be settled in one suit giving Beacon a full jury trial of every antitrust issue. Cf. Ring v. Spina, 166 F. 2d 546. By contrast, the holding of the court below while granting Fox no additional protection unless the avoidance of jury trial be considered as such, would compel Beacon to split his antitrust case, trying part to a judge and part to a jury.[10] Such a result, which involves the postponement and subordination of Fox's own legal claim for declaratory relief as well as of

[7] See, e.g., Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 515; Detroit v. Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co., 184 U. S. 368, 378-382; cf. Matthews v. Rodgers, 284 U. S. 521.

[8] E.g., Pennsylvania v. Wheeling & Belmont Bridge Co., 13 How. 518, 561; Parker v. Winnipiseogee Lake Cotton & Woollen Co., 2 Black 545, 551; Enelow v. New York Life Ins. Co., 293 U. S. 379.

[9] See, e. g., Cook, Cases on Equity (4th ed.), 18; 4 Pomeroy, Equity Jurisprudence (5th ed.), § 1370; 5 Moore, Federal Practice, 154-158; Morris, Jury Trial Under the Federal Fusion of Law and Equity, 20 Tex. L. Rev. 427, 441-443. Cf. Maryland Theater Corp. v. Brennan, 180 Md. 377, 389, 24 A. 2d 911; Hasselbring v. Koepke, 263 Mich. 466, 248 N. W. 869. But cf. 1 Pomeroy, Equity Jurisprudence (5th ed), §§ 182, 183. Significantly the Court of Appeals itself relied on the procedural changes brought about by the Federal Rules when it found the plea for charitable relief valid, for it did so by relying on Conley v. Gibson, 355 U. S. 41, which emphasized the liberal construction policies of the Rules.

[10] Since the issue of violation of the antitrust laws often turns on the reasonableness of a restraint on trade in the light of all the facts, see, e.g., Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 60, it is particularly undesirable to have some of the relevant considerations tried by one fact finder and some by another.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

the counterclaim which Beacon was compelled by the Federal Rules to bring,[11] is not permissible.

[Constitutional Guarantee]

Our decision is consistent with the plan of the Federal Rules and the Declaratory Judgment Act to effect substantial procedural reform while retaining a distinction between jury and nonjury issues and leaving substantive rights unchanged.[12] Since in the federal courts equity has always acted only when legal remedies were inadequate,[13] the expansion of adequate legal remedies provided by the Declaratory Judgment Act and the Federal Rules necessarily affects the scope of equity. Thus, the justification for equity's deciding legal issues once it obtains jurisdiction, and refusing to dismiss a case, merely because subsequently a legal remedy becomes available, must be reevaluated in the light of the liberal joinder provisions of the Federal Rules which allow legal and equitable causes to be brought and resolved in one civil action.[14] Similarly the need for, and therefore, the availability of such equitable remedies as Bills of Peace, Quia Timet and Injunction must be reconsidered in view of the existence of the Declaratory Judgment Act as well as the liberal joinder provision of the Rules.[15] This is not only in accord with the spirit of the Rules and the Act but is required by the provision in the Rules that "[t]he right to trial by jury as declared by the Seventh Amendment to the Constitution or as given by a statute of the United States shall be preserved . . . inviolate." [16]

[Limited Discretion]

If there should be cases where the availability of declaratory judgment or joinder in one suit of legal and equitable causes would not in all respects protect the plaintiff seeking equitable relief from irreparable harm while affording a jury trial in the legal cause, the trial court will necessarily have to use its discretion in deciding whether the legal or equitable cause should be tried first. Since the right to jury trial is a constitutional one, however, while no similar requirement protects trials by the court,[17] that discretion is very narrowly limited and must, wherever possible, be exercised to preserve jury trial. As this Court said in Scott v. Neely, 140 U. S. 106, 109-110:

> "In the Federal courts this [jury] right cannot be dispensed with, except by the assent of the parties entitled to it, nor can it be impaired by any blending with a claim, properly cognizable at law, of a demand for equitable relief in aid of the legal action or during its pendency." [18]

This long-standing principle of equity dictates that only under the most imperative circumstances, circumstances which in view of the flexible procedures of the Federal Rules we cannot now anticipate,[19] can the [11] Fed. Rules Civ. Proc., 13(a).

[12] See 28 U. S. C. § 2072; Fed. Rules Civ. Proc., 39(a), 57. See also Stainback v. Mo Hock Ke Lok Po, 336 U. S. 368, 382, n. 26; United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 340 U. S. 543, 555-556.

[13] See 36 Stat. 1163, derived from Act of Sept. 24, 1789, § 16, 1 Stat. 82. This provision, which antedates the Seventh Amendment, is discussed in 5 Moore, Federal Practice, 32. See, e.g., Hipp v. Babin, 19 How. 271, 277-278; Insurance Co. v. Bailey, 13 Wall. 616, 620-621; Grand Chute v. Winegar, 15 Wall. 373; Buzard v. Houston, 119 U. S. 347, 351-352.

[14] See Fed. Rules Civ. Proc., 1, 2, 18. Cf. Prudential Ins. Co. v. Saxe, 134 F. 2d 16, 31-34; Morris, Jury Trial Under the Federal Fusion of Law and Equity, 20 Tex. L. Rev. 427, 441-443.

[15] See 1 Pomeroy, (Equity Jurisprudence (5th ed.), §§ 251¾, 254, 264(b); 5 Moore, Federal Practice, 32; but cf. id., 209-211. See also, Note, The Joinder Rules and Equity Jurisdiction in the Avoidance of a Multiplicity of Suits, 12 Md. L. Rev. 88. Of course, unless there is an issue of a right to jury trial or of other rights which depend on whether the cause is a "legal" or "equitable" one, the question of adequacy of legal remedies is purely academic and need not arise.

[16] Fed. Rules Civ. Proc., 38(a). In delegating to the Supreme Court responsibility for drawing up rules, Congress declared that: "Such rules shall not abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right and shall preserve the right of trial by jury as at common law and as declared by the Seventh Amendment to the Constitution." 28 U. S. C. § 2072. The Seventh Amendment reads: "In suits at Common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise re-examined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law."

[17] See Hurwitz v. Hurwitz, 78 U. S. App. D. C. 66, 136 F. 2d 796, 798-799; cf. The Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 12 How. 443, 459-460.

[18] This Court has long emphasized the importance of the jury trial. See Parsons v. Bedford, 3 Pet. 433, 446. See also Galloway v. United States, 319 U. S. 372. Id., at 396 (dissenting opinion).

[19] For an example of the flexible procedures available under the Federal Rules, see Ring v. Spina [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,224], 166 F. 2d 546, 550.

right to a jury trial of legal issues be lost through prior determination of equitable claims. See Leimer v. Woods, 196 F. 2d 828, 833-836. As we have shown, this is far from being such a case.

[Mandamus Granted]

Respondent claims mandamus is not available under the All Writs Act, 28 U. S. C. § 1651. Whatever differences of opinion there may be in other types of cases, we think the right to grant mandamus to require jury trial where it has been improperly denied is settled.[20]

The judgment of the Court of Appeals is Reversed.

MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

[Dissenting Opinion]

MR. JUSTICE STEWART, with whom MR. JUSTICE HARLAN and MR. JUSTICE WHITTAKER concur, dissenting. [In full text]: There can be no doubt that a litigant is entitled to a writ of mandamus to protect a clear constitutional or statutory right to a jury trial. But there was no denial of such a right here. The district judge simply exercised his inherent discretion, now explicitly confirmed by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, to schedule the trial of an equitable claim in advance of an action at law. Even an abuse of such discretion could not, I think, be attacked by the extraordinary writ of mandamus.[1] In any event no abuse of discretion is apparent in this case.

[Equity Claim]

The complaint filed by Fox stated a claim traditionally cognizable in equity. That claim, in brief, was that Beacon had wrongfully interfered with the right of Fox to compete freely with Beacon and other distributors for the licensing of films for first-run exhibition in the San Bernardino area. The complaint alleged that the plaintiff was without an adequate remedy at law and would be irreparably harmed unless the defendant were restrained from continuing to interfere—by coercion and threats of litigation—with the plaintiff's lawful business relationships.

[Jury Trial of Equitable Issues Sought]

The Court of Appeals found that the complaint, although inartistically drawn, contained allegations entitling the petitioner to equitable relief.[2] That finding is accepted in the prevailing opinion today. If the complaint had been answered simply by a general denial, therefore, the issues would under traditional principles have been triable as a proceeding in equity. Instead of just putting in issue the allegations of the complaint, however, Beacon filed pleadings which affirmatively alleged the existence of a broad conspiracy among the plaintiff and other theatre owners to monopolize the first-run exhibition of films in the San Bernardino area, to refrain from competing among themselves, and to discriminate against Beacon in granting film licenses. Based upon these allegations, Beacon asked damages in the amount of $300,000. Clearly these conspiracy allegations stated a cause of action triable as of right by a jury. What was demanded by Beacon, however, was a jury trial not only of this cause of action, but also of the issues presented by the original complaint.

[Trial Court's Order]

Upon motion of Fox the trial judge ordered the original action for declaratory and equitable relief to be tried separately to the court and in advance of the trial of the defendant's counterclaim and cross-claim for damages. The court's order, which carefully preserved the right to trial by jury upon the conspiracy and damage issues raised by the counterclaim and cross-claim, was in conformity with the specific provisions of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.[3] Yet it is decided today that [20] E.g., Ex parte Simons, 247 U. S. 231, 239-240; Ex parte Peterson, 253 U. S. 300, 305-306; Bereslavsky v. Caffey, 161 F. 2d 499 (C. A. 2d Cir.); Canister Co. v. Leahy, 191 F. 2d 255 (C. A. 3d Cir.); Black v. Boyd, 248 F. 2d 156, 160-161 (C. A. 6th Cir.). Cf. Bruckman v. Hollzer, 152 F. 2d 730 (C. A. 9th Cir.). But cf. In re Chappell & Co., 201 F. 2d 343 (C. A. 1st Cir.). See also La Buy v. Howes Leather Co. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,585], 352 U. S. 249.

[1] Compare Black v. Boyd, 248 F. 2d 156, with Black v. Boyd, 251 F. 2d 843.

[2] Cf. De Groot v. Peters, 124 Cal. 406; California G. C. Bd. v. California P. Corp., 4 Cal. App. 2d 242, 244, 40 P. 2d 846. Compare Kessler v. Eldred, 206 U. S. 285; International News Serv. v. Associated Press, 248 U. S. 215, 236; Truax v. Raich, 239 U. S. 33, 38.

[3] Rule 42(b) provides: "(b) Separate Trials. The court in furtherance of convenience or to avoid prejudice may order a separate trial of any claim, cross-claim, counterclaim, or third-party claim, or of any separate issue or of any the Court of Appeals must compel the district judge to rescind it.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Common Issue]

Assuming the existence of a factual issue common both to the plaintiff's original action and the defendant's counterclaim for damages, I cannot agree that the District Court must be compelled to try the counterclaim first.[4] It is, of course, a matter of no great moment in what order the issues between the parties in the present litigation are tried. What is disturbing is the process by which the Court arrives at its decision—a process which appears to disregard the historic relationship between equity and law.

I.

[Exclusively Equitable Issues]

The Court suggests that "the expansion of adequate legal remedies provided by the Declaratory Judgment Act . . . necessarily affects the scope of equity." Does the Court mean to say that the mere availability of an action for a declaratory judgment operates to furnish "an adequate remedy at law" so as to deprive a court of equity of the power to act? That novel line of reasoning is at least implied in the Court's opinion. But the Declaratory Judgment Act did not "expand" the substantive law. That Act merely provided a new statutory remedy, neither legal nor equitable, but available in the areas of both equity and law. When declaratory relief is sought, the right to trial by jury depends upon the basic context in which the issues are presented. See Moore's Federal Practice (2d ed.) §§ 38.29, 57.30; Borchard, Declaratory Judgments (2d ed.), 399-404. If the basic issues in an action for declaratory relief are of a kind traditionally cognizable in equity, e. g., a suit for cancellation of a written instrument, the declaratory judgment is not a "remedy at law."[5] If, on the other hand, the issues arise in a context traditionally cognizable at common law, the right to a jury trial of course remains unimpaired, even though the only relief demanded is a declaratory judgment.[6]

Thus, if in this case the complaint had asked merely for a judgment declaring that the plaintiff's specified manner of business dealings with distributors and other exhibitors did not render it liable to Beacon under the anti-trust laws, this would have been simply a "juxtaposition of parties" case in which Beacon could have demanded a jury trial.[7] But the complaint in the number of claims, cross-claims, counterclaims, third-party claims, or issues."

---

The Note to Rule 39 of the Advisory Committee on Rules states that, "When certain of the issues are to be tried by jury and others by the court, the court may determine the sequence in which such issues shall be tried." This language was at one time contained in a draft of the Rules, but was deleted because "the power is adequately given by Rule 42(b). . . ." Moore's Federal Practice (2d ed.) § 39.12, n. 8.

See also, Rule 57, which provides, inter alia, that, "The court may order a speedy hearing of an action for a declaratory judgment and may advance it on the calendar."

[4] It is not altogether clear at this stage of the proceedings whether the existence of substantial competition between Fox and Beacon is actually a material issue of fact common to both the equitable claim and the counterclaim for damages. The respondent ingeniously argues that determination in the equitable suit of the issue of competition between the theatres would be determinative of little or nothing in the counterclaim for damages. "The fact issue in the action for equitable and declaratory relief is whether the Fox West Coast California Theatre and the Petitioner's drive-in are substantially competitive with each other. The fact issue in the counterclaim is whether the cross-defendants and co-conspirators therein named conspired together in restraint of trade and to monopolize in the manner alleged in the counterclaim. Absent conspiracy, whether or not the distributors licensed a single first run picture to Petitioner's drive-in, be it in substantial competition or not in substantial competition with other first run theatres in the San Bernardino area, Petitioner will not have made out a case on its counterclaim. . . . If Petitioner on its counterclaim should fail to prove conspiracy the issue of competition between the theatres is meaningless. If Petitioner on the other hand succeeds in proving the allegations of its counterclaim, the conspiracy to monopolize first run and to discriminate against the new drive-in, the existence or non-existence of competition between the theatres would exculpate none of the alleged wrongdoers, although if there was an absence of competition between the drive-in and the other first run theatres, as Petitioner contended in its answer to the complaint, it might have some difficulty proving injury to its business."

[5] State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Mossey, 195 F. 2d 56; Connecticut General Life Ins. Co. v. Candimat Co., 83 F. Supp. 1.

[6] Dickinson v. General Accident F. & L. Assur. Corp., 147 F. 2d 396; Hargrove v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 125 F. 2d 225; Pacific Indemnity Co. v. McDonald, 107 F. 2d 446.

[7] Moore's Federal Practice (2d ed.) § 57.31[2]. "Transposition of parties" would perhaps be a more accurate description. A typical such case is one in which a plaintiff uses the declaratory judgment procedure to seek a determination of nonliability to a legal claim asserted by the defendant. The defendant in such a case is, of course, entitled to a jury trial.

present case, as the Court recognizes, presented issues of exclusively equitable cognizance, going well beyond a mere defense to any subsequent action at law. Fox sought from the court protection against Beacon's allegedly unlawful interference with its business relationships—protection which this Court seems to recognize might not have been afforded by a declaratory judgment, unsupplemented by equitable relief. The availability of a declaratory judgment did not, therefore, operate to confer upon Beacon the right to trial by jury with respect to the issues raised by the complaint.

II.

[Adequacy of Legal Remedy]

The Court's opinion does not, of course, hold or even suggest that a court of equity may never determine "legal rights." For indeed it is precisely such rights which the Chancellor, when his jurisdiction has been properly invoked, has often been called upon to decide. Issues of fact are rarely either "legal" or "equitable." All depends upon the context in which they arise. The examples cited by Chief Judge Pope in his thorough opinion in the Court of Appeals in this case are illustrative:

> ". . . [I]n a suit by one in possession of real property to quiet title, or to remove a cloud on title, the court of equity may determine the legal title. In a suit for specific performance of a contract, the court may determine the making, validity and the terms of the contract involved. In a suit for an injunction against trespass to real property the court may determine the legal right of the plaintiff to the possession of that property. Cf. Pomeroy, Equity Jurisprudence, 5th ed., §§ 138-221, 221a, 221b, 221d, 250." 252 F. 2d 864, 874.

Though apparently not disputing these principles, the Court holds, quite apart from its reliance upon the Declaratory Judgment Act, that Beacon by filing its counterclaim and cross-claim acquired a right to trial by jury of issues which otherwise would have been properly triable to the court. Support for this position is found in the principle that, "in the federal courts equity has always acted only when legal remedies were inadequate. . . ." Yet that principle is not employed in its traditional sense as a limitation upon the exercise of power by a court of equity. This is apparent in the Court's recognition that the allegations of the complaint entitled Fox to equitable relief—relief to which Fox would not have been entitled if it had had an adequate remedy at law. Instead, the principle is employed today to mean that because it is possible under the counterclaim to have a jury trial of the factual issue of substantial competition, that issue must be tried by a jury, even though the issue was primarily presented in the original claim for equitable relief. This is a marked departure from long-settled principles.

It has been an established rule "that equitable jurisdiction existing at the filing of a bill is not destroyed because an adequate legal remedy may have become available thereafter."[8] American Life Ins. Co. v. Stewart, 300 U. S. 203, 215. See Dawson v. Kentucky Distilleries Co., 255 U. S. 288, 296. It has also been long settled that the District Court in its discretion may order the trial of a suit in equity in advance of an action at law between the same parties, even if there is a factual issue common to both. In the words of Mr. Justice Cardozo, writing for a unanimous Court in American Life Ins. Co. v. Stewart, supra:

> "A court has control over its own docket. . . . In the exercise of a sound discretion it may hold one lawsuit in abeyance to abide the outcome of another, especially where the parties and the issues are the same. . . . If request had been made by the respondents to suspend the suits in equity till the other causes were disposed of, the District Court could have considered whether justice would not be done by pursuing such a course, the remedy in equity being exceptional and the outcome of necessity. . . . There would be many circumstances to be weighed, as, for instance, the condition of the court calendar, whether the insurer had been precipitate or its adversaries dilatory, as well as other factors. In the end, benefit and hardship would have to be set off, the one against the other, and a balance ascertained." 300 U. S. 203, 215-216.[9]

[8] The suggestion by the Court that "This was because the subsequent legal action, though providing an opportunity to try the case to a jury, might not protect the right of the equity plaintiff to a fair and orderly adjudication of the controversy" is plainly inconsistent with many of the cases in which the rule has been applied. See, e. g., Beedle v. Bennett, 122 U. S. 71; Clark v. Wooster, 119 U. S. 322.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

III.

[Expansion of Legal Remedies]

The Court today sweeps away these basic principles as "precedents decided under discarded procedures." It suggests that the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure have somehow worked an "expansion of adequate legal remedies" so as to oust the District Courts of equitable jurisdiction, as well as to deprive them of their traditional power to control their own dockets. But obviously the Federal Rules could not and did not "expand" the substantive law one whit.[10]

Like the Declaratory Judgment Act, the Federal Rules preserve inviolate the right to trial by jury in actions historically cognizable at common law, as under the Constitution they must.[11] They do not create a right of trial by jury where that right "does not exist under the Constitution or statutes of the United States." Rule 39(a). Since Beacon's counterclaim was compulsory under the Rules, see Rule 13(a), it is apparent that by filing it Beacon could not be held to have waived its jury rights.[12] Compare American Mills Co. v. American Surety Co., 260 U. S. 360. But neither can the counterclaim be held to have transformed Fox's original complaint into an action at law.[13] See Bendix Aviation Corp. v. Glass, 81 F. Supp. 645.

The Rules make possible the trial of legal and equitable claims in the same proceeding, but they expressly affirm the power of a trial judge to determine the order in which claims shall be heard. Rule 42(b). Certainly the Federal Rules were not intended to undermine the basic structure of equity jurisprudence, developed over the centuries and explicitly recognized in the United States Constitution.[14]

For these reasons I think the petition for a writ of mandamus should have been dismissed.

[¶ 69,361] Federal Trade Commission v. Simplicity Pattern Co., Inc.; Simplicity Pattern Co., Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the Supreme Court of the United States. October Term, 1958. Nos. 406 and 447, respectively. Dated June 8, 1959.

On Writs of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act

Price Discrimination—Furnishing of Services or Facilities to Customers—Cost Justification or Absence of Competitive Injury as Defense to Section 2(e), Clayton Act, Violation.—Given competition between two classes of customers, neither the absence of competitive injury nor the presence of "cost justification" defeats the enforcement of Section 2(e) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act; therefore, a Federal Trade Commission finding that a dress pattern manufacturer violated the section by supplying free catalogues and display or storage cabinets to its larger customers

[9] It is arguable that if a case factually similar to American Life Ins. Co. v. Stewart were to arise under the Declaratory Judgment Act, the defendant would be entitled to a jury trial. See footnote 7. But cf. 5 Moore's Federal Practice (2d ed.), p. 158.

[10] Congressional authorization of the Rules expressly provided that "Said rules shall neither abridge, enlarge nor modify the substantive rights of any litigant." 48 Stat. 1064. See 28 U. S. C. § 2072.

[11] "In Suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise reexamined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law." U. S. Const., Amend. VII. See Rules 38, 39, Fed. Rules Civ. Proc.

[12] This is not, of course, to suggest that the filing of a permissive "legal" counterclaim to an "equitable" complaint would amount to a waiver of jury rights on the issues raised by the counterclaim.

[13] Determination of whether a claim stated by the complaint is triable by the court or by a jury will normally not be dependent upon the "legal" or "equitable" character of the counterclaim. See Borchard, Declaratory Judgments (2d ed.), p. 404. There are situations, however, such as a case in which the plaintiff seeks a declaration of invalidity or noninfringement of a patent, in which the relief sought by the counterclaim will determine the nature of the entire case. See Moore's Federal Practice (2d ed.) § 38.29.

[14] "The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity. . . ." Art. III, § 2.

(department and variety stores) while requiring its smaller customers (fabric stores) to buy or rent the same or similar items was affirmed. Variety and fabric stores, operating in the same cities and in the same shopping areas, often side by side, were competitors, purchasing at the same price and then at like prices retailing the identical product to substantially the same segment of the public. The existence of competition does not depend on motives, and the failure to show specific injury to competition in patterns was not inconsistent with a finding that competition existed.

The language of the amended Clayton Act, when considered in its entirety, does not support the contention that the absence of competitive injury or the showing of "cost justification" constitutes a defense to a Section 2(e) violation. Section 2(a) prohibits price discriminations, with qualifications. Section 2(e) as well as Sections 2(c) and 2(d), on the other hand, make unlawful certain business practices other than price discriminations. These proscriptions are absolute, and unlike Section 2(a), none of them requires a showing of an injurious or destructive effect on competition or has any built-in defensive matter. The exculpatory provisions which Congress has made expressly applicable only to price discriminations are not included as "justifications" for discriminations in services or facilities. The key word in Section 2(b) of the Act, "justification," can be read no more broadly than to allow rebuttal of the respective offenses in one of the ways expressly made available by Congress. Therefore, a discrimination in price may be rebutted by a showing under any of the Section 2(a) provisos, or under the Section 2(b) proviso—all of which by their terms apply to price discriminations. However, the only escape Congress has provided for discriminations in services or facilities is the permission to meet competition as found in the Section 2(b) proviso. The competitive injury and cost-differential clauses of Section 2(a) cannot be read directly into Section 2(e).

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3510.100, 3515.150, 3515.165, 3524, 3524.120, 3524.200, 3524.252, 3524.282, 3524.320, 3524.343, 3524.601, 3524.671; Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5053.31, 5201.565.

For the petitioner: J. Lee Rankin, Solicitor General; Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General; Earl W. Kintner; James E. Corkey; and Charles H. Weston, Attorney, Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

For the respondent: Robert L. Wald, David Vorhaus, Sidney Greenman, and William Simon, Washington, D. C.

Reversing in part and affirming in part a decision of the U. S. Court of Appeals, District of Columbia Circuit, 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,047, in Federal Trade Commission Dkt. 6221.

[FTC Ruling]

Mr. Justice Clark delivered the opinion of the Court [In full text]:

This case presents, for the first time in this Court, issues relating to the availability of certain defenses to a prima facie violation of § 2(e) of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 730, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 49 Stat. 1526.[1] The Federal Trade Commission has found that Simplicity Pattern Co., Inc., one of the Nation's largest dress pat-

[1] The complaint was in two counts, the first being under the Federal Trade Commission Act. This count was dismissed. The second count, which is the only one before us, involves certain subsections of § 2 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 13. For ready reference we quote § 2 in its entirety:

"(a) That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce, where such commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent differentials which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered: Provided, however, That the Federal Trade Commission may, after due investigation and hearing to all interested parties, fix and establish quantity limits, and revise the same as it finds necessary, as to particular commodities or classes of commodities, where it finds that available purchasers in greater quantities are so few as to render differentials on account thereof unjustly tern manufacturers, discriminated in favor of its larger customers by furnishing to them services and facilities not accorded to competing smaller customers on proportionally equal terms. The Commission held that neither the presence of "cost justification" nor the absence of competitive injury may constitute a defense to a § 2(e) violation.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Court of Appeals Ruling]

The Court of Appeals found that competition existed between the larger and smaller customers of Simplicity and, with one judge dissenting, held that an absence of competitive injury would not constitute a "justification" rebutting a prima facie showing of a § 2(e) violation. Through a different majority,[2] however, it remanded the case on the "cost justification" defense under § 2(b), holding that Simplicity might rebut the prima facie case by showing that the discriminations in services and facilities were justified by differences in Simplicity's costs in dealing with the two classes of customers. 103 U. S. App. D. C. 373, 258 F. 2d 673 [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,047]. The Commission, in No. 406, and Simplicity, in No. 447, filed cross-petitions for certiorari which we consider together. We granted both petitions because of the fundamental significance of these issues in the application of an important Act of Congress. 358 U. S. 897. We have concluded that, given competition between the two classes of customers, neither absence of competitive injury nor the presence of "cost justification" defeats enforcement of the provisions of § 2(e) of the Act. The action of the Commission in issuing the cease-and-desist order is, therefore, affirmed.

[Dress Pattern Business]

Simplicity manufactures and sells tissue patterns which are used in the home for making women's and children's wearing apparel. Its volume of pattern sales, in terms of sales units, is greater than that discriminatory or promotive of monopoly in any line of commerce; and the foregoing shall then not be construed to permit differentials based on differences in quantities greater than those so fixed and established: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares, or merchandise in commerce from selecting their own customers in bona fide transactions and not in restraint of trade: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent price changes from time to time where in response to changing conditions affecting the market for or the marketability of the goods concerned, such as but not limited to actual or imminent deterioration of perishable goods, obsolescence of seasonal goods, distress sales under court process, or sales in good faith in discontinuance of business in the goods concerned.

---

"(b) Upon proof being made, at any hearing on a complaint under this section, that there has been discrimination in price or services or facilities furnished, the burden of rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section, and unless justification shall be affirmatively shown, the Commission is authorized to issue an order terminating the discrimination: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor.

"(c) That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to pay or grant, or to receive or accept, anything of value as a commission, brokerage, or other compensation, or any allowance or discount in lieu thereof, except for services rendered in connection with the sale or purchase of goods, wares, or merchandise, either to the other party to such transaction or to an agent, representative, or other intermediary therein where such intermediary is acting in fact for or in behalf, or is subject to the direct or indirect control, of any party to such transaction other than the person by whom such compensation is so granted or paid.

"(d) That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce to pay or contract for the payment of anything of value to or for the benefit of a customer of such person in the course of such commerce as compensation or in consideration for any services or facilities furnished by or through such customer in connection with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale of any products or commodities manufactured, sold, or offered for sale by such person, unless such payment or consideration is available on proportionally equal terms to all other customers competing in the distribution of such products or commodities.

"(e) That it shall be unlawful for any person to discriminate in favor of one purchaser against another purchaser or purchasers of a commodity bought for resale, with or without processing, by contracting to furnish or furnishing, or by contributing to the furnishing of, any services or facilities connected with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale of such commodity so purchased upon terms not accorded to all purchasers on proportionally equal terms.

"(f) That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, knowingly to induce or receive a discrimination in price which is prohibited by this section."

[2] Judge Washington dissented on the "cost-justification" issue, while Judge Burger was in dissent on the competitive injury question.

resulting from the combined effort of all other major producers.[3] The patterns are sold to some 12,300 retailers, with 17,200 outlets. For present purposes, these customers can be divided roughly into two categories. One, consisting largely of department and variety stores, comprises only 18% of the total number of customers, but accounts for 70% of the total sales volume. The remaining 82% of the customers are small stores whose primary business is the sale of yard-good fabrics.

About 600 different patterns are made available to Simplicity's customers. New patterns are added at the rate of 40 per month, while three times annually the obsolete designs are discontinued so as to maintain the number of designs at a relatively constant level. The different designs are displayed in a catalogue which is changed monthly in order to reflect the changes in available designs. The patterns themselves are stored and displayed in steel cabinets. The catalogues and storage cabinets are both furnished by Simplicity.

[Customers]

The variety stores handle and sell a multitude of relatively low-priced articles. Each article, including dress patterns, is sold for the purpose of returning a profit and would be dropped if it failed to do so. The fabric stores, on the other hand, are primarily interested in selling yard goods; they handle patterns at no profit or even at a loss as an accommodation to their fabric customers and for the purpose of stimulating fabric sales. These differences in motive are reflected in the manner in which each type of store handles its patterns. The variety stores devote the minimum amount of display space consistent with adequate merchandising—consisting usually of nothing more than a place on the counter for the catalogues, with the patterns themselves stored underneath the counter in the steel cabinets furnished by Simplicity. In contrast, the fabric stores usually provide tables and chairs where the customers may peruse the catalogues in comfort and at their leisure.

[Services and Facilities Furnished]

The retail prices of Simplicity patterns are uniform at 25¢, 35¢, or 50¢. Similarly, Simplicity charges a uniform price, to all its customers, of 60% of the retail price. However, in the furnishing of certain services and facilities Simplicity does not follow this uniformity. It furnishes patterns to the variety stores on a consignment basis, requiring payment only as and when patterns are sold—thus affording them an investment-free inventory. The fabric stores are required to pay cash for their patterns in regular course. In addition, the cabinets and the catalogues are furnished to variety stores free while the fabric stores are charged therefor, the catalogues averaging from $2 to $3 each. Finally, all transportation costs in connection with its business with variety stores are paid by Simplicity but none is paid on fabric-store transactions.

The free services and facilities thus furnished variety store chains are substantial in value. As to four variety store chains, the catalogues which Simplicity furnished free in 1954 were valued at $128,904; the cabinets furnished free which those stores had on hand at the end of 1954 were valued at over $500,000; and their inventory of Simplicity's patterns at the end of 1954 was valued at more than $1,775,000, each of these values being based on Simplicity's usual sales price. Simplicity's president testified that it would cost over $2,000,000 annually to give its other customers the free transportation, free catalogues, and free cabinets furnished to variety stores.[4]

[3] In dollar volume, Simplicity's percentage-of-industry total is somewhat lower, due to the fact that its prices are among the lowest in the industry.

[4] It should be noted that Simplicity has apparently acted entirely in good faith. While the services and facilities described in the body of the opinion are admittedly furnished free only to the variety stores, Simplicity asserts that other services and facilities are furnished only to the smaller customers. These claimed services include: A staff of 12 young ladies travels throughout the country giving fashion shows and sewing demonstrations in schools, 4-H Clubs and the like. These demonstrations are coordinated through the local fabric stores to assist the latter in pushing sales both of patterns and of fabrics. Large promotional posters, portraying fabrics and fashion trends, are furnished monthly to the fabric stores. "Flyers," or brochures, designed, printed and distributed by Simplicity solely for the small merchant, tell him (in the words of Simplicity's president), "what the proper sources of supply are in New York, what the trends are, how to trim his windows, how to run certain aspects of his department and a great deal of other material." A monthly publication called the "Simplicity Pattern Book" is sold through fabric stores at an annual loss to Simplicity of over $100,000. The publication is designed to "glamorize and dramatize for the consumer and for

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc

[Contentions]

Simplicity does not dispute these findings. Assuming that the existence of competition between purchasers is a necessary element in a § 2(e) prosecution, it insists that no real competition in patterns exists between the variety and the fabric stores. It also contends that even if competition is present its conduct may be justified by a showing that no competitive injury resulted or, alternatively, that the discriminations are not unlawful if it could be shown that the differential treatment was only reflective of the differences in its costs in dealing with the two types of customers.

1. Existence of Competition.

[Competition Between Customers]

The unanimous conclusion of the Examiner, the Commission, and the Court of Appeals on this point was, as stated by the Court of Appeals, that the variety and fabric stores, "operating in the same cities and in the same shopping area, often side by side, were competitors, purchasing from Simplicity at the same price and then at like prices retailing the identical product to substantially the same segment of the public." 103 U. S. App. D. C., at 377, 258 F. 2d, at 677. Simplicity argues that "motivation" controls and that since the variety store sells for a profit and the fabric store for accommodation that the competition is minuscule. But the existence of competition does not depend on such motives. Regardless of the necessity the fabric stores find in the handling of patterns it does not remove their incentive to sell those on hand, especially when cash is tied up in keeping patterns on the shelves. The discriminatory terms under which they are obliged to handle them increases their losses. Furthermore, Simplicity not only takes advantage of the captive nature of the fabric stores in not granting them these advantages but compounds the damage by creating a sales outlet in the variety stores through the granting of these substantial incentives to engage in the pattern business. Without such partial subsidization the variety stores might not enter into the pattern trade at all.

[Injury to Competition]

Nor does it follow that the failure here to show specific injury to competition in patterns is inconsistent with a finding that competition in fact exists.[5] It may be, as Simplicity argues, that the sale of patterns is minuscule in the over-all business of a variety store, but the same is true of thousands of other items. While the giving of discriminatory concessions to a variety store on any one isolated item might cause no injury to competition with a fabric store in its over-all operation, that fact does not render nonexistent the actual competition between them in patterns. It remains, and, because of the discriminatory concessions, causes further losses to the fabric store. As this Court said in Federal Trade Comm'n v. Morton Salt Co. [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,247], 334 U. S. 37, 49 (1948),

> "There are many articles in a grocery store that, considered separately, are comparatively small parts of a merchant's stock. Congress intended to protect a merchant from competitive injury attributable to discriminatory prices on any or all goods sold in interstate commerce, whether the particular goods constituted a major or minor portion of his stock. Since a grocery store consists of many comparatively small articles, there is no the merchant the textiles and trends throughout the country."

These services and facilities are apparently available to the variety stores, but are not used by them because of their method of doing business. Thus, Simplicity claims that the fabric stores receive services and facilities, valued by Simplicity at more than $1,000,000 annually, which in fact if not in law are not used by the variety stores. The parties did not explore, before the Commission, the possibility that this tailoring of services and facilities to meet the different needs of two classes of customers in fact constituted "proportionally equal terms." And, of course, this point was not raised in the Court of Appeals or in this Court. We note in passing, however, that the Commission has indicated a willingness to give a relatively broad scope to the standard of proportional equality under §§ 2(d) and 2(e). See Lever Brothers Co., 50 F. T. C. 494, 512 (1953). ("[§ 2(d)] does not prohibit a seller from paying for services of various types." A "plan providing payment for promotional services and facilities . . . must be honest in its purpose and fair and reasonable in its application.") See also Procter & Gamble Distributing Co., 50 F. T. C. 513 (1953); Colgate-Palmolive-Peet Co., 50 F. T. C. 525 (1953); Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws 189-190 (1955). Since the issue is not properly before us, we of course do not pass on it.

[5] Simplicity argues that the Examiner "affirmatively found an absence of competitive injury." This view was apparently adopted by the Court of Appeals. 103 U. S. App. D. C., at 378, 258 F. 2d, at 678. We do not so read the record, however. What the Examiner said was that "there is no showing of competitive injury." (Italics added.)

possible way effectively to protect a grocer from discriminatory prices except by applying the prohibitions of the Act to each individual article in the store."

2. Application of the Justification Defenses of § 2(b).

[Contentions]

Simplicity contends that an absence of competitive injury constitutes a defense under the justification provisions of § 2(b) and further that it should have been permitted, under that subsection, to dispel its discrimination in services and facilities by a showing of lower costs in its transactions with the variety stores. We agree with the Commission that the language of the Act, when considered in its entirety, will not support this construction.

[Section 2(a), Clayton Act]

Section 2(a) makes unlawful price discriminations

> "where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition . . . ."

This price discrimination provision is hedged with qualifications. An exception is made for price differentials "which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery." Care was taken that price changes are not outlawed where made in response to changing market conditions. Finally, § 2(a) codifies the rule of United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U. S. 300 (1919), protecting the right of a person in commerce to select his "own customers in bona fide transactions and not in restraint of trade."

[Absolute Prohibitions]

Subsections (c), (d), and (e), on the other hand, unqualifiedly make unlawful certain business practices other than price discriminations.[6] Subsection (c) applies to the payment or receipt of commissions or brokerage allowances "except for services rendered." Subsection (d) prohibits the payment by a seller to a customer for any services or facilities furnished by the latter, unless "such payment . . . is available on proportionally equal terms to all other [competing] customers." Subsection (e), which as noted is the provision applicable in this case, makes it unlawful for a seller

> "to discriminate in favor of one purchaser against another purchaser or purchasers of a commodity bought for resale . . . by . . . furnishing . . . any services or facilities connected with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale of such commodity so purchased upon terms not accorded to all purchasers on proportionally equal terms."

In terms, the proscriptions of these three subsections are absolute. Unlike § 2(a), none of them requires, as proof of a prima facie violation, a showing that the illicit practice has had an injurious or destructive effect on competition.[7] Similarly, none has any built-in defensive matter, as does § 2(a). Simplicity's contentions boil down to an argument that the exculpatory provisions which Congress has made expressly applicable only to price discriminations are somehow included as "justifications" for discriminations in services or facilities by § 2(b),[8] which provides that

> "Upon proof being made, at any hearing on a complaint under this section, that there has been discrimination in price or services or facilities furnished, the burden of rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section, and unless justification shall be affirmatively shown, the Commission is authorized to issue an order terminating the discrimination: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or [6] Subsection (f) is a corollary to § 2(a), making it unlawful "knowingly to induce or receive" a price discrimination barred by the latter. See Automatic Canteen Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,503], 346 U. S. 61 (1953).

[7] Simplicity concedes this, in effect, but argues that it should be allowed under § 2(b) to "justify" the § 2(e) violation by making an affirmative showing of absence of competitive injury.

[8] In allowing a showing of "cost-justification" under § 2(b), the Court of Appeals negated any inference that it was thereby importing "§ 2(a) criteria as matters of defense to a Section 2(e) charge." Rather, it held that "the justification to be shown under the first clause of § 2(b) as to a § 2(e) charge of discrimination in 'facilities furnished' to various customers, [would] depend upon the facts in a particular case." 103 U. S. App. D. C., at 381, 258 F. 2d, at 681. (Italics in the original.) On this theory, the limits of the justification which could be shown would be established by litigation, on a case-to-case basis.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor." (Emphasis added.)

[Scope of Section 2(b), Clayton Act]

We hold that the key word "justification" can be read no more broadly than to allow rebuttal of the respective offenses in one of the ways expressly made available by Congress. Thus, a discrimination in prices may be rebutted by a showing under any of the § 2(a) provisos, or under the § 2(b) proviso[9] —all of which by their terms apply to price discriminations. On the other hand, the only escape Congress has provided for discriminations in services or facilities is the permission to meet competition as found in the § 2(b) proviso. We cannot supply what Congress has studiously omitted.[10]

Simplicity's arguments to the contrary are based essentially on the ground that it would be "bad law and bad economics" to make discriminations unlawful even where they may be accounted for by cost differentials or where there is no competitive injury.[11] Entirely aside from the fact that this Court is not in a position to review the economic wisdom of Congress, we cannot say that the legislative decision to treat price and other discriminations differently is without a rational basis. In allowing a "cost justification" for price discriminations and not for others, Congress could very well have felt that sellers would be forced to confine their discriminatory practices to price differentials, where they could be more readily detected and where it would be much easier to make accurate comparisons with any alleged cost savings.[12] Biddle Purchasing Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,180], 96 F. 2d 687, 692 (C. A. 2d Cir. 1938). And, with respect to the absence of competitive injury requirements, it suffices to say that the antitrust laws are not strangers to the policy of nipping potentially destructive practices before they reach full bloom. Cf. Klor's, Inc., v. Broadway-Hale Stores [1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,316], 359 U. S. 207 (1959).[13]

[Historical Setting]

Our conclusions are further confirmed by the historical setting of the Robinson-Patman amendments to § 2 of the Clayton Act. As originally worded in 1914 (38 Stat. 730), § 2 applied only to price discriminations, and then only where the effect of such discrimination was "to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce."[14] Furthermore, a [9] See Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,746], 340 U. S. 231 (1951).

[10] The Courts of Appeals, prior to this case, had uniformly rejected the argument that § 2(e) violations were subject to a cost-justification defense or required a showing of adverse effect on competition. Elizabeth Arden, Inc., v. Federal Trade Comm'n [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,467], 156 F. 2d 132 (C. A. 2d Cir. 1946) (competitive injury); Corn Products Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,263], 144 F. 2d 211, 219 (C. A. 7th Cir. 1944), aff'd on other grounds 324 U. S. 726 [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,363] (competitive injury); Southgate Brokerage Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,396], 150 F. 2d 607, 610 (C. A. 4th Cir. 1945) (dictum as to competitive injury); Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,242], 106 F. 2d 667 (C. A. 3d Cir. 1939) (dictum as to cost-justification); Oliver Bros., Inc., v. Federal Trade Comm'n [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,212], 102 F. 2d 763, 767 (C. A. 4th Cir. 1939) (dictum as to competitive injury). It does not appear that any Court of Appeals had previously been asked to decide whether an absence of competitive injury could constitute a "justification" under § 2(b).

[11] Compare the Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws (1955). The Committee recognized that as of that date subsections (c), (d) and (e) had been uniformly interpreted as not requiring a showing of competitive injury, and as not allowing a cost-justification defense. Pp. 187-193. It expressed disagreement with the desirability of this result, in view of what it deemed the "broader antitrust objectives," and recommended that § 2(c) be changed by legislation and § 2(d) and (e) by "interpretive reform." P. 193.

[12] During congressional debates on the bill, there were continual references to the subsection (c), (d) and (e) practices as "secret" discriminations. See, e. g., 80 Cong. Rec. 8126, 8127, 8132, 8135, 8137, 8226.

[13] Compare Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,961], 356 U. S. 1 (1958); United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,031], 310 U. S. 150 (1940), which contain examples of per se violations under the Sherman Act. It is not without significance that earlier versions of both the House and Senate bills would have outlawed even price discriminations without regard to their effect upon competition. H. R. 8442, 74th Cong., 1st Sess.; S. 3154, 74th Cong., 1st Sess.

[14] This language was retained in § 2(a) under the Robinson-Patman Act amendment, and the following was added, "or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them."

proviso excepted price discriminations based on "differences in the . . . quantity of the commodity sold," regardless of whether the differences in quantity resulted in corresponding cost differentials.

A lengthy investigation conducted in the 1930's by the Federal Trade Commission disclosed that several large chain buyers were effectively avoiding § 2 by taking advantage of gaps in its coverage. Because of their enormous purchasing power, these chains were able to exact price concessions, based on differences in quantity, which far exceeded any related cost savings to the seller. Consequently, the seller was forced to raise prices even further on smaller quantity lots in order to cover the concessions made to the large purchasers. Comparable competitive advantages were obtained by the large purchasers in several ways other than direct price concessions. Rebates were induced for "brokerage fees," even though no brokerage services had been performed. "Advertising allowances" were paid by the sellers to the large buyers in return for certain promotional services undertaken by the latter. Some sellers furnished special services or facilities to the chain buyers. Lacking the purchasing power to demand comparable advantages, the small independent stores were at a hopeless competitive disadvantage.[15]

The Robinson-Patman amendments were enacted to eliminate these inequities. The exception to price discriminations based on quantitative differences was limited to those making "only due allowance for differences in . . . cost." As noted above, false brokerage allowances and the paying for or furnishing of nonproportional services or facilities were banned outright. The portion of § 2(b) preceding the proviso, on which Simplicity relies, was inserted in the House bill for the sole purpose of laying down "directions with reference to procedure including a statement with respect to burden of proof."[16] It was clearly not intended to have any independent substantive weight of its own.[17]

[Ruling]

We hold, therefore, that neither "cost-justification" nor an absence of competitive injury may constitute "justification" of a prima facie § 2(e) violation.[18] The judgment of the Court of Appeals must accordingly be reversed insofar as it set aside and remanded the Commission's order and affirmed as to the remainder.

It is so ordered.

---

[15] Final Report on the Chain-Store Investigation, S. Doc. No. 4, 74th Cong., 1st Sess.

[16] H. R. Rep. No. 2287, 74th Cong., 2d Sess., p. 16.

[17] As reported out of Committee, the equivalent of § 2(b) (which was § 2(e) in the House bill) applied only to price discriminations. During the floor debate, Congressman McLaughlin introduced an amendment which would add "or services or facilities furnished" at appropriate places in the subsection. He said, "Mr. Chairman, this is a committee amendment agreed to unanimously by the committee. . . . It simply allows a seller to meet not only competition in price of other competitors but also competition in services and facilities furnished." 80 Cong. Rec. 8225. The amendment was adopted without further comment. Throughout the debate, what reference there was to this subsection (other than to the proviso) was to the effect that it was a "procedural" or "burden of proof" provision. See, e. g., 80 Cong. Rec. 8110, 9414, 9418. Congressman Patman, referring to it as a "burden of proof" provision, said "Let me analyze that for you. What does that mean? It means exactly the rule of law today. It is a restatement of existing law. So far as I am concerned you can strike it out. It makes no difference." 80 Cong. Rec. 8231. This statement, coming from one of the authors of the bill, makes it clear beyond peradventure that the provision in question was not intended to operate as a source of substantive defenses. See also Automatic Canteen Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, supra, 346 U. S., at 78.

The history of the Senate bill is not helpful. As reported out of Committee, it contained neither a provision comparable to § 2(b) nor one comparable to § 2(e). S. Rep. No. 1502, 74th Cong., 2d Sess. A provision identical to § 2(b) was adopted as a floor amendment at a time when the bill did not in terms even cover the furnishing of services and facilities. 80 Cong. Rec. 6435-6436. The short debate on the amendment is not enlightening.

[18] While both of these questions have been presented to us in terms of the "justification" clause of § 2(b), we are equally convinced that the competitive injury and cost-differential clauses of § 2(a) cannot be read directly into § 2(e). Elizabeth Arden, Inc., v. Federal Trade Comm'n, supra, note 10; Corn Products Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, supra, note 10; Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, supra, note 10. It is true that, in reference to the cost-differential clause, we have said, "Time and again there was recognition in Congress of a freedom to adopt and pass on to buyers the benefits of more economical processes." Automatic Canteen Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, supra, 346 U. S., at 72. But the contexts of the statements referred to show that the benefits were to be made available in price differentials or not at all. See, e. g., 80 Cong. Rec. 8106-8107, 8111-8112, 8114, 8127-8128, 8137, 9415; H. R. Rep. No. 2287, 74th Cong., 2d Sess. See also notes 12 and 13, supra.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[¶ 69,362] The Upjohn Company v. Liberty Drug Co., Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil 140-96. Filed May 12, 1959.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Defenses to Enforcement Action—Lack of Enforcement Activity—Meeting Competitors' Prices.—A manufacturer of drug products was granted a preliminary injunction prohibiting a retail drug store from selling the manufacturer's trademarked products below fair trade prices. In defense, it was asserted that the manufacturer, by its own indifferent conduct, had encouraged and acquiesced in the wide-spread selling of its products at competitive prices, that there had been a general collapse of its fair trade price structure, and that the drug store had sold below the fair trade prices in order to meet the prevailing price of competitors. It was found, however, that the manufacturer had made reasonable and diligent efforts to enforce its fair trade price structure and that, despite certain violations, there had been no general breakdown of that structure.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3440.34, 3448.34.

Fair Trade—Fair Trade Agreements Between Competitors—Fair Trader's Sales at Retail Level as Bar to Enforcement Action—Sale of Drug Products to Dispensaries.—A retail drug store's contention that a manufacturer of drug products was barred from enforcing its fair trade prices because it had sold its products to industrial and public utility corporation dispensaries, at wholesale, thereby competing with the drug store at the retail level, was patently without merit. Each of those dispensaries employed a full-time pharmacist, a registered nurse, or a full or part-time physician, and each was engaged in servicing the health needs of company employees. There was no indication that those dispensaries were subterfuges for the sale of the manufacturer's products to ultimate consumers at less than fair trade prices, or that any such sales had, in fact, occurred.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3100.

For the plaintiff: Rogers, Hoge & Hills, New York, N. Y. (George M. Chapman and John A. Keeffe, of counsel).

For the defendant: Friedman, Lipsig, Bernstein & Friedman, New York, N. Y. (David Kaplan, of counsel).

Opinion

[Fair Trade Action]

LEVET, District Judge [In full text]: This is a motion for a preliminary injunction to enjoin the defendant from advertising, offering for sale or selling at retail merchandise bearing plaintiff's trademarks or brand names for prices less than those stipulated in plaintiff's fair trade contracts in effect with certain retailers in the State of New York.

[Parties]

The plaintiff is a manufacturer of ethical pharmaceuticals and other drug products, all of which bear the trademark, "Upjohn," together with individual product marks, including "Unicap," "Zymacap," "Zymadrops," "Kaopectate," "Cheracol" and "Cebenase."

The defendant is a retail drug store located at 126 Liberty Street, New York City. Though it has purchased substantial quantities of plaintiff's products in the past and is apparently continuing to do so, it has not signed a fair trade contract with the plaintiff.

[Allegations]

In support of its motion, plaintiff alleges:

1. That for many years it has been engaged in an extensive advertising program, promoting its products to physicians, pharmacists and indirectly to ultimate consumers, as a result of which plaintiff has developed a vast good will.

2. That in the course of plaintiff's development and maintenance of its good will and system of distribution, it has established, wherever permitted by law, a fair trade structure under which uniform prices have been established for its products.

3. That such a fair trade structure was first established in the State of New York subsequent to the enactment of the New York Fair Trade Act in 1937.

4. That in order to assure itself that retailers are complying with its established resale prices, plaintiff investigates every infraction reported to or discovered by it and explains its fair trade program to retailers accused of violations thereof.

5. That plaintiff has an established policy of sending warning letters to retailers who persist in violations and of bringing suit where the retailers, after such warning, still refuse to stop their illegal conduct.

6. That in furtherance of its policy of enforcing its established minimum prices, plaintiff, in the past two years, has shopped every retailer in the Boroughs of Manhattan and Brooklyn who carried its products and that extensive investigations have also been conducted in the Bronx, Queens and Nassau Counties.

7. That more than thirty suits have been filed against retailers who have persisted in their unlawful price cutting and more than twenty permanent injunctions have been obtained.

8. That a warning against price violations was sent to the defendant on August 6, 1958, to no avail, and on November 19, 1958, action was commenced against the defendant seeking to enjoin its price cutting on plaintiff's products; however, defendant's price cutting is continuing.

9. That the defendant is a large retail drug establishment servicing the Wall Street area and employing at least thirty full-time employees; that its customers come from all over the City of New York and from the outlying suburban counties in both New York State and New Jersey, and consequently the defendant is competing with local retail druggists throughout the city and the surrounding suburban communities.

10. That the defendant's continued price cutting threatens to undermine plaintiff's fair trade price structure and is causing immediate and irreparable harm both to the good will and business of the plaintiff and to the good will and business of retailers who sell plaintiff's products at the fair trade price.

[Defense—Lack of Enforcement]

Defendant, in opposition to this motion, asserts that the plaintiff, by its own indifferent conduct, has encouraged and acquiesced in the wide-spread selling of its products at a competitive price; that plaintiff has neglected to take steps to prevent wide-spread price cutting of its products, and that as a result there has been a general collapse of plaintiff's fair trade price structure. In support of this contention, defendant has submitted affidavits indicating twelve instances of sales of plaintiff's products below the fair trade price by retail druggists in Manhattan, Brooklyn and The Bronx. Eight of the sales took place in Manhattan; three in Brooklyn and one in The Bronx; five occurred in April 1959, five in February 1959 and two in January 1959.

[Meeting Competitors' Prices]

The defendant further asserts that plaintiff has suffered no irreparable harm to its good will; that it has sold plaintiff's products below the fair trade price out of compelling economic necessity in order to meet the prevailing price of competitors; and that the granting of a preliminary injunction would cast a stigma on defendant's business reputation and give the plaintiff all of the relief to which it would be entitled only after prevailing at a trial of the disputed issues in this case.

[Fair Trade Agreements Between Competitors]

As another basis for the denial of the relief here sought, the defendant contends that plaintiff is precluded from enforcing its fair trade price structure by reason of its sale at wholesale to the dispensaries of various industrial and public utility corporations. It appears that each of the dispensaries in question employs a full-time pharmacist, a registered nurse or a full or part-time physician and that each is engaged in servicing the health needs of company employees. There is not the slightest indication that these dispensaries are a mere subterfuge for the sale of plaintiff's products to ultimate consumers at less than the fair trade price or, indeed, that any such sales in fact occur.

Accordingly, the defendant's contention that the plaintiff is competing with it on the retail level is patently without merit.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

The case of United States v. McKesson & Robbins, Inc. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,368], 351 U. S. 305 (1956), relied upon by defendant, has no applicability under the circumstances here presented.

[Preliminary Injunction Granted]

After carefully considering the pleadings, plaintiff's motion papers and brief, defendant's opposing affidavits, the exhibits submitted on this motion and after hearing the oral argument of counsel, I have concluded that:

1. Plaintiff has made and is continuing to make reasonable and diligent efforts to enforce its fair trade price structure.

2. Despite certain violations, there has been no general breakdown of plaintiff's system of fair trade prices.

3. Defendant has and is continuing to sell plaintiff's products below the fair trade price in violation of Section 369-b of the New York General Business Law.

4. Defendant's continued disregard for plaintiff's rights under the New York Fair Trade Law is undermining plaintiff's fair trade price structure and unless restrained pending trial such conduct may lead to the destruction of plaintiff's fair trade system and the impairment of its good will.

5. The relief here sought against the defendant is for the sole purpose of enforcing plaintiff's fair trade rights.

6. There is no reason why a preliminary injunction should not be granted.

7. The plaintiff has established its right to a preliminary injunction since the defendant's acts are in clear violation of Section 369-b of the New York General Business Law, and unless restrained pending trial, such conduct will result in irreparable injury to plaintiff and may lead to the destruction of its fair trade structure and the impairment of its good will.

[Order]

Settle order on notice which shall recite the facts as found herein and which shall provide that said order is conditioned upon plaintiff's furnishing a bond to the satisfaction of the court in the amount of $5,000.00.

[¶ 69,363] Wisconsin Liquor Co. v. Park & Tilford Distillers Corporation and Affiliated Distillers Brands Corp.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. September Term, 1958—April Session, 1959. No. 12491. Dated May 21, 1959.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Elements and Proof of Unlawful Conspiracy—Absence of Common Scheme or Purpose—Variance Between Allegations and Proof—Merger—Absence of Adverse Effects on Competition.—In a liquor distributor's treble damage action charging two suppliers with conspiring to deprive the distributor of its franchise and to monopolize the distribution of certain products by supplying a competing distributor at discriminatorily low prices and granting it unlawful rebates and allowances, the trial court properly directed a verdict for the suppliers since there was no evidence requiring that the conspiracy question be sent to a jury. While proof of a formal or specific agreement is not necessary to establish the existence of a conspiracy, there was, in this case, a complete absence of proof of the existence of any common scheme or purpose knowingly participated in by the alleged conspirators. In presenting its case, the distributor departed from its original allegations and sought to establish the existence of a conspiracy in which a distiller acquired 90 per cent of the stock of the distributor's supplier and effected a statutory merger for the purpose of restraining trade and creating a monopoly in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and Section 7 of the Clayton Act. There was no evidence that the distributor, which had terminated its distributorship with the supplier more than two and one-half years before the supplier merged with the distiller, was ever refused the supplier's products. That supplier continued to compete with other suppliers and to supply its distributors long after the dis-tiller acquired its stock. Also, there was a complete lack of evidence of any course of conduct or dealing on the part of the alleged conspirators which resulted in adverse effects on competition in the market area involved.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.395; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2520.30; Acquisitions of Stock or Assets, Vol. 1, ¶ 4205.410, 4207.800.

For the appellant: Thomas C. McConnell, Philip J. Curtis, and Francis J. McConnell.

For the appellees: Louis M. Mantynband, Irwin I. Zatz, and Henry J. Shames.

Before SCHNACKENBERG, HASTINGS and KNOCH, Circuit Judges.

[Treble Damage Action]

HASTINGS, Circuit Judge [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: Appellant, Wisconsin Liquor Co., brought this suit in three counts to recover treble damages for injuries due to alleged antitrust violations and also for damages arising from an alleged breach of contract.

[Conspiracy—Price Discrimination]

Count I of the original amended complaint named Park & Tilford Distillers Corporation (Park & Tilford) and Affiliated Distillers Brands Corporation (Affiliated) as defendants and alleged that they had entered into an illegal agreement and conspiracy in January of 1955 in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. A. §§ 1, 2 to deprive appellant of its distributorship and to monopolize the distribution of Affiliated and Park & Tilford products in the Milwaukee trade area by supplying Bonded Spirits Corporation (Bonded Spirits) with Park & Tilford products at discriminatorily low prices and by granting Bonded Spirits unlawful rebates and allowances to the injury of appellant in its relations with its customers and accounts. Park & Tilford was named as sole defendant in Counts II and III. Count II charged a breach of a contract designating appellant exclusive distributor of Park & Tilford products in four counties in the Milwaukee area. Count III set forth that Park & Tilford had violated Sections 2 and 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U. S. C. A. §§ 13, 13a, by selling its liquors to Bonded Spirits, a distributor in competition with appellant, at discriminatorily low prices and by granting it unlawful rebates, discounts and allowances with the intent and purpose of destroying appellant as a distributor of Park & Tilford products.

[Supplemental Complaint—Merger]

Shortly before the trial, appellant sought leave to file a so-called supplemental complaint alleging that in March, 1958, pursuant to the continuing conspiracy charged in the original complaint, Schenley Industries, Inc. (Schenley) having acquired 90% of the stock of Park & Tilford, effected a statutory merger with Park & Tilford and that the purpose of the acquisition of the stock and merger was to restrain trade and create a monopoly in violation of Sections 1, 2 of the Sherman Act, supra, and Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 18. It was alleged that Schenley sought to eliminate Park & Tilford as an independent company and competitor, to place distributors of Schenley at a competitive advantage over Park & Tilford distributors, thus depriving the latter's distributors, including appellant, of the business of selling Park & Tilford products and to lose (purposely) valuable franchises owned by Park & Tilford for the distribution of certain named imports to the injury of Park & Tilford and its distributors.

[Variance]

Appellees objected to the filing of this supplemental complaint as representing such a variance from the original complaint that they would be prejudiced in the preparation of their case for trial. Leave to file was denied by the trial judge who indicated his reluctance to try Schenley for a Section 7 violation under a complaint charging a general conspiracy with Schenley as one of the conspirators but not named as a party defendant.

At the close of its case, appellant asked leave to amend its complaint to conform to the evidence. The amendment named Park & Tilford and Affiliated as co-conspirators along with Schenley and Bonded Spirits in the continuing conspiracy described above. The trial court denied such leave indicating that it would not thus "put its stamp of approval that the evidence" conformed to such an amendment. It did, however, grant leave to file the amendment "without any provision that it does conform to the evidence."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Judgment in Trial Court]

Subsequently, on motion by appellees made at the close of appellant's evidence, the trial court directed a verdict as to Count I on the ground that there was no substantial evidence of a conspiracy. Park & Tilford also moved for a directed verdict as to Count III and this was acceded to by appellant. Count III was thereupon dismissed with prejudice and is not involved in this appeal. The trial court overruled a similar motion by Park & Tilford on Count II and the case went to the jury on the breach of contract question. The jury returned a verdict on this count in favor of appellant and assessed damages at $100,000. Park & Tilford then moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and in the alternative for a new trial. The trial court granted the motion for judgment n.o.v. on the ground that there was no substantial evidence of any loss suffered by appellant through the breach of contract; and, in the alternative, granted the motion for a new trial.

[No Evidence of Conspiracy]

We have carefully considered the record and, having view the evidence on the antitrust issue raised in Count I in the light most favorable to appellant as we must,[1] have been unable to find any evidence of a conspiracy which would have required the trial judge to send this question to the jury. In presenting its case, appellant departed completely from its original allegations charging a conspiracy on the part of Affiliated and Park & Tilford to sell to Bonded Spirits at discriminatory prices and to grant it rebates, discounts and allowances; and, instead, sought to establish the existence of a conspiracy, of which Schenley was allegedly the guiding light, to put an end to Park & Tilford as an independent company and competitor of Schenley, and to accord Schenley distributors a competitive advantage over the then existing Park & Tilford distributors.

[Facts]

There was testimony to the effect that in the fall of 1954 Schenley opened negotiations with Arthur D. Schulte, president of Park & Tilford, for the purchase of his holdings in that company. On June 15 of that year, appellant had entered into the contract as exclusive distributor for Park & Tilford in the Milwaukee area, replacing Bonded Spirits as such distributor. Appellant's sales manager testified that one of the chief reasons for appellant's acceptance of the distributorship contract was the fact that Park & Tilford had a franchise to distribute a number of well-known foreign brands which it claimed was a tremendous sales stimulant. The Schulte holdings in Park & Tilford were sold to Schenley on December 31, 1954 and constituted a controlling stock interest in that company. Schulte testified that just prior to the sale he had expressed doubts to Ralph Heymsfeld, vice president of Schenley, whether Distillers Company Limited, the owner of Vat 69, one of imports referred to above, would agree to continue the franchise with Park & Tilford if the sale were made because of "DCL policy * * * not to permit more than one of its major brands to be distributed by the same importer * * *." Heymsfeld testified that Schulte had informed him that "he [Schulte] would give no representations and made no warranties that foreign sellers would continue those contracts in effect after they had terminated." The record shows that, after the purchase of Schulte's holdings by Schenley, the imports were eventually terminated as follows: Vat 69 and Booth's Gin on December 31, 1955, Harvey's Wines on December 31, 1956 and Heidsieck Champagnes on October 15, 1956.

The record further shows that Schenley appointed one Stanley L. Brown president of Park & Tilford shortly after it acquired the controlling interest in that company. Brown was under contract directly to Schenley. It is also apparent that from the time Schenley acquired its controlling interest in Park & Tilford the possibility of a merger was considered.

[1] "It is well settled that on a motion for a directed verdict or on motion for judgment n.o.v. based on such motion, the evidence must be considered in the light most favorable to the party against whom the directed verdict or judgment n.o.v. is asked, that any conflict in evidence must be resolved in his favor and that every conclusion or inference that can be legitimately drawn therefrom in his behalf must be drawn." Burcham v. J. P. Stevens Company, 4 Cir., 209 F. 2d 35, 37 (1954). See also American Cyanamid Co. v. Fields, 4 Cir., 204 F. 2d 151, 153 (1953).

During 1956, Park & Tilford experienced losses of over $3,000,000. Brown, in the annual report of the stockholders, indicated that "the loss of our [Park & Tilford's] import distributorships has been the main cause of the serious drop in sales volume. Also relating to the loss of our imports was its subsequent effect in weakening our distributor relationships."

Appellant had terminated its distributorship contract with Park & Tilford in August of 1955. The reasons later voiced for such termination were the fact that part of its exclusive territory had been granted to Bonded Spirits and that it was becoming increasingly clear that Park & Tilford would lose its import distributorships.

Park & Tilford was merged with Schenley in April of 1958, which was more than two and one-half years after appellant terminated its distributorship arrangement and almost two years after the filing of the original complaint in this suit.

[Lack of "Common Scheme"]

There was no evidence that appellant was ever refused Park & Tilford products, including the imports, under its distributorship agreement. Park & Tilford continued to compete with other sellers of alcoholic beverages and to supply its distributors with domestic whiskies and imported brands long after Schenley's acquisition of the Schulte shares. There was a complete lack of evidence of any course of conduct or dealing on the part of the alleged conspirators resulting in adverse effect on competition in the market area involved. We are, of course, mindful that proof of a formal or specific agreement is not necessary to establish the existence of a conspiracy. American Tobacco Co. v. United States [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,468], 328 U. S. 781, 809-810 (1945); Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,205], 306 U. S. 208, 226 (1939). However, we are further impressed in this case with the complete absence of proof of the existence of any common scheme or purpose knowingly participated in by the alleged conspirators, and we hold that the trial court properly directed a verdict on Count I in favor of appellees (defendants) at the close of plaintiff's case.

* * *

[¶ 69,364] United States v. Frozen Food Distributors Association of Greater New York; Global Frozen Foods, Inc.; Nassau Suffolk Frozen Food Co., Inc.; Reliable Food Distributors, Inc.; Snow-Kist Frozen Foods Corp.; Flagstaff Frozen Food Associates, Inc.; McRoberts Bros., Inc.; Leonard Rapoport; Morris Bahar; Michael Goldfarb; Jack Karger; and Walter Greenspan.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil Action No. 135-141. Dated May 15, 1959.

Case No. 1404 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Price Fixing—Prices Fixed by Agreements Between Competitors—Coercion.—Distributors of frozen food specialties were prohibited by a consent decree from agreeing (1) to fix the prices at which such frozen food specialties are sold to third persons or (2) to coerce or persuade a distributor to increase, change, or maintain the price of such products. Also, the distributors were prohibited from suggesting prices to other distributors.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2011.091, 2011.181.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Prohibited—Boycotts—Refusal to Deal—Coercion.—Distributors of frozen food specialties were prohibited by a consent decree from agreeing (1) to boycott or refuse to deal with a packer, (2) to coerce or persuade a packer to boycott or otherwise refuse to deal with any distributor, or (3) to coerce or persuade a distributor to boycott or otherwise refuse to deal with any packer. The distributors were also enjoined from inducing or coercing other distributors to refuse to purchase from any packer or class of packers, and coercing or compelling any packer to refuse to sell to any other distributor. However, exclusive distribution contracts between packers and distributors were not prohibited.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.533, 2005.575, 2005.785.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Trade Association Membership as Means of Trade Restraint.—Distributors of frozen food specialties were prohibited by a consent decree from knowingly becoming members of or participating in the activities of any trade association or other organization whose purposes or functions relate to the distribution or sale of frozen food specialties and are contrary to a section of the decree prohibiting certain agreements.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2017.121, 2017.300.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief—Dissolution of Trade Association.—Distributors of frozen food specialties were ordered by a consent decree to dissolve their association at the earliest possible date.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.10.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Permissive Provisions—Fair Trade Laws.—A consent decree provided that nothing in the decree should prevent the defendants, distributors of frozen food specialties, from availing themselves of the benefits, if any, permitted under state laws, the Miller-Tydings Act, and the McGuire Act.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8321.38, 8321.39, 8421.

For the plaintiff: Robert A. Bicks, Acting Assistant Attorney General; W. D. Kilgore, Jr., Charles T. Whittinghill, Richard B. O'Donnell, John D. Swartz, William J. Elkins, Joseph T. Maioriello, Edward F. Corcoran, and Agnes T. Leen, Attorneys, Department of Justice.

For the defendants: Laporte & Meyers, by Ernest S. Meyers, for Frozen Food Distributors Assn. of Greater New York; Sidney R. Schwartzreich for Nassau Suffolk Frozen Food Co., Inc., and Morris Bahar; Jacob Rapoport for Global Frozen Foods, Inc., and Leonard Rapoport; Charles N. Kors for McRoberts Bros., Inc.; Jaffe & Wachtell, by Herbert M. Wachtell, for Reliable Food Distributors, Inc.; Matthew H. Bradenburg for Snow-Kist Frozen Foods Corp., Michael Goldfarb, and Jack Karger; Benjamin Weiner for Walter Greenspan and Flagstaff Frozen Food Associates, Inc.

Final Judgment

[Consent Decree]

RICHARD H. LEVET, District Judge [In full text]: The plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on June 30, 1958; each of the defendants having appeared and filed their respective answers to such complaint, denying the substantive allegations thereof; and the parties hereto, by their respective attorneys, having consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without admission by any party hereto with respect to any such issue;

Now, Therefore, before any testimony has been taken herein, and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon the consent of the parties hereto, and this Court being advised and having considered the matter, it is hereby

Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed as follows:

I

[Jurisdiction]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter hereof and of the parties hereto. The complaint states a claim upon which relief may be granted against the defendants under Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Person" means any individual, partnership, corporation or other business or legal entity;

(B) "New York Metropolitan area" means the Counties of New York, Kings, Queens, Bronx, Richmond, Nassau, Suffolk and Westchester in the State of New York and those counties within the State of New Jersey lying north of Mercer and Monmouth Counties;

(C) "Frozen food specialties" means frozen foods that are prepared and precooked before freezing, such as pastry cakes, fish sticks, crab meat cakes, meat pies, fruit pies, egg rolls, blintzes, various complete dinners, pizzas and ravioli. "Frozen food specialties," as used herein, shall not include frozen vegetables, fruits or juices therefrom, or frozen raw meats, fish and poultry;

(D) "Packers" means persons engaged in the business of producing frozen food specialties;

(E) "Distributors" means persons who are engaged within the New York Metropolitan area in the business of purchasing frozen food specialties from packers for resale to retailers;

(F) "Retailers" means persons within the New York Metropolitan area who purchase frozen food specialties from distributors for resale to consumers;

(G) "Defendant association" means Frozen Food Distributors Association of Greater New York;

(H) "Distributor defendants" means all defendants except Frozen Food Distributors Association of Greater New York.

III

[Applicability]

The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to any defendant shall apply to such defendant, its officers, agents, employees, servants, subsidiaries, successors and assigns and to all other persons in active concert or participation with any defendant who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise; provided, however, that the provisions of this Final Judgment shall not apply to transactions between a defendant and a company which wholly owns such defendant or is wholly owned by such defendant, or between a defendant and any other company when both are wholly owned and operated by the same person or persons.

IV

[Price Fixing—Boycotts—Refusal to Deal]

The distributor defendants are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining or furthering, directly or indirectly, any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program among themselves or with any association of distributors or any other person:

(A) To fix, determine, maintain, establish or stabilize prices at which any frozen food specialties are sold to any third person;

(B) To coerce or persuade a distributor to increase, change or maintain the price of any frozen food specialties;

(C) To coerce or persuade a packer to boycott or otherwise refuse to deal with any distributor;

(D) To coerce or persuade a distributor to boycott or otherwise refuse to deal with any packer;

(E) To boycott or refuse to deal with a packer.

V

[Coercion]

Each of the distributor defendants is enjoined and restrained from:

(A) Urging upon or suggesting to any other distributor the price or prices to be charged for any frozen food specialties by that other distributor;

(B) Inducing, persuading or coercing, or attempting to induce, persuade or coerce, any other distributor to refuse to purchase, or threaten to refuse to purchase, any frozen food specialties from any packer or class of packers;

(C) Coercing or compelling, or attempting to coerce or compel, any packer to refuse to sell, or threaten to refuse to sell, any frozen food specialties to any other distributor; provided, however, that nothing in this provision shall be deemed to apply to an exclusive distribution contract between a packer and a distributor.

VI

The defendant association is ordered and directed to furnish to each of its members a copy of this Final Judgment and to file an affidavit with this Court and with plaintiff herein setting forth the fact of its compliance with this Section.

VII

[Specific Relief—Dissolution]

Defendants are ordered and directed:

(A) To institute such action as may be necessary to dissolve the defendant association at the earliest possible date;

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

(B) Upon the completion of such dissolution of the defendant association, to file an affidavit with this Court and with plaintiff herein setting forth the fact of compliance with this Section.

VIII

[Trade Association Membership]

Each distributor defendant is enjoined and restrained from knowingly becoming a member of, participating in the activities of or organizing, directly or indirectly, any trade association or other organization the purposes or functions of which relate to the distribution or sale of frozen food specialties and are contrary to any of the provisions of Section IV of this Final Judgment.

IX

[Permissive Provision]

Nothing contained in this Final Judgment shall prevent the defendants from availing themselves of the benefits, if any, permitted and lawful under State Law, of the Act of Congress of August 17, 1937, commonly known as the Miller-Tydings Act, and of the Act of Congress of July 14, 1952, commonly known as the McGuire Act.

X

[Enforcement and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, upon written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to any defendant, made to its principal office, be permitted, subject to any legally recognized privilege (A) access, during the office hours of such defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda, and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant relating to any matters contained in this Final Judgment; (B) subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant and without restraint or interference from it, to interview its officers and employees, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters. Upon such request, such defendant shall submit such written reports with respect to any of the matters contained in this Final Judgment as from time to time may be necessary to the enforcement of this Final Judgment. No information obtained by the means permitted in this Section shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Executive Branch of the plaintiff, except in the course of legal proceedings in which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

XI

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained by this Court for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders or directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the modification or termination of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof.

[¶ 69,365] S. Kriete Osborn v. Sinclair Refining Co.

In the United States District Court for the District of Maryland. Civil No. 9769. Filed February 24, 1959.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Practices—Refusal to Deal—Cancellation of Lease—Using Monopoly in Own Brand-Name Products to Invade Another Field —Legality.—A service station dealer, in a treble damage action charging that a refiner of petroleum products cancelled its lease and sales agreement in furtherance of an attempt to monopolize the sale of automobile accessories to the refiner's own dealers and/or a conspiracy between the refiner and a manufacturer of automobile accessories to restrain trade in such products, failed to show a violation of the antitrust laws. It was contended that the refiner, which received commissions on sales of accessories to its dealers by the manufacturer, used its natural monopoly of its own brand-name petroleum products to invade the field of automobile accessories. While the refiner's dissatisfaction with the dealer's sales of the manufacturer's accessories contributed to the cancellation of the dealer's lease, the refiner, acting independently, had the right to exercise its independent discretion as to the parties with whom it would deal. Although the right to refuse to deal is lost if the refusal is in furtherance of a conspiracy in restraint of trade or an attempt to monopolize, there was no evidence of either in the instant case. Many other brands of accessories were available and, in practice, the refiner's dealers sold the products of other manufacturers. The mere fact that the refiner and the accessories manufacturer had a marketing agreement did not, per se, restrict the refiner's right to terminate the dealer's lease for any reason it saw fit. The agreements contained no provisions which, in and of themselves, violated the antitrust laws. Also, none of the agreements were made upon the condition that the dealer refrain from dealing in the products of other manufacturers.

The refiner was not using its economic position as a refiner and distributor of petroleum products to invade and dominate the accessory business; it had no dominant position in the petroleum field in Maryland or elsewhere; and it had a valid interest in seeing that its dealers carried a full line of such products. Further, its dealers benefited from the arrangement.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.785; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.720.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Restraint of Trade and Attempt to Monopolize—Relevant Market.—In a service station dealer's treble damage action charging that a petroleum refiner attempted to monopolize the sale of automobile accessories to its own dealers and/or conspired with a manufacturer of such accessories to restrain trade therein, the relevant market that had to be considered was the general market for such accessories in Maryland, rather than the market for those accessories among the refiner's own dealers in that area. While the refiner had some 300 service station dealers in Maryland, the total number of stations was over 2,300. Also, there were about 200 other sellers of automobile accessories in the state. Fourteen competitive brands of gasoline, sixteen brands of tires and tubes, and numerous other brands of various accessory items were sold in the area.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2540.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Elements Which Must Be Established—Injury to Public.—A service station dealer, in a treble damage action charging a refiner with attempting to monopolize the sale of automobile accessories to its own dealers and/or conspiring with a manufacturer of such accessories to restrain trade therein, failed to show that the public was injured by marketing agreements between the refiner and the manufacturer. Under those agreements, the refiner received commissions on accessories sold to its service station dealers by the manufacturer. However, that arrangment resulted in no increase in the wholesale prices charged to dealers and no increase in the retail prices charged to the public. There was no evidence of horizontal price fixing or "price leadership" with respect to the sale of accessories. The manufacturer's products competed with those of other manufacturers and distributors on the basis of price, quality, and other relevant factors. Since the refiner's dealers were not required to deal exclusively in the manufacturer's products, the public had a choice of brands at the service stations operated by the refiner's dealers. In addition, the public was free to buy any of the competing brands sold at service stations operated by companies other than the refiner, and at various other retail outlets.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.475.

For the plaintiff: Calhoun Bond of Cable and McDaniel, Baltimore, Md.

For the defendant: William D. Macmillan and David R. Owen, Baltimore, Md.

[Treble Damage Action]

THOMSEN, Chief Judge [In full text]: This is a private antitrust suit under 15 U. S. C. A. 15. Plaintiff claims that his service station lease and dealer's sales agreement were cancelled by defendant (Sinclair) in furtherance of an attempt by Sinclair to monopolize the sale of tires, batteries and accessories (TBA) to its service station dealers in Maryland and/or a combination or conspiracy between Sinclair and Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company (Goodyear) to restrain trade in those products.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Facts

[Parties]

Sinclair is a refiner and distributor of petroleum products in interstate commerce.

Sherwood Bros., Inc. (Sherwood), which had originally been an independent distributor of petroleum products in Maryland, became a wholly owned subsidiary of Sinclair in 1935. Thereafter it sold Sinclair petroleum products in most of Maryland and in small areas of adjacent states until the end of 1955, when Sherwood was merged into Sinclair. Since January 1, 1956, Sinclair has conducted, through its Sherwood Division, the business which had previously been conducted by Sherwood. The term Sherwood will be used herein to include both Sherwood Bros., Inc., and the Sherwood Division of Sinclair unless the context otherwise requires.

Before it became a subsidiary of Sinclair, Sherwood had operated service stations with its own employees. About 1936, as a result of the enactment of the Wage and Hour and Social Security laws by Congress and of laws imposing "chain store taxes" in many states, Sinclair and Sherwood changed to a policy of leasing service stations to dealers. Thereafter Sinclair and Sherwood sought to avoid such control over their service station operations as would make them liable under those statutes.

Plaintiff was employed by Sherwood in 1932 as an attendant, and later as manager of its service station in Reisterstown, Baltimore County, Maryland, at the point where the Westminster and Hanover Roads join to form Reisterstown Road. In 1936 plaintiff leased the station from Sherwood; that lease was cancelled in 1948, and a new lease was executed, which continued on a year to year basis until May 31, 1956, when it was cancelled by Sherwood.

Goodyear is a manufacturer of tires and other products and a distributor of a full TBA line, which includes, besides tires and batteries, all sorts of car and home merchandise, from spark plugs to spotlights and from children's toys to motor boats and room coolers. Practically all Goodyear TBA sold in Maryland is manufactured outside the state.

[Market Area]

Total sales of gasoline in Maryland were 638,000,000 gallons in 1952, 817,000,000 gallons in 1956. During the same period Sherwood's tax paid sales in Maryland increased from 77,000,000 to 87,000,000. Fourteen competitive brands of gasoline were sold in Maryland, sixteen of tires and tubes, fourteen of batteries, and numerous brands of oil filters, fan belts, spark plugs, and other TBA items.

In 1954-56 there were over 2,300 service station dealers in Maryland, including 1,000 in the metropolitan Baltimore marketing area, who were primarily engaged in selling gasoline, but also sold TBA. There were about 200 other TBA dealers in the state, half of them in the Baltimore area. There were some 300 service station dealers in Maryland selling Sinclair products, including some 200 in the metropolitan Baltimore district. About 300 other outlets—stores, garages, etc.—sold Sinclair petroleum products.

In 1956 there were 28 establishments selling gasoline in Reisterstown and the surrounding area, of which 22 sold various brands of TBA; there was one automotive supply store. On the Reisterstown Road, in Reisterstown proper, there were two Sinclair stations, two Esso stations, one Sunoco station, and a third large Sinclair outlet.

["Sales-Commission" Plan]

Goodyear sold TBA to a large number of contract dealers, such as tire stores and service stations, which had a sufficient volume of business to qualify for the various discounts allowed to dealers. All such dealers were billed by Goodyear at the list price less the applicable discount based on the volume of the dealer's purchases, except that in some cases a greater discount was allowed to meet competition. In addition, Goodyear paid bonuses (really additional discounts) based on total annual purchases. The contract dealers sold retail to consumers and wholesale to smaller service station dealers, tire dealers, truck operators and commercial consumers. Goodyear itself operated stores, which sold wholesale and retail.

While Sherwood operated service stations with its own employes it sold Firestone TBA through those stations. After the stations were leased to dealers Sherwood had an oral arrangement with Firestone under which it received a commission from Firestone in connection with promotion and sale of Firestone products through its lessee-dealers. Sinclair had similar oral arrangements with Goodyear. Some time after Sherwood had become a subsidiary of Sinclair, Sherwood terminated its arrangement with Firestone and made a similar oral arrangement with Goodyear.

In 1944 the Sherwood-Goodyear agreement was reduced to writing in the form of a letter from Goodyear to Sherwood, which read in part as follows:

> "We now confirm discussions with you relative to services to be rendered by you during the balance of the year 1944, and thereafter from month to month unless cancelled by either party on thirty (30) days' written notice to the other, in promoting the sale of Goodyear tires (casings and tubes), batteries and merchandise listed in Sections I, II and III of our Car and Home Supply Catalog as supplemented from time to time (referred to herein as car and home merchandise), through such independent resale outlets as are otherwise engaged in or propose to engage in the sale of your products and as are agreed upon in writing with you from time to time.
>
> "During the period mentioned it is understood that you will actively assist us in selling and in promoting the sale of the above merchandise to such customers, and at our request from time to time you will have your field representatives call upon these customers in company with our salesmen and otherwise, and will cooperate and assist us in our efforts to promote and encourage the sale of such merchandise by the customers to whom such sales shall be made by us. The right to accept or reject any order received from any customer shall at all times rest with us.
>
> "You will see that your field offices work energetically with us with the view to assisting us to the fullest practicable extent in perfecting arrangements with all such customers. You will at all times maintain adequate, qualified personnel to render the services called for hereunder regularly and efficiently."

The agreement provided that Goodyear should pay Sherwood a 10% commission on tires and batteries sold to Sherwood dealer outlets, a 7½% commission on such products sold to Sherwood distributors, and commissions of 5% to 10% on car and home merchandise. Sherwood was prohibited from paying any part of these commissions to its customers.

Also in 1944 the first written agreements were entered into between Sinclair and Goodyear. A "tire and battery letter" provided for the sale of Goodyear to Sinclair of tires, tubes and batteries for resale to Sinclair TBA franchise holders[2] who maintained an inventory of Goodyear merchandise. Sinclair never had physical possession or risk of loss of such merchandise or more than instantaneous title thereto. Orders were sent directly to Goodyear by the franchise holders and the merchandise was shipped by Goodyear to them. Service station dealers gave orders for Goodyear merchandise to Sinclair salesmen and to Goodyear salesmen, as well as to salesmen for the franchise holders. These salesmen transmitted all orders to the franchise holders. Under this purchase-and-resale plan Sinclair promoted the sale of Goodyear merchandise in much the same way as Sherwood did under the sales-promotion plan. In addition, Sinclair and its franchise holders handled all adjustments for defective merchandise, and Sinclair handled billing, crediting and collecting, and bore the credit risk.

It is obvious that the arrangement embodied in the tire and battery letter could not be successful, and Sinclair would not get any benefit therefrom, if Goodyear sold many tires, tubes and batteries directly to Sinclair service stations. There was always, however, active competition between Sinclair's franchise holders and other Goodyear distributors.

A "car and home letter" similar to the 1944 Sherwood-Goodyear letter agreement, provided for the payment of commissions by Goodyear to Sinclair on sales of car and home merchandise by Goodyear to resellers of Sinclair petroleum products. The car and home merchandise which was marketed by Goodyear was generally sold under the trade name of some other well known manufacturer, and was almost always available from other sources.

---

[2] The letter also covered the resale of such merchandise by Sinclair through its company-operated outlets, but none of these are involved in this case.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Exclusive Dealing Not Required]

There was no contractual or other legal obligation on any Sherwood or Sinclair lessee dealer to purchase Goodyear TBA or to refrain from purchasing other TBA products. The dealers could obtain the benefits of volume purchases from other tire manufacturers and TBA marketers. In practice the Sherwood dealers purchased various types, brands and quantities of competitive TBA products from other suppliers. Sinclair and Goodyear agreed:

> "* * * that under its policy Sinclair does not undertake to, and will not in fact, exercise or attempt to exercise any control or authority, directly, indirectly, by coercion or otherwise, over a dealer or any phase of the conduct of his business, regardless of whether or not Sinclair may own in fee or hold under lease the site or other station facilities occupied and operated by the dealer as an independent contractor and merchant in his own right; and that Sinclair specifically requests that Goodyear not ask or expect that such control or authority be exercised; and that Goodyear will not permit its salesmen or other field or office representatives to undertake to exercise such control or authority in connection with any phase of the agreement."

This policy was incorporated in Sinclair's operating manuals, used by Sherwood.

Neither Sherwood nor Sinclair sold or promoted the sale of Goodyear TBA products to persons other than Sherwood or Sinclair dealers. The various agreements with Goodyear contemplated only the promotion of TBA sales to existing or prospective retail distributors of Sinclair petroleum products and the purchase by Sinclair[2] of tires and batteries for resale to such retail distributors. The principal purpose of Sherwood and Sinclair in effecting these agreements was to supply a full line of TBA products to the service stations handling Sinclair petroleum products. The parties are agreed that it is desirable for a dealer to be able to furnish one-stop service to the motoring public and that the availability of a complete line of TBA at a service station attracts customers for gasoline, oil and the other services the dealer offers. Under the agreement which Sherwood and Sinclair had with Goodyear, there was available to their dealers a convenient source of supply of TBA products nationally advertised under well-known brand names. The dealer could expect prompt deliveries and therefore did not need to carry excessive inventories. He could sell Goodyear tires, tubes, batteries and some other Goodyear TBA products on Sinclair credit cards without extending credit himself. The Sherwood-Sinclair service station dealers derived certain benefits from the agreements between Sherwood-Sinclair and Goodyear, although they could have obtained most of the benefits from handling other nationally advertised brands of TBA.

The 1944 Sherwood-Goodyear agreement was in effect when Sherwood became a division of Sinclair on January 1, 1956. Thereupon, the Sinclair-Goodyear "tire and battery" and "car and home" letter agreements became applicable to the Sherwood Division. The change made very little difference in net earnings to Sherwood, and had no effect upon the prices which Sherwood dealers paid for Goodyear TBA.

Before January 1, 1956, Goodyear had solicited direct purchases of tires, tubes and batteries by Sherwood service station dealers, and had paid Sherwood a commission on all such sales. After January 1, 1956, Brooks-Huff Tire Company, which had been a Goodyear tire and battery dealer in Baltimore, gave up its Goodyear franchise and became a Sinclair franchise holder. Thereafter Goodyear did not solicit direct purchases of tires, tubes and batteries by Sherwood dealers in the metropolitan Baltimore area. Such sales were made either by Brooks-Huff or by another Sinclair franchise holder, except in those isolated instances where a service station dealer preferred to buy direct from Goodyear. After January 1, 1956, Sherwood received a profit on all sales made by it to Brooks-Huff, but received no profit or commissions on any sales of tires, tubes and batteries made by Goodyear direct. Before 1956 plaintiff had purchased Goodyear TBA direct from Goodyear. Shortly after January 1, 1956, a Sherwood sales representative told plaintiff that he was no longer a Goodyear distributor and that he should purchase Goodyear tires, tubes and batteries from Brooks-Huff. About the same time a Goodyear salesman said that he would no longer accept orders from plaintiff for such merchandise. However, plaintiff could purchase Goodyear tires, tubes, and batteries from

[2] And by Sherwood after January 1, 1956.

Brooks-Huff on the same terms and discounts that he had purchased them directly from Goodyear prior to January 1, 1956, and plaintiff could and did purchase Goodyear car and home products directly from Goodyear both before and after January 1, 1956.

Other Goodyear distributors in Baltimore and elsewhere continued to compete for the TBA business of the Sherwood dealers, and plaintiff also continued to purchase all kinds of TBA products from wholesale houses in Baltimore, Reisterstown, Westminster, or wherever he chose.

[Use of Competing Products]

Sherwood regarded Goodyear TBA in its entirety as one of the Sherwood lines, and was not pleased when its dealers carried a large stock of other TBA products. Sherwood and Sinclair believed that both they and their dealers would benefit if the dealers handled an appropriate quantity of TBA and they naturally preferred that the dealers carry the Goodyear line.

The purchase of Goodyear TBA was discussed by Sherwood with prospective lessees. They were told that there was a general identity between the names of Sinclair and Goodyear across the country and that Sherwood liked to see those names held together so far as its service to the motoring public was concerned. The normal procedure was to sign the lease and dealer sales agreement and to secure the initial TBA order simultaneously. Sherwood impressed on its sales personnel the desirability of dealers carrying 100% Goodyear TBA products. They, in turn, used their best efforts to persuade the dealers to purchase Goodyear TBA in preference to other lines.

It was not the practice of Sherwood or Sinclair to prohibit their dealers from displaying on the leased premises signs advertising TBA products other than Goodyear TBA. They frequently requested dealers to remove such signs but they did not force the dealers to remove them and many Sherwood stations displayed signs advertising other brands of TBA.

Sherwood established annually TBA quotas for each of the territories covered by its sales representatives, but did not ordinarily assign quotas to each individual service station dealer. The sales representatives usually discussed with their dealers the level of Goodyear TBA sales which they thought such dealers should reach. Sherwood distributed through its sales representatives blank forms to be used by a dealer in calculating his potential and actual TBA business, but did not require that all dealers use them. Field employees prepared reports showing what brands of TBA were displayed for sale by the several dealers. Nearly all of them handled some Goodyear TBA but no dealer handled Goodyear TBA exclusively.

[Threat to Terminate Leases]

Sherwood held a sales meeting each spring, at which the dealers were exhorted to greater efforts by John R. Sherwood, president of the company. The principal emphasis was on gasoline gallonage, but he made it clear year after year that he was dissatisfied with the TBA sales. There is a conflict in the testimony as to what was said at a particular meeting in or about 1949. It is difficult for anyone to remember exactly what was said on such an occasion ten years ago, but I find that the dealers understood and Sherwood intended them to understand that unless they purchased more Goodyear TBA some of the leases would be terminated.[3] Around 1950 Sherwood set a goal of a million dollars of TBA sales, which was not reached until 1958. Sinclair had calculated that $35 of TBA sales per 1,000 gallons of gasoline sales was a reasonable quota, and the Sherwood service station dealers as a whole were buying only about one-half of that amount. Of course, some dealers were buying at much higher levels than others. The tire companies had figured the service station potential at $135 of TBA retail sales per 1,000 gallons of gasoline; that would have meant $90 wholesale per 1,000 gallons, so the Sherwood quota of $35 per 1,000 gallons does not appear unreasonable.

Sherwood kept records of the purchases of Goodyear TBA by its dealers and considered this item along with others in de-

[3] The testimony dealing with the conversations among the dealers immediately following Mr. Sherwood's speech is admissible to show their understanding of what he had said, and by inference therefrom what he had intended them to understand. So is plaintiff's testimony as to what he had understood Mr. Sherwood's statements to mean. Linden v. United States, 4 Cir., 254 F. 2d 560; Hard v. United States, 9 Cir., 157 F. 2d 630; Wigmore on Evidence, § 1790.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

termining whether to renew or terminate a dealer's lease at the end of each year. The final decision was made on the basis of the dealer's overall performance. The most important factor considered was the total gallonage of gasoline sold by the dealer. Besides TBA, other factors considered included cleanliness of the station, hours of operation, quality of service offered the public, personal interest and attentiveness of the dealer to the operation of the station, and the increase or decrease in the volume of sales from year to year.

[Cancellation of Lease—Causes]

In addition to being the lessee of a Sherwood service station in Reisterstown, plaintiff operated a Firestone TBA business in connection therewith and was the sole stockholder of a corporation which operated a Firestone store in Westminster.[4] During the period that plaintiff was a Sherwood dealer, he sold much larger quantities of Firestone than Goodyear TBA. He told Sherwood that Firestone would remain his major line, but that he would also carry Goodyear and let the public choose between them.

His first lease was cancelled by Sherwood in 1948 because of the decline in the gasoline gallonage and because plaintiff was not handling enough Goodyear TBA products. Following a conference, at which plaintiff had agreed to place an order for over $1,000 worth of Goodyear TBA, Sherwood's sales manager decided to give him another chance, and signed a new lease. Plaintiff thereafter bought some Goodyear TBA, but he continued to buy more than than ten times as much Firestone TBA.

Although Sherwood's sales representatives told plaintiff over the years that he ought to buy more Goodyear TBA products, they neither stated explicitly nor implied clearly that he had to do so in order to keep his lease.

The second lease provided for a rental equal to 1½¢ per gallon of gasoline and motor fuels delivered to the station, with a minimum of $400 per month. However, in accordance with its general custom, Sherwood waived the minimum rent and accepted lower amounts per gallon over a period of several years before and during the rebuilding and enlargement of the station in 1953-54. The lease and the dealer sales agreement which supplemented it contained provisions for termination by either party at the end of the original term or any successive yearly term, on thirty days' notice.

The service station leased to plaintiff occupied the best location in the Reisterstown area. This was an important factor in inducing Sherwood to rebuild and enlarge the station in 1953. In 1954, after the station had been rebuilt, a Sherwood representative (DeHuff) asked plaintiff what he intended to do about Goodyear TBA. Plaintiff replied that he intended to carry and display Goodyear along with Firestone, but that he could not economically get rid of his Firestone franchise. DeHuff said that one way Sherwood expected to recover the expenses of the rebuilding was by plaintiff handling more Goodyear TBA.

The fact that plaintiff carried so much more Firestone TBA than Goodyear TBA was one of the factors, along with others affecting the complete operation of the station, considered by the sales representative each year in making up his mind whether to recommend to his superiors that plaintiff's lease be renewed or terminated, and by the sales manager in making the final decision.

When the responsible individuals at Sherwood considered whether to renew or terminate plaintiff's lease in the spring of 1956, they thought that his gallonage had not increased in 1955 to the extent that it should have increased, considering the recent expenditure of $31,000 for the enlarged station.

I find that those two factors—gasoline gallonage and TBA problems—substantially contributed to Sherwood's decision to cancel the lease in 1956. I do not find that either of the two factors was predominant.[5]

[Damages]

Plaintiff suffered damage as a result of the cancellation, but it was agreed at a pre-

[4] Plaintiff was also the owner of a 437-acre farm in Carroll County.

[5] This, however, would not be fatal to plaintiff's claim for damages sustained as a result of the cancellation if he had shown a combination in restraint of trade or an attempt to monopolize in violation of the Sherman Act, and that such illegal motive substantially contributed to the decision to cancel. Momand v. Universal Film Exchanges, Inc. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,360], 1 Cir., 172 F. 2d 37. See also Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co., 282 U. S. 555.

trial conference that no proof of the amount of such damage should be offered until after it has been determined whether there was any violation of the antitrust laws. Plaintiff did not prove that he suffered any other damage as a result of the alleged violations.

DISCUSSION

[Refusal to Deal]

It is a settled principle of law that in the absence of a purpose to create or maintain a monopoly a manufacturer or a distributor has the right freely to exercise his independent discretion as to the parties with whom he will deal. United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U. S. 300, 307; Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,494], 345 U. S. 594, 625; Schwing Motor Co. v. Hudson Sales Corp. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,292], D. Md., 138 F. Supp. 899, 902, aff'd [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,564], 4 Cir., 239 F. 2d 176, cert. den. 355 U. S. 823; Miller Motors Inc. v. Ford Motor Co. [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,937], 4 Cir., 252 F. 2d 441, 451; Nelligan v. Ford Motor Co. [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,238], 4 Cir., — F. 2d —; Hudson Sales Corp. v. Waldrip [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,694], 5 Cir., 211 F. 2d 268, 274, cert. den. 348 U. S. 821; Nelson Radio and Supply Co. v. Motorola [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,386], 5 Cir., 200 F. 2d 911, 915, cert. den. 345 U. S. 925. Sinclair has the right, acting independently, to refuse to renew a service station lease for the reason that the dealer has failed to sell Goodyear TBA, or to sell it in sufficient quantities, or to sell it exclusively. Furthermore, Sinclair can announce such requirements in advance of entering into a lease or in advance of a renewal date.

On the other hand, a manufacturer or distributor loses his right to refuse to deal if such refusal is in furtherance of a conspiracy in restraint of trade under sec. 1 or of an attempt to monopolize under sec. 2 of the Sherman Act. But the mere fact that Goodyear and Sinclair have entered into marketing agreements does not per se restrict Sinclair's right to terminate its leases for any reasons it sees fit.

[No "Tying" Arrangements]

Since the marketing agreements do not contain any provisions which in and of themselves violate the antitrust laws, we must consider whether they were used to violate those laws.

Plaintiff concedes that he has not proved a tying arrangement which violates sec. 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A. 14. Neither the lease nor the dealer agreement was made upon any condition, agreement or understanding that plaintiff refrain from buying or selling TBA products other than Goodyear's. Plaintiff must show that Sinclair's conduct violated the Sherman Act by imposing or attempting to impose an unreasonable restraint on interstate commerce. Northern Pacific Railway Co. v. United States [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,961], 356 U. S. 1; Radovich v. National Football League [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,628], 352 U. S. 445; Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, supra; Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U. S. 231; Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc. [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,007], 9 Cir., 255 F. 2d 214.

Plaintiff does not contend that every restraint on interstate commerce involves a violation of the antitrust laws, even though the restraint may involve a substantial amount of commerce; he does contend that if he proves an unreasonable restraint of a not insubstantial amount of interstate commerce, such unreasonable restraint is presumed to be a public injury.

[Relevant Market—Intent]

Plaintiff contends that the relevant market is the market for TBA products among Sinclair lessee dealers in the Sherwood division. If there were such a restraint of trade or attempt to monopolize as existed in International Salt Co. v. United States [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,635], 332 U. S. 392, Standard Oil Company of California v. United States [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,432], 337 U. S. 293, and Northern Pacific Railway Co. v. United States, supra, the volume of TBA purchases by the Sinclair dealers in the Sherwood division would constitute a not insubstantial amount of commerce. In those three cases, however, there was a clear restraint of trade or attempt to monopolize, apparent from the provisions of the written contracts themselves. No such per se violation is apparent in the present case, for neither the letter-contracts between Sherwood-Sinclair and Goodyear nor the agreements between Sherwood and its dealers contain any similar provisions. Any possible intent to monopolize or to unreasonably restrain trade in this case must be gleaned from the way in which the agreements were used. In deciding whether an illegal intent existed, the general market for TBA products in the metropolitan Baltimore area and elsewhere in Maryland must be considered; the same market must also be considered in deciding whether there was any actual monopoly or restraint of trade. United States v. duPont & Co., [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,369], 351 U. S. 377; Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, supra; Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., supra.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Earlier Case Distinguished]

Plaintiff relies strongly on the GMAC case, United States v. General Motors Corporation [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,120], 7 Cir., 121 F. 2d 376, cert. den. 314 U. S. 618, reh. den. 314 U. S. 710, to support his contention that Sinclair was using its natural monopoly of its own brand-name petroleum products to invade the TBA field. The instant case, however, is very different from the General Motors case: (1) General Motors required dealers to promise to use GMAC financing exclusively. Sinclair did not require its dealers to use Goodyear TBA exclusively or to promise to use it exclusively. (2) The scheme to require GMAC financing bore no relation to the good will of General Motors or to its line of cars. It is conceded that Sinclair had a valid interest in seeing that its dealers carried a full line of high quality TBA, and I have found as a fact that the dealers, as well as Sinclair, derived certain benefits from the TBA arrangements with Goodyear. The predominant motive which Sherwood and Sinclair had for entering into the agreements with Goodyear was a legitimate business motive. Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U. S. at 622; Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U. S. at 238. (3) General Motors dominated the automotive field. Sinclair has no such dominant position in the petroleum field in Maryland or elsewhere.[6] (4) Sinclair was not using its economic position as a refiner and distributor of petroleum products to invade and dominate the TBA business. Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, supra; Miller Motors v. Ford Motor Co., supra; Klors', Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., supra. The evidence does not support plaintiff's contention that Sherwood or Sinclair had either the intent or the purpose to monopolize the TBA market. There are many brands of TBA merchandise available to service station dealers and to consumers. Plaintiff and the other Sherwood-Sinclair dealers whom he called as witnesses showed that in practice Sinclair dealers carry other brands of TBA as well as Goodyear.

[Conspiracy]

Nor is there any evidence of a conspiracy between Sherwood-Sinclair and Goodyear to restrain trade in the TBA market. It has been noted that every contract is to some extent a restraint of trade, but not every contract amounts to a conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act. Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U. S. at 238. "It is not sufficient for the plaintiff to prove a cooperative effort between [Sinclair and Goodyear], but it must be shown that the combination had the objectionable features which the Act is designed to prevent." Miller Motors, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 242 F. 2d at 446.

[Public Injury]

The TBA agreements between Sinclair-Sherwood and Goodyear have not resulted in any increase in the wholesale prices charged to dealers or retail prices charged to the public. Goodyear TBA products compete with those of Firestone, Goodrich and other manufacturers and distributors on the basis of price, quality and other relevant factors.

Since there was no per se violation of the antitrust laws, plaintiff had to prove facts which show public injury from the alleged attempt to monopolize. Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,039], 310 U. S. 469; Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U. S. at 614; Radovich v. National Football League, 352 U. S. at 453; Glenn Coal Co. v. Dickinson Fuel Co. [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,062], 4 Cir., 72 F. 2d 885; Schwing Motor Co. v. Hudson Sales Co., supra; Miller Motors, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., supra; Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., supra. The keen competition between suppliers for the service station business prevents control of wholesale prices by the Sinclair-Goodyear arrangement. There is no evidence in this case of any horizontal price fixing agreements between any of the tire companies or any of the oil companies with respect to TBA. Nor is there any suggestion of "price leadership" in the TBA business in Maryland. The public has a choice of brands at Sinclair stations, and is free to buy any of the competing brands at service stations operated by other companies and at all sorts of other retail outlets. The Goodyear TBA products compete with those of other manufacturers and distributors on the basis of price, quality and all other relevant factors. Plaintiff has failed to prove any injury to the public from the Sinclair-Goodyear marketing arrangement.

[6] Although this fact might not be important if there were clear restraints in the agreements themselves, as there were in International Salt, Standard Stations and Northern Pacific, it should be considered in determining whether there was any unreasonable restraint of trade.

No violation of the antitrust laws has been shown. Let judgment be entered in favor of the defendant, with costs.

[¶ 69,366] Englander Motors, Inc. v. Ford Motor Company.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. No. 13,567. Filed May 26, 1959. Petition for rehearing denied August 10, 1959.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, Eastern Division.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies—Restraint of Trade Under Sherman Act, Section 1—Exclusive Dealing—Automobile Dealership Conditioned Upon Dealers' Not Dealing in Competitors' Products—Protecting Good Will—Rule of Reason.—An automobile dealer, in a complaint charging that an automobile manufacturer's franchise agreements with its dealers required them to deal exclusively in the manufacturer's cars, parts, and accessories, sufficiently alleged an unreasonable restraint of trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. The trial court had dismissed the action on the ground that the dealer could not have been injured, so that the case was not one for treble damages under the antitrust laws and was not entitled to the jurisdiction of the court. Reversing and remanding the cause for trial, the reviewing court noted that while causes are often dismissed as frivolous, the instant case was not of that sort. The "rule of reason" has been applied to the interpretation of the Sherman Act. However, the soundness of the manufacturer's contention that its restraints were reasonable as a matter of law because it had good will to protect and had to insure that its dealers would have sufficient resources to adequately promote its products could only be determined after proofs and not on a motion to dismiss. Jurisdiction is determined by the allegations of the bill; usually, if the bill makes a claim that, if well founded, is within the court's jurisdiction, it is within that jurisdiction whether well founded or not.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, ¶ 2005.285, 2005.690, 2005.825.

Monopolies—Relevant Market—Market Encompassed by Automobile Manufacturer's Own Dealers—Unlawful Effect on Prices or Competition.—An automobile dealer, in a complaint charging that an automobile manufacturer's franchise agreements with its dealers required them to deal exclusively in the manufacturer's cars, parts, and accessories, alleged a violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act by claiming that the manufacturer had such control of the operation of its dealers' businesses that it was able to fix prices on many specific products and services in the commerce encompassed by its dealers. A determination of the existence of monopoly, which is the power to fix prices or exclude competition, required that the market area be defined. The dealer charged a violation of Section 2 by alleging that the relevant market was that encompassed by the manufacturer's dealers and that the manufacturer was able to fix prices, but the charge was so broadly stated that the court was unable to determine if the dealer intended to prove that price or competition had been unlawfully affected in all of the products or services in the dealers' commerce, or only in some one of more of such products or services. Therefore, the manufacturer should have the opportunity for a more definite statement of claim if it deems itself prejudiced in preparing a defense to the monopoly charge.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2540.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Exclusive Dealing Under Clayton Act, Section 3—Automobile Dealership Conditioned Upon Dealers' Not Dealing in Competitors' Products—Effect on Competition.—An automobile dealer, in a complaint charging that an automobile manufacturer, by express or implied agreement, required all of its franchise dealers to deal exclusively in its cars, parts, and accessories, sufficiently alleged a violation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act. It was clear that the dealership agreement was conditioned upon the dealers not dealing in competitors' goods. However, that prohibition was limited to the selling of competing parts in places of business displaying a sign or other indication that it was one of the manufacturer's authorized dealers. Also, the agreement excepted cases where the manufacturer was unable to supply its parts, or where the purchaser had specifically requested the dealer to use some other part. It was not clear, from the complaint, that sales of unauthorized parts were made under such restricted conditions. That could only be determined by a trial.

The trial court assumed that the allegations of public injury were true, in that manufacturers of competing parts were foreclosed from the market by the manufacturer's dealer chain and that the general public could not obtain competitors' products through the manufacturer's dealers, without specifically requesting them. Accepting that assumption, the allegations of the complaint showed that competition might be substantially lessened. In Standard Oil Co. of Cal. v. United States, 1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,432, it was held that such a showing was made by proof of exclusive dealing contracts covering gasoline, oil, parts, and accessories which bound independent dealers selling 6.7 per cent of the market for gasoline in a seven-state area.

See Exclusive Dealing, Vol. 1, ¶ 4005.175, 4007.275, 4007.400, 4009.050, 4009.100.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Exclusive Dealing Under Sherman Act, Sections 1 and 2, and Clayton Act, Section 3—Injury to Plaintiff—Causation.—An automobile dealer, in a complaint charging that an automobile manufacturer required its dealers to deal exclusively in its cars, parts, and accessories, in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and Section 3 of the Clayton Act, sufficiently alleged damages to its business or property by claiming that it was forced to sell its business as a result of the manufacturer's threats to cancel its dealership. The dealer contended that the manufacturer, under franchise agreements with its dealers, was permitted to cancel dealerships on sixty days' notice; that the manufacturer's use of that provision caused injury to the dealer; and that the cancellation provision was a violation of law. The trial court had dismissed the action on the ground that the dealer could not have been injured, so that the case was not one for treble damages under the antitrust laws and was not entitled to the jurisdiction of the court. Reversing that ruling and remanding the case for trial, the reviewing court held that jurisdiction is determined by the allegations. The use of a short term cancellation provision for the purpose of violating the law is itself a violation of the antitrust laws. There was nothing intrinsically wrong with the short notice cancellation provision unless, by its exercise, the manufacturer was able to coerce violations and had forced the dealer to sell its business.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.690, 2005.785, 2005.825; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.300, 2610.720; Exclusive Dealing, Vol. 1, ¶ 4009.050; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.275, 9009.350, 9009.900.

For the appellant: Argued by Myron N. Krotinger, Cleveland, Ohio (M. Alfred Roemisch, Herbert A. Rosenthal, and Mendelsohn, Krotinger and Lane, all of Cleveland, Ohio, on the brief).

For the appellee: Argued by Charles W. Sellers, Cleveland, Ohio (Andrew C. Hartzell and Thompson, Hine and Flory, all of Cleveland, Ohio, on the brief).

Before SIMONS and ALLEN, Circuit Judges, and KENT, United States District Judge.

[Treble Damage Action]

SIMONS, Circuit Judge [In full text]: The appellant, hereinafter known as Englander, was at the time the controversy arose, a franchise dealer selling Ford cars, replacement parts and accessories under written contract with the Ford Motor Company. It brought a private antitrust action under Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. 15 for alleged injuries to its business and property because of Ford's violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and Section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. 1, 2 and 14, charging that Ford by express or implied agreement with all of its dealers requires that they deal exclusively in Ford cars and Ford made or approved parts and accessories for such vehicles, complaining that the agreements gave Ford a monopoly on a line of commerce in violation of Sec. 2 of the Sherman Act and that they are conditioned upon the dealers refraining from dealing in the goods of Ford's competitors, so as to substantially lessen competition contrary to Sec. 3 of the Clayton Act. It charges that the agreements constitute unreasonable restraint of trade in violation of Sec. 1 of the Sherman Act. It further charges that the agreements permit Ford to cancel its franchise arrangement with its dealers, including Englander, by giving sixty days' notice of franchise cancellation, and that by the use of this provision, it can enforce antitrust law violations by its dealers. The public is alleged to be injured because it must pay higher prices for parts and accessories purchased from Ford dealers since it is limited in obtaining such parts and accessories by Ford's power to fix prices for goods and services and because it can control the dealers' operations, including personnel, finances, stocks of goods and equipment. It charges that it was injured because defendant became dissatisfied with its performance with regard to the sale of parts and accessories and by threats of cancellation caused it to obtain leases for the benefit of others than itself and to sell its business to a designee of Ford. It further charges that the leases had a value in excess of rent and impliedly that the forced sale of its business was at less than real value.

[Prior Proceedings—Appeal]

In another cause of action, Englander seeks an accounting for moneys given to Ford by it and other Ford dealers for advertising purposes. Upon alternative motions for dismissal or to make more definite the statement as to the anti-trust action and for dismissal or severance as to the action for accounting, the district judge granted motions to dismiss, and Englander has appealed. The district court assuming, for the purpose of the claim for antitrust relief, that the allegations of public injury are true in that manufacturers of competing Ford replacement parts are foreclosed from the market for their products by the Ford authorized dealer chain and that the general public cannot obtain without specific request these competing products through authorized Ford dealers, ruled that Englander must further show that he was injured through the operation of the system, and concluded Englander could not be so injured so that the case is not one for treble damages under the antitrust law, nor is it one entitled to the jurisdiction of the court. Since the accounting action is not a true class action because the pleadings show that the interests of the members of the class are not undivided and it did not appear that Englander's share of that fund exceeds $3,000.00, therefore the trial court summarily granted the motions to dismiss.

[Clayton Act, Section 3]

Our first excursion into the allegations of the complaint is to determine if its allegations claim a violation of Sec. 3 of the Clayton Act, which provides that it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce to make a contract for the sale of goods for resale within the United States on the condition, agreement, or understanding, that the purchaser shall not use or deal in the goods of a competitor where the effect of such contract for sale or such condition, agreement, or understanding, may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

It would seem clear from the terms of the agreement that it is conditioned upon the dealers not dealing in competitors' goods. That is, however, limited to the selling of competing replacement parts in any place of business upon which the dealer displays the Ford Company's trademarks or tradename or any sign or indication that such place of business is that of an authorized Ford dealer or service station, except in cases where the company is unable to supply them or the purchaser has specifically requested the dealer to use some other part. The complaint is not clear that sales of unauthorized parts or accessories were made under such restricted conditions, or if so to what extent. This may only be determined by trial.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Lessening of Competition]

Accepting the court's assumption, it still remains to determine whether the allegations of the complaint show that competition may be substantially lessened. In Standard Oil Company of California, et al. v. United States [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,432], 337 U. S. 293, it was held that the requirement of Section 3 of the Clayton Act of a showing that the effect of contracts may be to substantially lessen competition was made by proof of exclusive dealing contracts covering gasoline, oil and automobile parts and accessories which bound independent dealers selling 6.7% of the market for gasoline in a 7-state area. To the same effect is Richfield Oil Company v. United States [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,878], 99 Fed. Supp. 280, in respect to Section 3 of the Clayton Act and Section 1 of the Sherman Act. This case was affirmed per curiam on the basis of the Standard Oil case, 343 U. S. 922 [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,262]. Dictograph Products v. Federal Trade Commission [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,932], 217 F. 2d 821 (C. A. 2), certiorari denied, 349 U. S. 940, and Anchor Serum Company v. Federal Trade Commission [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,921], 217 F. 2d 867 (C. A. 7), reached like conclusions. We, therefore, conclude that Englander has sufficiently alleged violation of Sec. 3 of the Clayton Act.

[Rule of Reason]

In Standard Oil Company of New Jersey v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, the rule of reason has been applied to the interpretation of the Sherman Act. It is Ford's contention that its restraints are reasonable as a matter of law because it has a good will and a guaranty to protect and that it must insure that its dealers would have sufficient resources to adequately promote Ford's products. It may well be that the proofs would fail to show that Ford's concern for its good will and the protection of its guaranties is soundly based but this may only be determined after proofs and not upon a motion to dismiss. Jurisdiction is determined by the allegations of the bill and usually if the bill or declaration makes a claim that if well founded is within the jurisdiction of the court, it is within that jurisdiction whether well founded or not. Hart v. Keith Exchange, opinion by Mr. Justice Holmes, 262 U. S. 271, and cases therein cited. While causes are often dismissed as frivolous, this is not that sort of case.

[Monopoly—Relevant Market]

Section 2 of the Sherman Act makes it a misdemeanor to monopolize or attempt to monopolize any part of trade or commerce in the several States. Monopoly for the purpose of Sec. 2 has been determined to be the power to fix prices or to exclude competition. United States v. duPont [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,369], 351 U. S. 377. In order for a determination of the power to fix prices or to exclude competition, or attempts to do so, it is necessary to have the market area defined. Englander has alleged the market to be that encompassed by the commerce of Ford dealers. It is charged that Ford has such control of the operation of the dealers' business that it is able to fix prices on many specific products and services in commerce. While this charges a violation of Sec. 2, it is so broadly stated that we are unable to tell if Englander intended to prove that prices or competition has been unlawfully affected in all of the products or services in the dealers' commerce or only in some one or more of such products or services. Ford should be forewarned by the complaint and, if so, should have the opportunity for a more definite statement of claim under Rule 12(e) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, if it deems itself prejudiced in preparing a defense to the monopoly charge.

[Refusal to Deal—Legality of Purpose]

In order that Englander may have a cause of action under Section 4 of the Clayton Act, it must show that it was damaged in its business or property by a violation of the antitrust laws. Englander contended that its damage was a result of Ford's use of the cancellation provision of the franchise and that this provision was a violation of law. There is nothing intrinsically wrong with a short notice cancellation provision unless by its exercise Ford was able to coerce violations, and by its use had forced Englander to sell its business. Moreover, in Standard Oil of New Jersey v. United States, supra, it was held that there is nothing intrinsically wrong with Standard owning stock in other corporations but if it owns such stock for the purpose of violating the antitrust laws, ownership itself is a violation of such laws and by the same measure the use of a short term cancellation provision for the purpose of violating the law is itself a violation of the antitrust law.

[Remanded for Trial]

We conclude upon this phase of the case that it must be returned to the district court for answer and trial and for findings of fact in support of, or in conflict with, such findings. Fact issues will include findings that competition may or may not be substantially lessened because of the exclusive agreement and a conclusion as to whether Englander has brought itself within the scope of Standard Oil Company of California v. United States, supra, by the facts as found.

[Accounting Suit]

The suit for an accounting is brought as a class action. From the pleadings, however, it is evident that the interest of the alleged members of the class are not undivided and for purposes of jurisdiction they may not be cumulated. In order to come within the jurisdiction by an amount in controversy in diversity cases, jurisdiction is determined by the value of the individual claim apart from that of the other members of the class. Sturgeon v. Great Lakes Steel Corporation, 143 F. 2d 819 (C. A. 6). We remand this phase of the case to the trial court to allow Englander to amend its pleadings if it can show a jurisdictional interest in a unified fund. If the amended pleadings show that the plaintiff's individual interest exceeds the jurisdictional amount, there is jurisdiction. If not, this cause of action should be dismissed.

The decree is reversed and the cause remanded for trial consistent with this opinion.

[¶ 69,367] California League of Independent Insurance Producers, et al. v. Aetna Casualty & Surety Company, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, Southern Division. Civil No. 37934. Filed May 20, 1959.

Sherman Antitrust Act, California Antitrust (Cartwright) Act, and McCarran-Ferguson Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Concerted Agreement to Decrease Rates of Commission Paid to Automobile Insurance Agents—Exemptions from Federal Antitrust Laws—Insurance Under McCarran-Ferguson Act—California Antitrust Law.—A complaint charging insurance companies with conspiring to restrain and monopolize trade by agreeing to decrease the rate of commission paid to automobile insurance agents was dismissed on the ground that the action, as pleaded, was precluded by the McCarran-Ferguson Act. That statute provides that the Sherman Act is "applicable to the business of insurance to the extent that such business is not regulated by State law." A state is regulating the business of insurance when it has generally authorized or permitted certain standards of conduct. The California Insurance Code expressly authorized cooperation between insurers "with respect to any matters pertaining to the making of rates and rating systems," and set forth a comprehensive scheme for ratemaking. Also, it was common knowledge that the rate of commission paid to agents was a vital factor in the ratemaking structure. Thus, it was apparent that the insurance companies were alleged to have violated the Sherman Act in matters generally authorized or permitted by the State of California. In addition, the McCarran-Ferguson Act precluded the suit because the charges in the complaint were covered by the California Antitrust (Cartwright) Act.

However, the McCarran-Ferguson Act permits a Sherman Act suit against insurance companies for "boycott, coercion or intimidation," even though a state is regulating the particular conduct involved. Therefore, the plaintiffs were granted leave to file an amended complaint for the sole purpose of showing such a violation.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2263, 2375.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Damages Recoverable —Sufficiency of Allegations—Damages "Presently Unknown."—A complaint charging insurance companies with conspiring to restrain and monopolize trade by agreeing, in concert, to decrease the rate of commission paid to insurance agents failed to state a claim because, among other things, it alleged that the amount of damages suffered by each agent was "presently unknown." Each undoubtedly had his own book of accounts containing the necessary information to compute the damage, if any. Therefore, if an amended complaint should be filed, each of the agents would be required to state the amount of his damage and the theory upon which it was computed.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9011.200.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Who May Bring Suit —Parties Plaintiff—Agent or Assignee for Collection.—It was impossible to ascertain, from a complaint in which a "league" of insurance producers alleged that it was "a plaintiff in this case by virtue of the fact that it holds assignments for purposes of litigation" from certain of its members, if the "league" was a real party in interest. If it were a mere agent for collection, then it was not a real party in interest and the action would have to be dismisssd as to it. On the other hand, if it were an assignee for collection, it could maintain the action as a real party in interest. Therefore, any amended complaint should clearly set forth the league's true status.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9005.

For the plaintiffs: Joseph L. Alioto, San Francisco, Cal.

For the defendants: Walker W. Lowry of McCutchen, Doyle, Brown & Enersen, for Great American Indemnity and Travelers Indemnity; Christopher M. Jenks of Orrick, Dahlquist, Herrington & Sutcliffe, for Fireman's Fund; Frank D. Tatum, Jr., of Cooley, Crowley, Gaither, Godward, Castro & Huddleson, for Pacific Indemnity; and James Michael of Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, for United Pacific Insurance, all of San Francisco, Cal.

Order Granting Motions to Dismiss the Complaint with Leave to Amend

[Treble Damage Action]

ALBERT C. WOLLENBERG, District Judge [In full text]: The sufficiency of the complaint in this treble damage antitrust action has been attacked by motion under Rule 12 (b)(6) and 12(e). The complaint charges a conspiracy to restrain and monopolize trade in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 U. S. C. A. 1, 2) whereby the defendants, acting in concert, agreed "to decrease the rate of commission paid to automobile insurance agents, * * * (and) they thereafter, in fact did decrease the said rate of commission and persuade substantially all companies writing automobile insurance to join them in the plan." The complaint further charges that the said conspiracy resulted in (a) destruction of the insurance agents' previously existing right to seek their rate of commission by free and private negotiation with the defendants, (b) impairment of competition among the insurance companies for the services of plaintiffs, and (c) loss of profits to the plaintiffs. The amount of damages suffered by each defendant [plaintiff] is alleged to be presently unknown and therefore leave to amend is prayed after completion of discovery proceedings.

[Motion to Dismiss]

Each defendant presented a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted (FRCP 12 (b)(6)). The motions were based upon (a) the insufficiency of the damage allegation, and (b) Section 2(b) of the McCarran Act (15 U. S. C. A. 1012(b)).

[McCarran Act]

The last stated ground, Section 2(b) of the McCarran Act, presents an interesting and unusual question.[1] The McCarran Act (15 U. S. C. A. 1011-1014), in so far as applicable herein, provides that the federal antitrust statutes are applicable to the business of insurance only (1) to the extent such business is not regulated by state law

[1] See text of Footnote 2, infra.

(15 U. S. C. A. 1012(b)), or (2) to any act of boycott, coercion or intimidation. 15 U. S. C. A. 1013(b). Each defendant previously presented a motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction (FRCP 12(b)(1)) to the Honorable Fred L. Wham, visiting Judge from the Eastern District of Illinois. Judge Wham, in orally denying these motions, stated that after investigating the California statutes and regulations he "failed to find that the field of agents' commissions is dealt with at all by the statutes or by the regulations. True enough, there is some provision that rates of insurance may be agreed upon, provided there is no agreement to adhere to those rates and it says in arriving at the rates, the expenses, of which all agreed commissions, constitute a considerable portion, may be considered." (Transcript, p. 4.) Judge Wham then went on to state that he was not ruling on coercion as a basis for jurisdiction.

In view of this ruling on the question of jurisdiction, the present motions ordinarily would be addressed solely to the sufficiency of the pleadings under the Sherman Act. However, the Court now finds itself in the position of disagreeing with the basis upon which the order upholding jurisdiction under the Sherman Act was made.[2] For the reasons set forth below the motions will be granted with leave to the plaintiff to file an amended complaint within thirty days.[3]

[State Regulation of Insurance]

In enacting the McCarran Act "Congress' purpose was broadly to give support to existing and future state systems for regulating and taxing the business of insurance." Prudential Ins. Co. v. Benjamin, 328 U. S. 408, 429-430 (1946); 15 U. S. C. A. 1011. To give effect to this policy Congress specifically provided that the Sherman Act "shall be applicable to the business of insurance to the extent that such business is not regulated by State law." 15 U. S. C. A. 1012(b). This Court is of the opinion that a State regulates the business of insurance within the meaning of § 1012(b) when a State statute generally proscribes (F. T. C. v. National Cas. Co. [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,059], 357 U. S. 560 (1958)) or permits or authorizes certain conduct on the part of the insurance companies. In F. T. C. v. National Cas. Co., supra, the Court held that there was State regulation within the meaning of § 1012(b) when a State act generally prohibited "certain standards of conduct." (357 U. S. at 564.) From the above case it would seem to follow that if a State has generally authorized or permitted certain standards of conduct, it is regulating the business of insurance under the McCarran Act.

[Cooperation Between Insurers]

The State of California expressly "authorize(s) cooperation between insurers in ratemaking and other related matters" (Cal. Ins. Code § 1850) "with respect to any matters pertaining to the making of rates and rating systems" (Cal. Ins. Code § 1853) provided, however, that said insurance companies "shall not agree with each other or rating organizations to adhere thereto." Cal. Ins. Code § 1853.6. See Chapter 9 of Division 1, Part 2, of the California Insurance Code setting forth an elaborate and comprehensive scheme for ratemaking. It is common knowledge that the rate of commission paid to agents is a vital factor in the ratemaking structure. See O'Groman & Young, Inc. v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 282 U. S. 251 (1931); State Comp. Ins. Fund v. McConnell, 46 C. 2d 660 (1956). From what has been said it is apparent that the defendants are alleged to have violated the Sherman Act in matters generally authorized or permitted by the State of California. Plaintiffs' remedy is under State, not Federal, law.

[State Antitrust Act]

There is a further reason supporting the Court's conclusion that the complaint fails to state a claim. Since the State Antitrust

[2] This Court is aware of the rule that "judges of co-ordinate jurisdiction, sitting in the same court and in the same case should not overrule the decisions of each other." Commercial Union of America v. Anglo-South American Bank, 10 F. 2d 937, 941 (2nd Cir. 1925). While the rule originally was considered as an absolute denial of judicial authority, the modern trend appears to regard the rule as one of restraint on the exercise of judicial discretion. Carnegie National Bank v. City of Wolf Point, 110 F. 2d 569, (9th Cir., 1940).

[3] However, even though not entirely clear, it appears that Judge Wham envisaged the present ruling when he stated "If you want to get this thing to the Court of Appeals, the quickest way possible would be to to ahead and let some court pass on your motions to dismiss on the ground that the complaint doesn't state a cause of action." (Transcript, p. 11).

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Act (Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16700-16758) applies to insurance companies (Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,493], 29 C. 2d 34 (1946), § 1012 (b) of the McCarran Act precludes a Sherman Act suit if the charges alleged in the complaint are covered by said State act. Professional and Businessmen's Life Ins. Co. v. Bankers Life Co., 163 F. Supp. 274 (D. C. Mont., 1958). The Court concludes that the charges in the complaint are so covered.

[Damages]

A third reason appears why this complaint fails to state a claim. The case involves a large number of plaintiffs. The complaint alleges that the amount of damage suffered by each is presently unknown. The Court has difficulty understanding why each plaintiff is not able to determine the amount of his damages. Each undoubtedly has his own book of accounts containing the necessary information to compute the damage, if any. Thus, should plaintiffs deem it advisable to file an amended complaint, each will be required to state therein the amount of his damage and the theory upon which it was computed. Louisiana Farmers Protective Union v. Great A. & P. Co. [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,239], 131 F. 2d 419 (8th Cir., 1942); Hess v. Anderson, Clayton & Co. [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,728], 20 F. R. D. 466 (S. D. Cal., 1957).

["Boycott, Coercion, or Intimidation"]

While the McCarran Act permits a Sherman Act suit against insurance companies for "boycott, coercion or intimidation" even though the State is regulating the particular conduct involved (15 U. S. C. A. 1013(b)), the Court is of the opinion that the complaint, as presently constituted, fails to allege a claim for boycott, coercion or intimidation. Since the plaintiff argued coercion as a basis of jurisdiction before Judge Wham, who declined to rule thereon, plaintiffs are granted leave to file an amended complaint, solely for the purpose of showing, if they can, a claim allowable by § 1013(b).

[Real Party in Interest]

At this point it is appropriate to note that the allegation concerning the status of the plaintiff California League of Independent Insurance Producers (hereinafter called "Producers") is ambiguous. F. R. C. P. 12(e). The complaint alleges that Producers is "a plaintiff in this case by virtue of the fact that it holds assignments for purposes of litigation" from certain of its members. If Producers is a mere agent for collection, then it is not a real party in interest and the action must be dismissed as to it. F. R. C. P. 17(a); Archie v. Shell Oil Co., 110 F. Supp. 542 (D. C. La., 1953). On the other hand, if Producers is an assignee for collection it may maintain the action as a real party in interest. Rosenblum v. Dingfelder, 111 F. 2d 406 (2nd Cir., 1940). It is impossible to ascertain from the complaint if Producers is a real party in interest. Thus, any amended complaint filed herein should clearly set forth Producers' true status.

[Dismissed with Leave to Amend]

Therefore, in accordance with the above opinion, each defendant's motion to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim is hereby granted with leave to plaintiff to file an amended complaint conforming to the above opinion within thirty days.

[¶ 69,368] P. Lorillard Company v. Federal Trade Commission. General Foods Corporation v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. No. 12,665 and 12,709, respectively. Argued February 6, 1959. Filed June 4, 1959.

On Petition to Review and Set Aside Orders of the Federal Trade Commission.

Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act

Price Discrimination—Payments for Services or Facilities Furnished by Customers—Contracts with Third Parties "for the Benefit of" Customers—Broadcasting Time—In-store Promotions.—Federal Trade Commission orders prohibiting manufacturers from paying allowances to, or for the benefit of, any customer unless they offer, or otherwise make available, allowances to all competing customers on proportionally equal terms were affirmed where it was found that (1) broadcasting companies negotiated contracts with certain grocery chains whereby the chains agreed to conduct in-store promotional displays of products for free radio or TV time, (2) the broadcasting companies then solicited the manufacturers to buy radio or TV time, offering as an added inducement the in-store promotion of their products already contracted for with the grocery chains, and (3) the manufacturers entered into contracts for the purchase of broadcasting time. The manufacturers each contended that since it was not a party to the contracts between the broadcasting companies and the grocery chains and that since they preceded its contracts with the broadcasting companies, there was nothing illegal or violative of Section 2(d) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. Each denied that it paid anything to or contracted with the broadcasting companies "for the benefit of" a customer within the meaning of the section, and asserted that a payment to or contract with a third person is not made for the benefit of a customer unless the seller makes it with the intention of benefiting the customer or has reason to know that some direct benefit to the customer will proximately result therefrom.

The section of the law does not concern itself with motive or intention; it is only concerned with the consequences which flow from the act. If those consequences eventuate, the act from which they result is forbidden. Furthermore, the manufacturers knew, or should have known, when they entered into the plans, that they, in adopting the plans, would be supplying the consideration which would constitute compensation for the benefits to be received by a few favored customers. The broadcasting companies were not eleemosynary institutions, and the grant of free broadcasting time to the grocery chains was part of the total transaction for which the manufacturers paid. The fact that the charge for the whole transaction was attributed to a particular item, that is, the manufacturers' advertising time, was not determinative. The payments made by the manufacturers to the broadcasting companies inured to the benefit not only of the manufacturers but also of the favored chains as compensation or in consideration for in-store promotions afforded the manufacturers' products.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3522, 3522.520, 3522.770.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Enforcement of Prohibitions Against Price Discrimination—Scope of FTC Order Under Section 2(d) of Clayton Act, as Amended by Robinson-Patman Act.—Federal Trade Commission orders framed in the language of Section 2(d) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, were upheld on the authority of cases upholding orders issued in the language of Section 2(a) of the Act. The fact that such cases involved Section 2(a) of the Act was not important since Section 2(d) is much narrower in scope and therefore orders framed in its language are well within the permissible ambit of the Commission's discretion.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8801.850.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Enforcement of Prohibitions Against Price Discrimination—Court Review—Weight of Administrative Interpretations.—In reviewing a Federal Trade Commission decision concerning Section 2(d) of the amended Clayton Act, the court noted that it is appropriate to keep in mind that administrative interpretations of statutes by agencies charged by Congress with their execution are recognized as having peculiar persuasiveness and weight. Ordinarily, such constructions should be accepted unless they cannot be reasonably or soundly made under the terms of the statute. The agency's interpretation, however, must be consistent with the purposes of the statute.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8801.

For the petitioners: Cyrus Austin, New York, N. Y.

For the respondents: Frederick H. Mayer, Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D. C.

Amicus curiae: Malcolm A. Hoffman, New York, N. Y., for Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.

Affirming Federal Trade Commission cease and desist orders in Dkts. 6596 and 6600.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Before KALODNER and STALEY, Circuit Judges, and STEEL, District Judge.

Opinion of the Court

[Review—FTC Orders]

By STALEY, Circuit Judge [In full text]: We are asked by these petitions pursuant to Section 11 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 734, 15 U. S. C. § 21, to review and set aside two substantially identical cease and desist orders issued by the Federal Trade Commission. The orders to be reviewed were issued by the Commission against General Foods Corporation and P. Lorillard Company,[1] the petitioners, at the conclusion of proceedings upon complaints which charged them with violations of Section 2(d) of the Clayton Act, as amended.[2] These proceedings were had before the hearing examiner upon stipulated records with annexed exhibits. The initial decisions of the hearing examiner, which include cease and desist orders, were adopted by the Commission without further opinion.[3]

[FTC Complaints]

The complaints charged the petitioners with having made payments to certain broadcasting companies[4] for the benefit of chain-store customers of petitioners, thus providing broadcasting time "to the favored customers for said customers' own advertising purposes." The payments thus effected were alleged to have been made as compensation or in consideration for services or facilities furnished by these favored customers in connection with the offering for sale and the sale of petitioners' products. Further, it is averred that the benefits so conferred on some of petitioners' customers were not made available on proportionately equal terms to petitioners' other customers, in violation of Section 2(d) of the Clayton Act, as amended.

[Promotional Plans]

The stipulated facts may be summarized as follows: In 1950 and 1951 the sale of broadcasting time had become difficult, and the broadcasting companies each developed promotional schemes to enable them to sell time to manufacturers and sellers of grocery products. Although the companies devised their plans independently they are substantially similar in content, providing for in-store promotions as an inducement to purchase radio and television time. The broadcasting companies negotiated contracts with certain grocery chains whereby they covenanted to provide the chains with specified amounts of radio or television time each week during the term of the contracts. The contracts provided that the broadcasting time would be used by the chains only for their own advertising. In exchange therefor the chain stores agreed to conduct a specified number of week-long promotional displays in their stores of products sold therein. The products and dates were not specified in the contracts but rather it was provided that they were to be agreed upon by the parties, the broadcasting companies proffering suggestions, subject to the right of the chains to decline to promote products not deemed by them to be suitable for promotion in their stores. These contracts were made without any prior commitment or agreement involving anyone other than the grocery chains and the broadcasting companies. Following negotiations of this series of contracts, the broadcasting companies solicited petitioners and other manufacturers

[1] Additional and similar complaints had been filed against the following companies: Groveton Papers Company, FTC Docket 6592 (order issued May 7, 1958); Pepsi-Cola Company, FTC Docket 6593 (dismissed on other grounds); Coca-Cola Bottling Company of New York, FTC Docket 6594 (dismissed on other grounds); Sunkist Growers, Inc. FTC Docket 6595 (consent order issued); Sunshine Biscuits, Inc., FTC Docket 6597 (order issued May 7, 1958); Piel Bros., Inc., FTC Docket 6598 (order issued May 7, 1958); Hudson Pulp & Paper Corp., FTC Docket 6599 (order issued May 7, 1958).

[2] "(d) That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce to pay or contract for the payment of anything of value to or for the benefit of a customer of such person in the course of such commerce as compensation or in consideration for any services or facilities furnished by or through such customer in connection with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale of any products or commodities manufactured, sold, or offered for sale by such person, unless such payment or consideration is available on proportionately equal terms to all other customers competing in the distribution of such products or commodities." 49 Stat. 1526, 15 U. S. C. § 13.

[3] These cases involve common questions of law and fact. Inasmuch as they were briefed and argued together, we see no necessity for separate opinions.

[4] The "broadcasting companies" referred to were American Broadcasting Company (ABC), National Broadcasting Company, Inc. (NBC), and Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. (CBS), the latter having submitted a brief in this court as amicus curiae.

and sellers of grocery products to purchase radio or television time from them, and, as an added inducement for such purchase, offered in-store promotions of petitioners' products in the chain stores under contract. These promotional plans were variously named "Supermarketing," "Chain Lightning," "Mass Merchandising," and "Sell-A-Vision" and were promoted by means of brochures and circulars stating the details of the offers. The leaflets indicated that purchasers of a minimum amount of radio or television time would be provided, at no extra cost, with a specific number of in-store promotions of their products. The broadcasting companies stated in their brochures that they were able to offer the displays as a result of the firm contractual commitments which they had previously negotiated with specified chain stores. The circulars also emphasized the size of the chains under contract, their annual volume, and the percentage of the retail market that they controlled.

Petitioners entered into contracts for the purchase of broadcasting time, and, although the contracts contained no mention of the in-store promotions and specifically negatived any agreement other than that contained in the written contract,[5] they received the benefits of the plans as specifically set forth in the brochures. In fact, in many instances, after notification of the proposed date of a promotion, petitioners contacted the designated chain store for the purpose of arranging the details of the in-store promotional displays. Without exception, those of petitioners' customers who received radio or television advertising time, pursuant to the contracts described herein, were grocery chains in competition in the resale of petitioners' products with other grocery chains and independent customers of petitioners in the same market areas. The latter customers did not receive nor were they offered broadcasting time or anything of value in lieu thereof.

[Contentions]

Petitioners deny that they paid anything to or contracted with the broadcasting companies "for the benefit of" a customer within the meaning of Section 2(d) of the Clayton Act. Further, they deny having paid for or supported the furnishing of broadcasting time to the chains and, lastly, deny having adopted or having become a party to the broadcasting companies' sales promotions. It is readily apparent that the arguments overlap and that their determination depends largely upon the Commission's interpretation of Section 2(d) and the stipulated facts.

[Agency Interpretations]

It is appropriate to keep in mind that administrative interpretations of statutes by agencies charged by Congress with their execution are recognized as having peculiar persuasiveness and weight. National Labor Relations Board v. Hearst Publications, Inc., 322 U. S. 111 (1944); American Airlines, Inc. v. Civil Aeronautics Board, 178 F. 2d 903 (C. A. 7, 1949); Miller Hatcheries, Inc. v. Boyer, 131 F. 2d 283 (C. A. 8, 1942). As we recently stated in St. Marys Sewer Pipe Co. v. Director of the U. S. Bureau of Mines, 262 F. 2d 378, 381 (C. A. 3, 1959), "Ordinarily, such constructions should be accepted by the courts unless they could not be reasonably or soundly made under the terms of the statute." The agency's interpretation, however, must be consistent with the purposes of the statute for, as Justice Frankfurter states in the recent case of United States v. Shirey, — U. S. — (decided April 20, 1959),

> "Statutes, including penal enactments are not inert exercises in literary composition. They are instruments of government, and in construing them 'the general purpose is a more important aid to the meaning than any rule which grammar or formal logic may lay down.' United States v. Whitridge, 197 U. S. 135, 143. This is so because the purpose of an enactment is embedded in its words even though it is not always pedantically expressed in words. See United States v. Wurzbach, 280 U. S. 396, 399. Statutory meaning, it is to be remembered, is more to be felt than demonstrated, see United States v. Johnson, 221 U. S. 488, 496, or, as Judge Learned Hand has some-

[5] The following clause appears in both the ABC and CBS contracts:

"This contract contains the entire agreement between the parties and is not subject to oral modification."

The NBC clause reads as follows:

"This contract constitutes the entire agreement between the parties relating to the subject matter hereof and may not be changed, modified, renewed or extended except by an agreement in writing signed by the party against whom enforcement of the change, modification, renewal or extension is sought."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

where put it, the art of interpretation is 'the proliferation of purpose.'"

[Purpose of Prohibition]

The purpose of the section here involved was to eliminate all discriminations under the guise of payments for advertising or promotional services, and Congress employed language that would cover any evasive methods. This is made clear by the statement of Congressman Utterback, chairman of the House conferees, in explaining Sections 2(d) and (e), as follows:

> "The existing evil at which this part of the bill is aimed is, of course, the grant of discriminations under the guise of payments for advertising and promotional services which, whether or not the services are actually rendered as agreed, results in an advantage to the customer so favored as compared with others who have to bear the cost of such services themselves. The prohibitions of the bill, however, are made intentionally broader than this one sphere, in order to prevent evasion in resort to others by which the same purpose might be accomplished, and it prohibits payment for such services or facilities, whether furnished 'in connection with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale' of the products concerned." 80 Cong. Rec. 9418.

[Contract Law Not Applicable]

Petitioners' argument when analyzed and stripped to its essentials is basically a plea for reliance upon technical rules of contract law. It asserts, in effect, that since it was not a party to the contracts between the broadcasting companies and the chain stores and that since they preceded its contracts with the broadcasting companies, there is nothing illegal or violative of Section 2(d) in the transactions. On the other hand the Commission refuses to wear blinders and insists that the series of contracts be viewed as a whole. Substance is lent to the Commission's analysis by the presence in this case of a number of brochures or circulars which were utilized by the broadcasting companies. Although it is true that the petitioners' contracts with the broadcasting companies contained no mention of the in-store promotions, they were prominently mentioned in the brochures. These promotions were not only held out as inducements for the purchase of broadcasting time by the petitioners, but were sought and utilized by them.

The petitioners' position is bottomed on the assumption that in deciding whether a violation of the statute has occurred the Commission must restrict itself to an assessment of the consequences which flow from a written contract by the application of formal principles which a court would be required to apply in an action between the contracting parties. If, however, we keep in focus the real question involved, that is, whether the petitioners have made payments to someone which actually are of benefit to their customers and not whether they have bound themselves to do so by a legally enforceable contract, it is readily apparent that petitioners' position is untenable. Certainly, the legal effect of the contracts involved may be relevant to the resolution of the real issue before the Commission, but it does not follow that the Commission must give to those contracts the effect for which the parties to them contend nor that it cannot view them in the setting of all the other evidence relevant to the issue before the Commission.

Petitioners contend here as they did before the Commission that they did not pay or contract to pay to any third person anything of value for the benefit of a customer. In support of this position, petitioners assert that a payment to or contract with a third person is not made for the benefit of a customer within the meaning of Section 2(d) unless the seller makes it with the intention of benefiting the customer or has reason to know that some direct benefit to the customer will proximately result therefrom. No authority for the former proposition is cited, and in fact it conflicts with the statement of counsel for the petitioners, Cyrus Austin, in his monograph entitled "Price Discrimination and Related Problems Under the Robinson-Patman Act," revised edition, 1953, wherein it is stated at page 116:

> "It is no defense for a seller charged with a violation of either of these sections [§§ 2(d) and 2(e)] to show that he furnished or paid for a service solely in his own interest and not pursuant to any prior understanding with the purchaser. These sections prohibit discrimination in merchandising allowances or services irrespective of whether the making of the payment or furnishing of the service was a term or condition of sale, or amounted to an indirect price discrimination."

In accord, State Wholesale Grocers v. The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,089], 258 F. 2d 831, 837 (C. A. 7, 1958), cert. denied, sub nom. General Foods Corp. v. State Wholesale Grocers, 358 U. S. 947 (1959). This section of the Act does not concern itself with motive or intention. It is only concerned with the consequences which flow from an act. If those consequences eventuate, the act from which they result is forbidden. The Commission, however, went further than required and found that "the responsible officials of Respondent [petitioners] knew, or should have known, when they entered into the plan presented to Respondent by the broadcasting company, that Respondent, in adopting such plan, would be supplying the consideration which would constitute compensation for the benefits to be received by a few favored customers, to the prejudice of their competitors." This finding is amply supported by the record.

[Financial Support of Plans]

A substantial portion of petitioners' argument is directed to refuting the Commission's finding that they were the "sole financial support" of the promotional plan. Reliance is placed upon one case—State Wholesale Grocers v. The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,772], 154 F. Supp. 471 (N. D. Ill. 1957), affirmed in part and reversed in part [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,089], 258 F. 2d 831 (C. A. 7, 1958), cert. denied sub nom. General Foods Corp. v. State Wholesale Grocers, 358 U. S. 947 (1959). In that case A&P and three grocery product manufacturers were charged with violation of Sections 2(d) and 2(e) by purchasing substantial advertising in Woman's Day magazine, a wholly-owned subsidiary of A&P. The court of appeals affirmed the dismissal of the 2(e) charge but found that the payments for advertising of defendants' products in Woman's Day violated Section 2(d). The rationale underlying the dismissal in that case is founded on the conclusion that the payments for advertising could not be held to represent a furnishing of a service to A&P. In addition to the obvious factual differences between the two cases, it is worthy of note that the court failed to cite or distinguish the line of cases beginning with Herbert v. The Shanley Co., 242 U. S. 591 (1917), where Justice Holmes held that a single payment may indeed cover the cost of more than one object. Also see Pittsburgh Athletic Co. v. KQV Broadcasting Co., 24 F. Supp. 490 (W. D. Pa., 1938); M. Witmark & Sons v. L. Bamberger & Co., 291 Fed. 776 (D. C. N. J., 1923). The broadcasting companies are not eleemosynary institutions and the Commission could well find from the record that the grant of "free" broadcasting time[6] to the chain stores was part of the total transaction for which the petitioners paid. The fact that the charge for the whole transaction was attributed to a particular item, to wit, petitioners' advertising time, is not determinative. The Commission's conclusion that the payments made by the petitioners to the broadcasting companies inured to the benefit not only of petitioners, but also of the favored chains as compensation or in consideration for the in-store promotions afforded petitioners' products has warrant in the record and a reasonable basis in the law, and this court must accept it. National Labor Relations Board v. Hearst Publications, 322 U. S. 111 (1944).

[Scope of Order]

Petitioners' last objection relates to the "sweeping" nature of the cease and desist orders issued by the Commission. Clearly, the orders in the instant cases go no further than that issued against the Ruberoid Company and specifically approved by the Supreme Court in Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,279], 343 U. S. 470 (1952). Also see Moog Industries v. Federal Trade Commission [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,918], 355 U. S. 411 (1958), affirming Moog Industries v. Federal Trade Commission [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,527], 238 F. 2d 43 (C. A. 8, 1956). The fact that these cases involved orders issued in the language of Section 2(a) of the amended Clayton Act should give us little pause, for Section 2(d) is much narrower in scope and therefore orders framed in its language would be well within the permissible ambit of the Commission's discretion.

[Affirmed]

The orders of the Commission will be affirmed.

[6] We agree with petitioners' counsel that "nothing here turns upon the fact that the consideration which the broadcasting companies gave to the chains in return for in-store promotions was in broadcast time rather than in money."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Dissenting Opinion]

STEEL, D. J., dissenting: Had petitioner[1] paid for the broadcasting time of the chains, either directly by payments to the chains, or indirectly by payments to the broadcasting companies independently of the purchase by petitioner of its own broadcast time, the payments clearly would have been for the "benefit" of the chains within the meaning of § 2(d). The petitioner did not do either of these things. But the Commission and a majority of the court hold that an identical significance must be attributed to the payments which petitioner made to the broadcasting companies in purchasing air time for itself.

[Elements of Violation]

A violation of § 2(d) of the Clayton Act entails, among other things, the following elements: (1) a discriminatory payment by a vendor for the benefit of a customer, (2) in consideration for services or facilities furnished by the customer to the vendor in connection with the sale of a commodity of the vendor. Without both elements of benefit there can be no § 2(d) violation. The finding of the Commission that the in-store promotions offered by the broadcasting companies induced petitioner to enter into its contracts with the broadcasting companies implies that petitioner anticipated the receipt of a benefit by way of in-store promotions. This finding relates solely to the second element of a § 2(d) offense. The present point of inquiry is directed to the existence of the first element of a § 2(d) violation, viz., whether petitioner made a payment for the benefit of the chains.

["Benefit"]

In determining whether the petitioner's payments to the broadcasting companies were for the "benefit" of the chains within the meaning of § 2(d), it is easy to become bogged down in a semantic morass. The word "benefit" has various meanings depending upon the context of its use. In a sense, every dollar which the broadcasting companies took into their coffers during the time when air time was being granted to the chains was for the benefit of the chains regardless of the source of the income. Revenue was the life blood of the broadcasting companies upon which their very existence depended and without which the chains would have had no air media over which to advertise. The Clayton Act, of course, is not concerned with this type of benefit. It is aimed at discriminatory advantages which a vendor by virtue of his own conduct confers upon a vendee, or, under certain sections of the Act, reciprocal advantages which a vendor and vendee confer upon each other by virtue of their own respective acts. Whether petitioner's payments to the broadcasting companies were for the benefit of the chains must be gauged from this standpoint.

[Independent Transactions]

The contracts between the broadcasting companies and the chains under which the chains received air time antedated the contracts between the broadcasting companies and petitioner. The execution of the agreements by petitioner was not a contingency upon which the right of the chains to air time depended. That right had theretofore accrued; it was fixed, immediate and unqualified. Nothing was required by petitioner or anyone else to bring into fruition the right of the chains to air time save the performance by the broadcasting companies of their contracts with the chains. Petitioner was in no way responsible for this. So that on the face of the matter, the advertising which the chains become entitled to receive the moment they put pen to paper with the broadcasting companies was not the result of any payment by petitioner.

The Commission and a majority of the Court assert, however, that the separate elements of the sales promotional plan initiated by the broadcasting companies, i. e., the two sets of contracts, the brochures of solicitation, and the designation of products for in-store promotions, cannot properly be given fragmentary evaluation, but that each must be treated as an integral part of the whole. This approach would be understandable if the broadcasting companies were defendants and their activities were charged to be violative of the law. The broadcasting companies stand at the hub of the transaction. It was their correlating activities which gave to the plan whatever cohesiveness and interdependence was inherent in it. It was their efforts which were responsible for obtaining the in-store sales promotional rights from the chains. It was they who chose the chains from which petitioner might make its selection for in-store promotions. All this was done by the broadcasting companies without any prior commitment, authorization, agreement, or understanding with petitioner. This is a stipulated fact. So that no basis exists for the Commission's finding that the broadcasting companies occupied an "agency" relationship to petitioner through which petitioner in effect channeled payments to the chains in the modified form of broadcasting time.

[1] General Foods will be treated as if it were the sole petitioner, for unless otherwise indicated the petitioner Lorillard stands in no different position.

[Remote Benefit]

The conclusion of the Commission that the actions of petitioner were of discriminatory benefit to the chains within § 2(d) intentment is not aided by theorizing that the broadcasting companies would not have renewed their contracts with the chains unless the sales promotion plan had been sufficiently supported by the totality of suppliers, including petitioner, who purchased broadcast time.[2] This approach makes petitioner's violation of the Act depend not only upon the contemporaneous actions of other suppliers but also upon the subsequent actions of the broadcasting companies in renewing their contracts with the chains when, so far as the record reveals, neither the suppliers nor the broadcasting companies were subject to control by petitioner. Whatever benefit the chains may have derived from this combination of events, is from petitioner's standpoint, too vicarious and casually remote to enmesh petitioner in the Act.

[Reciprocal Benefits]

In the light of the peripheral relationship which petitioner bore to the plan, the statement of the Commission that petitioner became a "party" to and "adopted" the plan is meaningless. All petitioner did was to accept what the broadcasting companies offered. Yet, under the Commission's concept of "benefit", petitioner would be culpable under the Clayton Act even if it had not designated any of its products for promotion by the chains. For under the Commission's view, it was petitioner's payments to the broadcasting companies which constituted payment for the air time allotted to the chains. The amount of petitioner's payments did not depend upon whether it designated products for in-store promotions. Petitioner's payments were the same in either case. The failure of petitioner to designate products for in-store displays would have exculpated petitioner from liability under § 2(d), for the furnishing of services or facilities by a customer is a sine qua non to a § 2(d) violation.[3] However, without the designation of products for in-store promotion, petitioner's payments to the broadcasting companies, under the Commission's reasoning, would clearly have rendered petitioner liable under § 2(e)[4] for furnishing advertising discriminately to the chains, and under § 2(a)[5] for indirect price

[2] The Commission "assumed" that without the support of either petitioner the plan of the broadcasting companies would have been unprofitable and of short duration. This assumption is based upon the Commission's finding that each petitioner provided the "sole" financial support of the plan. This finding is unsupported by any evidence and is untenable on its face. Actually, the plan was availed of by eight other companies in addition to petitioner. (Fn. 1, Opinion of the Court). ABC sold an aggregate of advertising under its plan of $2,173,514.19, of which General Foods bought $157,211.01; CBS sold $1,057,470.03, of which General Foods bought $182,497.12; and NBC sold $1,247,468, of which General Foods bought $81,520.

[3] If the mere right to designate products for in-store promotions (as distinct from the actual designation) is deemed to be a service or facility furnished by the chains to petitioner, then, under the Commission's interpretation of the Act, the failure of petitioner to designate products would not have exonerated petitioner from a § 2(d) violation.

[4] Section 2(e) of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 13(e), reads:

"(e) It shall be unlawful for any person to discriminate in favor of one purchaser against another purchaser or purchasers of a commodity bought for resale, with or without processing, by contracting to furnish or furnishing, or by contributing to the furnishing of, any services or facilities connected with the processing, handling, sale, or offering for sale of such commodity so purchased upon terms not accorded to all purchasers on proportionally equal terms."

[5] Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 13(a) reads in part:

"(a) It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce, where such commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create discrimination in favor of the chains if the effect had been monopolistic or destructive of competition. For unlike § 2(d) which is aimed at reciprocal vendor-vendee benefits, §§ 2(a) and 2(e) are directed solely against unilateral discriminations by a vendor.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

If the Commission's conception of "benefit" is adhered to, the only way in which the petitioner could have escaped the toils of the Clayton Act during the period when the broadcasting companies were offering in-store promotions would have been either to forego completely advertising over the air through the broadcasting companies offering the promotions, or to buy air time for all of petitioner's customers on a basis proportionately equal to that on which the broadcasting companies had allotted air time to the chains. Petitioner would have found itself in this unhappy plight solely because of the contracts which the broadcasting companies made with the chains for which the petitioner was in no way responsible.

[Result of FTC's Decision]

Carried to its logical limit, the decision of the Commission means that if a common supplier of a vendor and vendee, without pre-arrangement with the vendor, grants the vendee terms more favorable than the supplier has granted other customers of the vendor, the vendor must stop dealing with the supplier, give proportionately equal "benefits" to all of its other customers, or be adjudged guilty of Clayton Act discrimination. This result would follow regardless of how vital the commodities or services furnished by the supplier might be to the vendor. A construction of § 2(d) which carries within itself the seeds of consequences so harsh, unreasonable and oppressive should not be reached unless required by a clear Congressional mandate. This I am unable to discern.

The foregoing views are not at variance with the cases which the majority of the Court has cited. Herbert v. Shanley Co., 242 U. S. 591 (1917), and M. Witmark & Sons v. L. Bamberger & Co., 291 Fed. 776 (D. N. J. 1923) involved constructions of the Copyright Act. Pittsburgh Athletic Co. v. KQV Broadcasting Co., 24 F. Supp. 490 (W. D. Pa. 1938) was concerned with principles of unfair competition and the Communication Act of 1934 in their relationship to interference with a contractual right to broadcast baseball games. These decisions are scarcely pertinent to a determination whether petitioner's payments to the broadcasting companies were a "benefit" to the chains within the purview of the Clayton Act. To the extent that State Wholesale Grocers v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,089], 258 F. 2d 831 (7th Cir. 1958) may have application, it tends to refute rather than to support the decision of the Commission.

It may be that the sales promotional plan of the broadcasting companies is economically undesirable and that the broadcasting companies which sponsored it are beyond the reach of the present law. But this is no reason for making a whipping boy out of petitioner by affirming the far-fetched conception of Clayton Act "benefit" which the Commission has adopted.

[Judicial Responsibility]

Judicial responsibility requires that a Court which sits in review of an administrative order shall interpret the applicable statute and hold unlawful and set aside any agency action not in accordance with law, 5 U. S. C. § 1009(e). In the fulfillment of that responsibility, I would set aside the order of the Commission in each case and direct a dismissal of the complaints.

[¶ 69,369] Hamilton Cosco, Inc. v. Nelson's Kiddie City Plymouth Valley, Inc.; Nelson's Kiddie City Roslyn, Inc.; Kiddie City Elmwood, Inc.; Nelson's Kiddie City Collingdale, Inc.; and Kiddie City, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. Civil Action Nos. 26113, 26114, 26115, 26116, and 26117, respectively. Filed May 25, 1959.

---

a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them: * * *"

Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act

Fair Trade—Defenses to Enforcement Action—Non-Enforcement Defense Under Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act—General Defense of Lack of Enforcement.—Retailers which sold a household furniture manufacturer's products at less than fair trade prices were allowed to introduce evidence showing that their representatives purchased such products at less than fair trade prices at other retail establishments. The defense of non-enforcement provided for by a 1956 amendment to the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act was not available to the retailers because they had not notified the manufacturer of those violations by their competitors at least seven days prior to the filing of the suit, as required by the statute. However, the testimony was admissible by way of a general defense of lack of enforcement of the manufacturer's fair trade prices, although such a defense was not established. It was found that the manufacturer enforced its fair trade prices with reasonable diligence and effectiveness, and was entitled to an injunction against the retailers.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3440.40.

For the plaintiff: Robert M. Landis of Barnes, Dechert, Price, Myers & Rhoads, Philadelphia, Pa.

For the defendants: Edward M. Snyder, Philadelphia, Pa.

Opinion

[Fair Trade Action]

KRAFT, District Judge [In full text]: These suits are brought by a manufacturer of household and juvenile furniture under its registered trade-mark to enforce by injunction the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act against five retailers in metropolitan Philadelphia, who have offered for sale and sold plaintiff's fair-traded products at less than the established fair trade prices.

[Prior Proceedings]

Hearings were held on April 13 and 24, 1959, on plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction. The parties in each case have stipulated that the evidence then received shall comprise the record upon which final judgment may be entered.

Counsel have submitted requests for findings of fact, conclusions of law, and supporting briefs. From the evidence we make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

[Parties]

1. Plaintiff is an Indiana corporation with its principal office and place of business in Columbus, Indiana. Prior to December 31, 1958 its corporate name was Hamilton Manufacturing Company.

2. Defendant, Nelson's Kiddie City Plymouth Valley, Inc., is a Pennsylvania corporation engaged in the retail merchandise business at 811 Germantown Pike, Plymouth Valley, Pennsylvania.

3. Defendant, Nelson's Kiddie City of Roslyn, Inc., is a Pennsylvania corporation engaged in the retail merchandise business at 1180 Easton Road, Roslyn, Pennsylvania.

4. Defendant, Kiddie City Elmwood, Inc., is a Pennsylvania corporation engaged in the retail merchandise business at 7124 Elmwood Avenue, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

5. Defendant, Nelson's Kiddie City Collingdale, Inc., is a Pennsylvania corporation engaged in the retail merchandise business at 1011 MacDade Boulevard, Collingdale, Pennsylvania.

6. Defendant, Kiddie City, Inc., is a Pennsylvania corporation engaged in the retail merchandise business at 7951 Oxford Avenue, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

7. Plaintiff is the manufacturer and vendor of certain household and juvenile furniture which it makes and sells under its own duly registered trademark "Cosco" and which is in fair and open competition in Pennsylvania and elsewhere with commodities of the same general class produced and distributed by others.

[Goodwill]

8. Plaintiff has expended large sums of money in promoting and advertising its furniture and has established a valuable reputation and goodwill for such furniture and the trade-mark under which it is produced and sold.

9. Plaintiff's advertising program consists of national consumer advertising in magazines, such as The Saturday Evening Post, Good Housekeeping and Better Homes and Gardens and national trade advertising in trade journals such as Home Furnishings Review, Juvenile Merchandising, and Hardware Age. Plaintiff also conducts a dealer cooperative advertising program in local newspapers of general circulation under which it pays 50% of the cost of dealers' advertisements of its products.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

10. "Cosco" household furniture is among the widely advertised products in this line on a national basis.

11. In 1958 the sale of "Cosco" household furniture in the United States amounted to $9,949,284.00.

12. In 1958 the sale of "Cosco" household furniture in the states east of the Mississippi River amounted to $4,993,515.00.

13. In 1958 the sales of "Cosco" household furniture in the Philadelphia area totalled $722,235.00.

14. In 1958 the plaintiff expended $843,378.00 in advertising "Cosco" household furniture.

15. The value of plaintiff's goodwill is substantially in excess of $50,000.00 and the amount in controversy in each action is in excess of $10,000.00.

16. The sale of "Cosco" products by the defendants below their established fair trade price will materially and adversely affect plaintiff's goodwill.

[Fair Trade Agreements]

17. Pursuant to the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act, Act of June 5, 1935, P. L. 266, as amended, 73 P. S. Sections 7-11, plaintiff has entered into agreements with retail dealers in Pennsylvania under which plaintiff established minimum retail prices for its household and juvenile furniture.

18. On or about February 10, 1959 plaintiff notified each defendant of the existence of such fair trade contracts.

19. On or about February 10, 1959 plaintiff notified each defendant of plaintiff's minimum retail prices for its household and juvenile furniture which it had established under the provisions of the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act.

[Violations by Defendants]

20. Each of the defendants maintained a policy of selling all merchandise, whether fair-traded or not, at a discount from the manufacturer's list price.

21. The defendants have been selling "Cosco" products at less than the fair trade price since June, 1958, and there is no persuasive evidence that the institution of this price policy at this time was a response to price cutting by their competitors.

22. On February 27, and March 10, 1959 each defendant offered for sale and sold at retail, juvenile furniture manufactured and sold by plaintiff, at less than the price established by the plaintiff in its fair trade agreements.

23. Each of the defendants displayed signs on items of "Cosco" furniture in its store showing the advertised fair trade price and the store's selling price which in each instance was from $1.00 to more than $3.00 less than the established fair trade price.

[Violations by Others]

24. About three weeks after these suits were filed, employees of these defendants and the wife of one of their store managers shopped at nine different retail stores. At each of these stores a single purchase of "Cosco" furniture at less than the fair trade price was made.

25. None of the defendants notified Hamilton Cosco of these price violations or of one other price violation, by two of the same stores, of which defendants' president learned before Christmas, 1958.

[Enforcement Activity]

26. Two days after plaintiff learned of these violations from the testimony of defendants' witnesses at the first hearing on April 13, 1959, plaintiff's counsel sent warning letters to each of the nine stores.

27. A week after the first hearing plaintiff's district sales representative visited all nine of the stores, restored the fair trade prices in two stores which were not then observing them, and obtained signed fair trade contracts from eight of the nine stores. A price survey that was made several days later showed that each of the nine stores was maintaining Cosco's fair trade prices.

28. Plaintiff enforces its fair trade prices with reasonable diligence and effectiveness, including the use of legal proceedings where necessary.

DISCUSSION

The foregoing findings of fact, most of which are not in dispute, are supported by clear and credible evidence.

[Defense—Lack of Enforcement]

The Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act (Act of June 5, 1935, P. L. 266), as amended, 73 P. S. 7-11, provides in Section 2 as follows:

"Wilfully and knowingly advertising, offering for sale, or selling any commodity at less than the price stipulated in any contract entered into pursuant to the provisions of section one of this act, whether the person so advertising, offering for sale, or selling is, or is not, a party to such contract, is unfair competition and is actionable at the suit of such vendor, buyer or purchaser of such commodity. It shall, however, be a complete defense to such an action for the defendant to prove that the party stipulating such price, after at least seven days' written notice given by the defendant prior to the commencement of such action, has failed to take reasonable and diligent steps to prevent the continuation of such advertising, offering for sale or selling, by those in competition with the defendant, who were specified in such notice."

Defendants introduced evidence to show that their representatives had made a single purchase of a piece of "Cosco" furniture at less than the fair trade price at nine retail establishments. These purchases were made three weeks after the commencement of the instant actions. Defendants' president, Nelson, testified that on one occasion before Christmas, 1958, he had also stopped in two of these same stores and found them selling "Cosco" products at less than the fair trade price. Nelson admitted that none of the defendants had ever notified plaintiff of any of these occurrences. Plaintiff moved to strike this testimony because defendants had failed to comply with the provisions of the Act, above quoted.

We think plaintiff's motion must be denied. Defendants, it is true, wholly failed to comply with the mandate of the Act, but we think the testimony was admissible by way of a general defense of lack of enforcement of plaintiff's fair trade prices. We have concluded, however, that defendants have failed to establish that defense.

The evidence clearly establishes that defendants have engaged in unfair competition, and, accordingly, plaintiff is entitled to the relief prayed for in the complaint. Lentheric, Inc. v. F. W. Woolworth Co. [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶56,033], 338 Pa. 523 (1940); Olin Mathieson Chemical Corporation v. L. & H. Stores, Inc. [1958 Trade Cases ¶68,981], 392 Pa. 225 (1958).

Conclusions of Law

1. This Court has jurisdiction over the parties to and the subject matter of each action.

2. Each defendant has wilfully and knowingly offered for sale and sold "Cosco" products in violation of the provisions of the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act.

3. The aforesaid actions of each defendant constitute unfair competition under the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act.

4. The continued violation by each defendant of the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act threatens irreparable injury to plaintiff's goodwill in its "Cosco" products.

5. Under the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act a defendant which seeks to invoke the defense of non-enforcement provided by the 1956 amendment is obliged to notify the fair trade manufacturer of other price violations by its own competitors at least seven days prior to the filing of suit. Since none of the defendants in these cases gave such notice to the plaintiff, this defense is unavailable to each defendant.

6. Plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law.

7. Plaintiff is entitled to final judgment against each defendant with costs.

Order

[Injunction Granted]

The actions of each defendant having caused, and threatening to continue to cause, irreparable injury to plaintiff's goodwill in its "Cosco" products,

It is ordered and decreed that each defendant, its officers, agents and employees be and are restrained and enjoined from advertising, offering for sale or selling at retail within the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania any products manufactured by plaintiff and bearing its "Cosco" trade-mark at less than the stipulated minimum retail resale prices established therefor by the plaintiff, pursuant to agreements with retailers of plaintiff's products in said Commonwealth under the provisions of the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act of June 5, 1935, P. L. 266, as amended.

This injunction shall continue while said Fair Trade Act remains in effect.

Judgment, with costs, is entered in each action in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant therein.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[¶ 69,370] Hub Auto Supply, Inc. v. Automatic Radio Mfg. Co., Inc.

In the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts. Civil Action No. 57-1000-F. Dated May 22, 1959.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies—Refusal to Deal—Manufacturer's Refusal to Sell New Automobile Radios to Distributor—Conspiracy Between Manufacturer and Distributor's Competitors.—A distributor of automotive accessories, in an action charging that a manufacturer of automobile radios conspired with two of the distributor's principal competitors to prevent it from servicing customers it had acquired over a period of years, and refused to honor the distributor's orders for new models of automobile radios, sufficiently stated a cause of action under the antitrust laws. The manufacturer, arguing that it had a right to select the parties with whom it would deal, moved for a judgment on the pleadings. The right to select one's customers, however, is not an absolute one; its use as an instrument in furtherance of a conspiracy denounced by the antitrust laws brings it within the ban of those laws. The manufacturer could not avoid the charge that it had conspired to restrict competition by saying that what it did in furtherance of the conspiracy was something which, apart from the conspiracy, it might have been free to do.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.785.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Necessary Averments—Injury to Public—Absence of Such Injury as Would Affect Economy as a Whole.—A distributor of automotive accessories, in an action charging that a manufacturer of automobile radios conspired with the distributor's competitors to prevent it from servicing customers and refused to honor its orders for new models of automobile radios, sufficiently stated a claim under the antitrust laws even though there might have been no public injury in the sense that the destruction of the distributor's business might make little difference to the economy as a whole. It was enough that the distributor charged a conspiracy for one of the purposes denounced by the law, namely, the restraint of trade by a restriction of the distributor's ability to offer its customers the manufacturer's products. It was argued that the distributor could still sell other manufacturer's radios, and that there was no basis for an inference that the acts charged would reduce the supply of radios available to the public, increase the price of radios, or otherwise work to the detriment of the public. The conspiracy alleged was similar in nature to the one involved in Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,316. While the effects of the conspiracy in the instant case might not be so severe, its tendency was the same; it destroyed the distributor's ability to compete for customers for the manufacturer's products, thus driving it out of business as a dealer in those products.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.475.

For the plaintiff: Louis Winer, Boston, Mass.

For the defendant: Jackson J. Holtz, Boston, Mass.

Memorandum of Decision on Defendant's Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings

[Conspiracy Charged]

Ford, District Judge [In full text]: This is an antitrust action brought under the provisions of the Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts, 15 U. S. C. A. §§ 1, 2 and 15, in which defendant has moved for judgment on the pleadings.

The complaint alleges that plaintiff is a corporation engaged in the business of distributing automotive accessories, shipping merchandise to every state in the Union, and defendant a corporation which manufactures radios for automobiles. It is alleged that plaintiff was a distributor of automobile radios manufactured by defendant from 1950 until 1957, when defendant informed plaintiff that its new line of radios (but not the existing models) would not be available to plaintiff as a distributor, and that defendant has since refused to honor plaintiff's orders for new models of radios. It further alleges that defendant has joined, conspired and combined with Arnco Auto Supply Co.

and Ellis, Inc., plaintiff's principal competitors, to prevent plaintiff from servicing customers it has acquired over a period of years, and that the principal objective of the combination is to restrict plaintiff in its trade and competition with others.

[Refusal to Deal]

Defendant argues that because defendant has a right to select the parties with whom he will deal, United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U. S. 300, or even to grant an exclusive distributorship, Packard Motor Car Co. v. Webster Motor Car Co., 243 F. 2d 418, the allegations of the complaint do not state any cause of action under the antitrust laws. However, the complaint alleges not merely a refusal to deal with plaintiff, but also that that refusal was in furtherance of a conspiracy between defendant and plaintiff's competitors to restrict competition by plaintiff. As the Colgate case itself points out, the right to select one's customers is not an absolute right. Its use as an instrument in the furtherance of a conspiracy denounced by the antitrust laws brings it within the ban of those laws. Lorain Journal Co. v. United States [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,957], 342 U. S. 143, 155. The charge here is that defendant conspired to restrict competition by plaintiff. Defendant cannot avoid the charge by saying that what it did in furtherance of the conspiracy was something which apart from the conspiracy it might have been free to do.

[Public Injury]

Defendant points out numerous violations of the antitrust laws which the complaint does not allege. It is enough that it charges a combination or conspiracy for one of the purposes denounced by the law, the restraint of trade by the restriction of plaintiff's ability to compete in the automobile radio market by continuing to offer its customers defendant's products. Defendant argues that plaintiff can still sell radios of other manufacturers, that the automobile radio business is a highly competitive one, and there is no basis for any inference that the action of defendant and its alleged coconspirators would reduce the supply of radios available to the public, increase the price of radios, or otherwise work to the detriment of the public. In the light of the decision in Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc. [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,316], — U. S. —, decided April 6, 1959, this argument must be rejected. There several manufacturers and distributors conspired with a single competitor of plaintiff either not to sell to plaintiff or to sell only on unfavorable terms. The conspiracy alleged here is similar in nature. It may not be so severe in its effects since it involves only a single manufacturer and two competitors of plaintiff, but its tendency is the same. It destroys plaintiff's ability to compete for customers for defendant's products, and thus drives it out of business as a dealer in these products, at least as to current models. Hence it tends to interfere with the natural flow of interstate commerce and violates the act even though there may be no public injury in the sense that destruction of plaintiff's business may make little difference to the economy as a whole.

[Motion Denied]

It cannot be held that the present complaint fails to state any claim under the antitrust laws, and defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings must be denied.

[¶ 69,371] Crane Distributing Company v. Glenmore Distilleries.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. No. 13,606. Filed June 2, 1959.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky, Lexington Division.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies—Refusal to Deal—Distiller's Termination of Distribution Agreement after Distributor Refused to Grant Rebates to Retailers—Resale Price Fixing.—A liquor distributor sufficiently alleged a violation of the antitrust laws by claiming that a distiller, pursuant to a conspiracy with another distributor and others, terminated its distribution agreement with the distributor after it had refused to give rebates to retailers to whom it sold the manufacturer's products. The distributor alleged that, if it had given such rebates, it would have been selling below a prescribed minimum price fixed by contract between the distiller and its distributors and sanctioned by the Kentucky "fair trade" law. Both parties agreed that the case did not involve "any immunity bath granted by the Miller-Tydings Act or the McGuire Act." In the absence of some immunity, all price fixing is illegal, if within the purview of the Federal antitrust laws, regardless of whether the prices fixed are wholesale or retail, or maximum or minimum.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.785; Resale Price Fixing, Vol. 1, ¶ 3015.70.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Necessary Averments—Conspiracy to Restrain Trade and Create Monopoly—Interstate Commerce—Public Injury—Injury to Plaintiff.—A trial court improperly granted summary judgment dismissing a liquor distributor's charges that a distiller, pursuant to a conspiracy with another distributor and others, terminated a distribution agreement with the distributor after it refused to give rebates to retailers to whom it resold the manufacturer's products. The distiller contended that only local trade was affected since the distributor was doing business solely in Kentucky; that the charge added up to nothing more than one trader's refusal to sell to another; and that no economic injury to the public was shown. Each of those contentions was answered in Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,316. In that case, the United States Supreme Court held that a local retailer's allegations that interstate manufacturers and distributors conspired among themselves and with a local chain of department stores not to sell to the retailer, or to sell to it only at discriminatory prices, showed a type of trade restraint and public harm that is forbidden by the Sherman Act. In the instant case, however, the complaint, although charging a conspiracy to create a monopoly as well as an illegal restraint of trade, did not allege facts which would serve as "fair notice" of any claim for damages to the distributor's trade or business proximately resulting from any monopoly or attempt at monopoly.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.275, 9009.475, 9009.600.

For the appellant: Argued by William Meller, Louisville, Ky. (William Meller, Louisville, Ky., John Y. Brown, Miller & Griffin, Lexington, Ky., on the brief).

For the appellee: Argued by J. H. Gold, Louisville, Ky. (J. H. Gold, Louisville, Ky., and Charles I. Dawson of Bullitt, Dawson & Tarrant, Louisville, Ky., on the brief).

Before: MARTIN, Chief Judge, MCALLISTER, Circuit Judge, and MATHES, District Judge.

[Treble Damage Action]

MATHES, District Judge [In full text]: This appeal is from a summary judgment dismissing on the merits, for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, an asserted cause of action under the Federal anti-trust laws. [Fed. R. Civ. P. 12 (b)(6), 56(b).]

The claim in question for threefold damages [15 U. S. C. § 15], based upon asserted violations of 15 U. S. C. §§ 1 and 2, is set forth in Count I of appellant's five-count complaint. The remaining four counts present alleged causes of action arising under Kentucky law and are not before us upon this appeal, the District Judge having made an "express determination that there is no just reason for delay", and having directed entry of final judgment of dismissal as to Count I only, as permitted by Rule 54(b).

[Conspiracy—Refusal to Deal]

From Count I of the complaint, as supplemented by appellant's answers to interrogatories relied upon by appellee in support of the motion for summary judgment, it appears that the claim asserted under the Federal antitrust laws, briefly put, is: (1) that appellant, doing business solely in Kentucky, was one of the distributors to retailers in Kentucky of appellee's products, including "the Yellowstone line" and Glenmore's Kentucky Tavern whiskey, which are produced and distilled only in Kentucky, but are exported and sold by appellee "for beverage purposes throughout the United States"; (2) that Gross Distributing Company is "a distributor of alcoholic beverages in interstate commerce, with its principal office . . . at Lexington, Kentucky"; (3) that "Glenmore [appellee], Gross and others . . . conspired to create . . . a monopoly and illegal restraint of trade and commerce in the liquor industry among the several states, including Kentucky, to the detriment of the public"; (4) that pursuant to and in furtherance of this conspiracy, appellee "informed plaintiff [appellant] that plaintiff would not be allowed to keep the Yellowstone line . . . unless plaintiff, on its resale of Kentucky Tavern whiskey to retailers . . . gave rebates to such retailers and thereby sold to the retailers Kentucky Tavern whiskey at a maximum price below the prescribed minimum" fixed by the contract between Glenmore and its distributors, including appellant, and sanctioned by Kentucky's "fair trade" law [K. R. S. §§ 244.380, 244.390 et seq.]; (5) that appellant in turn notified Glenmore that "it would not give rebates and would not sell Kentucky Tavern whiskey to retailers at a price below the minimum price fixed by the fair trade contract"; (6) that appellee thereupon "terminated the Yellowstone agreement with plaintiff and placed such lines with Gross . . . and, at the direction of Glenmore, plaintiff did deliver to Gross all whiskeys in the Glenmore line that the plaintiff had in his warehouse which was paid for by Glenmore by its check, and not by Gross."

[Price Fixing]

Both parties agree that the case does not involve "any immunity bath granted by the Miller-Tydings Act or the McGuire Act." [See Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,823], 341 U. S. 384 (1951).] But absent some "immunity bath" all price fixing is illegal, if within the purview of the Federal anti-trust laws, regardless of whether the prices fixed be wholesale or retail, maxima or minima. [Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Seagram & Sons [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,737], 340 U. S. 211 (1951); United States v. Bausch & Lomb Co. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,224], 321 U. S. 707, 721-722 (1944); Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Park & Sons Co., 220 U. S. 373, 405 (1911).]

[Public Injury]

Appellee insists, however, that the claimed conspiracy is not within the coverage of the Federal antitrust laws because any alleged restraint upon commerce and attempt at monopoly could affect at most only local trade; that appellant's charges add up to nothing more than the refusal of one trader to sell to another; and that in all events no economic injury to the public is shown.

Each of these contentions is answered in the recent opinion of the Supreme Court in Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc. [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,316], — U. S. —, 27 Law Week 4253 (4/6/59); and see Moore v. Mead's Fine Bread Co. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,906], 348 U. S. 115, 118-120 (1954). No useful purpose would be served in repeating here what is so forcefully said there, and which calls for reversal of the judgment in the instant case.

[Monopoly Charge—Damages]

We are prompted to add the observation that, although appellant alleges appellee and others "conspired to create . . . a monopoly" in violation of 15 U. S. C. § 2, as well as "an illegal restraint of trade" in violation of 15 U. S. C. § 1, facts are not alleged in the complaint which would serve as "fair notice" of any claim for damages to appellant's trade or business proximately resulting from any monopoly or attempt thereat. [Cf: Conley v. Gibson, 355 U. S. 41, 47-48 (1957); Nagler v. Admiral Corp. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,839], 248 F. 2d 319 (2d Cir. 1957).] If appellant seriously asserts a claim based upon an alleged violation of 15 U. S. C. § 2, the complaint should be amended to allege it separately. [Fed. R. Civ. P. 10(b).]

[Reversed and Remanded]

The summary judgment dismissing Count I of appellant's complaint will be reversed and the cause remanded to the District Court for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[¶ 69,372] State of Kansas ex rel. John Anderson, Jr., Attorney General of the State of Kansas v. The Fleming Company, Inc.; Beatrice Foods Company; Foremost Food and Chemical Company; Adams Dairy Company; Fairmount Foods Company; and Edward G. Johnston.

In the Kansas Supreme Court. No. 41,304. Filed May 16, 1959.

Appeal from Shawnee District Court, Division No. 1. Beryl R. Johnson, Judge. Affirmed as modified.

Kansas Dairy Products Unfair Trade Practices Law

Sales Below Cost and Price Discrimination—Kansas Statute Applicable to Dairy Products—Constitutionality—Failure to Require Criminal Intent—Failure to Define Offense and Exceptions with Exactness—Due Process.—Provisions of a Kansas law which prohibited wholesalers, processors, and distributors of dairy products from (1) selling dairy products and expendable dairy supplies below cost, and (2) granting to retailers any secret discount or rebate, or permitting deviations from the price at which dairy products are furnished to retailers in the same area (Sections 50-503(l) and (m), 1957 Supplement to General Statutes of Kansas, 1949) violated the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution and the Bill of Rights of the Kansas Constitution. A criminal statute which fails to require a criminal intent in doing the proscribed act, fails to define with exactness the act forbidden, and is indefinite as to exceptions as to liability, denies due process to one against whom the statute is asserted. The statute left unanswered the question of whether "cost" at the point of delivery was to be determined as of a particular shipment, or based upon business for a week, a month, six months, or a year, and was totally silent as to what expenses were to be included in arriving at that "cost." Also, the statute excepted from its prohibitions "sales made in good faith to meet existing lawful competition." The terms "good faith" and "lawful" presented difficulties since, as a practical proposition, resort to a competitor's books and records is required in determining whether his price is below cost. However, the trial court's order holding the entire statute unconstitutional was too broad. Only two sections were in issue, and the Act specifies that the invalidity of any section shall not render the entire act invalid.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3903, 3929; Sales Below Cost, Vol. 2, ¶ 7111.18, 7141, 7151, 7161.18.

For the appellant: George B. Powers and Gerald Sawatzky, Special Assistant Attorneys General, both of Wichita, Kan., and John Anderson, Jr., Attorney General, and Charles N. Heuson, Jr., Assistant Attorney General, were with them on the briefs.

For the appellees: John J. Hasburgh, Jr., Kansas City, Mo., and James W. Porter, Topeka, Kan., Melvin J. Spencer and Robert I. Donnellan, both of Kansas City, Mo., were with him on the briefs for Adams Dairy Company; Charles F. Lamkin, Jr., Kansas City, Mo., and Lester M. Goodell, of Topeka, Kan., and Norman E. Greene, of Kansas City, Mo., were with him on the brief for Foremost Food and Chemical Company; Jacob A. Dickinson, of Topeka, Kan., Roy P. Swanson and Robert M. Duboc, both of Kansas City, Mo., and E. R. Schaberg, of Omaha, Neb., of counsel, were on the brief for Fairmount Foods Company; Robert L. Webb, Ralph W. Oman, Robert A. McClure, Philip E. Buzick, and James D. Waugh, all of Topeka, Kan., were on the brief for The Fleming Company, Inc.; Clayton E. Kline, M. F. Cosgrove, Robert E. Russell, Willard N. Van Slyck, Jr., William B. McElhenny, O. R. Stites, Jr., and James L. Grimes, Jr., all of Topeka, Kan., were on the brief for Beatrice Foods Company; W. A. Kahrs, of Wichita, Kan., for Kansas Ice Cream and Milk Institute, Steffens Dairy Foods Company, Inc., Hyde Park Dairies, Inc., and Armstrong Creamery Company, as amicus curiae; Richard L. Becker and Morris D. Hildreth, both of Coffeyville, Kan., for Bennett Ice Cream Company, Gardiner Dairy and Ice Cream Company, Hoch Dairy, Lawrence Sanitary Milk and Ice Cream Company, Inc., and The Page Milk Company, as amici curiae.

Syllabus by the Court

1. In a suit to enjoin defendants from violating the provisions of G. S. 1957 Supp. 50-503(l) and (m) in selling milk at less than cost at the point of delivery, the subsections involved are examined and it is held: A criminal statute, which neither requires a criminal intent in doing the proscribed act or defines with exactness the act forbidden, and further is indefinite as to exceptions as to liability, denies due process to one against whom the statute is asserted; and this is true although the statute be attempted to be enforced in a suit for injunction and not in a criminal action.

2. Where a statute contains a provision that the invalidity of any section shall not render the entire act invalid and only parts of one section of the statute are involved in the suit before the court and found to be unconstitutional, the court erred in holding the entire statute invalid.

[Sales Below Cost—Dairy Products]

The opinion of the court was delivered by JACKSON, Justice [In full text]: This is an appeal involving an injunction suit brought by the attorney general under the provisions of G. S. 1957 Supp., Chapter 50, Article 5, against the defendant-appellees. The aforementioned article 5 constitutes the provisions of Laws of 1957, Chapter 309, in which the legislature attempted to make a number of things unlawful when done by a distributor, processor, or wholesaler of dairy products. In a certain sense, the act is an unfair trade practice act (cf. G. S. 1949, ch. 50, art. 4) dealing only with dairy products and the sale thereof. The district court held the new act entirely unconstitutional and the plaintiff has appealed.

[Prior Proceedings]

In the suit below, appellant filed his petition against the appellees alleging that each of them had violated the provisions of G. S. 1957 Supp. 50-503(l) and (m). Without detailing the amendments of the petition, it will be sufficient to state that certain defendants named in the original petition who were retailers were dropped from the pleading, and we are now concerned with the second amended petition. This pleading charges that all of the appellees sold milk to certain grocery stores at fourteen and one-half cents per half gallon and in the case of Adams Dairy Company at the price of thirteen and one-half cents per half gallon; that such conduct constituted a violation of the statute and appellant sought an injunction against the appellees (see section 50-505). The appellees demurred to the second amended petition and after due consideration by the trial court, the demurrers were sustained on the ground that the statute was unconstitutional.

Other matters in the trial court need not be noted here and we shall proceed to consider the constitutionality of the new act attempting to regulate the dairy industry.

[Purposes of Act]

It will be noted first that the act begins in section 50-501 with a statement that certain practices are current in the dairy industry and adversely affect the stable economy of the state. This section constitutes a statement of the purposes of the act and reads as follows:

> "The practices being conducted by many dairy processors, wholesalers, and distributors in Kansas of selling below cost and in the subsidization of retail dealers through secret discounts, gifts, loans and other means and the furnishing of equipment, adversely affect the stable economy of Kansas. Such trade conduct causes unfair price discrimination, destructive and predatory trade practices, tends to reduce the price paid to the dairy farmer, increases the price paid by the consumer, and misleads the public as to the true value of dairy products, and is detrimental to the public health and welfare."

[Definitions]

Section 50-502 of the act contains definitions. The most important in this case are the definitions of "distributor," "processor," and "wholesaler." It may be noted in passing that under these definitions, a dairyman owning a herd of milk cows and a pasteurizing plant and delivering most of his milk to his own customers at their homes would still fall within the terms "distributor," "processor," and "wholesaler" if he at the same time sold some of his milk to the corner grocery store for resale. The court takes notice that there are some such dairies even in Shawnee County.

In section 50-503, the first paragraph reads as follows:

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

"It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in business as a wholesaler, processor, or distributor, individually or through or by affiliates, subsidiaries, associates, agents or stockholders, directly or indirectly, to do or cause to be done any of the following acts:"

[Prohibited Acts]

Following this are enumerated a great number of prohibited acts, most of which seem to forbid the granting of concessions to retailers. Only the two subparagraphs hereinafter set out are involved in this suit and they read as follows:

"(l) Sell any products, unit or combination thereof, for less than cost to the wholesaler, processor or distributor at the point of delivery; or sell to any retail dealer any expendable supplies for less than cost to any such wholesaler, processor or distributor at the point of delivery plus a markup of six percent (6%) of such cost as a proportionate share of the cost of doing business; except a person may sell either such dairy products or expendable supplies at prices made in good faith to meet existing lawful competition. Competent evidence of the prevailing cost to other such wholesalers, processors, or distributors engaged in selling dairy products on the same market shall constitute prima facie evidence of the cost to any person charged with violation of this provision.

"(m) Grant, either directly or indirectly, to any retail dealer any secret discount, make any rebate, or permit any deviation from the price at which he furnishes dairy products of the same quality, brand and quantity to other retail dealers in the same city, unincorporated town, or immediate vicinity thereof, except that deviations from such prices may be given when made in good faith to meet existing lawful competition: Provided, however, that bids, deviating from such prices, made pursuant to invitations issued by federal institutions or installations, may be filled, and contracts entered into, and fulfilled, without being deemed in violation of the provisions of this subsection. The terms 'made in good faith' and 'lawful' as used in this and the preceding subsection shall mean 'in conformity with and not in conflict with nor contrary to, any law of this state or of the United States of America.' "

We need not refer to the other sections of the statute at this time.

[Constitutional Objections]

In the lower court and here, the appellees contend that the statute under consideration is unconstitutional under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and Sections 1, 10 and 18 of the Bill of Rights of the Constitution of Kansas. The trial court in the finding that the above quoted sections were unconstitutional seems to have held that the legislature would patently not have enacted the statute without those sections and that therefore, the entire statute was unconstitutional.

[Legislative Power]

It must be established beyond question that the legislature has power to regulate and provide for the accomplishment of the purposes set forth in section 50-501. Not only have monopolies and trusts been the subject of legislation for more than half a century, but the dairy industry has been regulated for the purpose of protecting the public health and welfare more completely than any other industry. We shall not pause to cite cases upon this proposition. The real question here, we believe, comes down to the matter well stated by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Nebbia v. New York, 291 U. S. 502, 78 L. Ed. 940, 54 S. Ct. 505, 89 A. L. R. 1469, in which the court said:

"The Fifth Amendment, in the field of federal activity, and the Fourteenth, as respects State action, do not prohibit governmental regulation for the public welfare. They merely condition the exertion of the admitted power, by securing that the end shall be accomplished by methods consistent with due process. And the guaranty of due process, as has often been held, demands only that the law shall not be unreasonable, arbitrary or capricious, and that the means selected shall have a real and substantial relation to the object sought to be attained. It results that a regulation valid for one sort of business, or in given circumstances, may be invalid for another sort, or for the same business under other circumstances, because the reasonableness of each regulation depends upon the relevant facts." (Italics supplied.)

The appellant seems to place considerable emphasis on the Nebbia case, but as said by the Supreme Court of the United States, each case must depend upon its own relevant facts. While the Nebbia case is an important case, the facts there were that the state of New York set up a complete regulation of the dairy industry during a time of crisis. The industry was placed under the regulation of an administrative body which had the power to fix both minimum and maximum prices and regulate the industry in other ways. The purposes of the act were to protect the public health, insure the supply of milk and encourage its production and possibly to prevent monopoly. Objections could be made to the administrative authority from which appeal to the courts could be made by certiorari. We are told that many states after the decision of the Nebbia case enacted laws establishing similar regulations. Be that as it may, it must be agreed that decisions concerning such statutes are not in point in the present case.

Counsel advise that although similar acts to the one now before the court have been enacted in other states, no judicial consideration of them as been found, and our independent search has likewise been unavailing.

Nearest to the present type of statute are the general unfair practice acts of the various states. The Kansas act appearing as G. S. 1949, Chapter 50, Article 4, has been recently under consideration in this court. (See State v. Consumers Warehouse Market [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,133], 183 Kan. 502, — P. 2d —.)

[Principal Grounds of Attack]

The appellees attack the application of the dairy act on three principal grounds. First, that no criminal intent is required under the statute, but that the sale of any dairy products for less than cost to the wholesaler, processor or distributor is made to constitute a criminal act. Second, that no definition of "cost at the point of delivery" is contained in the act. They also point out the exception providing "a person may sell either such dairy products or expendable supplies at prices made in good faith to meet existing lawful competition." We shall dispose of these questions before taking up any other matters in the appeal.

[Criminal Intent]

In starting this discussion, it may be noted that as the appellant in effect states, the act under consideration is no model of the scrivener's art. However, appellant points to the fact that certain acts may be made criminal without including the element of mens rea. The following cases are cited to substantiate that position: State v. Beam, 175 Kan. 814, 267 P. 2d 509 (giving a worthless check); State v. Merrifield, 180 Kan. 267, 303 P. 2d 155 (driving without a license); and the cases cited in the opinions.

The case of May's Drug Stores v. State Tax Comm. [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,741], 242 Iowa 319, 45 N. W. 2d 245, is cited as showing a decision by the Supreme Court of Iowa upholding a statute making illegal the sale of cigarettes at less than cost by a wholesaler or retailer. In the Iowa statute, it seems no criminal intent was required.

The appellees point out that most of the general unfair practice acts contain provisions requiring a criminal intent and that those which do not, have been usually held to be invalid. In State v. Consumers Warehouse Market, supra, this court at page 511 took pains to stress that our act required that the sale below cost be made with the intent to unfairly divert trade and otherwise injure a competitor, and see State v. Packard-Bamberger & Co., Inc. [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,240], 123 N. J. L. 180, 8 A. 2d 291; Commonwealth, Appellant, v. Zasloff [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,034], 338 Pa. 457, 13 A. 2d 67, 128 A. L. R. 1120.

A pertinent case is Fairmont Co. v. Minnesota, 274 U. S. 1, 47 S. Ct. 506, 71 L. Ed. 893, 52 A. L. R. 163. This case involved a statute forbidding, under penalty, creameries to purchase cream at higher prices in one locality than in other localities, after allowance for the difference in cost of transportation. The Supreme Court of the United States reversed the holding of the Supreme Court of Minnesota and held that the statute was unconstitutional as denying due process of law because the statute made illegal an otherwise lawful act without the necessity of a criminal intent. The court said:

> "It seems plain enough that the real evil supposed to threaten the cream business was payment of excessive prices by powerful buyers for the purpose of destroying competition. To prevent this the statute undertook to require every buyer to adhere to a uniform price fixed by a single transaction.
>
> "As the inhibition of the statute applies irrespective of motive, we have an obvious attempt to destroy plaintiff in error's liberty to enter into normal contracts long regarded not only as essential to the freedom of trade and commerce, but also as beneficial to the public. Buyers in competitive markets must accommodate their bids to prices offered by others, and the payment of different prices at different places is the ordinary consequence. Enforcement of the statute would amount to fixing the price at which plaitniff in error may buy, since one purchase would establish this for all points without regard to ordinary trade conditions.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

"The real question comes to this: May the state, in order to prevent some strong buyers of cream from doing things which tend to monopoly, inhibit plaintiff in error from carrying on its business in the usual way heretofore regarded as both moral and beneficial to the public and not shown now to be accompanied by evil results as ordinary incidents? Former decisions here require a negative answer. We think the inhibition of the statute has no reasonable relation to the anticipated evil—high bidding by some with purpose to monopolize or destroy competition. Looking through form to substance, it clearly and unmistakably infringes private rights whose exercise does not ordinarily produce evil consequences, but the reverse."

That the element of intent was thought to be most important may be seen from the fact that the court had previously held constitutional a statute of South Dakota which forbade discrimination in the price of goods in different localities for the purpose of destroying competition and the creation of a monopoly. (See Central Lumber Co. v. South Dakota, 226 U. S. 157, 57 L. Ed. 164, 33 S. Ct. 66.) It may be noted that the Central Lumber Co. case is cited in a footnote in the Nebbia case and there is nothing to indicate that the Nebbia case overruled or made obsolete the Fairmont case. Before giving a final answer to this question of an intent in the statute, we would like to turn to the question of the definition of cost.

[Definition of "Cost"]

It will be seen that no attempt is made to define cost in the statute. It only states a wholesaler, processor or distributor must not sell products "for less than cost . . . at the point of delivery." It is argued that in this day and age, everyone in business has the services of accountants, but it will be seen that the statute leaves unanswered the question of whether the cost is to be determined as of a particular shipment or based upon business for a week, a month, six months or a year. The statute is totally silent as to what expenses are to be included in arriving at the cost at the point of delivery.

The appellant would read the statute to simply provide that the appellees should keep books in good faith. But we cannot feel that the interpretation of the statute is so simple. In Dikeou v. Food Ass'n [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,069], 107 Colo. 38, 108 P. 2d 529, defendant was being prosecuted for selling cigarettes at $1.12 per carton, which was claimed to be below the cost to him as proscribed by the Colorado statute. Defendant's accountant testified that under his own breakdown of the business, defendant was realizing a profit of $.0062 on each sale at the stated price, and that the statute had not been violated. On the other hand, plaintiffs contended that defendant's costs were not as stated but amounted to $1.14 per carton. It must be remembered that this dispute arose under a statute which specified that a criminal intent must exist and that the manner of arriving at the cost of the seller was rather carefully defined. We are hardly as hopeful of the practical operation of a statute which requires no specific intent and makes no attempt to define the elements to be taken into consideration as to the cost to the seller.

Notice also the provisions at the close of subsection (l) in relation to evidence of prevailing costs of others engaged in selling dairy products. Attention is also directed to the holding of this court in State v. Consumers Warehouse Market, supra, at pages 511-512 in regard to G. S. 1949, 50-401(e).

[Meeting "Lawful Competition"]

The objections made to the exception as to sales "made in good faith to meet existing lawful competition" were mentioned at the beginning of the opinion. The appellant in his petition alleges that none of the defendants was selling milk in good faith to meet existing lawful competition.

It is argued that one need not decide at his peril whether his competitor's price is lawful. The great difficulty with the argument is the definitions of "good faith" and "lawful" as found in subsection (m) and made to apply to this very exception. Under a different statute such cases as State, By Clark, v. Wolkoff [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,826], 250 Minn. 504, 85 N. W. 2d 401, might be of considerable weight. The Minnesota statute, contrary to the statute now under consideration, required a criminal intent as an element of the crime proscribed. In State, ex rel., v. Commercial Candy Co. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,358], 166 Kan. 432, 201 P. 2d 1034, this court in construing the general unfair practices act said:

> "We are unable to find any evidence in this record upon which the trial court could base its conclusion of fact No. 13 and its conclusion of law No. 5, in which it found that the defendants did not make the sales in good faith and to meet the price of the Poehler company, their competitor, and that the sales in question were made below cost with the intent or effect of injuring competitors and destroying competition. It may be that the sales by the defendants resulted in injury to other competitors and tended to destroy competition, but by the very terms of the act (50-402) such sales must be made with the intent to bring about those results enumerated by the statute in order to constitute a violation of the act. The act (50-405) further provides that a wholesaler may sell for less than cost where the price of merchandise is made in good faith to meet the price of a competitor in the same locality.
>
> "The trial court may have reached its conclusions on account of the fact the record shows that the defendants made no effort to ascertain whether or not the Poehler Company was selling below cost, and that, therefore, the defendants were guilty of bad faith and thus made the sales in question with the intent to bring about the results prohibited by the statute. However, we are of the opinion that this would be an erroneous and unreasonable construction of the burden of proof portion of the exemption provision. As a practical proposition, how could the defendants have ascertained whether or not the price of $1.59 per carton was below cost to the Poehler company unless resort be made to the books and records of such competitor?" (pp. 437-438)

[Due Process Denied]

It must be evident that a criminal statute, which neither requires a criminal intent in doing the proscribed act or defines with exactness the act forbidden, and further is indefinite as to exceptions as to liability, must be considered to deny due process to one against whom the statute is asserted.

[Indefiniteness]

It is elemental that a criminal statute must be definite, (State v. Ashton, 175 Kan. 164, Syl. ¶ 1, 262 P. 2d 123). Neither does the fact that this is a civil suit and not a criminal action help the statute enough to make it valid. We would read this statute as a whole.

In the May's Drug Stores case, supra, which is stressed by appellant, the Supreme Court of Iowa did find that in that case no criminal intent was required by the statute, but it may be noted that the elements of the cost of the defendant were very accurately set out in the statute. The court said:

> "The Act in question defines cost to a wholesaler or retailer as the 'basic cost of cigarettes' to the wholesaler or retailer plus his 'cost of doing business.' 'Basic cost' is either invoice or replacement cost, whichever is lower. And 'cost of doing business' is presumed to be four per cent of the basic cost of the cigarettes for a wholesaler and eight per cent of such cost for the retailer 'in the absence of proof of a lesser or higher cost.'" (p. 336)

In the case of Commonwealth, Appellant, v. Zasloff, supra, no intent was required and no definition of the elements of the cost was provided, and the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania found the statute unconstitutional. Likewise, the New Jersey statute of similar import was declared invalid in State v. Packard-Bamberger & Co., Inc., supra. We have pointed out that the Supreme Court of the United States in Fairmont Co. v. Minnesota, supra, held that the lack of a criminal purpose in doing the proscribed act made the statute under consideration invalid as a denial of due process. The Minnesota statute like the Kansas statute now under consideration dealt with dairy products, and had been passed for the same declared purpose.

From all of the foregoing, the court is convinced that the provisions of subsections (l) and (m) of section 50-503, G. S. 1957 Supp. deny due process of law to the appellees in violation of the provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and of the Bill of Rights § 18, of the constitution of Kansas.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Separability of Valid and Invalid Sections]

The trial court issued an order holding the entire act of the legislature invalid although only the two subsections discussed and set out above were at issue in this case. Only sales of milk at a price below the appellees' cost at point of delivery were charged in the petition. The act contains a section specifying that the invalidity of any section shall not render the entire act invalid. Moreover, this court only considers constitutional questions when the complaining party is affected by the statute complained of. In Marks v. Frantz, 179 Kan. 638, 298 P. 2d 316, the court said:

"Before taking up appellant's contentions, we take note of established principles applicable where constitutionality of a statute is to be determined. Constitutionality of a statute is presumed, doubts as to constitutionality are resolved in favor of legality, and before the statute may be stricken down, it must clearly appear the statute offends. (See e. g., Carolene Products Co. v. Mohler, 152 Kan. 2, 102 P. 2d 1044; Board of County Comm'rs v. Robb, 166 Kan. 122, 199 P. 2d 530; State, ex rel., v. Board of Regents, 167 Kan. 587, 207 P. 2d 373, and cases cited therein.) In determining constitutionality of a statute the court's duty is to uphold the legislation rather than defeat it and if there is any reasonable way to construe the legislation as constitutionally valid that should be done. (See e. g., Mizer v. Kansas Bostwick Irrigation District, 172 Kan. 157, 239 P. 2d 370.) It is further to be noted that constitutionality of legislation will be considered only where necessarily involved and such a determination required (See, e. g., State, ex rel., v. School District, 163 Kan. 650, 185 P. 2d 677), and that constitutionality may not be questioned by one not affected by its operation. (See, e. g., Kansas Utilities Co. v. City of Burlington, 141 Kan. 926, 931, 44 P. 2d 223; Stone v. City of Wichita, 145 Kan. 377, 65 P. 2d 595.) With respect to the last rule, it may be observed that under the complaint filed with the board, the appellant is charged with certain acts. Insofar as they are concerned he may question constitutionality of the statute involved—but under that rule he has no standing to attack the act as an entirety and respecting those phases of it which are not involved in the charges against him and by way of illustration we mention attendance at the educational programs as outlined in his petition." (p. 643)

Certain other matters are mentioned in the briefs of some of the parties, but the court is of the opinion they require no notice in this opinion.

[Order Modified]

The order of the district court was too broad in holding all of Laws of 1957, Chapter 309 (G. S. 1957 Supp. 50-501 et seq.) invalid. The district court did not err in finding subsections (l) and (m) of section 50-503 denied due process to the appellees. As so modified, the order of the trial court should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

[¶ 69,373] Howard Industries, Inc. v. Rae Motor Corp.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. September Term 1958—April Session 1959. No. 12568. Dated May 27, 1959.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin. GRUBB, District Judge.

Sherman and Wisconsin Antitrust Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Contract to "House" Motors in Casing Different from That Used by Competitor—Legality—Alleged Illegality as Defense to Action on Contract.—A trial court properly granted an injunction enforcing a written contract whereby a manufacturer of fractional horsepower motors, for a valuable consideration, agreed that it would use a motor casing different in design from that used by a competitor. The manufacturer contended that the contract, which was a "settlement agreement" entered into after the competitor had instituted a patent infringement action against the manufacturer, as well as the injunction founded upon the contract, unlawfully extended the competitor's patent monopoly on a motor brush assembly in violation of the Sherman Act and of the Wisconsin antitrust statute. The settlement agreement could not be construed to extend the patent because the patent involved only a motor brush assembly and did not cover or affect the casing which housed the motor. Furthermore, there was no misuse of the patent by "tying" arrangements or the conditioning of a license so as to control the conduct of a licensee. The contract in suit did not license the manufacturer, and did not require it to use the competitor's casing. Thus, the injunction did not prohibit the manufacturer from competing fairly, and the contract in suit did not restrain trade or tend to create a monopoly.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2013, 2407; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9040.

For the plaintiff-appellee: Carroll R. Heft and Glenn R. Coates.

For the defendant-appellant: Jerome F. Foley, Rex Capwell, and George J. Kuehnl.

Before Duffy, Chief Judge, Schnackenberg and Parkinson, Circuit Judges.

[Contract Action—Antitrust Violations as Defense]

Parkinson, Circuit Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff-appellee Howard Industries, Inc. (Howard) filed this action in the District Court to enjoin the defendant-appellant Rae Motor Corporation (Rae) from manufacturing, using or marketing its electric motors in a motor casing confusingly similar in appearance to that of Howard, and for damages.

[Prior Proceedings]

The District Court, by pre-trial conference order, separated the issues on liability and damages and, following a bench trial on the question of liability, filed findings of fact and conclusions of law and entered an injunctive order and judgment in accordance therewith in favor of Howard. This appeal followed.

[Facts]

The relevant undisputed facts are that in 1945 Howard purchased the assets of Electric Motor Corporation, a manufacturer of fractional horsepower motors, which included Patent No. 2,032,084. Shortly thereafter certain personnel formerly of Electric Motor Corporation left Howard and organized Rae. By early spring of 1946 Rae was manufacturing and selling fractional horsepower motors, which infringed Howard's patent, housed in a motor casing identical to that of Howard, except the brushes within the Rae casing were welded thereto while in the Howard casing they were attached by crimping.

[Earlier Action—Settlement Agreement]

Thereupon Howard filed a patent infringement action against Rae and one Dunham. Prior to trial the parties entered into a settlement agreement and the infringement suit was dismissed. The settlement agreement is as follows:

"This agreement made and entered into this 15th day of August, by and between Howard Industries, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, having its principal place of business in Chicago, Illinois, party of the first part and hereinafter referred to as Howard; Rae Motor Corporation, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Wisconsin, having its principal place of business in Racine, Wisconsin hereinafter referred to as Rae, and Irvie H. Dunham, an individual of the City of Racine, Racine County, Wisconsin hereinafter referred to as Dunham.

Witnesseth:

"Whereas, there is pending in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin, an action in which Howard, as plaintiff, charges infringement of its patent #2032084 by Rae and Dunham, Defendants, said action being identified as Civil Action No. 4554, wherein issue has been joined; and

"Whereas, apart from any cause of action pleaded in said litigation, Howard complains that the shells or casings of motors made by Rae too closely resemble in appearance those previously made by Howard.

"Now, Therefore, in consideration of the agreement of the parties hereinafter set forth, it is agreed as follows:

"First: Rae and Dunham covenant and agree:

"1. That the brush holder and the contact slip of the electric motor first manufactured and sold by Rae are acknowledged to have infringed the patent in suit No. 2,032,084.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

"Second: Rae Covenants and agrees:

"That as soon as its present stock of motor shells or casings is used up it will adopt a different shell or casing for its motor either like Exhibit A attached hereto or some other casing design which is not confusingly similar in appearance to the casing design now embodied in the E. M. C. motor. The present stock of Rae's motor casings being not in excess of 3500.

"Third: Howard covenants and agrees:

"1. That Howard waives any claim or right it might have or make now or in the future based upon infringement by the motor currently manufactured by Rae upon Patent No. 2,032,084.

"2. That it does hereby acknowledge the receipt of Thirty-five Hundred ($3500.00) dollars to it paid by Rae.

"3. That in consideration of the said Thirty-five Hundred ($3500.00) dollars to it paid by Rae and of the agreement of Rae and Dunham herein set forth it does for itself, its successors and assigns hereby remise, release and forever discharge Dunham and Rae of and from all claims, controversies and demands accruing to the date hereof, jointly or severally against Dunham or Rae or either of them and based upon matters set forth in the complaint of this action or upon alleged simulation of casing design.

"4. That a shell or motor casing design, of the type indicated by the attached print marked "Exhibit A" is adequately differentiated in appearance from the motor shell or casing design of Howard.

"Fourth: It is mutually covenanted and agreed by and between the parties hereto that the aforesaid Civil Action No. 4554 shall be dismissed without costs to either party or parties, upon the written stipulation of the parties or their counsel being filed in the United States District Court of the Eastern District of Wisconsin.

"In Witness Whereof, the Plaintiff, Howard Industries, Inc., has caused this agreement to be executed by its President and Secretary and its corporate seal to be affixed hereto, this 15th day of August, 1949; the Defendant, Rae Motor Corporation has caused this agreement to be executed by its President and Secretary and its corporate seal to be affixed hereto this 15th day of August, 1949; and the Defendant, Irvie H. Dunham, has hereunto set his hand and seal this 15th day of August, 1949."

It is clear from a reading of this contract that it accomplished two distinct results, (1) it compromised and settled the patent infringement suit and, completely separate and apart from the patent infringement, it (2) obligated Rae to rectify the complaint of Howard that the motor casings used by Rae too closely resembled those of Howard by adopting a different casing for its motors either like the exhibit attached to the contract, which was adequately differentiated in appearance, or some other casing design which was not confusingly similar in appearance.

[Trial Court's Finding]

Rae relies upon two grounds for a reversal of the judgment. The first is that the "finding of the District Court that [Rae's] motor casings are confusingly similar in appearance to [Howard's] motor casings is contrary to law and is not supported by the evidence."

The District Court found that Rae breached the contract by adopting for use a motor casing confusingly similar in appearance to the motor casing used by Howard. Although the evidence on this issue was in conflict there is unequivocal testimony of confusing similarity in appearance and that Rae's customers had mistakenly returned Rae's casings to Howard for repair. It was for the District Court to determine the credibility of the witnesses, to weigh the evidence and resolve any conflicts therein. As this finding was supported by substantial evidence it most certainly is neither clearly erroneous nor contrary to law and thus is not vulnerable to attack on appeal. United States v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 10 Cir., 1948, 171 F. 2d 377, 380; Graver Mfg. Co. v. Linde Co., 1950, 339 U. S. 605, 609-610; International Bureau v. Bethlehem Steel Co., 2 Cir., 1951, 192 F. 2d 304, 306; Milgram v. Loew's, Inc. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶62,938], 3 Cir., 1951, 192 F. 2d 579, 584; The Sirius Star v. Sturgeon Bay Shipbuild. & Dry Dock Co., 7 Cir., 1952, 196 F. 2d 479, 481-482; Overman v. Loesser, 9 Cir., 1953, 205 F. 2d 521, 524; Judd v. Wasie, 8 Cir., 1954, 211 F. 2d 826, 831; American Transit Lines v. Smith, 6 Cir., 1957, 246 F. 2d 86, 88. The fact that the District Court also found that Rae's motor casing was "not adequately differentiated in appearance" from that of Howard is surplusage if it does, as contended by Rae, have a different meaning than "confusingly similar in appearance." However, Rae's contention that the two phrases are not synonymous is clearly specious, being founded neither on logic nor semantics.

[Alleged Patent Monopoly]

Rae's remaining ground for reversal is that the "injunction of the District Court, and the patent litigation Settlement Agreement on which it is founded, unlawfully extend [Howard's] patent monopoly beyond the scope of the patent and beyond the life of the patent in violation of the policy of the Sherman Act and of Section 133.01(1) of the Wisconsin Statutes."

Aside from the fact that Rae failed to plead illegality as a defense which, in itself, renders this ground inefficacious, Charm Tred Mills v. Erle P. Halliburton, Inc., 7 Cir., 1953, 202 F. 2d 294, 297; Morr v. United States, 6 Cir., 1957, 243 F. 2d 913, 914, Patent No. 2,032,084 involves only a motor brush assembly. The parties agreed that it does not include any claims for the motor casing and neither the shape nor design of the casing to house the motor was covered or affected in any manner by the patent. Thus the settlement agreement cannot be construed to extend the patent either beyond its scope or the life thereof.

[No Patent Misuse]

Nor is this a case of misuse of a patent by Howard to force Rae to purchase or use Howard's unpatented product either by conditioning a patent license so as to tie to the use of the patented device the use of another device lying outside the monopoly of the patent licensed, or by conditioning a license so as to control the conduct by the licensee not embraced in the patent monopoly or upon the maintenance of resale prices by the purchaser of the patented article, or otherwise. The contract in suit does not license Rae nor does it require Rae to use Howard's casing. In complete contrariety this is an action on a written contract whereby Rae, for a valuable consideration, agreed that it would adopt for its use a motor casing of a design different in appearance from Howard's. None of the cases cited by Rae holds that such a contract, which would not prohibit Rae from continuing to make fractional horsepower motors and house them in a casing not confusingly similar in appearance to Howard's, is in restraint of trade or violative of the Sherman or Wisconsin Anti-Trust Acts.

The District Court having found that Rae could make a fractional horsepower motor and house it in a motor casing not confusingly similar in appearance to Howard's motor casing and such finding being supported by substantial evidence, we hold that the injunction does not prohibit Rae from competing fairly and that the contract in suit is not in restraint of trade nor does it tend to create a monopoly.

The judgment is Affirmed.

[¶ 69,374] Dr. W. S. McClymonds, et al. v. John W. Brandle, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri, Eastern Division. No. 58 C 502 (3). Filed March 17, 1959.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Jurisdiction of Federal Courts—Unfair Competition Action in State Court—Federal Antitrust Counterclaim—Jurisdiction Established by Complaint.—A Federal district court remanded an unfair competition action to the state court in which the complaint was originally filed because that complaint did not, on its face, invoke or establish federal jurisdiction. Rejecting the defendants' argument that the cause should be removed to the federal court because the state court did not have jurisdiction of the federal patent and antitrust matters raised in their counterclaim, the court noted that they were not barred from instituting an original action in the federal courts if they had claims against the plaintiffs that could only be heard there.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9007.

For the plaintiff: John H. Lashly and Paul B. Rava, both of Lashly, Lashly & Miller, St. Louis, Mo.

For the defendant: Donald F. Flint, Clayton, Mo.; and Sutherland, Polster & Taylor, St. Louis, Mo.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Opinion

[Jurisdiction]

WEBER, District Judge [In full text]: This cause presents the same basic issue as presented in Hall v. Bowman, — F. Supp. —, in which an Opinion has been written and filed this same date.

However, while the basic issue and the law is the same, the facts are dissimilar and the Court shall set forth those facts, but shall reach the same ultimate conclusion.

[Antitrust Counterclaim in State Court]

In this case plaintiff filed his Petition in the Circuit Court of the City of St. Louis to recover damages for unfair competition under the laws of the State of Missouri. After some delay defendant filed a Counterclaim asserting claims under Title 28, U. S. C. A., Section 1338 (giving original jurisdiction to federal courts upon patent matters), Title 35, U. S. C. A., Section 292 (establishing federal jurisdiction for wrongful use of word "patent" and allowing a penalty recovery), and Title 15, U. S. C. A., Section 1, et seq. (Sherman and Clayton Acts, wherein damages may be claimed for unlawful restraint of trades.)

[Removal Petition]

After filing this Counterclaim in the state court, defendants then filed their Removal Petition generally based upon the theory that inasmuch as the state court does not have jurisdiction of matters raised in their counterclaim, federal court jurisdiction can be invoked.

[Jurisdiction Established by Complaint]

One of the arguments advanced by defendants upon a hearing on Motion to Remand is that they will be hindered in the state court if they cannot assert their Counterclaim.

If the defendants have claims against these plaintiffs which can only be heard in the federal courts, certainly they are not barred from instituting an original suit here; but just as certainly, they are barred from a Removal of a Complaint in a state court, which Complaint on its face does not invoke or establish federal court jurisdiction.

[Remanded to State Court]

In order to not further burden the record and for the reasons set forth in Hall v. Bowman, supra, and the cases cited therein, the Court shall sustain the Motion to Remand.

[Other Motions]

There are other motions pending before this Court, namely, Plaintiffs' Motion to Dismiss the Counterclaims and Defendants' Motion to Strike Plaintiffs' Motion to Dismiss Counterclaims. If this Court does not have jurisdiction to try this lawsuit, it does not have jurisdiction to act upon these motions. Furthermore, they will be matters which can be properly presented to the state court and therefore there is no need, nor jurisdiction, for this Court to rule thereon. The matter can be handled conclusively as far as this Court is concerned upon sustaining the Motion to Remand and an Order shall be so entered.

[¶ 69,375] Independent Productions Corporation and IPC Distributors, Inc. v. Loew's Incorporated, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil No. 110-304. Dated May 20, 1959.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Conspiracy—Pretrial Procedures—Depositions—Former Officers and Directors as "Managing Agents" of Corporate Plaintiffs.—Two corporations, the producer and the distributor, respectively, of a motion picture film, in an antitrust action charging motion picture producers with conspiring against the production and distribution of that film, were required to submit to the taking of their depositions through two individuals who were formerly officers and directors of the corporations. Those individuals, although they had formally resigned from their corporate positions prior to the institution of the action, continued to participate in the corporations' affairs to an extent that, for all practical purposes, made them "managing agents" under Rule 26 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. While the courts have given nominal approval to the proposition that a corporate party may be examined only through one who was its agent at the time of the deposition, the purpose of Rule 26 is to protect a party from the admissions of a disgruntled former employee. In the instant case, the individuals had a well founded expectation of participating in any recovery in the litigation and stood ready to serve the corporations if their talents should be required. In addition, the individuals had unique knowledge of relevant matters.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.775.

For the plaintiffs: Rosston, Hort & Brussel, New York, N. Y., for Independent Productions Corp.; and George Brussel, Jr., New York, N. Y., for IPC Distributors, Inc.

For the defendants: Schwartz & Frohlich for Columbia Pictures Corp. and Columbia Pictures International Corp. (Myles J. Lane and Bernard R. Sorkin, of counsel); Sidney Schreiber for Motion Picture Assn. of America, Inc. (Georgiana Koenig, of counsel); Spivak & Kantor, for Richard F. Walsh and John J. Francavilla; Dwight, Royall, Harris, Koegel & Caskey for Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. (Del.), Twentieth Century-Fox International Corp., and Twentieth Century-Fox Inter-America, Inc.; Benjamin Melniker for Loew's, Inc., and Loew's International Corp.; Meyer H. Lavenstein for Republic Pictures Corp., Republic Pictures International Corp., and Republic Productions, Inc.; Robert W. Perkins for Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. (1953) (Del.), Warner Bros. Pictures International Corp., and Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corp.; Louis Phillips for Paramount Pictures Corp., Paramount International Films, Inc., and Paramount Film Distributing Corp.; Adolph Schimel for Universal Pictures Co., Inc., Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., and Universal International Films, Inc.; J. Miller Walker for RKO Teleradio Pictures, Inc. (formerly known as RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.); Phillips, Nizer, Benjamin & Krim for United Artists Corp., Eagle Lion Classics, Inc., National Screen Service Corp., Comedia Enterprises, Inc., and City Entertainment Corp.; Michael F. Mayer for Arthur Mayer and Council of Motion Picture Organizations, Inc.; Simpson Thacher & Bartlett for Atlas Corp. (successor by merger to RKO Pictures Corp.); Cahill, Gordon, Reindel & Ohl for Radio Corporation of America; and William B. Jaffe for Allied Artists Pictures Corp., Allied Artists Distributing Corp., and Allied Artists International Corp., all of New York, N. Y.

For prior opinions of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,056, 68,980, and 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,843, 68,615.

Opinion

[Treble Damage Action]

SUGARMAN, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiffs, Independent Productions Corporation and IPC Distributors, Inc., are the producer and distributor, respectively, of a motion picture film entitled "Salt of the Earth".

[Conspiracy Charged]

On June 21, 1956, the complaint herein was filed charging defendants with participation in a conspiracy directed against the plaintiffs' production and distribution of the above-named film. Substantial damages under the Clayton and Sherman Acts are sought.

Plaintiffs contend that defendants embarked upon a two-phased conspiracy. In their brief on this motion they state:

"The first phase began in 1947 with the openly declared and widely publicized industry wide boycott of the Hollywood Ten in 1947.

"On November 25, 1947, the major motion picture producers joined as defendants herein, represented by their industry association, defendant Motion Picture Association of America, publicly announced that, although their action was not authorized by law, the industry would discharge and would not re-employ the ten screen writers and directors who had been cited for contempt of the House of Representatives for refusal to testify before the un-American Activities Committee. This announcement came to be known as 'The Waldorf Declaration' because the industry meeting at which it was approved took place at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York City. The Declaration was promptly published in the New York Times, all of the motion picture industry trade publications and in other periodicals and newspapers throughout the country. Its text appears in Exhibit G annexed to plaintiffs' moving papers.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

"Among the 'Ten' was Herbert Biberman, well-known motion picture and stage director who subsequently directed 'Salt of the Earth'. This admitted and industry-sponsored boycott was extended to other motion picture industry personnel as they declined to testify. Among this group was Paul Jarrico who produced 'Salt of the Earth, and Michael Wilson who wrote the screen play. Messrs. Jarrico and Wilson are well-known screen writers who had written or co-authored successful screen plays for several of the major studio defendants. . . .

"The second phase of the conspiracy began in 1952 when it became known that plaintiff Independent Productions Corporation ('Independent'), utilizing the services of Messrs. Biberman and Jarrico and other blacklisted personnel who had been unable to secure any industry employment, had set about the production of 'Salt of the Earth' as an independent producer. When it became known that blacklisted personnel were helping Independent to make the picture, the 1947 conspiracy was extended to Independent and to its motion picture. When IPC attempted to distribute the picture in 1954, the conspiracy was further extended to include distribution and exhibition of the film.

"During this second phase those defendants who are processors of sound film joined the conspiracy the object of which then became (1953) to make the production of the film, if plaintiffs were to succeed in producing it, as difficult and expensive as possible . . . Associated in this phase were representatives of International Alliance of Electrical and Stage Employees (IATSE) who refused to furnish the skilled labor required for production and exhibition.

"The Chicago Case

"As a result of the refusal of IATSE to furnish projectionists an action was brought by IPC against a Chicago IATSE local union and others who had interfered with a contract between IPC and a Chicago exhibitor for the showing of 'Salt of the Earth'. When that action was instituted in 1955 Biberman and Jarrico were, respectively, President and Secretary-Treasurer of Independent and of IPC, and were in general charge of their affairs.

"In March 1956, two months after present counsel were retained to prosecute this action and three months before it was commenced, Biberman refused to answer as irrelevant certain interrogatories propounded by the defendants in that action . . . Because of that refusal the complaint was dismissed.

"At the time this occurred plaintiffs' counsel were drafting the complaint in this action. When consulted about implications of the dismissal of the Chicago case, they advised against the institution of this action until all officers of both plaintiffs who might be unwilling to testify in this action had disassociated as officers or managing agents of the plaintiffs. . . . In turn, plaintiffs' counsel were advised that this would create no problem because all of the then officers of the plaintiffs were anxious to resign for personal and family reasons and that others were available to succeed them. . . .

"Accordingly, plaintiffs' counsel prepared the resignations of plaintiffs' officers and directors and personally witnessed Biberman's . . . Biberman resigned as President and director of Independent on May 17, 1956 and as President and director of IPC on May 6, 1956; and Jarrico as director and Secretary-Treasurer of both plaintiffs on May 31, 1956. . . . All four resignations were acknowledged before notaries public and the regularity of their execution is not challenged."

* * * *

[Depositions—Former Corporate Officers]

The papers in support of this motion by plaintiffs to vacate defendants' notices to take plaintiffs' depositions by Biberman and Jarrico portray the following background. Independent is a California corporation organized in 1952. IPC is a New York corporation organized in 1954 to distribute the film "Salt of the Earth". Herbert Biberman became president of Independent in 1953. Although he is not and never was a stockholder of record of Independent, he has some well founded expectation of participation to the extent of 10 per cent in the division of such assets, if any, as Independent shall ever acquire. It appears that the only present prospect of Independent's acquisition of assets of any real value lies in the possibility of recovery in the instant action.

[Background of Plaintiff Corporation]

It is asserted that in 1951 Biberman had conceived the idea of organizing an independent motion picture producing corporation which, among other things, would afford employment opportunities on the basis of talent and ability to those blacklisted industry employees who, like himself, were unable to secure employment in the industry as a result of the "Waldorf Declaration" and the continued industry boycott which followed its promulgation. He succeeded in interesting one Simon Lazarus and others in advancing the initial funds and they, their friends and Jarrico borrowed the balance of the amount initially deemed necessary to produce "Salt of the Earth". Lazarus became the first president of Independent.

None of the persons actively associated with the writing, production and direction of the film had drawn personal salaries or other compensation up to the time of the effort to exhibit the film. All of them had been unemployable in the motion picture industry as a result of the 1947 boycott and the events which followed. Because of the long periods of unemployment and of nonproductivity, Biberman's personal resources had been exhausted and he required an independent source of income to provide for his family. From 1954 on he earnestly desired to terminate his responsibility to Independent and to IPC, but because of his sense of obligation to Independent's loan obligees, he subordinated his desire further to be relieved of officer-employee responsibility to Independent, to what he considered to be his moral obligation to the many persons who had advanced large sums in reliance upon his and his associates' professional skills and the expectation of the completion and distribution of the film.

Throughout 1954 and 1955 Biberman was told by Wilson and Jarrico that they both had similar problems and felt the same responsibility. The result was that throughout 1954 and 1955 all of Independent's executives (Jarrico, Wilson and Biberman) carried on their duties and withheld the resignations each of them desired to submit. By the end of 1955, by which time it had become clear that the film could not be successful until the alleged conspiracy was either abandoned or enjoined, each of them had become sorely pressed to find remunerative employment to provide for their basic family living requirements.

[Resignations]

In January 1956, before the complaint in the Chicago action was dismissed, Biberman retained the firm of Rosston, Hort and Brussel to institute this action on behalf of both plaintiffs. However, for this purpose, funds had to be secured and a complaint drafted and while efforts along these lines were being carried on the complaint in the Chicago action was dismissed.

Biberman was then advised that his refusal to respond to the interrogatories he had considered irrelevant in the Chicago action had impaired his usefulness to the plaintiff corporation since a similar situation might arise in this action. Under these circumstances he decided that his obligation and those of the other officers and directors now permitted and, indeed, required them to resign and to sever all connections with the plaintiffs. He believed that their resignations would be beneficial rather than damaging to the plaintiffs particularly from the standpoint of minimizing the legal and technical obstacles which might otherwise stand in the way of securing a determination in this action upon the merits with respect to plaintiffs' claims for damages and injunctive relief through which they might realize on their only asset, the motion picture "Salt of the Earth". He discussed the matter with Jarrico and wrote Wilson about it. Both agreed and tendered their resignations.

At the time he resigned there was relatively little business being carried on by either plaintiff. Independent had completed the production of "Salt of the Earth" and was planning no other productions until this action (then in contemplation) was brought to trial. IPC was negotiating with some foreign distributors and renting the film to various public and private groups in the United States, an activity which he knew Lazarus could handle with a minimum of assistance from him during a short transition period.

On May 17, 1956, Biberman resigned from all offices in Independent and on May 6, 1956 he resigned all offices in IPC.

Jarrico who had been a director and secretary-treasurer of Independent from March 31, 1953 and a director and secretary-treasurer of IPC from February 25, 1954 resigned all of those offices on May 31, 1956. Approximately one year prior to his resignation, Jarrico's activities on plaintiffs' behalf had almost ceased. During that year he did continue to maintain their financial records and to handle correspondence with some of their creditors. At various times during 1955 and early in 1956 when Biberman declared his unwillingness to continue as an officer of both plaintiffs Jarrico, although he had continued to remain an officer of both corporations and was aware of their status, felt no inclination to succeed Biberman. Simon Lazarus, who as above stated had been the first president of Independent Productions Corporation, had several times expressed a willingness to resume his former position. Biberman and Jarrico felt that since Lazarus was an experienced and astute business man with considerable knowledge of the business and had been kept informed of its activities through the years, he would be the best choice to take over management of the companies.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

During May 1956, when Biberman was about to relinquish his position as president, Ben Margolis, an attorney, advised Biberman, Jarrico and others that they might have to testify as officers and directors of the plaintiff companies in this action (then in contemplation). He further advised them that their refusal to testify about their political beliefs might be harmful to the plaintiff corporations in the suit and that if they were to invoke the Fifth Amendment in this action the corporations' instant complaint might be dismissed as in the Chicago suit.

They then agreed that they would resign their offices in both companies at once. As far as the actual operation of both corporations was concerned this decision it is said meant very little because Biberman and Jarrico were otherwise gainfully employed elsewhere and performed little or no functions for the plaintiffs.

Except for some casual and sporadic consultation by Lazarus, it is asserted that Biberman and Jarrico at no time since they resigned in May 1956 have determined corporate policies or been consulted with respect thereto, administered or managed corporate business or signed any checks of either corporation.

[Financial Interest in Litigation]

It appears that Jarrico like Biberman will share in any recovery realized from the instant litigation. Jarrico's interest is 5 per cent thereof.

* * *

[Motion]

Based on the foregoing asserted facts plaintiffs now move for an order "pursuant to § 30(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure debarring defendants from taking the depositions of the plaintiffs by Herbert Biberman and Paul Jarrico and vacating all notices of depositions heretofore served upon the attorneys for the plaintiffs by the defendants or any of them to the extent that such notices seek the depositions of the plaintiffs by and through Herbert Biberman and Paul Jarrico as officers, directors or managing agents of the plaintiffs."

["Managing Agents"]

There can be no dispute that neither Biberman nor Jarrico is now an officer or director of plaintiffs. The parties agree (as plaintiffs state in their brief) that there is left "for this court's determination a single question viz: Are Biberman or Jarrico managing agents within the meaning of the Federal Rules?

The approach to the question of who is a managing agent must be pragmatic.[1]

The rules read in pertinent part:

F. R. Civ. P. 26:

"a. When Depositions May be Taken. Any party may take the testimony of any person, including a party, by deposition upon oral examination or written interrogatories for the purpose of discovery or for use as evidence in the action or for both purposes. . . .

. . .

"d. Use of Depositions. At the trial or upon the hearing of a motion or an interlocutory proceeding, any part or all of a deposition, so far as admissible under the rules of evidence, may be used against any party who was present or represented at the taking of the deposition or who had due notice thereof, in accordance with any one of the following provisions:

. . .

"(2) The deposition of a party or of any one who at the time of taking the deposition was an officer, director, or managing agent of a public or private corporation, partnership, or association which is a party may be used by an adverse party for any purpose."

Basically plaintiffs' argument is that the plain meaning of the rules precludes taking the deposition of a corporate party by a witness unless the witness be a "managing agent" of the examined party at the time of the taking of the deposition. The weaknesses of the "plain meaning rule" have been so well and so thoroughly explained as to require no elaboration here.[2] It will suffice to observe that the courts have approached the problem of determining who is a "managing agent" within the purview of the rules on an ad hoc basis, giving nominal approval to the proposition that a corporate party may be examined only through one who at the time of the deposition is its agent.[3] The instant motion will be considered against the background of these decisions.

[1] 4 Moore's Fed. Prac. (2d ed.) p. 1192; Bernstein v. Nederlandsche-Amerikaansche, etc., 15 F. R. D. 37 (S. D. N. Y. 1953).

In Newark Insurance Co. v. Sartain[4] Judge Halbert reviewed the authorities on the meaning of the term "managing agent" as used in F. R. Civ. P. 26(d)(2). He mentioned the absence of any guidance from appellate courts for the district courts to follow in concluding whether witnesses were to be deemed managing agents of other persons.

However, Judge Halbert ruled that given other basic factors, viz., knowledge by the witness of relevant facts and status of the witness as a person other than a common employee, i. e., with at least a consciousness of the problems of management and an incentive to promote the interests of management, the paramount test to be applied is "Can [the witness] be expected to identify himself with the interests of his principal rather than those of the other party?" In this ruling I am in complete accord.

The purpose of Rule 26(d)(2) is to protect a party from the admissions of a disgruntled former employee.[5] In Curry v. States Marine Corporation of Delaware, supra, note 3, Judge Walsh was presented with a motion to vacate the notice to examine the defendant corporation through the person who at the time of occurrence of an accident was master of one of its vessels. At the time of the ruling, the witness was an employee recognized by Judge Walsh as not occupying the conventional status of "managing agent". In denying the motion, Judge Walsh noted the absence of any danger that the witness might through animus make admissions against the moving defendant. He concluded that the witness would identify defendant's interests with his own because the witness was still in defendant's employ as chief mate. He found that the witness was defendant's managing agent at the time of the accident; "he should be the person to explain the defendant's position now, unless defendant has a basis for withholding the confidence it previously placed in him."

Judge Palmieri attained the same result on similar facts in Klop v. United Fruit Company.[6]

On a similar theory, Judge Swaim writing for a majority of the panel in O'Shea v. Jewel Tea Co.[7] affirmed the trial court's holding in effect that a former employee of the defendant was its "managing agent" within the meaning of F. R. Civ. P. 43(b). The witness, one Carlson, was the manager of the defendant's store where the accident occurred. Prior to the trial, the witness left the service of the defendant and at once started working for another company. However, it was obvious at the trial that Carlson "still considered himself a member of the defendant's camp" and the trial court properly found him to be defendant's managing agent and examinable as an adverse (not merely hostile) witness.

Judge Weinfeld has said in a leading case on this subject:[8]

> "A managing agent, as distinguished from one who is merely 'an employee' is a person invested by the corporation with general powers to exercise his judgment and discretion in dealing with corporate matters; he does not act 'in an inferior capacity' under close supervision or direction of 'superior authority.' He must be a person who has 'the interests of the corporation so close to his heart that he could be depended upon to carry out his employer's direction to give testimony at the demand of a party engaged in litigation with the employer.'
>
> "Each situation is governed by its own facts. . . ."

With that realistic and practical backdrop, Biberman and Jarrico are in a very real sense even now in the "employ" of the [2] Cf. Massachusetts Bonding Co. v. United States, 352 U. S. 128, 138.

[3] See Curry v. States Marine Corporation of Delaware, 16 F. R. D. 376 (S. D. N. Y. 1954).
[4] 20 F. R. D. 583 (D. C. N. D. Cal. 1957).
[5] 4 Moore's Fed. Prac. (2d ed.) pp. 1190-1191.
[6] 18 F. R. D. 310 (S. D. N. Y. 1955).
[7] 233 F. 2d 530 (7th Cir. 1956).
[8] Krauss v. Erie R. Co., 16 F. R. D. 126 (S. D. N. Y. 1954). See also Warren v. United States, 17 F. R. D. 389 (S. D. N. Y. 1955).

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

plaintiffs although formal ties are broken. It cannot be denied that they stand ready to serve the plaintiffs should the plaintiffs require their talents. After his resignation as an officer of plaintiffs in May 1956 Biberman actually did so down to as late as February 6, 1957.[9] It is inconceivable on the evidence presented that if a situation arose requiring action by Biberman and Jarrico in furtherance of plaintiffs' interests, they would not gladly take such action. They have unique knowledge of relevant matters. At the time of the acts complained of, they were officers, directors and managing agents of the plaintiff corporations. Plaintiffs cannot now relieve themselves of whatever liabilities accrue through Biberman's and Jarrico's past and present relationships with the corporate entities. To the extent that the plaintiffs' affairs required management since Biberman's and Jarrico's resignations I am satisfied that they participated therein to an extent that for all practical purposes made them "managing agents" of the plaintiffs.

[Order]

The motion is denied.

Settle an order setting a time and place mutually agreeable to counsel for the depositions to proceed.

[¶ 69,376] Affiliated Music Enterprises, Inc. v. Sesac, Inc.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. No. 245—October Term, 1958. Docket No. 25148. Argued April 14, 1959. Decided June 8, 1959.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, Sylvester J. Ryan, Judge.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Monopolies — Monopolization — Relevant Market — Performance Rights in Gospel Music.—In a treble damage action charging a company engaged in the business of acquiring and licensing performance rights in musical compositions with monopolizing the market for the acquisition of performance rights in "gospel music," and purposely driving out of the industry a firm which sought to enter the field, the trial court properly concluded that the relevant market was the performance rights in such "gospel music." That music was found to be distinct from other popular music and without substitutes which would equally satisfy its devotees.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2540.

Monopolies—Monopolization—Power to Control Prices and Exclude Competition—Percentage of Control of Market.—A treble damage action charging a company with monopolizing the licensing of performance rights in "gospel music" was properly dismissed. The plaintiff, a firm which had sought to enter the field by acquiring rights which it intended to exploit by licensing such rights to other licensing organizations, rather than by licensing them directly to users, claimed that it had been purposely driven from the industry. However, the instant litigation was financed by a licensing organization that was even larger than the alleged monopolist. The plaintiff was but the alter ego of a substantial publishing house which was, in turn, affiliated with that larger licensing organization. Against that background of fierce competition, the charges of antitrust violations fell of their own weight. There was no showing that the company had that power over price, or to exclude a competitor, which is the essence of the violations charged. Further, there was a lack of evidence as to the company's position in the market it was alleged to have monopolized. While the performance rights in "gospel music" was properly found to be the relevant market, the popularity of the typical gospel tune is quite short-lived and its performance rights are of value only for a small portion of the copyright term. Thus, there was no evidence of the proportion of currently valuable performance rights owned by the company at any time relevant to the litigation. Also, the company's practices of "pooling" performance rights and offering broadcasters only [9] The notices sought to be vacated originally set the examination dates as July 25, August 13 and October 26, 1956 and March 13 and 15, 1957.

"conglomerate" licenses authorizing the performance of all the compositions it controlled did not, of themselves, tend to prove that it had monopoly power in the field of gospel music because such music comprised only a small portion of the company's "pool."

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2530.10, 2530.40.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Pooling of Copyrights and Sharing of Revenues—Blanket Licensing—Legality.—In a treble damage action charging a company with monopolizing the licensing of performance rights in "gospel music," its practices of "pooling" performance rights assigned to it by publishing houses and offering to broadcasters only "conglomerate" licenses authorizing the performance of all the compositions it controlled had no relevance to the litigation. Those practices did not tend to prove that the company had monopoly power in the field of gospel music, and there was no showing that they operated to the injury of the plaintiff or otherwise restrained its competition with the company. The validity of those practices, in the abstract and apart from their effect on the plaintiff, was not before the court. Therefore, the court expressed no opinion as to whether those practices might be held lawful or unlawful in a suit by the Government or some other private plaintiff.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2013.880.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Damages Recoverable—Sufficiency of Proof of Damages.—In a treble damage action charging a company with monopolizing the licensing of performance rights in "gospel music," the plaintiff, a firm which claimed that it had been purposely driven from the field, suggested no manner in which it had been injured or its competition with the company restrained by the company's practices. The company's "pooling" of performance rights assigned to it by publishing houses and its offering to broadcasters only "conglomerate" licenses authorizing the performance of all the compositions it controlled played no part in the company's winning back of a number of publishers who had left it and signed contracts with the plaintiff. Those publishers elected to cancel those contracts and remain with the company as a result of its fair and open salesmanship and its outbidding of the plaintiff's offer. As far as the court could see, the company's practices presented no hindrance to the plaintiff's acquisition and marketing of performance rights in gospel music.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.450, 9011.250, 9011.565, 9041.

For the plaintiff-appellant and appellee: Irving Lemov (Michael Halperin and A. Halsey Cowan of Halperin, Morris, Granett & Cowan, on the brief), all of New York, N. Y.

For the defendant-appellee and appellant: Thomas F. Daly of Lord, Day and Lord (Saul L. Sherman of Lord, Day & Lord, on the brief), all of New York, N. Y.

Affirming a decision of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 68,938; for a prior decision of the District Court, see 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,060.

Before: CLARK, Chief Judge, and SWAN and MOORE, Circuit Judges.

Affiliated Music Enterprises, Inc., and Sesac, Inc., each appeal from a decision, D. C. S. D. N. Y. [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,938], 160 F. Supp. 865, dismissing the former's claim for treble damages and injunctive relief for violations of the antitrust laws and the latter's counterclaim for unfair competition. Affirmed.

[Treble Damage Action]

CLARK, Chief Judge [In full text]: In the court below Affiliated Music Enterprises, Inc., charged defendant, Sesac, Inc., with violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act and § 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2, 14, and Sesac charged AME with several instances of unfair competition. From Judge Ryan's decision [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,938], D. C. S. D. N. Y., 160 F. Supp. 865, dismissing the claims of each against the other, both parties appeal.

["Gospel Music" Trade]

Sesac is a family corporation owned and controlled by Paul and Ruth Heinecke. It is one of three major licensing organizations for music performance rights in this country. The others, each larger than Sesac, are the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers (ASCAP) and Broadcast

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Music Incorporated (BMI). These companies acquire exclusive performance rights to copyrighted music from owners of copyrights, police infringements of these rights, and license others to perform the music. In the case of Sesac, at least, these licenses are sold principally to radio and television broadcasters; and it generally offers them only blanket or conglomerate licenses authorizing the performance of all works it controls. The copyright owners are paid royalties out of these licensing proceeds computed on a rather complex allocation system.

AME, the plaintiff below, was organized in 1953; it sought to enter the performing rights field by acquiring rights which it intended to exploit not by direct licensing to users as do Sesac, ASCAP, and BMI, but by exclusive licensing to one of these three organizations. Half its stock is owned by Jean and Julian Aberbach, and the remainder by Kurt A. Jadassohn. The Aberbach brothers are owners of Hill & Range Songs, Inc., a large music publisher; and Jadassohn is a former officer of Sesac.

While with Sesac, Jadassohn initiated an extensive campaign of acquiring performance rights to "gospel music." This is a type of music which is apparently quite popular in the South and in rural areas throughout the country. It is characterized by lyrics dealing with spiritual and religious subjects in a personal, homely vein sung to distinctly secular rhythms and tunes. By 1953 Sesac held rights of more than a score of gospel music publishers under contracts terminable at ten-year intervals. Many of these publishers had personally dealt only with Jadassohn in their business relations with Sesac. In AME's sole effort to break into the performing rights industry Jadassohn canvassed a number of them, and on promises of increasing their royalties and various representations about Sesac's financial condition he succeeded in acquiring blanket assignments of performing rights from fifteen of seventeen publishers he solicited. In fact, the publishers would soon have received increased royalties in any event, since, as Jadassohn knew, Sesac had just negotiated a license agreement with the television industry, which had theretofore been carried along gratis by all three performing rights organizations. When word reached defendant of AME's activities it, too, sent representatives into the field. Ultimately, after a meeting between representatives of the publishers, Jadassohn, and a Sesac representative, all but one of the fifteen who had signed with AME elected to cancel those contracts and remain with Sesac.

[Alleged Monopoly—Exclusion from Trade]

In the court below and on this appeal plaintiff's principal contention is that Sesac monopolized the market for the acquisition of rights for the performance of gospel music and purposely drove AME out of the industry to maintain its position of monopoly and to restrain competition in that market in violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2. It also charges that Sesac's pooling of its performance rights and its practice of granting broadcasters only conglomerate licenses covering all rights its owns are prohibited by the Sherman and Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 14.

[Competitive Struggle]

Far from showing a restraint of trade or a monopolization, however, the evidence adduced below reveals only a noteworthy competitive struggle between two giants in the performing rights industry. Judge Ryan found that AME was but the alter ego of the Aberbach brothers' substantial publishing house Hill & Range Songs, Inc., which was in turn closely affiliated with BMI. This finding is amply supported by the evidence. AME was financed wholly by loans from Hill & Range and had only $100 of paid-in capital, while its office was a desk in the Hill & Range office. While soliciting performance rights for AME, Jadassohn also signed up publication rights for Hill & Range. Moreover, under the Hill & Range-BMI contract in force from 1949 to 1955, Hill & Range and the Aberbachs personally covenanted that all performance rights they might acquire would be assigned to BMI unless previously assigned to another performing rights organization. And BMI itself has financed this litigation.

[Absence of Monopoly Power]

Against this background of fierce competition between BMI and Sesac, AME's charges of antitrust violations must fall of their own weight. There is a complete absence of any showing that Sesac has that power over price or to exclude a competitor which is the essence of the violations charged. United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,369], 351 U. S. 377, 391; United States v. Griffith [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,246], 334 U. S. 100, 107; United States v. United Shoe Machinery Corp. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,436], D. C. Mass., 110 F. Supp. 295, 297, 342, affirmed United Shoe Machinery Corp. v. United States [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,755], 347 U. S. 521. The temporary success of AME's raid on Sesac's publishers suggests that these publishers do not feel closely tied to defendant on a permanent basis; and Sesac's ultimate thwarting of AME's efforts was accomplished not by the force of its existing contracts or by economic coercion, but by fair and open salesmanship and an outbidding of plaintiff's offers to the publishers.

It is significant that AME was able to retain the largest of the publishers it initially signed up, despite the power it asserts defendant has; and it retained this publisher simply by offering it favorable terms, including a guarantee of the AME contract by the financially sound Hill & Range Songs, Inc., which it did not make available to the smaller firms.

[Relevant Market]

The record below similarly lacks evidence even as to Sesac's position in the market that it is alleged to have monopolized. Judge Ryan's findings do seem to support the conclusion that performance rights in gospel music constitute the relevant market for purposes of this case. Thus he found the music distinct from other popular music, and without substitutes which will equally satisfy its devotees. But the popularity of the typical gospel tune is quite short-lived, and its performance rights of value only for a small portion of the copyright term. There is no evidence of the proportion of currently valuable performance rights Sesac owned at any time relevant to this litigation.

["Pooling" of Performance Rights]

Moreover, Sesac's pooling of the performance rights assigned to it and its offering to broadcasters of only conglomerate licenses authorizing the performance of all works it controls, which AME attacks as per se violations of the Sherman and Clayton Acts, have, we feel, no relevance at all to this litigation. As Sesac's pool of performance rights includes all its acquisitions, of which rights to gospel music comprise only a small portion of the total, these practices do not by themselves tend to prove that Sesac has monopoly power in the field of gospel music. And AME has not suggested any manner in which they operated to its injury or otherwise restrained its competition with Sesac. Clearly they played no part in Sesac's successful winning back of the fourteen publishers AME temporarily acquired. AME's own proposal to the publishers was that it would affiliate them with the even bigger performance-rights pools of ASCAP or BMI. So far as we can see, they present no present hindrance to the acquisition or marketing of performance rights by AME. The validity of Sesac's pooling of performance rights and conglomerate licensing practices in the abstract and apart from their effect on AME is not before us; we express no opinion as to whether in a suit by the Government or some other private plaintiff they might be held lawful or unlawful.

[Counterclaim—Unfair Competition]

Finally, we think the court below correctly dismissed Sesac's counterclaim for unfair competition. It was shown below that Jadassohn made use of his knowledge of Sesac's method of allocating royalties to publishers and of the names of those publishers. The trial judge also found that Poklitar, Jadassohn's successor at Sesac, kept AME informed of defendant's efforts to forestall the AME publisher raid. None of the information Jadassohn carried away with him, however, partakes of the nature of a trade secret. The publisher's names are a matter of public record in the files of the copyright office; and as the 1950 consent decree against ASCAP indicates, a policy of effective competition favors broad knowledge throughout the industry of the terms and systems of allocation of royalties to publishers followed by the performance-rights organizations. United States v. American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, Civ. No. 13-95, D. C. S. D. N. Y., 1950-1951 CCH TRADE CASES ¶ 62,595, § XIII B. See Timberg, The Antitrust Aspects of Merchandising Modern Music, 19 Law & Contemp. Prob. 294, 311-315. Finally, Sesac has shown no damages from Poklitar's activities.

Affirmed.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[¶ 69,377] Royster Drive-In Theatres, Inc. v. American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, Inc., et al.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. No. 200—October Term, 1958. Docket No. 25379. Argued March 11, 1959. Decided June 8, 1959.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, THOMAS F. MURPHY, Judge, dismissing the complaint for triple damages and an injunction in an action brought under the antitrust laws. Findings of fact and conclusions of law below not reported. Affirmed.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Competitive Bidding for Exhibition of Motion Pictures—Legality—Sufficiency as Termination of Conspiracy.—A motion picture exhibitor, in a treble damage action charging a competing exhibitor and seven major distributors with conspiring to monopolize and with monopolizing the exhibition of films in Peekskill, New York, by withholding from the exhibitor and awarding to the competing exhibitor the bulk of the more desirable films, failed to sustain its burden of proving the continuance of a conspiracy that was found to have existed for less than a month in 1950. The exhibitor, seeking damages for a later period, contended that the trial court erred in holding that the conspiracy was terminated when the exhibitor "demanded and was accorded the right to bid competitively" for pictures. The reviewing court noted that the exhibitor could not be heard to condemn a system of competitive bidding as a per se violation of law. Not only was competitive bidding available to the exhibitor, but that bidding "was truly competitive and neither exhibitor knew the offers made by the other exhibitor." Such a system of competitive bidding, although it might tend to raise the costs of all competitors and place a premium on experience, judgment, and financial resources, was clearly valid so long as each theatre could bid in an atmosphere of free and open competition and the films were sold at a fair and reasonable rental. The courts could not be required to place the exhibitor in a preferred or privileged position, superior to that of its competitors.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005, 2005.503, 2005.548; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2520, 2610.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Conspiracy to Withhold More Desirable Motion Pictures from Exhibitor—Lack of "Demand" as Defense to Damage Action.—A motion picture exhibitor's failure to demand from distributors more desirable films was fatal to its claim that the distributors and a competing exhibitor had conspired to monopolize the exhibition of pictures by withholding such films from the exhibitor while awarding them to its competitor. As the reviewing court had stated in a previous case: "[P]laintiffs cannot recover damages on account of any failure to obtain feature pictures for first-run exhibition unless they made demand for that of which they now claim they were deprived by the conspiracy." In the instant case, the distributors had, at the exhibitor's request, inaugurated, withdrawn, re-instated, and again terminated competitive bidding for the first-run exhibition of films. It was found that the exhibitor, despite the opportunity for competitive bidding, had avoided such an arrangement when it thought it could get pictures in any other way. Its failure to make any demand of any distributor which was ever refused indicated that the exhibitor was satisfied with the arrangements it had voluntarily made. Also, a clear demand for more desirable films—presumably accompanied by a demand for competitive bidding—was required by the fact that the exhibitor's competitor had larger daily gross earnings and a distributor, in placing in the exhibitor's theatre a top-grade picture (normally rented on a basis which included a percentage of gross earnings), would be giving up a monetary advantage.

See Combination and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2520.

For the appellant: Francis T. Anderson of Gray, Schaffer & Malloy (Cormac J. Malloy of Gray, Schaffer & Malloy, on the brief), all of Philadelphia, Pa.

For the appellees: Albert C. Bickford of Simpson, Thacher & Bartlett; Frederick W. R. Pride of Royall, Koegel, Harris & Caskey; E. Compton Timberlake and Myles J. Lane of Schwartz & Frohlich (Whitney North Seymour, Jr., of Simpson, Thacher & Bartlett; John F. Caskey and Leonard Stecher of Royall, Koegel, Harris & Caskey; Bernard E. Kalman and Louis Phillips; and Everett A. Frohlich and Bernard R. Sorkin of Schwartz & Frohlich, on the brief), all of New York, N. Y.

Before: WASHINGTON,* WATERMAN and MOORE, Circuit Judges.

[Treble Damage Action]

WASHINGTON, Circuit Judge [In full text]: This is an action brought under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 26 Stat. 209 (1890), as amended, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2 (1952). Plaintiff-appellant sought treble damages and an injunction under Sections 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 737 (1914), 15 U. S. C. 15, 26 (1952).

[Monopoly Charged]

Plaintiff-appellant is the operator of a motion picture theatre in Peekskill, New York, known as the Peekskill. Defendants-appellees are (1) American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, Inc. (AB-PT), the operator of the Paramount motion picture theatre in Peekskill and a competitor of the plaintiff, and (2) seven major motion picture distributors—Paramount, Warner Brothers, Fox, Loew's, RKO, Columbia, and United Artists. Plaintiff alleged that defendants had conspired to monopolize and in fact had actually monopolized the motion picture exhibition business in Peekskill by having wrongfully withheld from plaintiff and having awarded to plaintiff's competitor the great bulk of the more desirable motion pictures.

[Judgment of Trial Court]

The case was tried before the court without a jury. At the close of plaintiff's case, defendants moved for a dismissal of the complaint and entry of judgment for defendants under Fed. R. Civ. P. 41(b). The judge made findings of facts and conclusions of law and entered a formal order dismissing the complaint and entering judgment for the defendants. This appeal followed.

[Facts]

Briefly, the basic findings of the trial court were as follows:

April 1950-September 30, 1950: On April 5, 1950, AB-PT, pursuant to the divestment decree in a civil antitrust action involving Paramount Pictures,[1] sold the Peekskill Theatre. Plaintiff was the purchaser. Previously, AB-PT had owned both the Paramount and Peekskill Theatres in Peekskill. The Paramount Theatre had always been a top-class theatre and had always shown top quality films. Prior to April 6, the Peekskill had been in a state of disrepair and had generally exhibited slough pictures, reissues, repeats, and C-grade films. Following the purchase of the Peekskill, plaintiff began to repair and renovate it.

The trial court found that from April 17, 1950, until May 15, 1950, the defendants-appellees "agreed and conspired with each other to withhold from plaintiff's Peekskill Theatre a fair and reasonable supply of pictures," the purpose and effect of the conspiracy being "to prevent plaintiff's theatre from competing effectively with the Paramount Theatre * * * during such period." It may be noted parenthetically, however, that plaintiff seeks damages only for a later period, namely, from September 30, 1950, to August 4, 1954, the date this suit was commenced.

On May 15, 1950, plaintiff retained an agent to license and book its motion pictures. The agent booked various pictures for the plaintiff during the summer of 1950. A few days prior to September 15, 1950, plaintiff and its agent advised AB-PT that it wanted a share of "A" films, and that if it did not get an "A" product it was going to ask the distributors for competitive bidding. On September 15, 1950, the agent

* Sitting by designation pursuant to 28 U. S. C. § 294(a).

[1] United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,473], 85 F. Supp. 881 (S. D. N. Y. 1949), on remand from Supreme Court [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244], 334 U. S. 131 (1948), affirming in part 66 F. Supp. 323 [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,470] and 70 F. Supp. 53 [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,526] (S. D. N. Y. 1946).

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

wrote letters to several of the distributor defendants requesting either a split of product or competitive bidding. The distributors thereupon inaugurated competitive bidding and offers were solicited from plaintiff and AB-PT on some pictures. On September 30, 1950, plaintiff finally completed renovating the Peekskill.

October 1, 1950-December 1951: In October 1950, the plaintiff and its agent met with AB-PT and agreed that the Peekskill Theatre would try out an arrangement to split the film product, under which the plaintiff would negotiate for the pictures which had played or would play at the Stratford Theatre (owned by AB-PT) in Poughkeepsie. Because of this arrangement, plaintiff shortly thereafter withdrew its requests to the distributors for competitive bidding. For the next six months, plaintiff was quite happy with the film-split arrangement. It requested no different product for the Peekskill Theatre.

In April 1951, AB-PT advised plaintiff that the Paramount Theatre in Peekskill needed more pictures and would start taking some from the Stratford product. The arrangement was therefore terminated.[2]

December 1951-October 1952: In December 1951 and January 1952, plaintiff again wrote to the various distributor-defendants requesting competitive bidding. Each distributor afforded plaintiff an opportunity to bid competitively for each picture for first-run exhibition in Peekskill. For several months the bidding continued. There was no evidence that AB-PT ever overbid for any picture.

In April 1952, plaintiff again approached AB-PT in order to work out some "split" arrangement whereby competitive bidding would once more be eliminated. AB-PT and plaintiff again agreed to a split of product, and shortly thereafter plaintiff notified the distributor defendants that it wished to terminate competitive bidding. By this time plaintiff's economic position had become extremely difficult, partly because of the increase of television sets in the Peekskill area during the period of plaintiff's operation, partly because of a number of changes in the competitive situation in Peekskill such as the opening of new drive-in theatres, and partly because of the increase of plaintiff's expenses after the renovation of the Peekskill during a period of declining grosses. Finally, on October 11, 1952, plaintiff closed the Peekskill Theatre and has never operated it since that time.

[Basic Findings]

From the facts adduced, the court made four basic findings:

(1) There was no evidence of any vertical or horizontal conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act after May 15, 1950.

(2) Whatever conspiracy may have existed up until September 15, 1950, was fully terminated "when plaintiff demanded and was accorded the right to bid competitively for the pictures of the defendant distributor." In this regard, not only was competitive bidding[3] "available to the plaintiff at all times during the period of plaintiff's operation for each picture of each defendant-distributor," but also such bidding "was truly competitive and neither exhibitor knew the offers made by the other exhibitor." Despite the opportunity for competitive bidding, however, plaintiff avoided such an arrangement at all times during its operation when it thought it could get pictures for exhibition in any other way.

(3) Apart from the actual periods of competitive bidding, plaintiff never com-

[2] The trial court stated that no evidence was adduced as to the manner in which licenses for the exhibition of motion pictures in Peekskill were negotiated during the period from April 1951 to December 1951. Actually, however, the testimony seems to indicate that during that period plaintiff's agent made inquiry of AB-PT from time to time as to the pictures which the latter wanted, and those it did not want, for the Paramount Theatre. The information was supplied to him. The matter does not appear controlling under our view of the case.

[3] The court said that "Competitive bidding is a fair and reasonable method of resolving conflicting demands of competing exhibitors for a license to exhibit a particular picture or pictures on the same run." The court further defined competitive bidding as a process by which

"a distributor advises each exhibitor of the picture for which offers are solicited. Each exhibitor independently decides the amount which it is willing to offer for the right to exhibit the particular picture and submits an offer to the distributor. The competing offers are evaluated by the distributor and the license to exhibit the picture is awarded to the exhibitor whose offer is believed to present the most satisfactory licensing opportunity."

municated with any distributor concerning the licensing or booking of any motion picture, either before the requests for competitive bidding were made or after the requests for competitive bidding were withdrawn. Indeed, the court found no evidence that, after the renovation of the theatre, "plaintiff * * * ever made any demand to any distributor, which demand was refused." This failure to make a demand was therefore "fatal to the plaintiff's claim" since it clearly indicated that "the arrangements voluntarily made by plaintiff were satisfactory to it."

(4) Finally, plaintiff "failed to prove that it suffered any damage as the result of any act of the defendants or any of them in violation of law, and * * * to prove the amount of its damages, if any."

I.

[Continuance of Conspiracy]

Appellant claims that the court erred in finding that the conspiracy which existed up to May 15, 1950, was confined to that period. Therefore, appellant argues, the court also was in error in finding that (1) there was no unlawful conspiracy after May 15; (2) even if such conspiracy existed, it terminated when competitive bidding was allowed; and (3) even if a conspiracy continued, it was not the proximate cause of any legal injury to plaintiff giving rise to any claim for damages. Appellant finally claims that findings relating to the period from April 1952 were inadequate.

Our review of the record, however, does not lead us to the conclusion that the trial court's findings of fact are clearly erroneous. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 52(a). On the contrary, we think they are—over-all—adequate and soundly based, and certainly so as to the portions of which appellant complains. Here, as in a somewhat similar case recently before this court, "the plaintiff had the burden of proving that the conspiracy in fact did continue * * *" Webster Rosewood Corp. v. Schine Chain Theatres, Inc. [1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,282], 263 F. 2d 533, 535 (1959). The District Court could properly find that the burden was not sustained.

II.

[Competitive Bidding]

Appellant also contends that the court below was in error in holding on the facts before it that the allowance of competitive bidding by the distributor-defendants was sufficient to terminate any conspiracy that may have existed. Appellant points to United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,244], 334 U. S. 131, 164 (1948), in which a system of competitive bidding originally ordered by the three-judge District Court in its decree was reversed by the Supreme Court in favor of divestiture.

Such a contention has been raised in other cases and has been rejected. As the Seventh Circuit has indicated: "[T]he reasons assigned by the Supreme Court for rejecting the elaborate system of competitive bidding, applicable to a nation-wide industry, * * * [bear] little relation to a situation where all competing exhibitors are in the same restricted locality." Loew's, Inc. v. Milwaukee Towne Corp. [1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,392], 201 F. 2d 19, 24 (7th Cir. 1952), cert. denied, 345 U. S. 951 (1953). We recognize that the system of competitive bidding has serious drawbacks for competing exhibitors. It places a premium on experience, judgment, and financial resources. Costs for all competitors tend to rise, and in the end all may suffer. See Cassady, Impact of the Paramount Decision on Motion Picture Distribution and Price Making, 31 So. Calif. L. Rev. 150, 161-64 (1958). The so-called "split" system, whereby exhibitors divide the list of available pictures and then approach the distributors separately on that basis, enables them to purchase films at lower prices. Whatever the legality of this system—and we are not called upon to deal with that issue here—it probably tends to keep more exhibitors in business than would be the case if competitive bidding were the universal rule. See id. at 164-65.

Plaintiff-appellant apparently rejects both these systems—the split and the competitive bid. What it would have in their stead is far from clear. Its primary object in this suit, of course, is to collect damages from the defendants, blaming on them the collapse of its theatrical enterprise in Peeks-kill.[4] This it cannot do unless it shows a violation of law, and a causal connection between the violation and its losses. Clearly, the appellant cannot be heard to condemn a system of competitive bidding as a per se violation of law. Appellant is only entitled to be placed in the same competitive situation as its competitors. Yet, if its reasoning were carried to its logical conclusion, the courts would be required to place it in a preferred or privileged position, superior to that of its competitors. This we cannot do. See Milwaukee Towne Corp. v. Loew's, Inc. [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,891], 190 F. 2d 561, 571 (7th Cir. 1951), cert. denied, 342 U. S. 909 (1952); Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,577], 162 F. 2d 520, 524 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 332 U. S. 817 (1947). A system of competitive bidding is clearly valid if the films are sold at a fair and reasonable rental. So long as each theatre may bid for the films in an atmosphere of free and open competition, that is all that is required. See Bigelow v. Loew's, Inc. [1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,393], 201 F. 2d 25, 28 (7th Cir. 1952), cert. denied, 345 U. S. 950 (1953); Milwaukee Towne Corp. v. Loew's, Inc. [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,336], 139 F. Supp. 809, 812 (N. D. Ill. 1956). Here, the court found that the competitive bidding "was truly competitive and neither exhibitor knew the offers made by the other exhibitor." As we cannot say that this finding by the court was clearly erroneous, the system of competitive bidding in the present case must be upheld. See Rushing v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corp. [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,832], 214 F. 2d 542, 544 (5th Cir. 1954).

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

III.

[Lack of "Demand"]

Finally, appellant complains that its failure to make a demand to the distributors should not be considered fatal to its claim. It presents two reasons for this position: (1) the making of demands would not have had any effect, and (2) the policy of the distributor-defendants was to license "a good picture to the Peekskill only if and when they were unable to get the picture played at the Paramount Theatre." The record contains no adequate evidentiary basis for these contentions, though the record does indicate that the Paramount Theatre had larger daily gross earnings than appellant's Peekskill, and hence that a top-grade picture (normally rented on a basis which includes a percentage of gross earnings) would produce more for the distributor if placed in the Paramount rather than in the Peekskill. Certainly, if a distributor is to be forced to give up a monetary advantage of that sort, he must be confronted with a clear demand—presumably accompanied by an offer of competitive bidding. Perhaps on occasion circumstances may excuse the lack of demand. Cf. Congress Building Corp. v. Loew's, Inc. [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,725], 246 F. 2d 587, 596, 597 (7th Cir. 1957). But such is not the case here. As we have previously held, and recently reiterated:

> "[P]laintiffs cannot recover damages on account of any failure to obtain feature pictures for first-run exhibition unless they made demand for that of which they now claim they were deprived by the conspiracy."

J. J. Theatres, Inc. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,757], 212 F. 2d 840, 845 (2d Cir. 1954), quoted and followed in Webster Rosewood Corp. v. Schine Chain Theatres, Inc. [1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,282], 263 F. 2d 533, 536 (2d Cir. 1959); accord, Milwaukee Towne Corp. Loew's, Inc. [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,891], 190 F. 2d 561, 568 (7th Cir. 1951), cert. denied, 342 U. S. 909 (1952).

[Judgment Affirmed]

For these reasons, the judgment below must be Affirmed.

---

[4] The trial court's finding of a conspiracy in the initial period before September 30, 1950, appears to have been largely based on evidence that defendants followed like policies with respect to appellant, i.e., each distributor was unwilling to negotiate for a particular film unless and until notified that the Paramount Theatre did not wish to show it. No cross-appeal was taken from the judgment, and appellees do not contest this finding in this court. With respect to the defendant AB-PT, there is little or no evidence that it sought to drive appellant out of business; rather, it appears to have been interested in maintaining its own theatre as the leading one in the community.

[¶ 69,378] Leo O. Johnson, an individual doing business as Johnson Hair and Scalp Clinic v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. No. 17411. Dated May 21, 1959. Petition for rehearing denied, July 21, 1959.

Petition for Review of an Order of the Federal Trade Commission.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Unfair Practices—False Advertising—Misrepresenting Medicinal or Curative Properties of Hair Preparation.—A Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting the misrepresentation of do-it-yourself kits and clinic treatments as effective cures for baldness and dandruff was affirmed on the basis of the doctrines announced in Mueller v. United States, 1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,219.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5081.813; False Advertising, Vol. 2, ¶ 6005; and FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611.55.

For the petitioner: James I. McCain, New Orleans, La.

For the respondent: J. B. Truly, Attorney, Federal Trade Commission, and James E. Corkey, Assistant General Counsel, Federal Trade Commission, both of Washington, D. C.

Affirming and enforcing a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order in Dkt. 6497.

Before RIVES, CAMERON and JONES, Circuit Judges.

[False Advertising]

PER CURIAM [In full text]: We find no such differences in fact as distinguish this case from Mueller v. United States, 5th Cir. 1958 [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,219] 262 F. 2d 443. We adhere to the doctrines there announced. The order of the Commission is affirmed and will be enforced.

Affirmed.

CAMERON, Circuit Judge, dissenting.

[¶ 69,379] United States v. Consolidated Laundries Corporation, et al.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. October Term, 1958. Argued May 5, 1959. Decided May 18, 1959. Docket No. 25724.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, EDMUND L. PALMIERI, Judge.

Case No. 1316 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Appellate Review—Appealability of Order Adjusting Record.—In a criminal action in which various firms and individuals in the linen supply industry were found guilty of violating Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, the Government's motion to dismiss an appeal from an order denying a motion for the filing, certification, and transmittal of a supplemental record on appeal was granted. An order merely adjusting the record is not a final judgment from which a separate appeal lies; the error, if any, could be easily corrected in the appeals proper.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8029.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Appellate Review—Sentences—Record on Appeal—"Pre-Sentence" Reports—Transmittal Under Seal.—Various firms and individuals found guilty of restraining and monopolizing trade in linen supplies were granted, in part, a cross-motion for an order directing the unsealing of certain papers and documents before the district court, and directing the transmittal of those documents and papers as a supplemental record on appeal. All documents submitted to the trial judge would be open and unsealed, except the pre-sentence recommendations and reports received by the judge after conviction. After trial memoranda have served their purpose, there is no reason why they should not then become a part of the files of the case open to all parties for any action they think appropriate. On the other hand, pre-sentence reports received in confidence by the judge after conviction, to assist him in the task of fixing a just punishment, stand on a different basis. However, those reports could be transmitted to the appellate court under seal if the defendants desired to assign error involving them.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8029.880.

For the appellants: Whitney North Seymour of Simpson, Thacher & Bartlett (Halperin, Natanson, Shivitz, Scholer & Steingut; Cahill, Gordon, Reindel & Ohl; Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison; Mervin C. Pollak; and Rosenman, Goldmark, Colin & Kaye, on the brief), all of New York, N. Y.

For the appellee: Richard B. O'Donnell, Chief, Antitrust Division, Department of Justice, New York, N. Y. (Richard A. Solomon, Henry Geller, Morris F. Klein, and John D. Swartz, Attorneys, Antitrust Division, Department of Justice, on the brief).

For prior decisions of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,077, 68,976, 68,975, 68,935, and 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,787.

Before: CLARK, Chief Judge, WATERMAN, Circuit Judge, and GALSTON, District Judge.

Appellee, United States of America, moves to dismiss an appeal from an order denying a motion for the filing, certification, and transmittal of a supplemental record on appeal, and appellants, Consolidated Laundries Corporation et al., cross-move for an order consolidating this appeal with pending appeals from their judgments of conviction, directing the unsealing of certain papers and documents before the district court, and directing their transmission as a supplemental record on appeal.

[Record on Appeal]

PER CURIAM [In full text]: The motion to dismiss this appeal must be granted, as an order merely adjusting the record is not a final judgment from which a separate appeal lies and the error, if any, can be easily corrected in the appeals proper. United States v. Knight, 3 Cir., 162 F. 2d 809; Dempsey v. Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, 7 Cir., 131 F. 2d 103, certiorari denied 318 U. S. 769; Belt v. Holton, D. C. Cir., 197 F. 2d 579. The cross-motion is granted to the extent that in the main appeals from the judgments of conviction all documents submitted to the trial judge will be open and unsealed and transmitted to our clerk under our Rule 11(a), except the pre-sentence recommendations and reports received by the judge after conviction; these latter may, however, be transmitted to us sealed if appellants desire to assign error involving them.

[Secrecy of Proceedings]

In general it appears to be sound public policy to avoid secret judicial proceedings in the course of trial so far as possible; it will promote confidence merely to avoid the suspicions which always attend secrecy. The late Arthur T. Vanderbilt felt so strongly about this that he was instrumental in persuading the Advisory Committee on Rules of Criminal Procedure to recommend a rule forbidding ex parte trial briefs, which, however, the Supreme Court declined to accept, apparently fearing it a reflection on trial judges. Nothing daunted he carried his case to the Judicial Conference of the United States, which, upon report of its study committee,

> "disapproved the practice, prevalent in some districts, of trial judges in criminal cases receiving from the attorney on one side a brief or trial memorandum that has not been furnished to the attorney on the other side, and recommended the immediate discontinuance of such practice." Rep. of Jud. Conf. of Senior Circuit Judges, Oct. 1-4, 1946, page 21.

In Vanderbilt's lively account of this episode in Cases and Materials on Modern Procedure and Judicial Administration 22 (1952) he says, "Another battle for the right to a fair trial had been won." Here we do not need to go as far as he would in limiting trial court discretion to say that, in any event after trial memoranda have served their initial function, there is no reason why they should not then become a part of the files of the case open to all parties for any action they think appropriate. On the other hand, pre-sentence reports received in confidence by the judge, after conviction has been had, to assist him in the difficult task of fixing the just punishment stand on a clearly different basis. Williams v. New York, 337 U. S. 241; Friedman v. United States, 8 Cir., 200 F. 2d 690, 697, certiorari denied 345 U. S. 926; Stephan v. United States, 6 Cir., 133 F. 2d 87, 100, certiorari denied 318 U. S. 781; Fed. R. Crim. P. 32.

[Judgment]

The motion to dismiss the appeal is granted. The cross-motion is granted in part and to the extent herein indicated.

[¶ 69,380] Leo Feist, Inc., Crawford Music Corporation, and Williamson Music, Inc. v. The Lew Tendler Tavern, Inc. and Muse-Art Corporation.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. No. 12,861. Argued May 27, 1959. Filed June 5, 1959.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. JOHN W. LORD, JR., District Judge.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Antitrust Violations as Defense to Copyright Infringement Action—Alleged Conspiracy to Monopolize Trade in Musical Compositions. —A trial court properly rendered judgment in favor of three publishers of musical compositions whose copyrights had been infringed by a restaurateur and a corporation engaged in transmitting and furnishing music to various businesses. Although the infringers' answer alleged that the publishers had combined and conspired with others to monopolize the field of musical compositions in violation of the antitrust laws, no evidence was offered in support of that allegation; therefore, the reviewing court did not decide the point. The trial court had pointed out, however, that it was settled that such collateral attack is not permissible in a copyright infringement action.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9042.100.

For the appellants: Ronald N. Rutenberg, Philadelphia, Pa.

For the appellees: George E. Beechwood, Philadelphia, Pa.

Affirming a judgment of the U. S. District Court, Eastern District of Pennsylvania, 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,136.

Before GOODRICH, KALODNER and STALEY, Circuit Judges.

Opinion of the Court

[Copyright Infringement]

PER CURIAM [In full text]: In this case the plaintiffs have recovered judgment against the defendants for an infringement of copyright 17 U. S. C. § 1(e) (1952). The matter was thoroughly discussed in an opinion by the district judge to whom the case was tried [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,136], 162 F. Supp. 129 (E. D. Pa. 1958), and we shall affirm.

It was found as a fact that four musical compositions were publicly performed for profit on the premises of Lew Tendler Tavern, Inc., and that no permission for this performance was given by the copyright owners. Tendler was a subscriber to the services of Muse-Art Corporation which transmits music played on records to its patrons by private telephone wire. The customers pay for the service, but may turn the music off or on at will. Tendler's is a restaurant to which members of the public may resort for food and drink.

It is true that Muse-Art did not broadcast its music directly to the public, but it did send it to Tendler for the purpose of having it played to Tendler's customers as and when Tendler wished so to entertain them. Rendition of a musical composition under these circumstances is a public performance for profit by Muse-Art as well as Tendler. The district judge correctly so held.

Point was made that it was not proved that on the night in question the music may not have come from Muse-Art, but may have come through the restaurant's loudspeaker from a radio. But there was no evidence one way or the other that there were musical facilities other than Muse-Art available in Tendler's and there was positive testimony that there were not such pauses in the music program either by or for commercials as are found in radio programs. There was sufficient support for the trial court's conclusion that the compositions heard in Tendler's came from music "piped" in by Muse-Art.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Antitrust Issue]

There was raised in the answer an allegation concerning violation of anti-trust law by plaintiffs. No evidence was offered on the point; the district judge did not decide it and neither do we.

[Judgment Affirmed]

The judgment of the district court will be affirmed.

[¶ 69,381] Reines Distributors, Inc. v. Admiral Corporation; Admiral Credit Corporation; Admiral Distributing Corp. (Metropolitan Division); Admiral Distributors Metropolitan Division of Admiral Corp.; and Admiral Corporation New York Distributing Division, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil Action No. 143-263. Filed June 9, 1959.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Where Suit May Be Brought—Proper Judicial District—Test of Venue—"Transacting Business."—A Delaware corporation engaged in financing distributors and dealers in household appliances, while qualified to do business only in Illinois, was properly sued in the Southern District of New York because it was "transacting business" there. Section 12 of the Clayton Act provides that a suit under the antitrust laws may be brought against a corporation not only in the judicial district of which it is an inhabitant, but also in any district where it may be "found" or "transacts business." The expression "transacts business" was intended to broaden the choice of forum previously available to plaintiffs in antitrust actions, in contrast to the narrower concepts of "found" or "doing business" as construed in earlier cases determining whether a corporation had submitted itself to local service of process. Thus, the test of venue is the practical concept of doing or carrying on business of any substantial character. It was true that the corporation in the instant case had no offices, officers, or statutory agents in the district and was not qualified to do business there. However, documents instituting credit transactions were executed in New York; merchandise shipped to dealers in New York were covered by a bill of sale vesting title in the corporation; salesmen in the district made collections and checked dealers' inventories as agents of the corporation; a distributor was required to execute reports and forms and send them to the corporation at its home office; and the corporation borrowed extensively in the state and maintained substantial deposits in New York banks.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9008.210.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Service of Process—Corporations—District Where Corporation Is an "Inhabitant" or Is "Found"—Service on New York Secretary of State—Service on "Managing Agent."—A Delaware corporation, in an action filed in a Federal court in New York, was validly served with process at its headquarters in Chicago under Section 12 of the Clayton Act, which provides that process in an antitrust action may be served in the district of which a corporation is an "inhabitant" or wherever it may be "found". In addition, a Delaware corporation which had surrendered its certificate of authority to do business in New York, and claimed to have been "in dissolution," was validly served with process in New York by service on the New York Secretary of State, under Section 216, Subdivision 2, New York General Corporation Law, by virtue of Rule 4(d)(7) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Under that New York statute, process against a foreign corporation that has surrendered its authority to do business in the state may be served upon the Secretary of State "in an action upon any liability or obligation incurred within this state before the filing of such certificate of surrender of authority." However, attempted service on a New York corporation, through an alleged "managing agent" in charge of another corporation, was defective as having been made on one not authorized to accept service on behalf of the defendant.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9008.350.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Who May Be Liable—Parties Defendant—Unincorporated Division of Corporate Defendant.—An organization which claimed to be merely an unincorporated division of another corporation could not be retained as a defendant in an antitrust action if that claim was confirmed. While the plaintiff did not contradict the claim, there was merit to its contention that the kaleidoscopic corporate forms of the defendants in the action had rendered it impossible for its attorneys to check it. Therefore, a motion to dismiss the action as to that organization was denied, without prejudice, to give the plaintiff an opportunity to complete an investigation to its satisfaction.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9006.

For the plaintiff: Nathan Shapiro and Berthold H. Hoeniger, New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: O'Brien, Driscoll & Raftery, New York, N. Y.

Memorandum

[Conspiracy—Price Discrimination]

EDELSTEIN, District Judge [In full text]: The plaintiff, who was until January of 1959 the distributor of Admiral branded products in several counties of the State of New York, including five counties of the Southern District, has brought an action against five defendants in four causes of action: (1) against all defendants, claiming unlawful price discriminations in violation of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act; (2) against all defendants claiming a price discrimination conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act; (3) against Admiral Corporation and Admiral Credit Corporation, claiming breach of a contract provision for non-discrimination between distributors in prices; and (4) against Admiral Corporation, claiming damages for breach of express and implied warranties. All of the defendants except Admiral Corporation move to dismiss on the various grounds of lack of jurisdiction over the person, improper venue, insufficiency of process and insufficiency of service of process.

[Service of Process—"Dissolution"]

The defendant Admiral Distributing Corporation (sued as Admiral Distributing Corp. Metropolitan Division) is a Delaware corporation claimed to be "in dissolution". It was qualified to do business in New York until it surrendered its certificate of authority on March 30, 1959. It has, however, not been dissolved, and the Secretary of State of the State of Delaware has certified that it had a legal corporate existence on April 3, 1959, on which date service upon the corporation was made through the New York Secretary of State. Service on this defendant is alleged to have been made originally on March 2, 1959, by having the United States Marshal serve a person claimed to be a managing agent for the defendant at a time when it had not yet ceased all activities in the State, but was involved in winding up its affairs here both directly and through its parent, Admiral Corporation. But this service is contested on the ground that the person to whom process was given was an employee of Admiral Corporation and not anyone authorized to accept service on behalf of Admiral Distributing Corporation. Whether or not such service was good, the subsequent service on the Secretary of State on April 3 was certainly valid, under section 216, subdivision 2 of the New York General Corporation Law, by virtue of Rule 4(d)(7) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Section 216 subdivision 2 provides that process against a foreign corporation that has surrendered its authority to do business in the state, "in an action upon any liability or obligation incurred within this state before the filing of such certificate of surrender of authority may be served, after the filing thereof, upon the secretary of state." And there is no doubt that the complaint alleges liability incurred within the state before the surrender of the certificate of authority. See Carlton Properties, Inc. v. 328 Properties, Inc., 208 Misc. 776, 143 N. Y. S. 2d 140; Antonana v. Ore Steamship Corporation, 144 F. Supp. 486. The motion as applicable to Admiral Distributing Corporation is denied.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Venue—"Transacting Business"]

The objection of the defendant Admiral Credit Corporation is one of venue. It is a Delaware corporation qualified to do business only in the State of Illinois, and was served at its headquarters in Chicago. This service is unquestionably valid under section 12 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 22, which provides that process in an antitrust action may be served in the district of which a corporation is an "inhabitant" or wherever it may be "found". The same section provides that a suit under the antitrust laws may be brought against a corporation "not only in the judicial district whereof it is an inhabitant, but also in any district where it may be found or transacts business * * *" This defendant denies that it is "doing business" or that it "transacts business" in this district.

In its discussion of the problem the defendant largely ignores the well settled conceptual distinction between "doing business" and "transacting business". Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Materials Co., 273 U. S. 359; United States v. Scophony Corporation [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,238], 333 U. S. 795. The Supreme Court held that the expression "transacts business" in section 12 of the Clayton Act was intended to broaden the choice of forum previously available to plaintiffs in antitrust actions, under section 7 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 15, in contrast to the narrower concepts of "found" or "doing business" construed in earlier cases in the determination of whether a foreign corporation had submitted itself to local service of process. Thus, the test of venue is the "practical, everyday business or commercial concept of doing or carrying on business 'of any substantial character' * * *" in lieu of the previous "hair-splitting legal technicalities encrusted upon the 'found'—'present'—'carrying-on-business' sequence * * *". United States v. Scophony Corporation, supra, 333 U. S. at pages 807, 808. Moreover,

> "the question of venue cannot be determined by drawing up a 'check list' of specific incidents of business done and comparing it with the activities in [a] particular [cited] case. In the Scophony case the Supreme Court expressed disapproval of this practice of 'atomization'. It is the totality of acts and conduct rather than isolated and fragmented items thereof which must govern."

Abrams v. Bendix Home Appliances [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,792], 96 F. Supp. 3, 8.

[Local Transactions]

By this test I am convinced that the affidavits and depositions on file reveal that the defendant Admiral Credit Corporation is "transacting business" in this district and is properly answerable here. It is true that the defendant has no office or officers in New York. It is not qualified to do business in this state nor does it have a statutory agent here. The details of the manner in which it transacts business are highly complex, but it is claimed that the business is transacted solely from the Chicago office without intrusion of transactions in New York. On the face of it this contention is unrealistic and excessively technical. It is in the business of financing distributors, through the acquisition of their trade acceptances, and dealers, through a "floor plan-trust receipts" scheme. Dealers and distributors throughout the United States are thus financed, and if the defendant is not transacting business in New York it is difficult to understand how it is transacting business anywhere. Documents by means of which credit transactions are instituted are executed in New York. One type of instrument, a "Statement of Trust Receipt Financing" is regularly filed in the office of he Secretary of State of the State of New York. Merchandise shipped by the distributor to qualified dealers in the State of New York is covered by a bill of sale vesting title in the defendant. The distributor's salesmen in this district make collections and check dealers' inventory as agents of the defendant, and the distributor is required to execute reports and forms and send them to the defendant at its home office. The defendant borrows extensively in this state and maintains substantial deposits in New York banks. These and other activities are carried on regularly, indeed steadily, and in very substantial volume. The motion as applicable to Admiral Credit Corporation is denied.

[Service of Process on "Agent"]

Admiral Corporation New York Distributing Division, Inc. is a New York corporation which, it is claimed, was liquidated on December 31, 1953, but which has not surrendered its charter. Service was attempted through an alleged managing agent in charge of Admiral Distributing Corp. Metropolitan Division. Without a further showing, this service is defective as having been made on one not authorized to accept service on behalf of the defendant. The plaintiff urges that it has not been able to check the averments that this defendant was entirely inactive during the relevant period, and that should it discover them to be true, it will consent to dismissal. It further argues that a holding of improper service would be merely formalistic, for the only result will be that a new summons and complaint will issue to the Marshal for service upon the Secretary of State. But in that event a dismissal would not prejudice the plaintiff. The service was invalid and the defendant presses the point. The motion as applicable to Admiral Corporation New York Distributing Division, Inc. is granted.

["Unincorporated Division" as Defendant]

Admiral Distributors Metropolitan Division of Admiral Corporation is stated in the moving papers to be merely an unincorporated division of Admiral Corporation. Plaintiff does not contradict this statement of fact but argues that the defendants' kaleidoscopic corporate forms have rendered it impossible for its attorneys to check the fact. There is merit to the contention, and plaintiff should have an opportunity to complete an investigation to its satisfaction. Obviously, if the fact is confirmed, this defendant cannot be retained in the action and no prejudice will accrue to any defendant. Accordingly, the motion so applicable to Admiral Distributors Metropolitan Division of Admiral Corporation is denied without prejudice to a renewal within thirty days from the date of an order to be settled in accordance with this memorandum.

[¶ 69,382] Becker-Lehmann, Inc. v. The Firestone Tire and Rubber Company, The Texas Company, Shell Oil Company, Continental Oil Company, and Sunray Mid-Continent Oil Company.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri, Eastern Division. No. 58 C 364(2). Dated May 28, 1959.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Conspiracy to Monopolize—Agreement to Promote Sale of Product for Commission—Absence of Evidence of Conspiracy to Restrain or Monopolize Trade.—Four oil companies and a manufacturer of automobile tires, batteries, and accessories were granted summary judgments in a treble damage action charging that they conspired to restrain and monopolize trade to the injury of a distributor of the manufacturer. Affidavits filed by each of the oil companies disclosed separate agreements between each oil company and operators of service stations selling their products, and separate agreements between each oil company and the manufacturer as well as separate agreements between each of the oil companies and other such manufacturers. Under the oil company-manufacturer agreements, the oil companies agreed to promote and aid the manufacturers in selling their products to the service station operators in return for a commission ranging up to ten per cent of the sales to their respective service station operators. The affidavits stated that these were the only agreements between the oil companies and the manufacturer, and that there was no agreement between any of the oil companies and their respective service station operators pertaining to the sale of tires, batteries, and accessories. The deposition of the plaintiff-distributor disclosed that (1) it did not have any evidence of a conspiracy, (2) it was aware that many of the service stations sold brands other than those of the manufacturer, (3) there was strong competition for service station accounts among the plaintiff and the distributors of other brands of products and other independent distributors of the manufacturer, (4) it stocked a competing brand of tires, and (5) the manufacturer was willing to and did open several new independent distributors of its products. Absent the oil companies from the alleged conspiracy, the charge against the manufacturer failed. A conspiracy or combination, whether to restrain trade or create a monopoly, requires at least two parties.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, ¶ 2005, 2005.355; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2520.30, 2610.

Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act

Price Discrimination—Brokerage Commissions—Receipt of Brokerage Without Rendition of Any Service—Damages.—Oil companies were entitled to summary judgments in an auto product distributor's treble damage action alleging that the manufacturer of the products it distributed granted to the oil companies commissions without such companies' having rendered any services in connection with the sale or purchase of the manufacturer's brand of products by the service stations of the oil companies. The distributor contended that when the oil companies trained and provided personnel to promote the sale of the manufacturer's products, and provided other promotional services, they were passing something of value on to their operators which the operators of competing oil company service stations did not receive. It was these promotional services that the oil companies allegedly contracted to render for the manufacturer. If, the court noted, the service stations of the oil companies are put in a better competitive position to sell the manufacturer's products than are service stations of other oil companies, it is difficult to see wherein the distributor has cause to complain. The distributor testified that about 75 per cent of its entire volume of tires were sold to service station accounts, and that the service stations of the oil companies made up about 90 or 95 per cent of the distributor's service station business. Also, it appeared that the oil companies did render services in connection with the sale or purchase of the manufacturer's products by their stations.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3520; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9011.565.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Damages as Proximate Result of Price Discrimination.—A manufacturer's motion for a summary judgment on the ground that even if it did discriminate against a distributor, the distributor cannot recover because it cannot show that it has suffered any damages as a proximate result of the conduct of any one defendant, was denied. Proof that the manufacturer illegally discriminated in price against the distributor would be sufficient in itself to show some damage to the distributor. If prices are illegally discriminating, the person discriminated against is damaged, in the absence of extraordinary circumstances, at least in the amount of that discrimination.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9011.565.

For the plaintiff: Mortimer A. Rosecan, St. Louis, Mo.

For the defendants: John H. Lashly and Paul B. Rava, of Lashly, Lashly & Miller, St. Louis, Mo., for The Firestone Tire and Rubber Co.; Richard P. Conerly, of Thompson, Mitchell, Thompson & Douglas, St. Louis, Mo., and Amzy B. Steed, New York, N. Y., for The Texas Co.; Richard P. Conerly, of Thompson, Mitchell, Thompson & Douglas, St. Louis, Mo., and William Simon, Washington, D. C., for Shell Oil Co.; Nelson W. Hartman, of Fordyce, Mayne, Hartman, Renard & Stribling, St. Louis, Mo., for Continental Oil Co.; and Richard P. Conerly, of Thompson, Mitchell, Thompson & Douglas, St. Louis, Mo., and J. P. Greve, Tulsa, Okla., for Sunray Mid-Continent Oil Co.

Memorandum Opinion

[Parties]

Roy W. Harper, District Judge [In full text]: This is an action for treble damages brought by Becker-Lehmann, Inc., against the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company, and four oil companies, The Texas Company, Shell Oil Company, Continental Oil Company, and Sunray Mid-Continent Oil Company. The complaint charges violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. A. Sections 1 and 2, and the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U. S. C. A. 13(a), (c), (d), (e), and (f). The defendant oil companies filed joint motions for summary judgment and joint motions to dismiss. Firestone filed similar motions separately.

The plaintiff, Becker-Lehmann, Inc., was until about July 15, 1958, a corporation selling truck and automobile tires, batteries and accessories in the St. Louis area. They dealt, though not exclusively, in Firestone brand products, selling at wholesale and retail.

[Agreements]

The defendant oil companies have each filed affidavits in support of their motions which include a copy of a separate agreement between each oil company and operators of service stations selling their petroleum products, and a copy of the separate agreement between each oil company and Firestone. Also included in the affidavits is a copy of the agreements, similar to the Firestone-Oil Company agreements, between each defendant oil company and either the B. F. Goodrich Company, or the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company. The provisions of these agreements between the oil companies and the tire and rubber manufacturers are substantially the same, the oil companies agreeing to promote and aid the tire manufacturers in selling their products to the service station operators in return for a commission ranging up to 10% of the sales to their service station operators. The affidavits state that the appended agreements are the only contracts between Firestone and the oil companies and that there is no agreement whatsoever between any of the defendant oil companies and their respective service station operators pertaining to the sale of tires, batteries and accessories. The deposition of Mr. Benjamin Tepper, President and owner of a 25% interest in the plaintiff corporation, was taken. Mr. Katz, past president and owner of the remaining 75% interest was present and it was stipulated that were he asked the same questions that were asked of Mr. Tepper, he would give the same answer or would say he did not know the answer to the question.

[Summary Judgment]

Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, under which the motions for summary judgment are filed, provides in pertinent part that ". . . the summary judgment shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue of material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law . . ." In Durasteel Company v. Great Lakes Steel Corporation, 205 F. 2d 438, at page 441, the court said:

> "If it is made clearly to appear on such motion that even though there is an issue under the pleadings there is in fact no dispute as to the controlling material facts, then the court should enter summary judgment."

[Conspiracy Charge]

The deposition of Mr. Tepper shows that the plaintiff does not have any documents or written evidence, no personal knowledge, or any credible second-hand knowledge of a conspiracy to restrain or monopolize trade. Mr. Tepper's conversations with other tire dealers in the St. Louis area refer to a "bad deal" Firestone had handed the plaintiff. Tepper's deposition also shows, among other things, (1) that contrary to the allegation in paragraph 6(c) of the complaint that the oil companies require their service station operators to sell Firestone products, plaintiff was aware many of the stations sold brands of tires, batteries and accessories other than those of Firestone; (2) that there was strong competition for the service station accounts among the plaintiff and the distributors of other brands of tires, and other independent Firestone distributors; (3) that the plaintiff stocked a competing brand of tires; and (4) that Firestone was willing to and did open several new independent distributors of their products during the period encompassed by the complaint. Paragraphs 14 and 15 of the complaint, under the heading of "MONOPOLY," charge that the contracts and agreements between Firestone and the oil companies have ". . . substantially lessened competition and/or have tended to create a monopoly . . ." These are the same contracts, agreements and understandings on which the plaintiff bases the charge of conspiracy in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, and this is the same "conspiracy" of which the plaintiff has no knowledge or credible evidence, and which the affidavits and deposition on file refute. The bare statement in the complaint alleging violations of the Sherman

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Act are not sufficient to withstand a motion for summary judgment which is supported by the affidavits and by the deposition. Marion County Cooperative Ass'n v. Carnation Company [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,792], 214 F. 2d 557. Also applicable to the case at bar is the statement in Moore's Fed. Prac. (2d ed.) Vol. 6, par. 56.11(3), p. 2067:

> "Where on the basis of the materials presented by his affidavits the movant would be entitled to a directed verdict and the opposing party fails either to offer counter-affidavits or other material that raise a credible issue or to show that he has evidence not then available, summary judgment may be rendered for the moving party."

Absent the oil companies from the alleged conspiracy, the charge fails against Firestone. A conspiracy or combination, whether to restrain trade or create a monopoly, requires at least two parties. Nelsen Radio & Supply Co. Inc. v. Motorola, Inc. [1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,386], 200 F. 2d 911, 914; Mackey v. Sears Roebuck & Co. [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,519], 237 F. 2d 869, 873.

Opposing the motions for summary judgment, plaintiff argues it ". . . should be entitled to an opportunity for pre-trial discovery and its day in court", citing Pfeiffer v. Frank, 19 F. R. D. 15, S. D. N. Y. 1955. The reliance appears ill-placed because in that case the statement was made by the court after it had found there was a triable issue as to whether one party had waived a right to proceed by arbitration and it is not authoritative for the proposition that a party to a lawsuit need only file a complaint to obtain a right to pre-trial discovery for the purpose of trying to find a genuine issue of material fact that could be disputed.

[Robinson-Patman Act Claims]

The plaintiff conceded that it has no claim against the defendant oil companies under Sections 2(a), (d), (e) or (f) of the Robinson-Patman Act. Plaintiff maintains it has a claim against the oil companies for violation of Section 2(c), 15 U. S. C. A. 13(c). Employing some of the language of Section 2(c), paragraph 9(n) of the complaint, fully set out below, alleges a discrimination against the plaintiff as follows:

> "(n) By paying and granting to the defendant Oil Companies commissions, brokerages, compensations, allowances and discounts in lieu thereof without said defendants having rendered any services in connection with the sale or purchase of the said Firestone brand products by the gasoline service stations of the defendant Oil Companies."

The circuitous arguments of the plaintiff on this point are difficult to follow but it appears that the oil companies did render services in connection with the sale or purchase of the Firestone products by their service stations. Plaintiff argued strenuously that when the defendant oil companies train and provide personnel to promote the sale of Firestone products, and provide other promotional services, they are passing something of value on to their operators which the operators of competing oil company service stations do not receive. It was these promotional services that the defendant oil companies contracted to render for Firestone. If, as the plaintiff argues, the service stations of the defendant oil companies are put in a better competitive position to sell tires than are service stations of other oil companies, it is difficult to see wherein the plaintiff has cause to complain. Tepper testified that about 75% of plaintiff's entire volume of passenger car tires were sold to service station accounts, and the service stations of the defendant oil companies made up about 90% or 95% of the plaintiff's service station business.

The charge that Firestone discriminated in favor of The Suburban Tire Company was not touched upon in any of the affidavits. The deposition of Mr. Tepper, which was taken on behalf of two of the defendant oil companies, does not show that the alleged discriminations are non-existent. Firestone has chosen to support its motion for summary judgment on the grounds that even if they have discriminated against the plaintiff, it cannot recover because it cannot show that it has suffered any damages as a proximate result of the conduct of any one defendant. Proof that Firestone illegally discriminated in price in favor of The Suburban Tire Company would be sufficient in itself to show some damage to the plaintiff. As appears in Bruce's Juices v. American Can Co., 330 U. S. 743 [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,553], at page 757:

> ". . . If the prices are illegally discriminatory, petitioner has been damaged, in the absence of extraordinary circumstances, at least in the amount of that discrimination."

The Eighth Circuit case of American Can Co. v. Russellville Canning Company [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,895], 191 F. 2d 38, is in accord, although "extraordinary circumstances" not shown to exist in the case at bar were found to be present in that case.

[Rulings]

The joint motion of defendant oil companies for summary judgment is sustained. In view of this ruling it is not necessary to pass on the motions to dismiss with respect to the oil companies.

The motion of defendant, The Firestone Tire & Rubber Company, for summary judgment is sustained as to the charge of conspiracy in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act and as to the charge of conspiracy to monopolize under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. In view of this ruling it is not necessary to pass on the motion of defendant Firestone to dismiss with respect to Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.

The motion of defendant, The Firestone Tire & Rubber Company, for summary judgment and to dismiss the complaint is denied insofar as directed to the alleged violations of the Robinson-Patman Act.

Attorneys for the defendants will prepare the proper orders to be entered by the court and submit same to the court for entry.

[¶ 69,383] Federal Trade Commission v. Barnard Hosiery Co., Inc., a corporation; Nathan Natelson and Robert Sharp, individually and as officers of said corporation.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civ. 146-129. Filed May 28, 1959.

Wool Products Labeling Act

Wool Labeling Under Wool Products Labeling Act—Misbranding of Wool Under Section 4(a)—Meaning of Label—"Sole Cushioning" as "Recognizably Distinct Section" of Men's Socks—Temporary Injunction.—The Federal Trade Commission was denied a temporary injunction to restrain a manufacturer of men's socks from labeling its products as "100% WOOL—SOLE CUSHIONING—Top, Body All Cotton." The product was made of cotton throughout, except that there was knitted onto the inner side of the sole a layer of soft wool. Rejecting the Commission's contention that the label misrepresented the true wool content of the socks by representing that the whole sole was composed of 100% wool, the court found that the label meant that a layer of wool cushioning was affixed to a sock made entirely of cotton. Also, the court rejected, as arbitrary, the Commission's contention that the label was defective because it did not describe the wool content of a "recognizably distinct section" of a man's sock, as required by Rule 23 of the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commission pursuant to the Wool Products Labeling Act. The Commission failed to make "a proper showing" entitling it to temporary injunctive relief.

See Labeling Wool, Vol. 2, ¶ 6525.

Wool Labeling Under Wool Products Labeling Act—Injunctions under Section 7(b)—Commission's Application for Temporary Injunction—Lack of "Proper Showing."—The Federal Trade Commission was denied a temporary injunction to restrain a manufacturer of men's socks from using labels which allegedly misrepresented the true wool content of those socks where the Commission's contentions apparently rested on no more than the opinions of its lawyers who had brought the proceeding. There had been neither hearings nor findings by the Commission, and it had offered no affidavit by anyone who claimed to be an expert in the hosiery business. If granted, the temporary injunction would have remained in effect until some unpredictable time in the future when the Commission's administrative processes had been completed. Congress has provided that, under such circumstances, "a proper showing" by the Commission is necessary for temporary injunctive relief of such scope. In the instant case, that burden had not been sustained by the Commission.

See Labeling Wool, Vol. 2, ¶ 6542.10.

For the plaintiff: Thomas A. Ziebarth and Albert G. Seiderman, New York, N. Y.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Memorandum and Order

[Misrepresentation Charged]

McGOHEY, District Judge [In full text]: The Commission has moved, pursuant to Section 7 of the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939,[1] for a temporary injunction to restrain the defendants from affixing to men's socks sold in interstate commerce by the defendants, labels which the Commission asserts misrepresent the true wool content of the socks.

[Statutory Requirements]

The statute defines a "wool product" as one which contains or is represented as containing wool.[2] If such a product also contains other fibers, the percentages by weight of the wool content must be shown in plainly legible figures.[3] The Commission pursuant to statutory authority[4] has promulgated rules of which Rule 23[5] is here relied on by the Commission to support its charge against the defendants.

[Meaning of Label]

The defendants' product is concededly made of cotton throughout except that there is knitted onto the inner side of the sole a layer of soft wool. The allegedly misleading label which the defendants stamp on these socks is as follows:

"100% WOOL
SOLE CUSHIONING
Top, Body All Cotton"

It is not contended by the Commission that the "cushioning" on the inside of the sole on the defendants' product is less than "100% wool." The contention is rather that the defendants' label represents "that the soles of said hose are composed of 100% wool whereas, in truth and in fact, the wool content [of the whole sole] is substantially less than 100%." That contention is rejected. To me, the label means and represents only this: a sock made entirely of cotton to the inside of whose sole a layer of wool cushioning has been affixed. The sample pair of socks marked in evidence on the argument conforms to the foregoing description.

["Recognizably Distinct Section"]

The Commission further urges that the label is nevertheless defective because it does not describe the wool content of a "recognizably distinct section" of a man's sock, as required by Rule 23. The argument here is that "Sole Cushioning" or "Cushioning Sole" is not an "appropriate recognizably distinct section." This argument is strongly disputed by the defendant Natelson who swears, without contradiction, that he has been in the hosiery business for almost forty years. He asserts that the Commission's contention in this respect is entirely arbitrary, and it seems so to me.

[Absence of Expert Opinion]

If the Commission's contentions here rested on administrative findings based on expert testimony adduced at hearings, they would, of course, carry great weight. But there has been neither hearings nor findings by the Commission. These contentions, as far as appears, rest on no more than the opinions of the two Commission lawyers who have brought this proceeding. They do not claim to be experts in the hosiery business. No affidavit of anyone claiming to be such is offered by the Commission.

The injunction if granted would remain in effect until some unpredictable time in the future after the Commission's administrative processes of complaint, hearing, cease and desist order and review thereof had been completed.[6] The Commission concedes in its papers that this would surely entail delay. In these circumstances Congress understandably has provided that "a proper showing" by the Commission is necessary

[1] 15 U. S. C. § 68 ff.
[2] 15 U. S. C. § 68(e).
[3] 15 U. S. C. § 68b.
[4] 15 U. S. C. § 68d(a) par. 3d.
[5] 16 C. F. R. 300.23.
[6] 15 U. S. C. § 68e(b)(2).

for temporary injunctive relief of such scope. The Commission has failed to carry that burden here.

[Injunction Denied]

Accordingly the application for a temporary injunction is denied, but with leave to file a new application based upon authoritative affidavits containing facts sufficient to constitute a "proper showing."

The stay heretofore granted in the order to show cause is vacated.

So Ordered.

[¶ 69,384] Holland Furnace Company v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. September Term, 1958—April Session, 1959. No. 12451. Dated June 16, 1959.

Petition for Review of an Order of the Federal Trade Commission.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Unfair Practices—Jurisdiction of Federal Trade Commission—Acts in Interstate Commerce—Warehousing in Particular State, Prior to Local Sales, as Cessation of Interstate Commerce.—The Federal Trade Commission properly held that the acts, representations, and conduct of a furnace manufacturer's employees in selling and distributing furnaces to ultimate consumers in numerous states, after those furnaces had been shipped from Michigan and warehoused in each separate state before being sold locally, were "in commerce" within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act. The manufacturer, contending that the Commission had no jurisdiction to enter a cease and desist order, claimed that its products had "come to rest" in its warehouses in each state prior to their local sale and were, therefore, no longer in interstate commerce. Contrary to that contention, there was no logical point, between the shipment of the furnaces from Michigan and their sale and delivery to the ultimate consumers, through the manufacturer's own employees, when the furnaces ceased to be in interstate commerce. Without the sales, deliveries, and installations made by its salesmen and servicemen, the manufacturer's interstate business would have ceased. With them, and measured by them, it had a continuous interstate business reaching into 44 states. Under such facts, the temporary warehousing of the products in each separate state was but an incident of the interstate business. Thus, the local sales of the manufacturer's salesmen had such a close and substantial relation to interstate commerce as to bring them within the regulative powers of the Commission.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5005.55, 5005.83, 5031, 5055.40, 5081, 5089.60.

For the petitioner: Stuart S. Ball, Chicago, Ill.; Robert H. Trenkamp and Edward A. McLeod, Cleveland, Ohio.

For the respondent: James E. Corkey, Assistant General Counsel, Federal Trade Commission.

Denying a motion to vacate, on jurisdictional grounds, a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order in Dkt. 6203. For a prior opinion of the U. S. District Court, Western District of Michigan, Southern Division, see 1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,858.

Before SCHNACKENBERG and HASTINGS, Circuit Judges, and WHAM, District Judge.

[FTC Jurisdiction]

WHAM, District Judge [In full text]: Petitioner, Holland Furnace Company, a corporation, filed its petition in this court for review of a final order of the Federal Trade Commission, dated July 7, 1958, which directs Holland to cease and desist from certain practices found to be deceptive and to constitute unfair competition. Thereafter, Holland filed a motion under the provisions of Rule 15(f) of this court moving for a determination of jurisdictional issues in advance of a hearing on the merits. This motion was granted. In the motion Holland says that the Commission had no jurisdiction to enter said final order for two reasons, namely, (1) that the findings of fact upon which said final order is based, together with the stipulated facts and documents of record, affirmatively demonstrate that the practices enumerated in the commission's order were not employed in commerce and (2) that said findings of fact are wholly inadequate to sustain the jurisdiction of the Commission in that they fail to demonstrate that the practices enumerated in the Commission's order were employed in commerce.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

The Commission rests its claim to jurisdiction upon the whole case. For a proper understanding and discussion of this claim it seems essential that the substance of the pleadings, findings and conclusions in so far as they bear on jurisdiction should appear. To conserve space they appear in marginal notes.

The substance of the Commission's complaint appears in the margin.[1]

Holland's answer.[2]

[Examiner's Order]

After extensive hearings before the Commission's examiner on the issues framed by the complaint and answer the examiner determined the issues in favor of the Commission and made his initial decision with his findings, conclusions and his order directing Holland, its officers, agents, representatives and employees, to cease and desist from the wrongful and deceptive practices therein found in connection with its offering for sale, sale or distribution in commerce of furnaces, heating equipment and parts therefor.

In the initial decision the examiner preliminary to his findings made this statement: "This matter being now before the Hearing Examiner for final determination based upon the record as an entirety, he having presided at all hearings, observed all witnesses, considered and ruled upon all testimony and exhibits of record, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and hereinafter makes his findings as to the facts, conclusions drawn therefrom, and order."

The examiner's findings pertinent to the jurisdiction of the Commission appear in the margin.[3]

[1] That Holland, a Delaware corporation with principal place of business in Holland, Michigan, is and has been engaged in the manufacture, sale and distribution of furnaces, heating equipment and parts therefor; that it owns and operates approximately 475 branch offices, located in different states of the United States, and a number of subbranches; that its products are shipped from its said plant in Michigan to the various branch offices in other states for delivery to purchasers thereof, some shipments being made before sale and some after sale; that Holland maintains and has at all pertinent times maintained a course of trade in said products in commerce among and between the various states of the United States in substantial competition with others engaged in the manufacture, interstate sale and distribution of furnaces, heating equipment and parts therefor.

Further, that Holland, to sell its product, employs salesmen and house-to-house canvassers who have received instructions, sales manuals, and other material from Holland and are assigned a territory and required to make a report of each sale; that installation of equipment sold is made by Holland's servicemen.

Further, that in the course and conduct of its aforesaid business and for the purpose of selling its products Holland directly and through its representatives employs many false, unfair and deceptive practices among which are misrepresentation by the salesmen and servicemen that they are inspectors or representatives of government agencies or of gas and utility companies, or heating engineers, together with many other detailed wrongful practices all to the prejudice and injury of the public and Holland's competitors and constituting unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

[2] The answer denies all allegations of unfair competition and says that it has not maintained a course of trade in its products in commerce among and between the various states of the United States; that the Commission has no jurisdiction to hear or determine the matters set forth in the complaint and no jurisdiction to issue the cease and desist order therein sought for the reason that the acts and practices allegedly constituting unfair methods of competition or unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce as set forth therein, were not committed in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Respondent says that such acts or practices in so far as admitted and not denied, were committed in transactions which were purely local in character and were not transactions in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

[3] "1. Respondent, Holland Furnace Company, is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Delaware with its principal place of business located at No. 489 Columbia Avenue, Holland, Michigan.

"2. Respondent is now, and has been for the past several years, engaged in the manufacture, sale and distribution of furnaces, heating equipment and parts therefor. Respondent owns and operates approximately 475 branch offices, as well also a number of subbranches, located in

[Interstate Commerce]

The examiner in his initial decision listed as issue number one: "Is the respondent engaged in interstate commerce within the purview of the Federal Trade Commission Act?" In his first conclusion the examiner said: "The contentions of the respondent to the contrary not withstanding, it is found that respondent was, at all times touched upon herein, engaged in interstate commerce as such is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act and under the many court decisions interpretative of said Act." The examiner ordered that Holland and its "officers, agents, representatives, and employees, * * * in connection with the offering for sale, sale or distribution in commerce, as 'commerce' is defined in the various states of the United States. All sales of furnaces, heating equipment and parts therefor, effected by the Holland Furnace Company or its representatives are to the ultimate purchasers and users of such equipment.

"3. In conducting its business respondent does not ship furnaces as units but, typically, sends a carload of the essential parts which are assembled either in its warehouses or branches, or 'on the job' where the furnaces are to be installed. The warehouses mentioned are, in some instances, branch warehouses, that is to say, ones which are connected with the respondent's branches, or central warehouses located at strategic points and which supply the branches in adjoining or surrounding territory. Generally speaking, a central warehouse is located in a large city and acts as a source of supply for respondent's branches located in that city and in surrounding territory. When need arises in the branch offices for material or equipment which is not there on hand or in stock, such is ordered direct from the factory and, in the cases of small branches, the order generally goes direct to the factory rather than to a central warehouse. Respondent also sells repair and replacement parts for its equipment to independent furnace servicing concerns or individuals, which are obtainable from the branch offices. Also the branches, on occasion, exchange material between themselves when necessary, although this is not general, the branches, being under instruction to order their needs direct from the factory. The branch offices of the respondent extend throughout the United States with the exception of three or four states in the far south. Deliveries are made by respondent preferably by means of automobile trucks, such trucks not only delivering supplies to the appropriate consignees but, on return trips, haul back to the factory at Holland, Michigan, scrap metal and old equipment for recovery purposes. Where exceedingly long hauls are involved, as for instance from Holland to the States of Washington, Oregon, or California, deliveries may be made by railroad freight.

"This system of operation has been substantially the same since the year 1934.

* * *

"4. Respondent maintains, and has maintained, a course of trade in its products aforesaid, in commerce among and between the various states of the United States and in the District of Columbia to such extent as to make it amenable to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission under the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act as 'interstate commerce' is defined in said Act.

"For a long period of time respondent operated a branch office in the City of Washington, D. C. Respondent furnished certain papers * * * showing that from the year 1936 through 1942 respondent operated a branch office in the City of Washington, D. C.; from 1943, to and including 1948, this office was designated a subbranch; during the years 1949, 1950 and 1951, this outlet reassumed its status as a branch, and from 1952 to June 30, 1954, was designated as a subbranch. The complaint in this case is dated May 4, 1954, so the foregoing constitutes an admission that respondent was operating in the Washington territory subsequent to the date of the complaint herein. Testimony shows that although respondent claims to have abandoned operations in the Washington, D. C. area it continued to do business therein through the instrumentality of its Baltimore, Maryland, branch, and that if a home-owner in this area had a Holland furnace which needed parts and wrote to the respondent at its home office, the latter would refer the inquiry to the nearest branch, which in this instance would be Baltimore, Maryland, which branch would first dispatch a salesman to ascertain exactly what was needed, and upon determination thereof an agreement would be executed and the material would be delivered through the Baltimore Branch.

"The respondent's manager of the Baltimore branch testified that sales are made in the Washington area through the Baltimore branch and that equipment is delivered in Washington from Baltimore by means of the respondent's own truck, or by the trucks of their mechanics; that the Holland Furnace Company has a Washington telephone number with the calls thereon being taken by a so-called 'answering service' and relayed to the Baltimore office, and that this telephonic arrangement was in effect in the Baltimore branch when this particular manager took over; that the Baltimore branch does not at present have a subbranch in Washington, D. C.; that he had handled complaints from the Washington area and had been instrumental in resolving such complaints.

"There are also of record twelve exhibits which show actual sales of respondent's equipment and repair services through the instrumentality of the Washington, D. C. office, in the States of Virginia and Maryland, as well also in the District of Columbia; there is also an exhibit of record showing a sale from an Indiana branch of respondent to an Illinois customer.

"The exhibits * * * show the locations of respondent's eleven central warehouses and its numerous branch and subbranch warehouses strategically located throughout the United States, while a glance at a map of the United States, prepared by respondent, will disclose its widespread, nation-wide, activities which have enabled it to effect gross annual sales which, according to one witness, has reached

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Federal Trade Commission Act, of furnaces, heating equipment, or parts therefor, do forthwith cease and desist from" various designated representations, misrepresentations and acts which the examiner had found to be unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce.

[FTC Order]

Holland appealed to the Commission from the initial decision and order of the examiner. After hearing, the Commission rendered its opinion and entered a final order adopting as its own the hearing examiner's initial decision, including its findings, conclusions and order.

The pertinent language used by the Commission in its opinion appears in the margin.[4]

To clarify the issues and make clear the positions of the respective parties, excerpts from their briefs appear in the margin.[5]

[Controlling Legislation—FTC Act]

The controlling legislation is found in paragraphs (1) and (6) of Sec. 5(a) (15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 45(a)(1) and (6)) of said act which read:

"(1) Unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce, are hereby declared unlawful."

"(6) The Commission is empowered and directed to prevent persons, partnerships,

---

$30.000.000.00. * * * a quotation from the 1952 Annual Report of the corporation, over the signature of its President, 'by order of the Board of Directors' is revealing:

" 'As you may possibly know, your company is the only manufacturer in the heating industry which retails. The public cannot buy heating equipment direct from any other factory —only from dealers who sell under their own names. Our branch system throws the complete responsibility for all the actions of its personnel, as well as the functioning of its equipment, directly upon the company. * * *'

"The said report then goes on to point out:

" 'Clearly, our 15,000,000 customers have found this policy gratifying.'

* * *

"5. Respondent is now, and has been at all times herein mentioned, in substantial competition with other persons, firms and corporations engaged in the manufacture, sale and distribution of furnaces, heating equipment, and parts therefor. While respondent admits the charge of competition, it denies that such competition took place in interstate commerce. The fact that the respondent has been engaged in interstate commerce having been specifically found to be true in the preceding finding, it is not felt necessary to analyze further the testimony of record in support of this finding.

* * *"

[4] "The record discloses Holland owns and operates some 475 branch offices, or retail outlets, as well as a number of subbranches. Salesmen or house-to-house canvassers sell respondent's products with gross annual sales amounting to about $30 million. All sales effected by the Holland Furnace Company or its representatives are to the ultimate purchasers and users of such equipment. Respondent does not ship furnaces as units but sends quantities of essential parts to central or branch warehouses. * * *

"* * * The heating equipment involved is manufactured in Holland, Michigan, and shipped from there and sold by respondent's authorized representatives on a nationwide basis in some forty-five states through Holland's own retail outlets. * * *

"Contracts between respondent and branch managers and salesmen; correspondence between the home office in Michigan and field personnel; those contracts between respondent's salesmen and a purchasing public on respondent's behalf which must be accepted by the home office: and representations made by salesmen in selling respondent's products—all are part and indicate a pattern of conduct in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

"Furthermore, there is record evidence that sales were made from respondent's Baltimore, Maryland, branch in the District of Columbia and in Virginia; that the Niles, Michigan, branch sold in Indiana; that the South Bend, Indiana, branch sold in Michigan; Missouri branches sold in Illinois; and Kentucky branches sold in Ohio. * * * The fact that respondent's products are shipped to respondent's employees at its branch warehouses for subsequent delivery to purchasers does not put an end to the interstate character of the transaction."

[5] In its brief Holland says: "For the purposes of this motion, it must, of course, be assumed that Holland committed the acts and engaged in the practices alleged as found by the Commission. The sole question now before this court is, assuming that Holland did engage in such unfair and deceptive practices, was it within the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission to order Holland to cease and desist from such practices?

* * *

"Corporations such as Holland, which are engaged in a multi-state business and which ship products to branches, necessarily engage in both interstate and intrastate commerce. While the Federal Trade Commission may have jurisdiction with respect to interstate operations, under the terms of the Act, the Commission has no jurisdiction whatsoever with respect to unfair or deceptive practices used in the intrastate operations of an interstate corporation."

The Commission's brief says. "The sole contested issue is: Whether the Commission correctly concluded that, upon the facts as set forth in the pleadings, the initial decision, and the opinion of the Commission, the methods, or corporations * * * from using unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce."

The quoted sections of the statute plainly disclose that the reach of the act is controlled and limited by the phrase "in commerce". That the statute should not be applied to transactions which are not "in commerce" was declared in the case of Federal Trade Commission v. Bunte Bros., Inc. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,098], 312 U. S. 349. The court said:

> "This case presents the narrow question of what Congress did, not what it could do. And we merely hold that to read 'unfair methods of competition in (interstate) commerce' as though it meant 'unfair methods of competition in any way affecting interstate commerce,' requires, in view of all the relevant considerations, much clearer manifestation of intention than Congress has furnished."

By its decision the Supreme Court affirmed this court which in disposing of the same question in the same case had said:

> "The only practices with which the Commission may concern itself are transactions 'in interstate commerce.' * * * The words, the meaning of which we are to construe, are definitely 'in commerce' not 'affecting interstate commerce.'
>
> * * *
>
> "* * * If an extension of the Federal Trade Commission's jurisdiction be advisable so as to include practices affecting interstate commerce, it is for Congress, not the court to make the change." Bunte Bros., Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 7 Cir., 110 F. 2d 412.

[Products Did Not "Come to Rest"]

Holland concedes that it is engaged in interstate commerce but claims that it is also engaged in intrastate commerce and that all acts of unfair competition and deception by its salesmen and servicemen found by the Commission were committed in the intrastate phase of its business. This contention is based on the claim that all of its sales, distribution and installations are made within any given state subsequent to the time when its products have come to rest in its warehouse or warehouses in such state and are no longer in interstate commerce. This claim seems to be refuted in part, at least, by the findings that Holland made sales in the District of Columbia through a branch and subbranch located in said District over a period of many years and through a subbranch from 1952 to June 30, 1954, and made other sales therein through the Baltimore, Maryland, branch; made other sales of respondent's equipment and repair service through the instrumentality of the Washington, D. C. office in the states of Virginia and Maryland, as well as in the District of Columbia; that the Niles, Michigan, branch sold in Indiana; that the South Bend, Indiana, branch sold in Michigan; Missouri branches sold in Illinois and Kentucky branches sold in Ohio; also, a sale from an Indiana branch of respondent to an Illinois customer. Though these particular findings of interstate transactions may be applicable to a comparatively small portion of the vast operations conducted by Holland they seem sufficient to negative Holland's contention that the Commission under its findings, is wholly without jurisdiction. Whether or not the findings just mentioned are sufficient to uphold an order by the Commission to cease and desist requires a consideration of the merits and from this we refrain.

After due consideration of the principles declared in Bunte and other applicable decisions we are of opinion that under the facts found by the Commission, as hereinbefore set out, the Commission was correct in its holding that it had jurisdiction in the case. We hold as did the Commission that the acts, representations and conduct of Holland's employees in selling and distributing Holland's furnaces and parts, acts and practices of Holland Furnace Company which are the subject of this proceeding, are methods of competition in commerce, and acts and practices in commerce, within the coverage of Section 5(a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

---

* * *

"These salesmen and solicitors are Holland's agents whose function is to solicit and to consummate sales in the several states. If sales are not made no goods move from Michigan to the other states in which Holland does business. Thus the salesmen and solicitors are an integral and vital part of Holland's interstate sales promotion. * * *

* * *

"It is our position, of course, that the warehousing of goods in the several states is but an incident of Holland's business and in no way changes the character of the activities engaged in by its solicitors and salesmen. Moreover, it appears that Holland actually ships goods between the branches in fulfillment of contracts and when contracts are negotiated the branches may even secure delivery of the necessary parts directly from Holland. * * *" whether before or after such products had been warehoused in the state where sold and distributed, were in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act. In its opinion the Commission said, correctly we think:

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

"* * * The heating equipment involved is manufactured in Holland, Michigan, and shipped from there and sold by respondent's authorized representatives on a nationwide basis in some 45 states through respondent's own retail outlets. A realistic view of respondent's activities in moving its products from Michigan across state lines to accomplish its stated purpose of direct sales to ultimate consumers through '500 Direct Factory Branches serving Over 15,000,000 Customers' admits of no other conclusion than that respondent is engaged 'in commerce.'

"Contracts between respondent and branch managers and salesmen; correspondence between the home office in Michigan and field personnel; those contracts between respondent's salesmen and the purchasing public on respondent's behalf which must be accepted by the home office; and representations made by salesmen in selling respondent's products—all are part and indicate a pattern of conduct in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act."

In making the foregoing statements the Commission had before it the evidence that in its 1952 Annual Report Holland asserted to its stockholders:

"* * * The public cannot buy heating equipment direct from any other factory —only from dealers who sell under their own names. Our branch system throws the complete responsibility for all the actions of its personnel, as well as the functioning of its equipment, directly upon the company. * * *
* * *

"Clearly, our 15,000,000 customers have found this policy gratifying."

[Local Sales "Essential Part" of Interstate Business]

Under the policy and practice found by the Commission there seems to be no logical point between shipments from the State of Michigan and the sale and delivery of Holland's products through its employees to the ultimate consumer in another state when, in view of the provisions and purposes of the Federal Trade Commission Act, they cease to be in interstate commerce until they rest finally in the possession of the purchaser or ultimate consumer. Without the sales, deliveries and installations made by Holland's salesmen and servicemen from its own warehouses its interstate business would cease. With those sales, deliveries and installations and measured by them Holland has a continuous interstate business reaching into forty-four states. Under such facts the temporary warehousing of the products in each separate state in Holland's own warehouses is but an incident in its interstate business. The work of Holland's salesmen and servicemen create and are an essential part of Holland's vast interstate business and therefore is in commerce and subject to the regulative powers of the Commission.

[Cases Considered]

Holland urges the case of Federal Trade Commission v. Bunte Bros., Inc., supra, as decisive here in its favor. We find it to be clearly distinguishable. In that case, quite contrary to this, the unfair methods of competition sought to be regulated by the Commission were admittedly confined to activities wholly within the State of Illinois relating to goods manufactured in Illinois and which had been at no time in interstate commerce. In the case here the goods were manufactured in Michigan and shipped from that state into at least forty-four other states to be sold and distributed by the manufacturer's own agents and employees to the ultimate consumers.

Holland cites and relies strongly on the case of Ward Baking Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 264 Fed. 330. In that case Ward hauled bread in trucks from one state into another where by means of unfair sales methods, it sold the bread from its trucks to local purchasers. The court held that the sales were local and for that reason the unfair sales methods were beyond the reach of the Federal Trade Commission. It is observed that the court based its conclusion that the sales from Ward's trucks were not in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act upon the authority of a Supreme Court case relating to alleged interference with interstate commerce by local taxation. Wagner v. City of Covington, 251 U. S. 95. Though the factual situations were similar in the Wagner and Ward cases, entirely different statutes were being applied and the legal principles which were applicable in Wagner, a tax case, were different from those which were properly applicable in the Ward case under the Federal Trade Commission Act. In view of later cases hereinafter discussed we believe that Ward is entitled to little weight here.

Other Federal Trade Commission cases cited by Holland such as Canfield Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 274 Fed. 571; Winslow v. Federal Trade Commission, 277 Fed. 206 and California Rice Industry v. Federal Trade Commission [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,211], 102 F. 2d 716, have been examined and found to be distinguishable on facts. The same is true of Ewing-Van Allmen Dairy Co. v. C and C Ice Cream Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,005], 109 F. 2d 898; Lawson v. Woodmere [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,904], 217 F. 2d 148 and Brosious v. Pepsi-Cola Co. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,459], 155 F. 2d 99, which were Sherman Anti-trust cases. We have also examined Walling v. Goldblatt, 7 Cir., 128 F. 2d 778; Walling v. Jacksonville Paper Co., 317 U. S. 564 and Higgins v. Carr Bros. Co., 317 U. S. 572, Fair Labor Standards Act cases which are not only distinguishable factually but because the purpose of the statute being applied in those cases is essentially different from the purpose of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

[Persuasive Holdings]

Though the Commission has cited no authority precisely in point, there are cases with facts sufficiently similar to make the holdings therein persuasive if not completely authoritative in support of the Commission's jurisdiction. The nearest in point is Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,746], 340 U. S. 231, which went from this court, 173 F. 2d 210, to the Supreme Court. In that case Standard received interstate shipments of crude oil for refining at its refinery at Whiting, Indiana. A portion of the gasoline so produced was shipped by tankers on the Great Lakes from Whiting to Standard's marine terminal at River Rouge, Michigan, and was there stored in bulk where it remained for varying periods under ownership by Standard until sold and delivered to its customers in the Michigan area, including Detroit. In the autumn sufficient gasoline was stored to meet winter demands. The gasoline was not taken to River Rouge pursuant to orders already taken, though the demands of the Michigan territory were fairly constant, and the customers' demands could be accurately estimated. The court said: "Such temporary storage of gasoline as occurs within the Detroit area does not deprive the gasoline of its interstate character. Stafford v. Wallace, 258 U. S. 495." That the case involved price discriminations under and in violation of Sec. 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended, 15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 13, does not affect the question of interstate commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

In the same case this court speaking of Stafford v. Wallace, 258 U. S. 495, as being analogous said:

> "In that case, the livestock came by carrier interstate and intrastate into the receiving pens of the stockyards where the animals were fed, watered, and held until sales were consummated, either to the packers who drove them across the street to the packing house, or to the wholesale dealers or feeders who reshipped them. The transportation was broken at the yards. The animals came to rest, but the stream of commerce moved on to final destination; and the stockyards, with its holding pens, was held to be in commerce, just as here the various changes in the manner of movement may have slowed down the stream of commerce between Whiting and Michigan, but never stopped it. The tanks at River Rouge were similar to a 'packing house' on the way to market. The tank cars and trucks were the most convenient 'packages' that could be used to complete the distribution of the gasoline. It is unlike Walling v. Goldblatt Bros., 7 Cir., 128 F. 2d 778, where the warehouse was only a detached stockroom for retail stores of a retailer. There the stream of commerce ended at the warehouse for the most part. Here it reached at River Rouge only an intermediate stage preliminary to its final disposition to the petitioner's customers.
>
> "We decline, as the Supreme Court did in Stafford v. Wallace, supra, 258 U. S. at page 519, 42 S. Ct. at page 403, 66 L. Ed. 735, 23 A. L. R. 229, '* * * to defeat this purpose in respect of such a stream and take it out of complete national regulation by a nice and technical inquiry into the noninterstate character of some of its necessary incidents and facilities, when considered alone and without reference to their association with the movement of which they were an essential but subordinate part.' "

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Holland argues earnestly that its warehouses and subsequent retail sales therefrom are different from the storage facilities of Standard at River Rouge and its deliveries therefrom to its distributors in Michigan. Yet, on principle there is no dissimilarity in so far as the application of the Federal Trade Commission Act is concerned. In the Standard case the Federal Trade Commission exercised power over local sales made by Standard from gasoline in storage which had been shipped from another state and here the Commission seeks to exercise its power over local sales by Holland which are filled from storage of products owned by Holland and shipped by it from another state. In each case the interstate commerce was wholly dependent on the sales made subsequent to storage in connection with which unfair and deceptive practices were used and kept moving through estimates of future needs created by said sales. To hold that such unfair and deceptive practices were beyond the regulatory powers of the Federal Trade Commission because of such temporary storage would be to permit a "technical legal conception" to destroy a "practical one drawn from the course of business." Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375, 398.

The case of Ford Motor Company v. Federal Trade Commission [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,132], 120 F. 2d 175, cert. den. 314 U. S. 668, is closely in point. Ford was ordered to cease and desist from using a misleading financing plan and advertisement in connection with installment sales of its cars through local dealers who had purchased the cars from Ford for resale locally. Ford filed petition for review of the Commission's order. The court having found that such dealers were aided in promoting such resales through use of the unfair financing plan and misleading advertising and that they constituted unfair competition said:

> "All of those things which stimulate or decrease the flow of commerce, although not directly in its stream, are essential adjuncts thereto and the Congress has power to confer on the Federal Trade Commission their regulation."

Citing Stafford v. Wallace, supra. The court said further:

> "The sale on credit of petitioner's cars by its local dealers, when separately considered, may be intrastate in character but when the activities of petitioner's local agencies are weighed in the light of their relationship to the petitioner, and its financing sales of cars, it is at once apparent that there is such a close and substantial relationship to interstate commerce that the control of such activities is appropriate to its protection."

[Helpful Cases]

Among other cases found helpful in defining the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission are General Motors Corp., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,056], 114 F. 2d 33, cert. den. 312 U. S. 682; Progress Tailoring Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,440], 153 F. 2d 103; International Art Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,304], 109 F. 2d 393; Federal Trade Commission v. Standard Education Society [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,170], 302 U. S. 112; Consumers Home Equipment Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,202], 164 F. 2d 972; Goodman v. Federal Trade Commission [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,690], 244 F. 2d 584; Federal Trade Commission v. Hoboken White Lead & Color Works, Inc. [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,039], 67 F. 2d 551; Carter Carburetor Corporation v. Federal Trade Commission [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,306], 112 F. 2d 722.

Our study of the cases showed that seldom were two cases found relating to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission in which the facts were alike and we were impressed by the truth of the statement in more than one opinion that each case must be ruled by its own particular facts.

[Local Sales Within FTC Jurisdiction]

In the light of Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, supra; Ford Motor Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, supra; and the authorities subsequently mentioned it seems plain that the local sales by Holland through its own employees, filled from Holland's warehouses to which its products were shipped in interstate commerce prior to such sales, have such close and substantial relation to interstate commerce as to bring them within the regulative powers and jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission. We hold that the findings of the Commission herein adequately support its jurisdiction and that Holland's contentions to the contrary are without merit.

[Motion to Vacate Order Denied]

Holland's motion to vacate the Commission's order on jurisdictional grounds is denied.

[¶ 69,385] United States v. The Procter & Gamble Company, et al.

In the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey. Civil Action No. 1196-52. Filed June 9, 1959. Supplementary Opinion filed June 11, 1959.

Case No. 1150 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Discovery and Production of Evidence—Discovery of Grand Jury Testimony Secured by Government After Decision to Proceed by Civil Rather Than Criminal Action.—The Government, in a civil antitrust action filed shortly after the termination of Grand Jury proceedings in which the Government had not sought an indictment, would be required to answer interrogatories as to when it finally determined to proceed against the defendants by civil rather than criminal action. The United States Supreme Court, in U. S. v. Procter & Gamble Co., 1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,046, made clear the principles that (a) as long as the Government has a criminal investigation in mind, whether that is its sole purpose or a purpose conjoined with one to seek a civil remedy, the Government's use of the criminal procedure remedy by Grand Jury proceedings is valid, but (b) if the Government has no such criminal proceedings in mind and intends to seek only a civil remedy, then any use of the Grand Jury remedy thereafter constitutes, as to such later action, a "flouting of the policy of the law" and a subversion of criminal procedure, regardless of when that "solely civil purpose" authoritatively arises. Thus, if the Government had determined not to proceed by indictment before the last witness had testified before the Grand Jury, then, as to that last witness, the Grand Jury process had been subverted and the testimony of that witness should be discovered and produced to the other side.

The Government's contention that its decision to pursue only a civil remedy would not have prevented the Grand Jury from seeking an indictment on its own was rejected; in the absence of proof of such a "runaway" Grand Jury, it followed that the Government's decision would have been controlling. As to the Government's objection that a presumption of regularity in the conduct of governmental affairs should be deemed to exist, it was noted that the Government, prior to the decision in Procter & Gamble, had considered it proper to use a Grand Jury to make out a solely civil case under the antitrust laws. Further, the defendants should not be deprived, by such a presumption, of the right to seek evidence to the contrary.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8225, 8225.593.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Discovery and Production of Evidence—When Government Decided to Use Civil Rather Than Criminal Remedy—"Mental Processes"—"Work Product."—In a civil antitrust action filed shortly after the termination of Grand Jury proceedings in which the Government had not sought an indictment, interrogatories seeking to ascertain when the Government had finally decided to proceed against the defendants by civil rather than criminal remedies did not ask for "privileged" information. No formal claim of privilege had been lodged by the Attorney General, the Executive Department of the Government had voluntarily sought the aid of the Judicial Department to enforce the law of the land, and the United States Supreme Court had declared that the law of the land required a "finding" as to when the Government had decided to proceed solely by civil action. In such a situation, it would not seem that the Executive Department could rely on a "housekeeping" privilege of its own to refuse to give evidence as to such a "finding." That finding did not relate to the Department's "mental processes" in reaching a decision involving judgment or discretion, or to the internal workings of the Department. Further, that decision did not constitute the "work product" of the Department of Justice. Even if it did, however, the United States Supreme Court's declaration that a finding as to that decision was necessary in order to do justice between the parties would constitute "good cause" for the discovery of that decision.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8225.600.

For the plaintiff: Chester A. Weidenburner, United States Attorney, by Charles H. Hoens, Jr., Assistant United States Attorney, and Miss Margaret Brass, Antitrust Division, Department of Justice.

For the defendants: O'Mara, Schumann, Davis & Lynch, and Cahill, Gordon, Reindel & Ohl, by Mathias Correa, for Colgate-Palmolive Co. Bailey & Schenck, and Arnold, Fortas & Porter, by Abe Fortas, for Lever Brothers Co. Toner, Crowley, Woelper & Vanderbilt; Royall, Koegel, Harris & Caskey, by Kenneth C. Royall; Dinsmore, Shohl, Dinsmore & Todd, by Joseph Dinsmore; and Taft, Stettinius & Hollister, by Charles Sawyer, for Procter & Gamble Co. Davies, Richberg, Tydings & Landa, by Shelby Fitze, and McCarter, English & Studer, for Assn. of American Soap & Glycerine Producers, Inc.

For a prior opinion of the U. S. Supreme Court, see 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,046; for prior opinions of the U. S. District Court, District of New Jersey, see 1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,333 and 69,260, 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,488, 68,457, and 68,335, 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,228, 1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,677, and 1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,497.

Opinion on Use of Grand Jury Transcript

[Grand Jury Proceedings—Discovery]

HARTSHORNE, District Judge [In full text]: The various defendants herein have filed a series of motions and interrogatory proceedings directed to the use, or prohibition against the use, by all parties, of the transcript of the Grand Jury proceedings herein. The defendants claim reliance upon the principles, some of them of novel import, recently enunciated by our highest court in this very case, United States v. Procter & Gamble Co., et al. [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,046], 356 U. S. 677 (1958). It should be noted that these Grand Jury proceedings, in which the testimony of some thirty persons was taken over the course of many months, all terminated more than six years ago, on November 25, 1952, without an indictment, and but a short time before the complaint in this civil antitrust suit was filed by the Government on December 11, 1952.

[Subversion of Grand Jury Process]

The first of such defense motions to be filed asks this Court to impound from all concerned not only this entire Grand Jury transcript now in the hands of the Government, but all data obtained by the Government therefrom. If this motion were granted, then, barring later application to this Court on cause shown, the Government might be compelled to divest itself of all data and knowledge obtained in its lengthy discovery proceedings herein during the past six years, including literally hundreds of thousands of defendants' documents, if indeed the complaint itself could still stand, since all are doubtless based on the information obtained through the Grand Jury proceedings. The second defense motion is one asking this Court to make available to the defendants certain test mony before the Grand Jury, for special cause shown, including the testimony, on the one hand, of a deceased witness, and, on the other hand, of an important Government Defense official. The third of such proceedings is in the form of a long series of interrogatories which the defendants ask the Government to answer, in order to ascertain with respect to such Grand Jury proceedings whether and, if so, when, the Government decided to pursue only civil antitrust proceedings against the present defendants. This determination apparently occurred at some time, since the present civil complaint was filed, shortly after the Grand Jury proceedings terminated, but no indictment was ever sought from the Grand Jury, United States v. Procter & Gamble Co., et als., supra, at p. 687, note 2. The defendants' theory here is that, if any Grand Jury proceedings were taken subsequent to the Government's determination not to seek an indictment, such subsequent proceedings were a subversion of such Grand Jury proceedings, under the above decision of the Supreme Court, which would entitle the defendants to receive the transcript of the Grand Jury proceedings, to that extent. The final motion by the defendants, upon the basis of similar interrogatories, and assuming that such a subverison as the above has occurred, asks that the transcript of such Grand Jury proceedings and all data obtained therefrom by the Government, apparently including the complaint itself, be suppressed from any use by the Government.

[Interrogatories]

To consider this final motion now would be premature, since such motion is sought only if it has been previously established that there has been a subversion of the Grand Jury process, as stated in Procter & Gamble, by the use of the Grand Jury process solely for civil purposes. Moreover, the first of such motions—that to impound the Grand Jury transcript from all parties—is one as to which the Supreme Court itself, as differentiated from a distinguished member of the Court, has not yet laid down the controlling principle. Since the second of the above motions concerns only a relatively small portion of the Grand Jury transcript, while the third proceeding—that on the defense interrogatories—covers not only this portion, but the entire Grand Jury proceedings, in which all parties are actually interested, including this important question as to a possible subversion of the Grand Jury process, this Court will deal now with this third motion.

[Issue]

The issue between the parties on this motion falls within small compass. The Government admitted, both in its brief and on the argument, that if, at the outset of the Grand Jury investigation, the Government intended to bring a civil case only, then under Procter & Gamble there would have been such an abuse of the Grand Jury process that wholesale discovery of the Grand Jury transcript to the defendants would be warranted. The parties are at issue only on the point as to whether the same result follows, if the Government's determination to proceed with a civil case only is made, not before the Grand Jury is summoned, but thereafter, during the course of its proceedings, and thus might constitute a subversion of so much of the Grand Jury proceedings as occurs after the Government has determined not to proceed criminally at all.

[Law of the Case]

As the Government well says, the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Procter & Gamble, supra, "is not only the law of the land; it is the law of this case." Accordingly, we turn to the statement of our highest court as to the law of the land and of this case in the above regard.

In Procter & Gamble, supra, in referring to the opinion of another branch of this Court, which it reverses, our highest court says:

> "It [the lower court] also seemed to have been influenced by the fact that the prosecution was using criminal procedures to elicit evidence in a civil case. If the prosecution were using that device, it would be flouting the policy of the law. . . .
>
> "We cannot condemn the Government for any such practice in this case. There is no finding that the grand jury proceeding was used as a short cut to goals otherwise barred or more difficult to reach. It is true that no indictment was returned in the present case. But that is no reflection on the integrity of the prosecution. For all we know, the trails that looked fresh at the start faded along the way. What seemed at the beginning to be a case with a criminal cast apparently took on a different character as the events and transactions were disclosed. The fact that a criminal case failed does not mean that the evidence obtained could not be used in a civil case. It is only when the criminal procedure is subverted that 'good cause' for wholesale discovery and production of a grand jury transcript would be warranted." [Emphasis by the Court] pp. 683-684.

Clearly, our highest court has thus held that to use "criminal procedures to elicit evidence in a civil case . . . would be flouting the policy of the law" and that, under such circumstances, "when the criminal procedure is subverted that 'good cause' for wholesale discovery and production of a grand jury transcript would be warranted."

[Critical Question]

The critical question thus is, when this case first became only "a civil case." From that time on, our highest court has said that using the Grand Jury to elicit evidence in that case would flout the law, would subvert criminal procedure, would require that any advantage thus obtained improperly by the Government be wiped out, by giving the opposing party the use of so much of the Grand Jury transcript as was thus obtained by a criminal procedure in a purely civil case. It would seem that neither the language of our highest court, nor its basic reasoning, can reasonably be read otherwise. It would be as unfair to permit the Government, after having finally decided not to proceed criminally, to continue to use the unique, and solely criminal, functions of a Grand Jury for a solely civil purpose, as it would be to permit the Government to do this same thing when, from the beginning, it had that same, solely civil, intention. The subversion of this ancient criminal procedure, for the time that it exists, is the same in the one case as in the other.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

The sole reason for bringing this motion at this time is because our highest court, in the absence of evidence such as is sought by the present interrogatories, was compelled to say that at the time the case was laid before it "there is no finding that the Grand Jury proceeding was used as a short cut to goals otherwise barred or more difficult to reach." Of course, as the Court says, where "the trails that looked fresh at the start" for a criminal prosecution "faded along the way," so that "what seemed at the beginning to be a case with a criminal cast apparently took on a different character as the events and transactions were disclosed," even so, that does not mean that the evidence obtained could not be used "in a civil case," if, when that evidence was obtained, it had not already been decided to abandon the criminal proceedings. If such criminal proceedings were still in contemplation, the criminal procedure by the Grand Jury was being properly used, and there was no subversion. If, on the contrary, for instance, before the last witness had testified before the Grand Jury, the Government had determined authoritatively not to proceed by indictment, then as to that last witness, the law had been flouted, and since the Grand Jury process had been subverted, the testimony of that witness should be discovered and produced to the other side.

Furthermore, if the Government's argument were correct, that the existence at the inception of the Grand Jury proceeding of an intent to seek an indictment rendered these entire proceedings valid, despite the fact that almost immediately thereafter the Government abandoned any such criminal proceedings, it is easy to see to what abuses it would give rise. Indeed, the situation then would approach that in the recent past when, before the above decision in Procter & Gamble, the Government admittedly used Grand Jury proceedings freely, at its discretion, for civil purposes only.[1]

[Government's Contentions]

The Government, in answer to the above, argues that the mere decision by the Government to pursue a civil remedy only does not finally prevent the Grand Jury proceedings from being used for indictment purposes, since the Grand Jury itself might decide to seek an indictment, despite such decision of the Government, i. e., to become a "runaway" Grand Jury. Of course, if any such unusual situation as this did occur, then, upon its proof, the Grand Jury would continue to be one pursuing a criminal investigation, and there would be no subversion. But, in the absence of such proof, it would follow that the determination of the Government not to obtain an indictment would be controlling and decisive, particularly in an antitrust case, the complexity of which virtually requires the careful, long-continued control of the Grand Jury proceedings by the Government itself, in order to make out a case.

Nor is the Government correct in its argument that the dissenting opinion in Procter & Gamble, p. 689, indicates that Procter & Gamble holds that the only subversion of the Grand Jury process occurs when the Grand Jury investigation had been "instituted solely in aid of a civil suit." In the first place, the majority opinion is not so limited. Indeed, the language of the Court that "For all we know, the trails that looked fresh at the start faded along the way," p. 684, would seem to infer the contrary possibility. In addition, the basis of the dissent is that it is "unable to see why the case where a Grand Jury investigation has aborted, and the Government thereafter uses the transcript solely in aid of its civil case, should be treated differently" from the situation where the Grand Jury proceedings were from the beginning instituted solely in aid of a civil suit. This abortion, alluded to by the dissent, apparently connotes a proper conception—of a Grand Jury proceeding in the first place, i. e., for the purpose of an indictment, either alone or conjoined with civil proceedings—with the outcome of such proceedings thereafter unexpectedly showing that no such criminal proceedings will lie, i.e., an abortion. The refusal of the Court to hold that such a situation would not prevent the use of the Grand Jury transcript for civil purposes, in nowise indicates that the Court would permit the use, for civil purposes only, of evidence taken before the Grand Jury, after the Government had finally decided not to use the Grand Jury process for any criminally investigative purpose at all, but for civil purposes only. These situations are widely different. In the first, the Grand Jury procedure—a criminal procedure—is, in addition to a possible civil purpose, in fact used for an actual, intended, criminal purpose, and, as Procter & Gamble holds, is therefore lawful, and there has been no subversion. In the second, the testimony before the Grand Jury, after the finding of an indictment has been abandoned, is the use of criminal procedure for a solely civil purpose. Such taking of the evidence is therefore improper, and there has been a subversion of the Grand Jury process to that extent. Thus, in order to prevent the Government from obtaining an unfair advantage of the defendants by its unlawful act of discovery, and yet at the same time not to render impossible the effectuation of the policy of the antitrust acts, the evidence thus improperly obtained must be discovered also to the defendants.

[1] See the testimony, May 12, 1955, before the Special Antitrust Subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, of Honorable Stanley N. Barnes, then Assistant Attorney General of the United States in charge of the Antitrust Division. Bureau of National Affairs, Inc. Report, p. 350.

[Presumption of Regularity]

As for the Government's objection that a presumption of regularity in the conduct of governmental affairs should be deemed to exist, it should be noted, first, that previous to the decision in Procter & Gamble, the Department of Justice had regularly considered it the proper thing to do, when the occasion arose, to use the Grand Jury to make even a solely civil case under the antitrust laws.[2] Thus the question here is not whether the Government did the regular thing in fact, but whether this regular thing which it did was in fact lawful, in the light of the rule for the first time laid down by our highest court in Procter & Gamble. Not only so, but this presumption of regularity, being a mere presumption, is effective, like other presumptions of fact, only in the absence of evidence to the contrary. Here what defendants seek is to ascertain if there is evidence to the contrary. They cannot be deprived of this right by that presumption. Finally, there is cause for the defendants' seeking to ascertain this fact from the only source which knows that fact—the Department of Justice. We must here bear in mind, first, that initially both criminal and civil investigation and prosecution as to the present defendants were authorized,[3] but that ultimately no indictment was ever presented to the Grand Jury by the Government, as previously noted. In the second place, we must bear in mind that, within less than three weeks after the Grand Jury was discharged, the carefully drawn and voluminous civil complaint herein was filed. True, that does not necessarily prove that the decision to abandon an indictment was not made until after the Grand Jury was discharged, but the contrary may also have been the fact, and it is this "finding" of fact which our highest court has determined to be crucial, in order to do justice between the parties.

["Privilege"]

The Government also contends that the information sought by the defendants here is privileged and not the subject of discovery. However, when the Court at the argument called the Government's attention to the fact that it had not made a "formal claim of privilege [which] must be lodged by the Attorney General after actual personal consideration by that officer." U. S. v. Reynolds, 345 U. S. 1, 8 (1952), the Government indicated it had not decided whether or not to lodge any such formal claim of privilege. Without going into details, it may therefore be helpful to note that, where the Executive Department of the Government has voluntarily sought the aid of the Judicial Department of the Government to enforce the law of the land, as here, and the United States Supreme Court has declared that the law of the land requires a certain "finding", in order to do justice between the parties in that judicial proceeding, it would not seem that the Executive Department could rely on a mere "housekeeping" privilege of its own, to refuse to abide by the law of the land and give evidence as to such "finding." Nor is this "finding" one as to the Department's "mental processes" in reaching a decision involving judgment or discretion. The finding is actually as to the decision reached, not as to the reasons for such decision. It also is as to a decision, not as it affects the internal workings of the Department, but as it results in the prosecution of third parties in the courts, as determined by that very decision, and by the very official who presumably made that decision. In addition, it would seem inconceivable that the national security and the safety of the nation generally was involved, as alluded to in Reynolds, so as to prevent the Department of Justice from stating what this determination was, and when it was made, as to proceeding criminally, civilly, or both, as to those defendants, as already held necessary by our highest court in this very case, in order to do justice to all concerned.

[2] See note 1, supra.

[3] See note 4, infra.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Nor would any authoritative decision by the Department of Justice to proceed thereafter solely civilly in this antitrust case constitute the "work product" of the Department, generally privileged from discovery, under Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U. S. 495 (1947). In the first place, a determination to indict or not to indict is far different from the reasons bearing on a determination as to what evidence to use or not to use on the trial of a certain indictment, the latter being a common example of work product. In the next place, any such determination not to indict is the specific "finding," which the United States Supreme Court has declared in this very case to be necessary to do justice between the parties. This holding by our highest court would thus constitute the good cause to discover this determination of the Department of Justice, even if indeed it were a "work product," as Hickman specifically holds.

[Principles]

Our highest court has thus made clear the principles that (a) as long as the Government has a criminal investigation in mind, whether this be its sole purpose or a purpose conjoined with one to seek a civil remedy, the Government's use of this criminal procedure remedy by Grand Jury proceedings is valid. But (b), on the contrary, if the Government has no such criminal proceedings in mind, but intends to seek a civil remedy solely, then any use of the Grand Jury remedy thereafter constitutes, as to such later action, a "flouting of the policy of the law" and a subversion of criminal procedure, regardless of when this solely civil purpose authoritatively arises.

[Facts]

In the light of these principles, we turn to the facts in this cause. On April 9, 1951, the then Attorney General wrote Mr. Walker Smith, Antitrust Division, Department of Justice:[4]

> "You are hereby specially retained and appointed under the authority of the Department of Justice in connection with the investigation and prosecution of alleged violations of the Federal antitrust laws . . . and other Federal criminal statutes, by certain persons, firms, corporations, associations . . . engaged in the production . . . and sale of soap and other detergents . . . In this connection you are hereby expressly directed to conduct . . . any and all kinds of legal proceedings, civil and criminal, or both, including Grand Jury proceedings . . . which district attorneys are authorized by law to conduct."

---

[4] The full letter reads as follows:

"April 9, 1951

Mr. Walker Smith,
Antitrust Division
Department of Justice

Dear Mr. Smith:

As an attorney and counselor at law you are hereby specially retained and appointed under the authority of the Department of Justice in connection with the investigation and prosecution of alleged violations of the federal antitrust laws, Sherman Act (c. 647, 26 Stat. 209, U. S. C., Title 15, Sections 1-7, 15) as amended by the Act of August 17, 1937 (c. 690, 50 Stat. 693, U. S. C., Title 15, Section I), Clayton Act (38 Stat. 730, U. S. C., Title 15, Sections 12-27) as amended, and other federal criminal statutes, by certain persons, firms, corporations, associations and their members, and others.

It will be noted, first, that this subordinate official of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice is appointed in connection not only with the "investigation" but with the "prosecution" of the present case. It will be noted also that he is not merely authorized to conduct this investigation and prosecution, but is "directed" to conduct both such investigation and prosecution. In other words, he is directed to make investigation along all lines, using the general proceedings "which district attorneys are authorized by law to conduct," including specifically Grand Jury proceedings. Only after he has carried out this direction to him to use investigatory procedures, both criminal and civil, can Mr. Smith have possibly carried out these directions to him to make such investigation. Only after he has completed such investigation, can he possibly be in a position to have a determination made by someone in the Department of Justice as to how the "prosecution of alleged violations of the Federal antitrust laws" shall occur, whether by the criminal proceedings set forth in such statutes, by the civil remedies set forth therein, or by both. Furthermore, the affidavit of Walker Smith as to exactly what the situation was so far as he is concerned, executed March 21, 1953, states "that he was authorized and instructed by his superiors in the Department of Justice to carry on a complete investigation [as above] . . . so that a determination could be made as to whether there were violations of . . . the Federal antitrust laws and as to what action should be taken in performance of the duties of the Attorney General and of the Department of Justice to enforce those laws through criminal or civil proceedings, or both; that the investigation and all proceedings incident thereto, including the Grand Jury proceedings in the District of New Jersey . . . were carried on pursuant to and within those instructions . . . ."

Further details as to the procedure in the Department of Justice in such situations is set forth by the defendants as coming from the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division in 1955. This was agreed to by the Government as setting forth generally the situation in this very case in fact as follows:

> "In the first instance a recommendation is made by the attorney in charge of the particular investigation. If he is in the field, his recommendation is then reviewed by his field office chief. It is then reviewed by the appropriate litigation section chief in Washington. The section chief's decision is reviewed by the first or second assistant to the Assistant Attorney General and by the Assistant Attorney General. Review at the various levels is effected not only by oral conferences, but also by written memoranda of facts detailing the evidence against each proposed defendant."[5]

Therefrom it appears that the attorney in charge of the particular investigation, here Mr. Walker Smith, does not have the power to determine what action the Government shall take, whether civil or criminal, or both, as the result of his investigation into a possible violation of the antitrust laws. All this attorney in charge can do is first to investigate, and thereafter to recommend to his field office chief what course this prosecution should take. This review of his field office chief is then in turn reviewed by the litigation section chief in Washington, D. C. The latter's review in turn is reviewed by the first or second assistant to the Assistant Attorney General, and thereupon by the Assistant Attorney General. Whether it is the Assistant Attorney General, or the Attorney General himself, who determines whether the prosecution is or is not finally to be criminal, would seem unimportant. Whichever it is, the finding should be sought first from him.

---

engaged or having been engaged in the production, processing, distribution, purchase, and/or sale of soap, other detergents or materials used in their manufacture, or in related activities.

In this connection you are hereby expressly directed to conduct in the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey, and in any other judicial district where the jurisdiction thereof lies, any and all kinds of legal proceedings, civil and criminal, or both, including grand jury proceedings, proceedings before committing magistrates, proceedings by information, and removal proceedings, which district attorneys are authorized by law to conduct.

You are to serve without compensation other than that you are now receiving as an attorney in the Department.

Please execute the required oath of office and return one copy thereof to the Department of Justice.

Respectfully,
J. H. McGrath
Attorney General

By the Attorney General:
/s/ Peyton Ford
Deputy Attorney General."

[5] Report, Attorney General's National Committee to Study Antitrust Laws, p. 350 (1955).

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

It is the lack of proof in this cause as to what such authoritative determination by the Government was, and when it was made, that made our highest court in Procter & Gamble say that "there is no finding that the Grand Jury proceeding was used as a short cut to goals otherwise barred or more difficult to reach." But that Court has also held that "the use of criminal procedures to elicit evidence in a civil case . . . would be flouting the policy of the law," and a subversion of criminal procedure, and that this would call for "wholesale discovery" by clear inference of all of the Grand Jury proceedings which were taken after the Government had determined not to proceed criminally. Thus it now becomes necessary, in order to do justice, to determine when the Government did finally determine to proceed against the present defendants solely by the present civil complaint, as it obviously did at some time.

[Point of Inquiry]

It follows that since no subordinate, such as the attorney in charge of the particular investigation, here Walker Smith, could normally do more than make a mere recommendation in that regard to his superiors, the point of inquiry as to when this determination was made should be first directed to the authority who could make such a controlling determination here, presumably the Assistant or Deputy Attorney General, or the Attorney General himself. But this fact, crucial to the rights of the parties, as stated by our highest court, must be ascertained in order to do justice.

[Discovery to be Granted]

In order to ascertain the above "finding that the Grand Jury proceeding was used as a short cut to goals otherwise barred or more difficult to reach," or that it was not, the defendants have filed voluminous interrogatories directed to the officials of the Department of Justice, from top to bottom. Since the crucial determination, as to when the Department determined to proceed civilly only, was presumably made only at the highest levels, clearly all such interrogatories at the lower levels are presently unnecessary, harassing and improper. It is only if discovery at these highest levels is fruitless, that discovery at lower levels may become appropriate. In order to lessen the difficulties of the parties and to expedite the result, the Court will confer with counsel for all concerned as to the most appropriate procedure, in order to ascertain the above "finding," deemed crucial by the United States Supreme Court in this very case.

[¶ 69,386] Safeway Stores, Incorporated v. Oklahoma Retail Grocers Association, Inc., and Louie J. Speed, Inc.

In the Supreme Court of the United States. October Term, 1958. No. 252. Dated June 22, 1959.

On Appeal from the Supreme Court of Oklahoma.

Oklahoma Unfair Sales Act

Sales Below Cost—Oklahoma Unfair Sales Act—Constitutionality—Meeting Competition Defense—Good Faith—Legality of Competitor's Prices.—An injunction prohibiting a retail grocery chain from selling any items of merchandise at prices which are less than cost to the retailer in violation of the Oklahoma Unfair Sales Act, except to meet in good faith the prices of competitors who are selling the same articles or products of comparable quality at cost to them, did not deprive the chain of a right to compete in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution. The chain contended that the injunction prohibited the meeting of prices of competitors who are selling below cost. The state court had found that the chain could not avail itself of the statutory defense of meeting competition since its reductions were not in good faith but were made to meet prices which the chain "either knew or had reason to know were illegal." The injunction, phrased substantially in the terms of the Oklahoma Unfair Sales Act, allows the chain to meet the prices of competitors who are selling "at cost to them" if the other requisites of the good faith defense are met. There is no constitutional right to employ retaliation against action outlawed by a state. The chain had no constitutional right to embark on the very kind of destructive price war the Act was designed to prevent. It had ample means, under the state law, to enjoin the illegal methods of its competitors.

See Sales Below Cost, Vol. 2, ¶ 7111.38, 7151, 7161, 7241, 7263.

Sales Below Cost—Oklahoma Unfair Sales Act—Constitutionality—Issuance of Trading Stamps—Legality—Price Reductions To Meet Trading Stamp Competition.—The Oklahoma Unfair Sales Act, which was construed by the Oklahoma Supreme Court as not prohibiting the giving of trading stamps with items sold at or near statutory cost and as forbidding the reduction of prices to meet trading stamp competition, does not violate the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution. It had been contended that even though the state may prohibit sales below cost, it is barred from allowing a merchant to give trading stamps with goods sold at or near the statutory cost, unless it allows competing merchants to make an equivalent price reduction. The Oklahoma court decided that, although price cuts below cost were prohibited by the statute, the use of trading stamps was not a price reduction but constituted a cash discount, that is, a reduction given to customers for prompt payment of cash. The United States Supreme Court, ruling that it might content itself in resting on a clash of expert opinion to show that the state court decision was not wanting in a foundation that may not unjustifiably have commended itself as a state policy, noted that there are readily apparent differences between the practices which support the state's differentiation and thereby the power asserted by the state. There was a reasonable basis for a conclusion that selective price cuts tend to perpetuate the abuse of "loss-leader" selling whereas the use of trading stamps does not. Also, there was a basis for the view that the use of trading stamps has an entirely different impact on the consuming market than do price cuts. The United States Supreme Court ruled that it will not interpose its own economic views when the state has made its choice; it is enough that it is open to Oklahoma to believe the distinctions to be valid as the basis of a policy for its people.

See Sales Below Cost, Vol. 2, ¶ 7111.38, 7161, 7201.

For the appellant: V. P. Crowe, Oklahoma City, Okla., Robert L. Clark, Ramsey Clark, and William L. Keller, Dallas, Tex.

For the appellees: George Miskovsky, W. J. Holloway, Sr., M. A. Ned Looney, and Clyde J. Watts, Oklahoma City, Okla., Samuel M. Lane and Robert P. Beshar, New York, N. Y.

Affirming a decision of the Oklahoma Supreme Court, 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,888.

[Oklahoma Sales Below Cost Law]

MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER delivered the opinion of the Court [In full text]:

This is a suit for an injunction, brought in a state court in Oklahoma by appellee, Oklahoma Retail Grocers Association, against appellant, Safeway Stores, for selling several specified items of retail grocery merchandise below "cost" in violation of the Oklahoma Unfair Sales Act. Okla. Stat. tit. 15, §§ 598.1-598.11 (1951). Section 598.3 of the Act provides:

> "It is hereby declared that any advertising, offer to sell, or sale of any merchandise, either by retailers or wholesalers, at less than cost as defined in this Act with the intent and purpose of inducing the purchase of other merchandise or of unfairly diverting trade from a competitor or otherwise injuring a competitor, impair and prevent fair competition, injure public welfare, are unfair competition and contrary to public policy and the policy of this Act, where the result of such advertising, offer or sale is to tend to deceive any purchaser or prospective purchaser, or to substantially lessen competition, or to unreasonably restrain trade, or to tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce."

The elements of "cost" are enumerated in other sections of the statute. Safeway defended on the ground, inter alia, that its reductions were permitted by § 598.7 of the Unfair Sales Act which allows "any retailer or wholesaler" to > ". . . advertise, offer to sell, or sell merchandise at a price made in good faith to meet the price of a competitor who is selling the same article or products of comparable quality at cost to him as a wholesaler or retailer."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Safeway by cross-petition sought to enjoin several named members of appellee Association, including Speed, alleging that they were selling below cost in violation of the Act. The trial court, with some qualification, granted the injunction against Safeway and denied relief against appellees. On appeal, the Supreme Court of Oklahoma affirmed. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,888] 322 P. 2d 179, and since the constitutionality of the state statute was challenged under the Fourteenth Amendment, we noted probable jurisdiction, 358 U. S. 807, and brought the case here under 28 U. S. C. § 1257(2).

[Meeting Competition]

Safeway makes two main claims.

1. Safeway justified cutting prices below cost in some cities by claiming it was to meet the prices of some of its competitors who were also selling below cost. The statute allows a reduction below cost only when it is a good faith meeting of the competition of a seller who is selling at his own cost. The trial court found that Safeway's reductions violated the Act, and that Safeway could not avail itself of the statutory defense of meeting competition since its reductions were not in good faith but were made to meet prices Safeway "either knew or had reason to know were illegal . . ." The court enjoined Safeway from > ". . . selling, at retail, any items of merchandise . . . at prices which are less than cost to the retailer as defined in the Oklahoma 'Unfair Sales Act' and in violation of the provisions of said 'Unfair Sales Act', except to meet in good faith the prices of competitors who are selling the same articles or products of comparable quality at cost to them as retailers as defined in the Oklahoma 'Unfair Sales Act', and except in instances of other exempted sales as provided in Section 598.6 of said Oklahoma 'Unfair Sales Act.'"

The injunction, phrased substantially in the terms of the statute, allows Safeway to meet the prices of competitors who are selling "at cost to them" if the other requisites of the good faith defense are met. Appellant claims that this injunction deprives them of a constitutional right to compete since it forbids meeting the prices of competitors who are selling below cost. There is no constitutional right to employ retaliation against action outlawed by a State. Safeway, the Oklahoma court held, had ample means, under the state statute, to enjoin the illegal methods of its competitors. It had no constitutional right to embark on the very kind of destructive price war the Act was designed to prevent.

Appellant also claims that there are situations in which a competitor might reduce his prices below cost without violating the Act, and hence, under the injunction, Safeway would have no remedy whatsoever since it could not retaliate in kind and judicial relief would not be available. The conclusive answer to this claim is that it is not before us for adjudication. The court below found that Safeway was meeting prices it "knew or had reason to know" were illegal. It then phrased its injunction in the terms of a statute which has yet to be construed in the abstract circumstances presented by appellant. The Oklahoma Supreme Court carefully noted that it was interpreting the Unfair Sales Act as applied to the particular facts of this case, pointing out that "until a proper factual case is presented which requires a clear determination and offers a practical situation in which all the conflicting problems and considerations of the area involved are apparent, this court will refrain from theorizing." 322 P. 2d, at 181. If this is a rule of wise restraint for the courts of Oklahoma in this situation, it clearly bars constitutional adjudication here.[1]

[Trading Stamps]

2. Appellant's second contention involves its competitors' use of trading stamps. Trading stamps, it hardly needs to be stated, are, generally speaking, coupons given by dealers to retail purchasers on the basis of the dollar value of the items purchased, e.g.,

[1] The Oklahoma Supreme Court said:
"In this connection our attention has been called to the recent case (10-4-57) of State by Clark v. Wolkoff, Minn., 85 N. W. 2d 401, 403, wherein it was held that '(I)f a merchant in good faith sets the price of an article on the basis of a competitor's price, which price he in good faith believes to be a legal price, there is no violation,' which clearly is not the case herein. In the instant case, Safeway obviously and admittedly did not, in good faith, set the price of its articles which were subject to the Unfair Sales Act on the basis of its competitors' prices, which it in good faith believed to be legal prices under the Unfair Sales Act, but on the contrary it set illegal prices for the sole purpose of meeting prices of its competitors which it thought to be illegal." 322 P. 2d, at 181.

one stamp for each ten cents' worth of goods, and are collected by the purchaser until he has enough to redeem for various items of merchandise. Trading stamps have had a checkered career in the United States, but since World War II their popularity has grown until now it is a reasonable estimate that these multi-colored scraps of paper may be found in almost half of America's homes.[2]

When this suit was brought Safeway did not use trading stamps. In the Oklahoma City-Midwest City area several of its competitors did. These stamps were deemed to be worth approximately 2.5 percent of the price of the goods with which they were given. Safeway contended in the Oklahoma courts that giving a trading stamp with goods sold at or near the statutory minimum resulted in an unlawful reduction below "cost" to the extent of the value of the trading stamp. To be specific, if an item sold for $1, and that price was statutory cost, the trading stamps given with it would be worth approximately 2.5 cents and the net price was therefore $.975, or 2.5 cents below cost. Safeway sought to restrain its competitors from selling below cost in this manner and also claimed that it was justified, in order to meet competition, in reducing its prices to the net of its competitors' prices, taking into account the value of trading stamps. The Oklahoma court found that the giving of trading stamps with items sold at or near statutory cost was not a violation of the statute and denied Safeway's request for an injunction. The court also decided that Safeway could not reduce its prices to meet the trading stamp competition. It did, however, provide that Safeway could do what appellees did, it might issue "trading stamps, cash register receipts, or other evidence of credit issued as a discount for prompt payment of cash . . . ," as long as the value of the discount did not exceed three percent.[3]

[Constitutional Objection]

Safeway contends that such a construction of the Unfair Sales Act violates the Fourteenth Amendment. Appellant claims that even though the State may prohibit sales below "cost," it is barred from allowing a merchant to give trading stamps with goods sold at or near "cost," unless it allows competing merchants to make an equivalent price reduction. For the State to differentiate between the use of trading stamps and price-cutting is, so the argument runs, a constitutionally inadmissible discrimination.[4]

> "It would be an idle parade of familiar learning to review the multitudinous cases in which the constitutional assurance of the equal protection of the laws has been applied. The generalities on this subject are not in dispute; their application turns peculiarly on the particular circumstances of a case." Goesaert v. Cleary, 335 U. S. 464, 467.

The Oklahoma court decided that, although price cuts below cost were prohibited by the statute, the use of trading stamps was not a price reduction but constituted a cash discount, i.e., a reduction given to customers for prompt payment of cash. Opposing expert accountants sustained and rejected the validity of such a difference. In matters of this sort we might content ourselves in resting on the clash of expert opinion to show that the Oklahoma decision was not wanting in a foundation that may not unjustifiably have commended itself as a state policy. However, we may note some readily apparent differences between the practices which support the State's differentiation and thereby the power asserted by the State.

[Differences Between Practices]

Trading stamps are given to cash customers "across the board," namely, the number of stamps varies directly with the total cost of goods purchased. Safeway's price-cutting, however, was selective. This difference is

[2] The latest chapter in trading stamp history was recounted in The [London] Economist for May 30, 1959, at p. 850:
"In Colorado a proposal to tax the stamps brought battalions of housewives to the state capital. One of its original sponsors changed his mind when his own mother threatened to campaign against his re-election if he did not alter his stand. The newest twist to the trading stamp story is that they can now be exchanged, in the East, for a theatre seat, even, after July 12th, for one for 'My Fair Lady.' This will take, however, the stamps accumulated on nearly $700 worth of purchases—about what it costs to feed a family for five months."

[3] Safeway, in fact, did offer its own cash discount coupons during the course of this litigation.

[4] This Court, in other contexts has upheld against a challenge based on the Fourteenth Amendment, state tax laws which discriminated against the use of trading stamps. Rast v. Van Deman & Lewis Co., 240 U. S. 342; Tanner v. Little, 240 U. S. 369; Pitney v. Washington, 240 U. S. 387.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

vital in the context of this Act. One of the chief aims of state laws prohibiting sales below cost was to put an end to "loss-leader" selling. The selling of selected goods at a loss in order to lure customers into the store is deemed not only a destructive means of competition, but it also plays on the gullibility of customers by leading them to expect what generally was not true, namely, that a store which offered such an amazing bargain was full of other such bargains.[5] Clearly there is a reasonable basis for a conclusion that selective price cuts tend to perpetuate this abuse whereas the use of trading stamps does not.

[Impact on Market]

This difference alone would be enough to require affirmance. It is reinforced by other tenable grounds for distinction. There was a basis in evidence for the view that the use of trading stamps has an entirely different impact on the consuming market than do price cuts. When prices are the same customers tend to go to the store offering trading stamps. But when prices are cut to the extent of the value of the trading stamp the stamps lose their lure and lower prices prove a more potent attraction. On the basis of this not unreasonable belief as to the economics of the highly competitive, low-profit-margin retail-grocery business, Oklahoma could well have concluded that its choice was to provide that all use a cash discount system or none could do so.[6] Such a view of the economic aspects of the problem affords an ample basis for the legislative judgment enforced by the court below.

[Economic Views]

Certainly this Court will not interpose its own economic views or guesses when the State has made its choice.

> "The Fourteenth Amendment enjoins the 'equal protection of the laws,' and laws are not abstract propositions. They do not relate to abstract units A, B, and C, but are expressions of policy arising out of specific difficulties, addressed to the attainment of specific ends by the use of specific remedies. The Constitution does not require things which are different in fact or opinion to be treated in law as though they were the same." Tigner v. Texas, 310 U. S. 141, 147.

We are not concerned with the soundness of the distinctions drawn. It is enough that it is open to Oklahoma to believe them to be valid as the basis of a policy for its people.[7]

Affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE CLARK took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

[¶ 69,387] Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company v. United States. Galax Mirror Company, Inc., et al. v. United States.

In the Supreme Court of the United States. October Term, 1958. Nos. 489 and 491, respectively. Dated June 22, 1959.

On Writs of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit.

Case No. 1327 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Trial—Right of Defendant to Inspect Grand Jury Testimony of Government Witness—Necessity of Showing "Particularized Need".—Defendants in a criminal action charging a price fixing conspiracy did not have the right to inspect the grand jury testimony of a Government witness upon a showing on cross-examination of that witness at trial that he testified before the grand jury. Under case law and Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal

---

[5] See the article by Mr. Brandeis, as he then was, in the November 15, 1913, issue of Harper's Weekly, at p. 10.

[6] This would come about if the dealer using trading stamps were allowed to meet the lowered price, or if, by dropping trading stamps, the other dealer was forced to raise prices. It is conceivable that a mathematical formula might be developed to equalize the use of trading stamps and price cuts. But certainly the Constitution does not place such a complex and, at best, uncertain and speculative, burden on the States.

[7] Appellant also claims that the Oklahoma law is pre-empted by federal antitrust laws. However, this claim was not made below.

Procedure, the inspection or not of grand jury testimony is committed to the discretion of the trial judge. Under the circumstances of the instant case, the trial court did not err in refusing to make such grand jury testimony available to the defendants for use in cross-examination. The contention that the defense has a "right" to the delivery of a witness' grand jury testimony upon such a showing runs counter to the long established policy of secrecy of grand jury proceedings. The burden is on the defense to show that "a particularized need" exists for the testimony which outweighs the policy of secrecy. There was no such showing in the instant case. The defendants contended only that they had a "right" to the testimony because it dealt with subject matter generally covered at the trial. The defendants did not invoke the discretion of the trial court, but asserted a supposed absolute right, a right which they did not have. The decision in Jencks v. United States, 353 U. S. 657, was not applicable to the instant case. It had nothing to do with grand jury proceedings, and its language was not intended to encompass grand jury minutes. Likewise, it is clear that Congress intended to exclude such minutes from the operation of the Jencks Act (18 U. S. Code, Sec. 3500).

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.360, 2005.395; Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8029, 8029.140, 8029.600, 8029.625.

For the petitioners: Leland Hazard, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Cyrus V. Anderson, Pittsburgh, Pa.; and James B. Henry, Jr., New York, N. Y., for petitioner in No. 489. H. Graham Morison, Samuel K. Abrams, and Robert M. Lichtman, Washington, D. C., for petitioners in No. 491.

For the United States: J. Lee Rankin, Solicitor General; Daniel M. Friedman, Assistant to the Solicitor General; and Richard A. Solomon, Samuel Karp, and Ernest L. Folk, III, Attorneys, Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

Affirming a decision of the U. S. Court of Appeals, Fourth Circuit, 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,157.

[Grand Jury Minutes—Inspection]

Mr. Justice Clark delivered the opinion of the Court [In full text]:

Petitioners stand convicted on a single-count indictment charging a conspiracy under § 1 of the Sherman Act. They contend that the trial judge erred in refusing to permit them to inspect the grand jury minutes covering the testimony before that body of a key government witness at the trial. The Court of Appeals affirmed the convictions, [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,157] 260 F. 2d 397. With reference to the present claim, it held that Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure [1] committed the inspection or not of grand jury minutes to the sound discretion of the trial judge, and that in this instance, no abuse of that discretion had been shown. We granted certiorari limited to the question posed by this ruling. 358 U. S. 917, 918. We conclude that in the circumstances of this case the trial court did not err in refusing to make Jonas' grand jury testimony available to petitioners for use in cross-examination.

[Evidence of Price Fixing]

The indictment returned in the case named as defendants seven corporations, all manufacturers of mirrors, and three of their officers. However, only three of the corporations are petitioners here, along with one individual, J. A. Messer, Sr. The indictment charged a conspiracy to fix the price of plain plate glass mirrors sold in interstate commerce. It is not necessary for our purposes to detail the facts of this long trial, the record of [1] "Rule 6. The Grand Jury.

"(e) Secrecy of Proceedings and Disclosure. Disclosure of matters occurring before the grand jury other than its deliberations and the vote of any juror may be made to the attorneys for the government for use in the performance of their duties. Otherwise a juror, attorney, interpreter or stenographer may disclose matters occurring before the grand jury only when so directed by the court preliminarily to or in connection with a judicial proceeding or when permitted by the court at the request of the defendant upon a showing that grounds may exist for a motion to dismiss the indictment because of matters occurring before the grand jury. No obligation of secrecy may be imposed upon any person except in accordance with this rule. The court may direct that an indictment shall be kept secret until the defendant is in custody or has given bail, and in that event the clerk shall seal the indictment and no person shall disclose the finding of the indictment except when necessary for the issuance and execution of a warrant or summons."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

which covers 860 pages. It is sufficient to say that the Government proved its case through 10 witnesses, the last of whom was A. G. Jonas. He was President of a large North Carolina mirror manufacturing company and had a reputation for independence in the industry. Although neither he nor his corporation was indicted, the latter was made a co-conspirator. The evidence indicates that the conspiracy was consummated at two meetings held on successive days during the week of the annual meeting of The Mirror Manufacturers Association in 1954 at Asheville, North Carolina. Jonas, not being a member of the Association, did not attend the convention. Talk at the convention regarding prices culminated in telephone calls by several representatives of mirror manufacturers to Jonas concerning his attitude on raising prices. On the day following these calls Jonas and three of the participants in the conspiracy met at an inn away from the convention headquarters and discussed "prices." Within three days thereafter each of the manufacturers announced an identical price increase, which was approximately 10 percent. Jonas' testimony, of course, was confined to the telephone calls and the meeting at the inn where the understanding was finalized. The Government admits that he was an "important" witness. However, proof of the conspiracy was overwhelming aside from Jonas' testimony. While he was the only witness who characterized the outcome of the meetings as an "agreement" on prices, no witness negatived this conclusion and the identical price lists that followed the meeting at the inn were little less than proof positive.

[Demand for Minutes Denied]

After the conclusion of Jonas' testimony, defense counsel interrogated him as to the number of times he appeared and the subject of his testimony before the grand jury. Upon ascertaining that Jonas had testified three times on "the same general subject matter" counsel moved for the delivery of the grand jury minutes. He stated that the petitioners had "a right . . . to inspect the Grand Jury record of the testimony of this witness after he has completed his direct examination" relating to "the same general subject matter" as his trial testimony.[2] As authority for "the automatic delivery of Grand Jury transcripts" under such circumstances counsel cited Jencks v. United States, 353 U. S. 657 (1957). As previously indicated, the motion was denied.

[Jencks Decision]

It appears to us clear that Jencks v. United States, supra, is in nowise controlling here. It had nothing to do with grand jury proceedings and its language was not intended to encompass grand jury minutes. Likewise, it is equally clear that Congress intended to exclude those minutes from the operation of the so-called Jencks Act, 71 Stat. 595, 18 U. S. C. (Supp. V, 1958) § 3500.[3]

[General Rule]

Petitioners concede, as they must, that any disclosure of grand jury minutes is covered by Fed. Rules Crim. Proc. 6(e) promulgated by this Court in 1946 after the approval of Congress. In fact, the federal trial courts as well as the Courts of Appeals have been nearly unanimous in regarding disclosure as committed to the discretion of the trial judge.[4] Our cases announce the same principle,[5] and Rule 6(e) is but declaratory of it.[6] As recently as last Term we characterized cases where grand jury minutes are used "to impeach a witness, to refresh his recollection, to test his credibility and the like" as instances of "particularized need where the secrecy of the proceedings is lifted discreetly and limitedly." United States v. Procter & Gamble [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,046], 356 U. S. 677, 683 (1958).

[Contention]

Petitioners argue, however, that the trial judge's discretion under Rule 6(e) must be exercised in accordance with the rationale of Jencks; namely, upon a showing on cross-examination that a trial witness testified be-

[2] The fact that the trial testimony and that before the grand jury included the same "subjects" or related to "the same general subject matter" is not contested.

[3] See S. Rep. No. 981, 85th Cong., 1st Sess.; 103 Cong. Rec. 15933.

[4] E. g., United States v. Spangelet, 258 F. 2d 338; United States v. Angelet, 255 F. 2d 383; United States v. Rose, 215 F. 2d 617, 629; Schmidt v. United States, 115 F. 2d 394; United States v. American Medical Assn., 26 F. Supp. 429.

[5] United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,031], 310 U. S. 150 (1940). And see United States v. Procter & Gamble Co. [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,046], 356 U. S. 677 (1958); United States v. Johnson, 319 U. S. 503, 513 (1943).

[6] See Notes of the Advisory Committee on Rules, following Rule 6, Fed. Rules Crim. Proc.

fore the grand jury—and nothing more—the defense has a "right" to the delivery to it of the witness' grand jury testimony.

[Policy of Secrecy]

This conclusion, however, runs counter to "a long-established policy" of secrecy, United States v. Procter & Gamble, supra, at 681, older than our Nation itself. The reasons therefor are manifold, id., at 682, and are compelling when viewed in the light of the history and modus operandi of the grand jury. Its establishment in the Constitution "as the sole method for preferring charges in serious criminal cases" indeed "shows the high place it [holds] as an instrument of justice." Costello v. United States, 350 U. S. 359, 362 (1956). Ever since this action by the Fathers, the American grand jury, like that of England, "has convened as a body of laymen, free from technical rules, acting in secret, pledged to indict no one because of prejudice and to free no one because of special favor." Ibid. Indeed, indictments may be returned on hearsay, or for that matter, even on the knowledge of the grand jurors themselves. Id., at pp. 362, 363. To make public any part of its proceedings would inevitably detract from its efficacy. Grand jurors would not act with that independence required of an accusatory and inquisitorial body. Moreover, not only would the participation of the jurors be curtailed, but testimony would be parsimonious if each witness knew that his testimony would soon be in the hands of the accused. Especially is this true in antitrust proceedings where fear of business reprisal might haunt both the grand juror and the witness. And this "go slow" sign would continue as realistically at the time of trial as theretofore.

It does not follow, however, that grand jury minutes should never be made available to the defense. This Court has long held that there are occasions, see United States v. Procter & Gamble, supra, at 683, when the trial judge may in the exercise of his discretion order the minutes of a grand jury witness produced for use on his cross-examination at trial. Certainly "disclosure is wholly proper where the ends of justice require it." United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., supra, at 234.

["Particularized Need" Not Shown]

The burden, however, is on the defense to show that "a particularized need" exists for the minutes which outweighs the policy of secrecy. We have no such showing here. As we read the record the petitioners failed to show any need whatever for the testimony of the witness Jonas. They contended only that they had a "right" to the transcript because it dealt with subject matter generally covered at the trial. Petitioners indicate that the trial judge required a showing of contradiction between Jonas' trial and grand jury testimony. Such a preliminary showing would not, of course, be necessary. While in a colloquy with counsel the judge did refer to such a requirement, we read his denial as being based on the breadth of petitioners' claim. Petitioners also claim error because the trial judge failed to examine the transcript himself for any inconsistencies. But we need not consider that problem because petitioners made no such request of the trial judge. The Court of Appeals apparently was of the view that even if the trial judge had been requested to examine the transcript he would not have been absolutely required to do so. It is contended here that the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has reached a contrary conclusion. United States v. Spangelet, 258 F. 2d 338. Be that as it may, resolution of that question must await a case where the issue is presented by the record. The short of it is that in the present case the petitioners did not invoke the discretion of the trial judge, but asserted a supposed absolute right, a right which we hold they did not have. The judgment is therefore Affirmed.

[Dissenting Opinion]

MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN, with whom THE CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE BLACK and MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS join, dissenting [In full text]:

[Issue]

In the words of the Court of Appeals, Jonas was the Government's "principal prosecuting witness."[1] He was President of Lenoir

[1] Jonas was the only witness to testify that the defendants had actually agreed to a uniform price increase. Furthermore, his testimony was necessary to refute other testimony that the President of petitioner Galax Mirror Co., Inc., had stated that he would follow his pricing policy regardless of what the other manufacturers did. Jonas' testimony was also instrumental in connecting petitioner Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. to the price-fixing agreement.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Mirror Company, which company was a participant in the alleged price-fixing conspiracy, but was not indicted. After Jonas testified on direct examination defense counsel asked for the production of his relevant grand jury testimony. The trial judge immediately made clear his intention not to grant the motion: "Unless you can show some sound basis that contradicts between what happened in the Grand Jury room and his testimony before the Grant Jury and his testimony in this trial, I am not going to require the production of the Grand Jury records. It would be easy for any attorney to get access to the records of the Grand Jury by just such a motion as you are making here." Defense counsel protested, "we are not attempting that. We want just a transcript of his testimony before the Grand Jury regarding the subjects to which he has testified on direct examination." (Emphasis supplied.) This request thus encompassed all of Jonas' grand jury testimony only if all of that testimony covered the subject matter of Jonas' trial testimony. The court replied, "You have stated what you want to ask him and I am denying your right to do it." Plainly defense counsel were not asking to see the minutes of the entire grand jury proceedings, nor even of all of Jonas' testimony before the grand jury unless all of it was on the same subject matter as his trial testimony. Their motion was carefully limited to a request for so much of Jonas' grand jury testimony as "covered the substance of his testimony on direct examination." This request that secrecy be "lifted discretely and limitedly," United States v. Procter & Gamble [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,046], 356 U. S. 677, 683, necessarily implied a request that the trial judge inspect the grand jury minutes and turn over to the defense only those parts dealing with Jonas' testimony on the same subject matter as his trial testimony. In this posture, then, the question for our decision is the narrow one whether the trial judge erred in denying the defense request for inspection of the grand jury testimony of a key government witness which covered the subject matter of that witness' trial testimony.[2] I dissent from the Court's affirmance of the trial judge's ruling denying this carefully circumscribed request.

[Grand Jury Secrecy]

Grand jury secrecy is, of course, not an end in itself. Grand jury secrecy is maintained to serve particular ends. But when secrecy will not serve those ends or when the advantages gained by secrecy are outweighed by a countervailing interest in disclosure, secrecy may and should be lifted, for to do so in such a circumstance would further the fair administration of criminal justice. See McNabb v. United States, 318 U. S. 332. It is true that secrecy is not to be lifted without a showing of good reason, but it is too late in the day to say, as the Court as a practical matter does here, that the Government may insist upon grand jury secrecy even when the possible prejudice to the accused in a criminal case is crystal clear and none of the reasons justifying secrecy is present. "[A]fter the grand jury's functions are ended, disclosure is wholly proper where the ends of justice require it." United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,031], 310 U. S. 150, 234. Thus grand jury minutes have been made available to a defendant accused of committing perjury before the grand jury so that he could adequately prepare his defense, United States v. Remington, 191 F. 2d 246; United States v. Rose, 215 F. 2d 617, and to a defendant who can show an inconsistency between the trial testimony and grand jury testimony of a government witness, United States v. Alper, 156 F. 2d 222; Burton v. United States, 175 F. 2d 960; Herzog v. United States, 226 F. 2d 561; United States v. H. J. K. Theatre Corp., 236 F. 2d 502. On occasion the Government itself has recognized the fairness of permitting the defense access to the grand jury testimony of government witnesses even though it considered that it was not bound to do so, United States v. Grunewald, 162 F. Supp. 621. This Court has implied that grand jury minutes would be discoverable by a defendant in a civil antitrust suit instituted by the Government on a showing of "particularized need," United States v. Procter & Gamble [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,046], 356 U. S. 677, 683.[3] Nor can we overlook that the Government uses grand jury minutes to further its own interests in litigation. It is apparently standard practice for government attorneys to use grand jury minutes in [2] As the Court points out, discovery of grand jury minutes is not affected by the Jencks statute, 18 U. S. C. (Supp. V) § 3500.

[3] United States v. Procter & Gamble, upon which the Court relies, actually is authority for permitting discovery in this case. The Court preparing a case for trial, see United States v. Procter & Gamble [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,046], 356 U. S. 677, 678, in refreshing the recollection of government witnesses at trial, see United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,031], 310 U. S. 150, 233, and, when the need arises, in impeaching witnesses at trial, see United States v. Cotter, 60 F. 2d 689. Of course, when the Government uses grand jury minutes at trial the defense is ordinarily entitled to inspect the relevant testimony in those minutes. United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,031], 310 U. S. 150, 233; United States v. Cotter, 60 F. 2d 689. Indeed, Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure itself recognizes that grand jury testimony is discoverable under appropriate circumstances.[4]

The Court apparently agrees with the conclusion compelled by these precedents, for its opinion states that grand jury minutes are discoverable when " 'a particularized need' exists for the minutes which outweighs the policy of secrecy." But the Court pays only lip service to the principle in view of the result in this case. It is clear beyond question, I think, that the application of that principle to this case requires a holding that Jonas' grand jury testimony is discoverable to the limited extent sought. Since there are no valid considerations which militate in favor of grand jury secrecy in this case, simple justice requires that the petitioners be given access to the relevant portions of Jonas' grand jury testimony so that they have a fair opportunity to refute the Government's case.

[Reasons for Secrecy]

Essentially four reasons have been advanced as justification for grand jury secrecy.[5] (1) To prevent the accused from escaping before he is indicted and arrested or from tampering with the witnesses against him. (2) To prevent disclosure of derogatory information presented to the grand jury against an accused who has not been indicted. (3) To encourage complainants and witnesses to come before the grand jury and speak freely without fear that their testimony will be made public thereby subjecting them to possible discomfort or retaliation. (4) To encourage the grand jurors to engage in uninhibited investigation and deliberation by barring disclosure of their votes and comments during the proceedings.

None of these reasons dictates that Jonas' grand jury testimony, to the limited extent it is sought, should be kept secret. The Court, while making obeisance to "a long-established policy" of secrecy, makes no showing whatever how denial of Jonas' grand jury testimony serves any of the purposes justifying secrecy. Certainly disclosure at this stage of the proceedings would not enable the defendants to escape from custody or to tamper with the witness who has already testified against them on direct examination. Certainly, also, protection of an innocent accused who has not been indicted has no bearing on this case. Discovery has been sought only of Jonas' grand jury testimony on the same subject matter as his testimony at trial. This testimony will have condemned someone to whom he did not refer at trial only if he has concealed information at the trial, and this creates the very situation in which it is imperative that the defense have access to the grand jury testimony if we are to adhere to the standards we have set for ourselves to assure the fair administration of criminal justice in the federal courts. Similarly, disclosure of Jonas' relevant grand jury testimony could not produce the apprehended results of retaliation or discomfort which might induce a reluctance in others to testify before grand juries. Jonas has already taken in that case recognized that grand jury minutes were discoverable where the need outweighed the advantages of secrecy, but held that such was not the case in the circumstances because, unlike this case, Procter & Gamble concerned a demand for a transcript of the entire grand jury proceedings to be used in pretrial preparation of a civil suit. This case, of course, concerns a demand for discovery of a particular witness' relevant testimony for use on cross-examination at trial in a criminal prosecution. The Court specifically stated in Procter & Gamble: "We do not reach in this case problems concerning the use of the grand jury transcript at the trial to impeach a witness, to refresh his recollection, to test his credibility and the like. Those are cases of particularized need where the secrecy of the proceedings is lifted discretely and limitedly." 356 U. S., at 683.

---

[4] See United States v. Alper, 156 F. 2d 222, 226; In re Bullock, 103 F. Supp. 639.

[5] See United States v. Rose, 215 F. 2d 617, 628-629; United States v. Amazon Industrial Chemical Corp., 55 F. 2d 254, 261; 8 Wigmore, Evidence (3d ed. 1940), § 2360.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

the stand and testified freely in open court against the defendants. His testimony has been extremely damaging. Disclosure of his testimony before the grand jury is hardly likely to result in any embarrassment that his trial testimony has not already produced.

> "If he tells the truth, and the truth is the same as he testified before the grand jury, the disclosure of the former testimony cannot possibly bring to him any harm . . . which his testimony on the open trial does not equally tend to produce." 8 Wigmore, Evidence (3d ed. 1940), § 2362, at p. 725.

Witnesses before a grand jury necessarily know that once called by the Government to testify at trial they cannot remain secret informants quite apart from whether their grand jury testimony is discoverable. Finally, the defense seeks nothing which would disclose the votes or opinions of any of the grand jurors involved in these proceedings. All that is sought is the relevant testimony of Jonas. If there are questions by grand jurors intertwined with Jonas' testimony disclosure of which would indicate the jurors' opinions or be embarrassing to them, the names of the grand jurors asking the questions can be excised. Cf. United States v. Grunewald, 162 F. Supp. 621.

Plainly, then, no reason justifying secrecy of Jonas' relevant grand jury testimony appears. The Court's insistence on secrecy exalts the principle of secrecy for secrecy's sake in the face of obvious possible prejudice to the petitioners' defense against Jonas' seriously damaging testimony on the trial. Surely "Justice requires no less," Jencks v. United States, 353 U. S. 657, 669, than that the defense be permitted every reasonable opportunity to impeach a government witness, and that a criminal conviction not be based on the testimony of untruthful or inaccurate witnesses. The interest of the United States in a criminal prosecution, it must be emphasized, "is not that it shall win a case, but that justice shall be done." Berger v. United States, 295 U. S. 78, 88.

[Inconsistency in Testimony]

Obviously the impeachment of the Government's key witness on the basis of prior inconsistent or contradictory statements made under oath before a grand jury would have an important effect on a trial. Thus it has long been held that a defendant may have access to inconsistent grand jury testimony for use in cross-examination if he can somehow show that an inconsistency between the trial and grand jury testimony exists. United States v. Alper, 156 F. 2d 222; Burton v. United States, 175 F. 2d 960; Herzog v. United States, 226 F. 2d 561; United States v. H. J. K. Theatre Corp., 236 F. 2d 502. But in an analogous situation we have pointed out the folly of requiring the defense to show inconsistency between the witness' trial testimony and his previous statements on the same subject matter before it can obtain access to those very statements. In Jencks v. United States, 353 U. S. 657, we said that it offers no protection to permit a defendant to obtain inconsistent statements to impeach a witness unless he may inspect statements to determine if in fact they are inconsistent with the trial testimony. We said in Jencks:

> "Requiring the accused first to show conflict between the reports and the testimony is actually to deny the accused evidence relevant and material to his defense. The occasion for determining a conflict cannot arise until after the witness has testified, and unless he admits conflict, as in Gordon [Gordon v. United States, 344 U. S. 414] the accused is helpless to know or discover conflict without inspecting the reports. A requirement of a showing of conflict would be clearly incompatible with our standards for the administration of criminal justice in the federal courts and must therefore be rejected." 353 U. S., at 667-668.

The considerations which moved us to lay down this principle as to prior statements of government witnesses made to government agents obviously apply with equal force to the grand jury testimony of a government witness. For the defense will rarely be able to lay a foundation for obtaining grand jury testimony by showing it is inconsistent with trial testimony unless it can inspect the grand jury testimony, and, apparently in recognition of this fact, the Court holds today that a preliminary showing of inconsistency by the defense would not be necessary in order for it to obtain access to relevant grand jury minutes. It is suggested by the Government, however, that rather than permit the defense to inspect the relevant grand jury minutes for possible use on cross-examination, the trial judge should inspect them and turn over to the defense only those portions, if any, that the judge considers would be useful for purposes of impeachment. This procedure has sometimes been utilized in the past as a way to limit discovery of grand jury minutes. See United States v. Alper, 156 F. 2d 222; United States v. Consolidated Laundries [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,975], 159 F. Supp. 860. But we pointed out in Jencks the serious disadvantages of such a procedure and expressly disapproved of it. We said:

"Flat contradiction between the witness' testimony and the version of the events given in his reports is not the only test of inconsistency. The omission from the reports of facts related at the trial, or a contrast in emphasis upon the same facts, even a different order of treatment, are also relevant to the cross-examining process of testing the credibility of a witness' trial testimony.

". . . We hold . . . that the petitioner is entitled to inspect the reports to decide whether to use them in his defense. Because only the defense is adequately equipped to determine the effective use for purpose of discrediting the Government's witness and thereby furthering the accused's defense, the defense must initially be entitled to see them to determine what use may be made of them. Justice requires no less." 353 U. S., at 667-669.

[Subject Matter of Testimony]

From Jonas' own admission it appears that his grand jury testimony covered the subject matter of his trial testimony. The reasons for permitting the defense counsel rather than the trial judge to decide what parts of that testimony can effectively be used on cross-examination are certainly not less compelling than in regard to the FBI reports involved in Jencks. For grand jury testimony is often lengthy and involved, and it will be extremely difficult for even the most able and experienced trial judge under the pressures of conducting a trial to pick out all of the grand jury testimony that would be useful in impeaching a witness. See United States v. Spangelet, 258 F. 2d 338. His task should be completed when he has satisfied himself what part of the grand jury testimony covers the subject matter of the witness' testimony on the trial, and when he has given that part to the defense. Then the defense may utilize the grand jury testimony for impeachment purposes as it may deem advisable in its best interests, subject of course to the applicable rules of evidence.

I would reverse the Court of Appeals and order a new trial for failure of the trial judge to order the production of Jonas' revelant grand jury testimony.

[¶ 69,388] Dallas Farm Machinery Co. v. Minneapolis-Moline Co., et al.

In the Texas Court of Civil Appeals, Fifth Supreme Judicial District. No. 15,503. Delivered May 1, 1959.

Appeal from a District Court of Dallas County.

Texas Antitrust Laws

Combinations and Conspiracies—Texas Antitrust Laws—Exclusive Sales Territory—Antitrust Illegality as Defense to Action for Fraud in Inducement of Illegal Agreement.—A trial court properly granted summary judgment in favor of a farm machinery manufacturer which had been charged by one of its dealers with, among other things, selling at retail in the dealer s exclusive sales territory. The dealer's interpretation of its dealership agreement as one which gave it the exclusive right to sell the manufacturer's products in Dallas County, Texas, would make that agreement violative of the Texas antitrust laws. Also, there was no merit in the contention that, even if the dealership agreement was void as violative of the state antitrust laws, the dealer was entitled to recover damages for fraud in the inducement, procurement, and execution of the agreement. When parties have entered into a contract to violate the law, the courts will not grant relief to either of them, but will leave them where it found them. The reviewing court also rejected the contention that the agreement was one of agency, not of sale, and did not, therefore, violate the antitrust laws. The agreement made no attempt to control the retail prices charged by the dealer and contained various provisions which made it clear that it was a contract of sale, not of agency.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2321.46, 2323.46, 2345.46, 2407.46.

For the appellant: Wilbur T. Knape, Dallas, Tex.

For the appellee: Bowyer, Thomas, Crozier & Harris, Dallas, Tex.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Nature of Action]

DIXON, Chief Justice [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]. This is an appeal by L. D. Beckham and G. H. Kincaid, Jr., partners doing business as Dallas Farm Machinery Company, plaintiffs in the trial court, from a summary judgment in favor of appellees that appellants recover nothing by their suit against appellees Minneapolis-Moline Company and W. D. Barry, defendants in the trial court.

In their second amended petition appellants alleged that on September 23, 1953 they entered into a written dealership contract with Minneapolis-Moline Company. They alleged that they were fraudulently induced to enter into the written contract by the oral representations of appellee Company's agents to the effect that (1) company records reflected a sales volume of $37,000.00 in the Dallas area in a period of only a few months; (2) Dallas Farm Machinery Company could be the authorized dealer representative for Minneapolis-Moline Company as long as desired by Dallas Farm Machinery Company; and (3) the Company would pay to appellants the difference between the retail price and the factory invoice price on all sales which might be made for the convenience of customers at the factory branch. None of these alleged representations are carried forward into the written contract entered into by the parties.

Appellants further alleged that (4) the contract of September 23, 1953 gave them an exclusive dealership in Dallas County; (5) but about four and a half months after the inception of the contract appellee Company, in conspiracy with W. D. Barry, its Texas Division Manager, began making retail sales in Dallas County without accounting to appellants; (6) which partial breach of the contract caused damages to appellants of $50,000.00 for a period of time up to February 22, 1957; (7) on the latter date appellee Company attempted fraudulently to cancel the contract, and thereafter refused to sell machinery and parts to appellants; (8) to appellants' damages in the amount of $400,000.00 covering a period of twenty years beginning February 23, 1957.

* * *

["Exclusive" Sales Agreement]

In their fourth, fifth, sixth, and eleventh points appellants say that the trial court erred in its interpretation of paragraph 2 of the contract of September 23, 1953. Paragraph 2 provides that both the Company and Dealer may sell goods covered by the contract to Federal, State or local governments and departments thereof and educational institutions, and if such sales are made by the Company it shall not be liable to the Dealer for any compensation. Appellants' position is that since this provision expressly permits appellee Company to sell to the named persons, it excludes by implication the right to sell to other persons, thus providing for exclusive retail sale by appellants of appellee Company's products in Dallas County.

Again we find ourselves unable to agree with appellants. Such an interpretation would read an implied covenant into an express contract, which under the circumstances here present may not be done. Danciger Oil & Refining Co. of Texas v. Powell, 154 S. W. 2d 632; Palm v. Mortgage Investment Co. of El Paso, 229 S. W. 2d 869.

For about four months after Kincaid came into the business the Company permitted appellants to send their customers to the factory branch warehouse for the filling of orders. Thus the Company was for a time and to an extent allowing itself to be used as a sales agent for appellants. But the written contract contains no provision requiring such procedure. The practice was stopped soon after Kincaid became a partner. So when appellants executed the superseding contract of November 16, 1955, which contained an identical paragraph 2, they well knew the business policy and practices followed by the Company in its interpretation and performance of the contract. This business policy was contrary to the interpretation for which appellants now contend. Appellee Company pled ratification. Having executed the new contract with such knowledge, appellants have in effect ratified the Company's interpretation. Henshaw v. Texas Natural Resources Foundation, 216 S. W. 2d 566, 571; Teders v. Mercantile Bank, 235 S. W. 2d 485; Simpson v. McCain, 295 S. W. 2d 258.

[Texas Antitrust Laws]

Furthermore we think appellants' interpretation would make the contract violative of the anti-trust laws of the State of Texas. Art. 7426-7428 and 7437 V. A. C. S., Patrizi v. McAninch [1954 TRADE CASES ¶67,787], 269 S. W. 2d 343; Henderson Tire & Rubber Co. v. Roberts, 12 S. W. 2d 154; American Brewing Ass'n v. Woods, 215 S. W. 448.

[Agency]

In their eleventh point raised for the first time in their Supplemental Brief, appellants argue that the contracts are contracts of agency, not of sale, therefore they are not violative of our anti-trust statutes. In support of this allegation they point to paragraph 14 of the contract of September 23, 1953. This paragraph provides that title shall remain in the Company until the entire purchase price shall have been paid in cash to the Company. Such a conditional sales agreement, which by its own terms shows that it was entered into to secure payments of the purchase price, is declared by statute to be a chattel mortgage. Art. 5489 V. A. C. S. Minnehoma Financial Co. v. Johnson, et al., 258 S. W. 2d 78; Sussdorf, et al. v. Lee, et al., 2 S. W. 2d 344.

Other provisions also make it plain that the contracts are contracts of sale, not of agency. The contracts make no attempt to control the retail prices to be charged by appellants. They do provide that appellants shall pay all transportation, insurance and storage charges on the goods and shall be liable for all taxes. They also provide that appellants, when requested by the Company, will execute and deliver a note, or notes for the unpaid purchase price of goods ordered and shipped to them; and that, when requested by the Company, appellants will furnish a guaranty of payment for goods shipped, and on demand will furnish collateral security on past due notes or open account. Appellants' eleventh point is overruled.

["Unclean Hands"]

In their tenth point appellants argue that if the contracts are void because they violate the anti-trust laws of this State, as contended by appellees, appellants under their pleadings are still entitled to recover damages for fraud in the inducement, procurement and execution of the contracts.

We see no merit in appellants' tenth point for these reasons: (1) appellants have not pled for damages because of fraud in the procurement of the contracts; (2) by executing similar superseding contracts after knowledge of the alleged fraud, appellants will not now be heard to cry out that they were fraudulently induced to execute the first contract; and (3) if the contracts are violative of our anti-trust laws, they are void and unenforceable. Henderson Tire & Rubber Co. v. Roberts, 12 S. W. 2d 154. When parties have entered into a contract to violate the law, courts will not grant relief to either of them, but will leave them where it finds them. Appellants' tenth point is overruled.

[No Conspiracy]

It is undisputed that appellee W. D. Barry was at all times involved herein acting as a disclosed agent of Minneapolis-Moline Company. It is undisputed that the contracts were not even discussed with him by appellants prior to the dates the contracts were signed. We find no evidence of a conspiracy between Barry and the Company. It is not denied that Barry acted within the scope of his authority as agent. Under such circumstances he has not individually incurred any responsibility or liability to appellants. Synatzske v. Gorham, 211 S. W. 2d 391; Foster v. Hackworth, 164 S. W. 2d 796; 2 Tex. Jur. 2d 602.

[Judgment Affirmed]

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

[¶ 69,389] Caribe Amusement Co., Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Corporation, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. No. 59 C 178. Dated June 11, 1959.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Pretrial Procedures—Preliminary Injunction—Necessary Showing in Conspiracy Case.—An operator of a motion picture theatre was not entitled to a preliminary injunction restraining a competitive theatre and a motion picture distributor from carrying out their license agreement for the showing of a Spanish-language picture unless and until the distributor solicits new bids for the picture from all interested exhibitors including the plaintiff-operator.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

There was no evidence which tended to prove the existence of the conspiracy alleged in the operator's complaint o. of any agreement, combination, collusion, or concert of action between the defendants with respect to the licensing of the motion picture. To justify the granting of such an injunction, a plaintiff must make a showing of at least a prima facie case, if not a probability of ultimate success, upon the allegations of the complaint. Also, the operator failed to make any showing that it would be irreparably injured.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9026.15.

For the plaintiff: Richard F. Watt and Ira A. Kipnis of Cotton, Fruchtman & Watt; and Elmer R. Segal, Chicago, Ill.

For the defendants: Morris Gosenpud and Mayer, Friedlich, Spiess, Tierney, Brown & Platt, Chicago, Ill.

Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law

[Preliminary Injunction]

HOFFMAN, District Judge [In full text]: This cause having come on to be heard upon plaintiff's Motion for Preliminary Injunction, and the court having considered the Motion and the affidavits in opposition thereto and having heard in open court the testimony of witnesses and the arguments of counsel and being fully advised in the premises, Doth Hereby Find and Hold as follows:

I.

Findings of Fact

[Antitrust Claim]

1. Plaintiff, Caribe Amusement Co., Inc., filed its complaint on February 5, 1959, alleging a conspiracy in violation of the anti-trust laws to restrain trade and commerce in the Spanish-language motion picture industry among the several states of the United States. The complaint designates Columbia Pictures Corporation, Plaza Theatre Corporation, and Abraham Gomez and Leonor Gomez, partners doing business as Tampico Theatre, as the defendants in this action.

2. Plaintiff, in its Motion for Preliminary Injunction which was filed on May 8, 1959, asserts that the licensing of the motion picture SUBE Y BAJA by the defendant Columbia to the defendants Gomez for exhibition at the Tampico Theatre, with priority of run and clearance over the plaintiff's Senate Theatre, was an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy alleged in the plaintiff's complaint. Plaintiff requests that the defendants Gomez and Columbia be restrained from carrying out their license agreement unless and until Columbia shall have solicited new bids for the motion picture SUBE Y BAJA from all interested exhibitors including the plaintiff.

[Parties]

3. Plaintiff, Caribe, is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois. At all times referred to herein it has operated the Senate Theatre, a motion picture theatre located at 3128 West Madison Street in Chicago, Illinois. Since November 28, 1957, this theatre has shown Spanish-language motion pictures exclusively.

4. Defendant Columbia is a corporation engaged in the business of distributing Spanish-language motion pictures to theatres for exhibition to the public.

5. Columbia transacts business in Chicago, Illinois, and has offices and a registered agent in Chicago, Illinois. Motion pictures licensed by Columbia are regularly exhibited in the theatres in the City of Chicago.

6. The motion pictures which Columbia distributes are made entirely outside of the State of Illinois and are shipped in interstate commerce from outside of Illinois to Chicago, Illinois, for the purpose of being exhibited in Chicago theatres pursuant to license agreements.

7. Defendants Gomez are residents of Chicago, Illinois. They have been engaged in business as a partnership under the name of Tampico Theatre since 1952. The Tampico Theatre is located at 1611 West Roosevelt Road in Chicago, Illinois.

8. Defendant Plaza is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois. The Plaza Corporation has operated the Plaza Theatre located at 308 West North Avenue in Chicago, Illinois, since 1956.

9. A majority of the issued and outstanding capital stock of the Plaza Corporation is, and since its formation has been, owned by the defendants Gomez. Abraham Gomez manages both the Tampico and Plaza Theatres. During the time that defendants Gomez have operated the Tampico Theatre, that theatre has shown Spanish-language motion pictures. During the time that Plaza Corporation has operated the Plaza Theatre, that theatre has shown Spanish-language motion pictures.

10. The Senate Theatre, owned and operated by the plaintiff, competes for audiences for Spanish-language motion pictures with the Tampico Theatre.

[Request to Bid]

11. Plaintiff learned several months ago that a new motion picture called SUBE Y BAJA would be released by defendant Columbia for showing sometime this spring in Chicago. This motion picture featured the Mexican actor Cantinflas. Plaintiff communicated with defendant Columbia, by a letter dated January 21, 1959, stating, among other things:

> "We desire an equal opportunity with the Plaza and Tampico theatres to negotiate or bid for this Cantinflas picture and all other Spanish-language motion pictures distributed by Columbia for first run exhibition in Chicago."

12. In reply thereto, plaintiff received a letter from defendant Columbia stating, among other things:

> "In conclusion, I want to assure you that you have had and will continue to have a full, fair and equal opportunity to bid against the Tampico Theatre for all Spanish language feature pictures released by my company . . ."

13. On or about April 3, 1959, in Chicago, Illinois, plaintiff's vice-president, Elmer R. Segal, and two other agents of plaintiff had a conversation with Mr. Egon Klein, an agent of defendant Columbia. During that conversation, Mr. Klein advised plaintiff's representatives, including Mr. Segal, that the Cantinflas picture would be awarded on the basis of bids.

14. On or about April 16, 1959, plaintiff received from defendant Columbia a "Request for Bid" for the picture SUBE Y BAJA, starring Cantinflas. This request indicated that the picture would be available commencing May 14, 1959, for a "non-exclusive first run engagement of 7 consecutive days."

[Bids Submitted]

15. In response to defendant Columbia's request, plaintiff thereupon bid for the picture and, on the form provided, indicated that it would make a guarantee of $4,500.00 and would pay 60 per cent of the gross receipts for a seven-day run.

16. In response to defendant Columbia's request, defendants Gomez submitted a bid for the exhibition of said picture at the Tampico Theatre and, on the form provided, indicated that they would pay 60 per cent of the gross receipts for a fourteen-day run, that they would exhibit the picture as a single feature program and that the guaranteed adult admission price would be $1.25 throughout all fourteen days.

[Rejection of Plaintiff's Bid]

17. The defendant Columbia thereupon rejected the bid of the plaintiff for said picture and accepted the bid for the exhibition of said picture at the Tampico Theatre.

18. On May 1, 1959, plaintiff caused telegrams to be sent to the defendant Columbia and to the defendants Gomez in which it asserted:

> "Have been advised today * * * that our competitor Tampico submitted his bid for a two-week run and that Tampico was consequently awarded picture for two weeks day and date showing with Plaza. This is illegal preference of Tampico and Plaza Theatres and constitutes collusion between Columbia, Gomez and Plaza Theatre Corp. and a deliberate agreement to restrain competition. Demand that you immediately withdraw as illegal award to Tampico and Plaza and reoffer Sube y Baja for bids showing at a reasonable future date and that you accept best bid in terms of offer."

19. On May 5, 1959, Columbia caused a telegram to be sent to the plaintiff which stated:

> "We understand your disappointment in not being high bidder and your desire for another opportunity to bid. This would not be fair to successful bidder who now has contract for picture. Cannot believe you serious that any exhibitor may not bid additional playing time beyond minimum requested by distributor."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[No Evidence of Conspiracy]

20. No evidence has been adduced by the plaintiff in support of its Motion for Preliminary Injunction which tends to prove the existence of the conspiracy alleged in the plaintiff's complaint or any agreement, combination, collusion or concert of action between the defendant Columbia and the defendants Gomez with respect to the licensing for exhibition of the SUBE Y BAJA motion picture. The uncontradicted affidavit of Donald F. McConville, manager of the domestic division for the distribution of Spanish-language motion pictures of the defendant Columbia states that:

> "The manner in which Columbia offers and licenses its Spanish-language motion pictures in Chicago is determined exclusively by Columbia without any consultation or agreement with any of the other defendants herein. I personally decided when and in what manner the picture Sube y Baja should be offered for bidding as between the Tampico and Senate Theatres and I personally designated the form which the request for bids should take. I did not consult with any other defendants in connection therewith."

II.

Conclusions of Law

1. The granting of an interlocutory injunction rests in the discretion of the trial court, which discretion should be governed by the facts of a particular case.

2. A preliminary injunction should be granted with caution.

3. The granting of an injunction is an exercise of far-reaching power, and should not be granted except in a case clearly demanding it.

4. To justify the granting of a temporary injunction, a plaintiff must make a showing of at least a prima facie case, if not a probability of ultimate success, upon the allegations of the plaintiff's complaint.

5. In this case, the plaintiff has failed to make a prima facie showing of the truth of the allegations of conspiracy asserted in its complaint.

6. The purpose of a temporary injunction is to prevent the party seeking such injunction from sustaining irreparable injury.

7. In this case, the plaintiff has failed to make any showing that it will be irreparably injured if the injunction is not granted.

8. Plaintiff's Motion for Preliminary Injunction must be denied.

[¶ 69,390] Carter Products, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. No. 15,373. Dated June 16, 1959.

Petition to Review and Set Aside an Order of the Federal Trade Commission.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Unfair Practices—Misrepresenting Medicinal or Curative Properties of Product—Laxative—Sufficiency of Evidence.—A Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting a company (1) from representing, among other things, that its laxative will make bile flow freely or increase or beneficially influence the formation, secretion or flow of bile; represents a fundamental principle of nature in self-treatment; does not contain strong medicines; is unqualifiedly safe; is an effective treatment for sluggish liver function or will have any therapeutic action on any condition, disease, or disorder of the liver; will cause the proper flow of, or beneficially affect, the gastric juices or digestive juices, or lessen food decay; or will provide two-way relief or possesses therapeutic properties in addition to those afforded by laxative action; and prohibiting the company (2) from using the word "liver" in the trade name for its laxative was affirmed and enforced on the ground that the findings upon which the order was based were supported by substantial evidence.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5055.41, 5087.41, 5087.43, 5201.131.

Unfair Practices—Jurisdiction and Power of Federal Trade Commission—Validity of Order Prohibiting Use of Word "Liver" in Trade Name.—The Federal Trade Commission acted well within the orbit of its authority when it prohibited a company from using the word "liver" in the trade name of its laxative. The Commission had properly found (1) that through the use of the word "liver" in its trade name, the company represented that its laxative would have some therapeutic action, effect, and influence on the liver and was for use in the treatment of conditions, disorders, and diseases of the liver, but that (2) the ingredients in the laxative would have no therapeutic action, effect, or influence on the liver and that the laxative would have no therapeutic value in the treatment of any condition, disorder, or disease of the liver, or the biliary system.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5201.481; FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611.91, 8621.523.

Unfair Practices—Jurisdiction and Power of the Federal Trade Commission—Validity of Cease and Desist Order—General Scope of Order—Court Review.—In reviewing a Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting a company from making certain therapeutic claims for its laxative and from using the word "liver" in the trade name of its preparation, the court held that the Commission made an allowable judgment in its choice of a remedy to be applied. The Commission is the expert body to determine what remedy is necessary to eliminate the unfair and deceptive practices it found to exist, and it has wide latitude for judgment. Congress entrusted the Commission with the responsibility of selecting the means of achieving a statutory policy—the relation of remedy to policy is peculiarly a matter for administrative competence. The Commission had discretion to fashion a remedy of a civil nature to attain the desired goals, and its choice fell within an allowable area of its discretion. Only where the remedy selected has no reasonable relation to the unlawful practices found to exist, should a reviewing court interfere.

The company's contention that, in view of the great age of the litigation and the changing nature of medical frontiers, the Commission's order should not be approved and the case should be remanded to the Commission for a determination as to whether or not the order is appropriate under present circumstances was rejected. Also, the Commission did not abuse its discretion by prohibiting certain advertising claims which the company claimed had been discontinued. In answer to the company's contention that the order would totally destroy its business, the court ruled that the order did not enjoin the use of advertising claims concerning the cathartic properties of its preparation unless such claims were of a character clearly prohibited by the express terms of the order.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5201.481; FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611.91, 8621.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Court Review of Commission Findings—Medical Testimony.—In reviewing a Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting a company from making certain therapeutic claims for its laxative, the court noted that the Commission was faced with the duty of concluding and determining from the body of medical evidence just what medical facts had been established as true by evidence of a substantial character. In attacking the substantiality of the Commission's evidence, the company contended that the testimony of the expert witnesses presented a conflict of general informed medical opinion on basic medical issues, and that this conflict was so substantial "as to compel enforcement by this Court of the standard of certainty in the proof of the falsity of a harmless, honest therapeutic claim prescribed by the Legislature in enacting the" 1938 amendments to the Federal Trade Commission Act and by the Federal Constitution. The reviewing court, noting its disagreement with the contention concerning the effect of the amendments and that the company's position seemed to be that the court should weigh all of the evidence, ruled that the testimony presented a fact issue which would have to be primarily resolved by the Commission in light of all of the expert testimony on the subject. "Whatever might be our personal judgment concerning the probative worth of a huge mass of medical testimony which tended to prove or disprove the existence of such a body of 'medical opinion,' our views would have to yield to the specialized experience and knowledge of the Commission." The question of whether or not an expert used a correct method in experimentation was a factual one for decision by the Commission when it weighed the evidence.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611.01, 8611.08.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Court Review of Commission Order—General Rules for Courts of Appeal.—The Courts of Appeal in reviewing orders of administrative agencies must determine whether or not such an order is supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole. If after canvassing and fairly assessing the entire record a reviewing court cannot conscientiously find that the evidence supporting the agency order is substantial, "good conscience" dictates that the agency order be reversed. In so appraising the whole record, the reviewing court must take into account whatever in the record fairly detracts from the weight of the evidence which underlies the agency order and is opposed to the agency's view. An order of an administrative agency should be set aside unless justified by a fair estimate of the worth of the testimony of witnesses or the agency's informed judgment on matters within its special competence or both; however, the requirement for canvassing the whole record in order to ascertain substantiality is not intended to negative the function of the agency as one presumably equipped or informed by experience to deal with a specialized field of knowledge, whose findings within that field carry the authority of an expertness which courts do not possess and therefore must respect. The courts do not have a right to ignore the plain mandate of the statute which makes the findings of the agency conclusive as to the facts if supported by testimony, and they cannot pick and choose bits of evidence to make findings of fact contrary to the findings of the agency. It is for the agency and not the courts to pass upon the credibility of witnesses and the weight to be accorded their testimony. This is also true of the weight to be given by the agency to the facts and circumstances admitted as well as inferences reasonably to be drawn from them.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8621.650, 8621.690.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Disqualification of Hearing Examiner—Bias—"Recommended" Decision as Distinguished from "Initial" Decision.—The Federal Trade Commission did not abuse its discretion when it denied a respondent's motion to disqualify a hearing examiner from taking any further action in the proceeding and for an order wholly terminating the proceeding because of bias of the examiner. The question whether the examiner should have been disqualified and the hearings terminated presented issues the disposition of which rested in the sound discretion of the Commission. The issues in the proceeding were adjudicated by the Commission under a procedure in which the examiner filed only a "recommended decision," that is, a report upon the evidence as provided by a rule of the Commission in effect when the proceeding was instituted. The examiner did not make an "initial decision," as required under present procedures of the Commission. The Commission made its own formal findings as to the facts, its own conclusions, and issued its own order to cease and desist. The report upon the evidence was advisory only and not binding on the Commission. Since the first hearings in the proceeding were conducted under the "recommended decision" procedure, subsequent hearings also were conducted under that procedure, although the "initial decision" procedure was then in effect.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611, 8611.33.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Sufficiency of Commission's Findings of Fact—Necessity of Including Actual Testimony of Witnesses.—A respondent's contention that the Federal Trade Commission's final findings of ultimate probative facts were fatally defective because portions or possibly all of the actual testimony of some of the Commission's witnesses was unreported in its findings, that is, such testimony was not set out verbatim in the Commission's findings of fact, was rejected. The Commission's findings of fact need not repeat part, or all, of such testimony.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611.33.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Sufficiency of Evidence—Duty of Commission.—When a respondent made representations as to the therapeutic qualities and effect of its pills in advertising claims, it was therein making statements of fact, and the truth or lack of truth in these representations presented an issue of fact to the Commission. The burden of proof was on the Commission, and its legitimate administrative task was to primarily determine whether the probative weight of the proof submitted in respondent's defense served adequately to rebut the proof presented by witnesses supporting the Commission's complaint. Whether the respondent's evidence was sufficient in this respect presented a question of fact primarily for the Commission to decide from the entire record. The duty of the Commission was to weigh all of the evidence before it, and in so doing to determine therefrom whether all or any part of this evidence was convincing in its probative weight or was so inconclusive or unconvincing as to lack the probative weight necessary to carry conviction of its truth.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611.81.

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Cross-Examination of Witnesses Limited—Scope of Examination on Remand.—Where a Court of Appeals had held that a respondent was denied a fair hearing because a Federal Trade Commission hearing examiner unduly and prejudicially restricted the respondent's right to cross-examine expert witnesses who appeared in support of the Commission's complaint, and had, upon direction of the United States Supreme Court, remanded the case to the Commission for further hearings, the Court of Appeals subsequently held that its remand order could not be construed as requiring a proceeding de novo or as an invitation or suggestion that the proceeding might be opened for the purpose of receiving additional testimony from witnesses other than the above expert witnesses.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611.10, 8621.540, 8621.640.

For the appellant: William L. Hanaway, Stoddard B. Colby, Herman Phleger, Alvin J. Rockwell, and Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, San Francisco, Cal.; and Breed, Abbott & Morgan, New York, N. Y.

For the appellee: Earl W. Kintner, General Counsel, FTC; James E. Corkey, Assistant General Counsel, FTC; and Jno. W. Carter, Jr., and Fletcher G. Cohn, Attorneys, FTC, Washington, D. C.

Affirming and enforcing a Federal Trade Commission order to cease and desist in Dkt. 4970. For a prior opinion of the U. S. Supreme Court, see 1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,582, vacating and remanding a judgment of the U. S. Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit, 1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,421.

Before: Healy, Bone and Hamley, Circuit Judges.

[History of Case]

Bone, Circuit Judge [In full text]: The instant case, which has a long history, is before us on a petition by Carter for review of and to set aside a Cease and Desist Order (hereafter "Order") of the Federal Trade Commission (hereafter "Commission") which order was entered in 1956 at the conclusion of about 149 hearings held before a Hearing Examiner of the Commission. These hearings were held on a complaint of the Commission which charged petitioner Carter Products, Incorporated (hereafter "Carter") with engaging in unfair and deceptive acts and practices in violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act (hereafter the "Act"). The instant litigation was instituted by the Commission's complaint bearing date of May 28, 1943. In the earlier stages of the proceeding, the Commission dismissed its complaint (without prejudice) as to a co-defendant and the case is now before us with Carter alone seeking a review of the Order.

This litigation was previously before this court and the much narrower issues then presented were disposed of by our opinion and judgment reported in [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,421] 201 F. 2d 446, Carter Products, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission. On certiorari, the Supreme Court vacated this judgment and remanded the cause to this court with directions. [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,582] 346 U. S. 327. This court thereupon entered judgment as directed by the mandate of the Supreme Court.

Pursuant to our judgment remanding the cause to the Commission for further hearings, these "further hearings" were held before the Hearing Examiner for the Commission who had presided over the first and original set of hearings. At these supplemental hearings conducted in accordance with our said remand order, Doctors Case and Bollman, two of the three expert Commission witnesses whose original cross-examination by Carter this court held had been improperly curtailed and restricted, were tendered to Carter for further cross-examination. Because of the intervening death of Dr. Lockwood (one of these three

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Commission witnesses in the first hearing) this witness could not be tendered for cross-examination and all of the testimony and all of the exhibits based upon, or connected with, the testimony of Dr. Lockwood in the first set of hearings were stricken by the Hearing Examiner. For this reason the Lockwood part of the record in the original hearings was not before the Commission for its consideration when it made and entered its formal Decision along with an entirely new set of Findings of Fact and the new Cease and Desist Order which is before us on this review.[1]

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

[Prior Ruling—Scope]

Because of the great length of the records now before us (which embrace both the original and the supplemental hearings here mentioned)[2] an important aspect of this controversy should be noted. In the mandate of the Supreme Court on its remand, this court was ordered and directed "to reinstate its prior judgment and order after amending it so that it specifically authorizes the Federal Trade Commission to open this proceeding for further evidence and a new order consistent with the Court of Appeals opinion herein." (Italics supplied.)

In the "prior judgment and order" of this court, thus referred to, we set aside the order of the Commission, and specifically indicated therein our reasons for this action. We held that Carter had been denied a fair hearing because the Hearing Examiner had unduly and prejudicially restricted Carter's right to cross-examine the three above mentioned expert witnesses who had appeared in support of the allegations of the Com-

[1] The formal "Decision" of the Commission promulgated on October 4, 1956 sets forth therein its FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, its Conclusion, and the Cease and Desist Order before us in this review proceeding. In this Decision the Commission points out that because of the death of one of the three witnesses whose cross-examination this court had held was improperly curtailed, the entire testimony and all exhibits introduced through that witness (Dr. Lockwood) were, on Carter's motion, stricken by the Hearing Examiner. The Decision also sets forth the formal recitation that "the Commission, having exhaustively considered the entire record, including the evidence adduced after the remand and the briefs and oral arguments of counsel, now finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its modified and supplemental findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom, the same to be in lieu of those contained in its decision of March 28, 1951." (The 1951 decision here referred to was the decision which led Carter to file a petition to review and set aside this order. The review in this court eventuated in our opinion in Carter Products, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission [1953 FEDERAL TRADE CASES ¶ 67,421], 201 F. 2d 446.)

[2] In the proceeding now before us both parties also cite and rely upon all that appears in the various briefs, records and files lodged in this court in the first review proceeding (201 F. 2d 446), save and except all of the testimony of Dr. Lockwood, and all of the exhibits based upon, or connected with his testimony. See our comment on this procedure. The printed transcript filed in this court in that proceeding was in four volumes. This record was also utilized in the supplemental proceedings later held pursuant to the remand directed in our opinion cited supra. The printed transcript filed in this Court and covering the supplemental proceedings appears in ten volumes and, as in the set of printed transcripts in the first review proceedings, appears to contain those parts of the record regarded as pertinent to the inquiry this court must make.

The size of the printed record now before us suggests the conclusion that the further cross-examination of witnesses supporting the Commission's complaint which was directed in our remand, was extensive and searching and fully conformed to our requirement that counsel for Carter be given "broad latitude" in such cross-examination. The testimony of Doctor Case in the supplemental proceedings occupies 164 pages of the printed transcript on this review. The testimony of Doctor Bollman in these supplemental proceedings occupies 300 pages of the printed transcript.

At the conclusion of the first set of hearings counsel for Carter stated to the Examiner that there were then 15,000 pages of testimony in the record (obviously referring to the full reporter's transcript).

Aside from the printed record here noted there was lodged with us in the instant review on the merits an enormous array of documents filed as exhibits in the first hearing in connection with the testimony of witnesses in proceedings before the Hearing Examiner. Commission's brief points out that in this first hearing (ending in 1945) 2209 exhibits were introduced in evidence.

The exhibits admitted in evidence in the hearings also include many copies or photostats of announcer's scripts used in radio "broadcasts" in which broadcasts Carter made many elaborate claims concerning the therapeutic action and value of its pills. Along with these radio exhibits were many photostatic copies of advertisements which Carter had caused to be published in various publications in the United States and in which advertising matter the same claims were made concerning the therapeutic action and quality of its pills. In the aggregate, these radio broadcasts and the newspaper and/or magazine ads contained an array of the advertising claims of Carter which the Commission's complaint repeats, and therein asserts were false and misleading, and which the 1956 findings of the Commission as to the facts also assert were false and misleading in many material respects.

mission's complaint; that the error of the examiner was his failure to permit a "broad latitude" in the cross-examination of these three witnesses.[3] So that no doubt might remain concerning the exact reason for our action, we there carefully identified the particular rulings of the Hearing Examiner which we assailed and which we concluded had caused Carter to be denied a fair hearing.[4]

It is also our firm conclusion that if the new order of the Commission so authorized in our order of remand was to be truly "consistent with" our opinion (as directed by the Supreme Court) this new order would have to be bottomed on the evidence and testimony received in the original hearings (except where appropriately stricken as in the case of Dr. Lockwood) plus the "further evidence" adduced in the renewed and

---

[3] In its Petition to this court to review and set aside the final Cease and Desist Order of the Commission which was issued on October 4, 1956, Carter avers, inter alia, that this court had held that Doctors Case, Bollman and Lockwood were "key witnesses of the Commission"; that it was the "unjustifiable restrictions" on the cross-examination of these "key witnesses" that deprived Carter of a fair hearing; that on February 9, 1955 the Hearing Examiner issued written rulings denying certain motions of Carter including its motion to strike the testimony of "key witnesses" Doctors Case and Bollman, along with Carter's written "offers of proof and additional evidence" all dated May 26, 1954; that the Hearing Examiner did strike the testimony of Dr. Lockwood; that on March 3, 1955, the Hearing Examiner entered his order closing the case.

Carter's said petition for review further avers that it moved the Commission to disqualify the Hearing Examiner and terminate these proceedings; that on March 3, 1955, and before the Commission could decide the motion to disqualify the Hearing Examiner, that officer filed his Supplemental Report with respect to the proceedings on remand, and therein recommended the issuance by the Commission of the same form of Cease and Desist Order as previously entered by the Commission in 1951; that on September 20, 1955, the Commission denied Carter's motion to disqualify the Examiner, strike his Supplemental Report, and terminate these proceedings; that on appeal to the Commission Carter renewed its said motions and filed its proposed findings and conclusions of law; that thereafter and on October 4, 1956, the Commission issued its Cease and Desist Order in substantially identical form with its previous Cease and Desist Order dated March 28, 1951. (See footnote 1, supra.)

Carter prayed that this court strike the Supplemental Report of the Hearing Examiner, terminate the instant proceeding, and reverse and set aside the Cease and Desist Order now before us.

[4] It was this particular curtailment of cross-examination in the original hearings which caused this court to set aside the Commission's order and led this court to declare in its opinion and decision, 201 F. 2d at page 448, that "Questions pertaining to the sufficiency of the evidence or to the merits are not presented by the petition. What is claimed, principally, is that a fair hearing was denied petitioner in that the trial examiner unduly and prejudicially restricted its right of cross-examining certain of the Commission's expert witnesses upon whose testimony, in large measure, the [March 28, 1951] findings and order were based. The witnesses in question were Doctors Carlson, Bollman, Lockwood and Case. We are of the opinion that petitioner's claim is well grounded in respect of the three experts last named, but not in respect of the witness Carlson."

Relative to this same "principal claim" of Carter, we ended our opinion with the further comment (at p. 454) "It is argued that there was ample evidence from other quarters to sustain the findings and order of the Commission, hence the rulings, even if wrong, were not prejudicial. We are of the opinion, however, that the cumulative effect of these unjustifiable restrictions on the cross-examination of key witnesses for the Commission was to deprive petitioner of a fair hearing. Such being the case the court is not disposed to speculate as to what would have been the outcome had a fair and impartial hearing been accorded."

In discussing at one point in our said opinion the latitude to be allowed in the cross-examination of expert witnesses, we referred to the fact that the Examiner imposed upon Carter the condition that it make Dr. Lockwood its own witness and we characterized this action (p. 452) as "flagrant error." As noted supra in this opinion, the death of Dr. Lockwood caused the Hearing Examiner to later strike from the records in this proceeding all of the testimony and all of the exhibits based upon, or connected with, the testimony of Dr. Lockwood in the first set of hearings. As a consequence of this action, the record shows that the new set of Findings of Fact and the new Cease and Desist Order now before us and which were entered by the Commission under date of October 4, 1956, do not rest in any degree upon the Lockwood testimony and the exhibits based upon or connected therewith, and in our view the "flagrant error" we mentioned has ceased to be a factor in this proceeding.

Because a question arose concerning the probative value and admissibility of testimony relating to experiments on dogs and human patients, this court also took occasion to comment upon this phase of the proceedings before the Hearing Examiner. In footnote 1 of our previous decision, supra, (p. 448) we said: "Petitioner also urges that fatal error was committed in admitting evidence pertaining to certain experiments on dogs and human patients. In our opinion the objection to these experiments, several of which will be mentioned hereafter, goes to their weight only, not to their admissibility."

On this review we find no reason to part company with the views we previously expressed in this footnote.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

additional cross-examination of two of the Commission's above noted expert witnesses in the supplemental hearings which followed the remand. If it be the view of Carter that our order of remand required a proceeding de novo, or was properly to be construed (in light of the direction from the Supreme Court) as an invitation or suggestion that the proceedings might (also) be opened for the purpose of receiving additional testimony from witnesses other than the two expert witnesses we have mentioned (Case and Bollman) we must disagree with Carter since our conclusion is to the contrary.

After Case and Bollman were further cross-examined at length in the following supplemental hearings above referred to, and on October 4, 1956, the Commission made and entered an entirely new and second set of Findings of Fact, a Conclusion of Law, its formal Decision (see footnote 1) and the Cease and Desist Order[5] which is here involved. A formal Opinion of the Commission was also filed on October 4, 1956. For reference to date and place of publication of an official copy of the here noted Commission's Cease and Desist Order, see last paragraph of footnote 5.

[FTC Act]

Applicable provisions of the Act with which we are here concerned are:

[5] The formal Decision of the Commission embodies its final Cease and Desist Order, its Conclusion of Law, and its "Findings as to the Facts." The Conclusion of Law and the Cease and Desist Order now before us read as follows:

CONCLUSION

"The acts and practices of the respondent, as herein found, are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and constitute unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act."

FINAL ORDER

"It Is Ordered that the respondent, Carter Products, Inc., a corporation, and its officers, agents, representatives and employees, directly or through any corporate or other device, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, or distribution of the product now designated 'Carter's Little Liver Pills,' or any other product of substantially similar composition or possessing substantially similar properties under whatever name sold, do forthwith cease and desist from:

"(1) Disseminating or causing to be disseminated any advertisement by means of the United States mails or by any means in commerce, as 'commerce' is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, which advertisement represents directly or by implication—

"(a) That said preparation represents a fundamental principle of nature in self-treatment;

"(b) That said preparation will bring on or restore regularity of bowel movement, or is a cure, remedy or competent or effective treatment for constipation, or has any beneficial value in the treatment of any of the symptoms thereof in excess of the temporary relief afforded by its laxative action;

"(c) That said preparation does not contain strong medicines;

"(d) That said preparation is unqualifiedly safe;

"(e) That said preparation is an effective treatment for sluggish liver function or that it will have any therapeutic action on any condition, disease or disorder of the liver;

"(f) That said preparation will make bile flow freely, increase or beneficially influence the formation, secretion or flow of bile, or prevent or overcome discomforts caused by over-indulgence in food or other pleasures;

"(g) That said preparation will provide two-way relief or that it possesses therapeutic properties in addition to those afforded by laxative action;

"(h) That said preparation will cause the proper flow of, or beneficially affect, the gastric juices or digestive juices, or lessen food decay;

"(i) That said preparation is based on the fundamental principle of the operation of the digestive system;

"(j) That said preparation will help food digestion, or regulate digestion or the digestive system;

"(k) That said preparation will have any influence in inducing a state of 'bounce,' vigor or well-being except in those instances in which a lack thereof is due solely to constipation;

"(l) That constipation poisons the body;

"(m) That said preparation has any value in the treatment of headache, ugly complexion, bad breath, coated tongue or a bad taste in the mouth, or for those conditions in which an individual feels 'Down-and-out,' 'blue,' 'down-in-the-dumps,' 'worn out,' 'sunk,' 'logy,' 'depressed,' 'sluggish,' 'all-in,' 'listless,' 'mean,' 'low,' 'cross,' 'tired,' 'stuffy,' 'heavy,' 'miserable,' 'sour,' 'grouchy,' 'irritable,' 'cranky,' 'peevish,' 'fagged out,' 'dull,' 'sullen,' 'what's-the-use,' 'bogged down,' 'grumpy,' 'run-down,' or 'gloomy,' in excess of such temporary relief therefrom as may be afforded by an evacuation of the bowels in those cases in which such symptoms or conditions are associated with and caused by constipation;

"(n) That said preparation is a competent or effective treatment for indigestion or retarded digestion;

"(o) That said preparation is a competent or effective treatment for biliousness.

"(2) Disseminating or causing to be disseminated any advertisement by means of the United States mails or by any means in commerce, as 'commerce' is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, in which the word 'Liver' is used in the trade name for the respondent's preparation.

"(3) Disseminating or causing to be disseminated any advertisement by any means for the purpose of inducing or which is likely to "Sec. 5(a)(1). [Section 45(a)(1) of Title 15, U. S. C. A.] * * * unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce, are declared unlawful.

"Sec. 5(a)(6). [Section 45(a)(6) of Title 15, U. S. C. A.] The Commission is empowered and directed to prevent persons, partnerships, or corporations * * * from using * * * unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce."

Pursuant to the order authorizing the Commission to open the proceedings for the further evidence mentioned and for entry of a new order consistent with the opinion of this court, the Commission did, by order, reopen the proceeding and refer it to the Hearing Examiner "for such further proceedings as may be necessary to correct the errors in the original hearings as specified by the Court of Appeals." The examiner was directed to file "a report upon the additional evidence and state the changes, if any, he wishes to make in his original recommended decision as a result of such additional evidence."

[Disqualification of Examiner]

After an order of the examiner was later made closing the record and denying Carter's motion and offers of certain proof, Carter (on April 18, 1955) filed a motion to disqualify the Hearing Examiner from taking any further action in this proceeding, and for an order wholly terminating these proceedings because of bias of the examiner. Subsequently, the examiner filed his supplemental report and his recommendation. Later on, and in an opinion carefully analyzing the issues tendered by the said motion, the Commission denied Carter's motion to disqualify the examiner and to terminate the proceedings.

We are of the opinion that the question whether the Hearing Examiner should have been disqualified (for the reason urged by Carter) and in addition the hearings terminated, presented issues the disposition of which rested in the sound discretion of the Commission. From the record as a whole we cannot conclude as a matter of law that the Commission abused its discretion when it denied Carter's said motion for the relief here mentioned.

As the Commission emphasizes in its brief, the issues in this case were adjudicated by the Commission under a procedure in which the examiner files only a "recommended decision," i. e., a "report upon the evidence" as provided by a rule of the Commission in effect when the proceedings were instituted. Therefore, the examiner in the instant matter did not make an "initial decision," as is required under the present procedure. It should be noted that in this proceeding the Commission made its own formal findings as to the facts, its own conclusion and issued its own order to cease and desist. While the Commission's "rule" here referred to required the trial examiner to make a "report" upon the evidence to the Commission, this controlling rule also provided that such a report was advisory only and not binding upon the Commission.

[Area of Factual Conflict]

For many years Carter has engaged in the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of its laxative pills sold under the Trade Mark or trade name of "Carter's Little Liver Pills." These pills are admittedly sold as a laxative and admittedly contain only two active drugs—aloes and podophyllum. On this review the Commission takes the position that the evidence adduced in support of the allegations of the complaint clearly establishes that these two drugs are recognized as "irritative laxatives"; that this evidence shows that Carter repeatedly made, and is making, false representations in its general advertising in induce, directly or indirectly, the purchase of said product in commerce, as 'commerce' is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act, which advertisement contains any representation prohibited in paragraphs (1) and (2) hereof.

"It Is Further Ordered that the charges of the complaint as they relate to the respondent Street & Finney, a corporation, be, and the same hereby are, dismissed without prejudice to the right of the Commission to take such further action as future conditions may warrant.

"It Is Further Ordered that the respondent, Carter Products, Inc., shall, within sixty (60) days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

"By the Commission, Commissioner Mason not participating.

"Issued: October 4, 1956."

An official copy of the above Cease and Desist Order was published in the October 23, 1956 issue of the Federal Register, Volume 21, Number 206.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

commerce that use of its medicinal preparation will stimulate the production and flow of liver bile thereby rapidly improving the health of users; that Carter also falsely claims in this widely disseminated advertising that use of its pills provides an effective treatment for a vast array of common human ailments, including disorders and diseases of the liver, and that many of these claims constitute false representations in advertising; that this sort of conduct constitutes unfair and deceptive acts and practices in interstate commerce within the meaning of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, supra. Highlighting the position of Commission counsel is their assertion that the actual area of factual conflict in this proceeding relates simply and solely to what influence, if any, Carter's laxative pill will have on the production and flow of liver bile. Our examination of the medical evidence and testimony in the record leads us to conclude that this position of counsel finds strong support in the records. (See footnotes 7 and 8, infra.)

The Complaint

The Commission's complaint directed against the advertising claims of Carter covers sixteen pages of the printed transcript and sets forth a long array of charges. In general, it avers that in furtherance of the sale and distribution of its medicinal preparation known as "Carter's Little Liver Pills," Carter has disseminated and now is disseminating many false and misleading advertisements to the general public concerning this preparation, and also making disparaging statements about the drug calomel and other laxative preparations, this by use of the United States mails and by various means in commerce as defined by the Act. The complaint charges that the dissemination of this false advertising by Carter was for the purpose of inducing, and was likely to induce, directly or indirectly, the purchase of Carter's preparation "Carter's Little Liver Pills" in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the Act.

The length of the complaint and the answer of Carter requires that we summarize these pleadings. In our summary of the complaint we shall indicate the general character of the charges appearing in some of the paragraphs wherein certain advertising claims of Carter are carefully specified in detail, but we do not undertake to list all of the advertising claims noted in the complaint. In the hearings, the proof that a great array of these advertising claims had been made by Carter by publication in newspaper ads and in "commercial announcements" in radio broadcasts, was presented by introducing (apparently without objection) copies of these ads and the radio announcers' scripts. To list at this point all of the claims thus shown concerning the alleged merits of Carter's preparation would expand this opinion beyond any reasonable length. The Commission's complaint however sets them out in elaborate detail.

As we shall later note, the Cease and Desist Order of the Commission now before us (footnote 5, supra) does not enjoin the use of all of the many advertising claims of Carter described in the complaint; it specifically enjoins Carter from use of certain advertising claims which are carefully described in the Order.

The complaint (paragraph 6), inter alia, charges in lengthy detail that by and through the use of words, phrases, statements and representations appearing in the advertising material disseminated and caused to be disseminated by Carter (as above noted) which purport to be descriptive of the preparation "Carter's Little Liver Pills," and descriptive of their therapeutic action, and the result and value of the action of this preparation, Carter therein represents directly and by implication, among other things, that its preparation:—represents a fundamental principle of nature in self-treatment; is a competent and effective treatment for a condition designated as a "sluggish liver"; will "wake up the flow of [liver] bile"; is "effective in making bile flow freely by getting the liver back to normal and back to producing"; will cause the proper flow of gastric juices, natural vital digestive juices and vital alkaline juices; is based on the fundamental principle of the operation of the digestive system, and will "help food digestion," "lessen food decay," regulate digestion and the digestive system; will bring on, help and restore regularity and is a cure and remedy and constitutes a competent and effective treatment for constipation; will clear away the "dark clouds of listlessness and despondency" and "give one's personality a chance"; will "keep up one's pep and vigor"; will "make one feel good and up to par again" and "keep one smiling and happy"; will "eliminate those uncomfortable feelings" that cause a bad disposition and will keep good dispositions "cheerful, happy and a regular thing"; and will help in more ways than one to make one feel better again fast and differently and will provide two-way relief.[6]

The complaint further charges (in paragraph 6) inter alia, that in its said advertising Carter has represented directly and by implication that its preparation "follows nature's own order for regularity and so regulates the digestive process that, if it is taken as directed before retiring at night, one will awaken the following morning feeling the way one wants to feel, but he will also discover that such use (as directed) of Carter's preparation will bring about (as specifically enumerated in the complaint) some 44 (additional) physical reactions and manifestations in the user's body all indicating the restoration of pep, physical vigor and a feeling of well-being. It is further charged in paragraph 6 that Carter's advertising has represented that use of its preparation will so influence the production or flow of liver bile that one can overeat and overindulge in "good times" without the usual ordinary discomfiture resulting therefrom, and that Carter's product will overcome the effects that ordinarily follow such indiscretions, this by reason of its stimulating influence on the production or flow of liver bile.

The complaint also charges in paragraph 6, inter alia, that in its said advertising Carter has represented that its preparation "does not contain any strong medicine" and is "safe to use"; that "it is not an ordinary laxative but possesses therapeutic properties over and above and in addition to its laxative action." The complaint, in paragraph 7, alleges, inter alia, that Carter's advertising material has (also) disseminated and caused to be disseminated, as aforesaid, material which purports to describe approximately 66 abnormal physical conditions and distressing mental attitudes (specifically noted in the complaint) and as to [6] In many of Carter's representations appearing in its advertising material placed in evidence, there appears the claim that Carter's preparation will give the user "two-way relief." This "two-way relief" was generally described by Carter as relief from "irregularity" without disturbing digestion, and also a stimulation of the liver which would cause a flow of two pints of bile per day. Such advertisements frequently emphasized that Carter's pills were a "laxative plus" because they provided this sort of "two-way relief." The Commission's Cease and Desist Order enjoins Carter from further use of the term "two-way relief" in its advertising. See note 5, supra.

Many of the exhibits in evidence were extracts from radio scripts used in national promotion of sales of Carter's pills. These radio advertisements lauded the unusual therapeutic virtues of Carter's pills, emphasizing that they were "Laxative Plus" which provided a unique form of gentle "two-way relief" not to be found in any other simple laxative, including calomel. Just below we quote the language used by Carter in some of the many radio advertising scripts here mentioned.

"They [Carter's Little Liver Pills] provide two-way relief—relief you cannot expect from a simple laxative alone. First, they help wake up the flow of bile—a vital digestive juice. And they usually start to do this within 30 minutes after taking. Second, they help restore regularity. In days gone by, folks took calomel to get results like this. But today you get gentle relief from Carter's without the ordeal of calomel."

"Scientific facts show it takes a two-way treatment to get the vital digestive juice [bile] flowing quickly—and to relieve sluggishness without disturbing digestion. Now—this type of two-way treatment follows Nature's own order for regularity.—Remember—many ordinary simple laxatives DON'T—but Carter's Little Liver Pills DO give this two-way treatment you want. Only genuine Carter's have this proven formula."

"Medical knowledge proves that Nature must produce about two full pints of the vital digestive juice [bile] your liver makes each day. Otherwise, your food may not digest properly—and leave you feeling dull, headachy, sluggish. Scientific facts show it takes a two-way treatment to get the vital digestive juice flowing quickly—and to relieve sluggishness without disturbing digestion. Now—this type of two-way treatment follows Nature's own order for regularity."

"First—Carter's starts your liver bile flowing quickly. Second—Carter's gently help you to that glorious feeling that goes with regularity."

"One of the reasons for irregularity is that sometimes the alkaline digestive juices don't flow fast enough to help digest the food you eat. Another reason is that sometimes the peristaltic waves slow down. Many laxatives have no effect on the Alkaline Juices I'm talking about. Many of 'em only stimulate the peristaltic waves. But there's one laxative that may increase the flow of these vital Alkaline Juices. That's why we call it a Laxative Plus. By this time, I'm sure most of you know that I'm talking about Carter's Little Liver Pills."

"When two pints of that juice [bile] flow through our lower food canal every day, irregularity, gas, bloating, fatty indigestion below the belt and bilious grouch may go away. Then many of us may feel full of joy like a barefoot boy. Carter's Little Liver Pills are made of two simple vegetable medicines. No calomel in them."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

these it is alleged by the Commission that Carter advertised that "if any individual feels" any of these "conditions," i. e., suffers from any of them, "then such person is exhibiting symptoms, manifestations or conditions indicating irregularity of bowel movement or constipation; that irregularity of bowel movement or constipation is the cause of such symptons, manifestations or conditions"; that "the preparation 'Carter's Little Liver Pills' is a competent and effective treatment for such symptoms, manifestations and conditions." Also, that Carter further represented in its advertising material, among other things, in the manner, means and method aforesaid, that constipation poisons one's body.

Paragraph 8 of the complaint charges that advertising material has been disseminated in commerce by Carter in which material it purports to describe the "therapeutic action" of its preparation, and the result and greater value of such action in an invidious comparison with the value of calomel and other laxative preparations or compounds sold on the market. In this connection, it is charged that Carter's advertising material has represented directly and by implication, among other things, that calomel, "is a harsh, drastic, dangerous laxative, the use of which is an ordeal and puts one through the wringer"; that "other ordinary laxative preparations or compounds sold on the market do not possess the same desirable therapeutic action nor will the use thereof be as effective, or produce as beneficial results," as Carter's product, and that this product "is superior to such laxative preparations or compounds."

Paragraph 9 of the complaint also charges, inter alia, that all of Carter's advertising claims (noted above) are "grossly exaggerated, false and misleading," and it further avers that Carter's Little Liver Pills do not represent a fundamental principle of nature in self-treatment; that they are not effective in making liver bile flow freely; that they will not get the liver back to normal or back to "producing" (bile), nor will they cause the proper flow of the gastric juices, natural vital digestive juices or vital alkaline juices; that Carter's pills are not based on the fundamental principle of the operation of the digestive system, and will not help "food digestion" nor lessen "food decay," nor will they regulate digestion or the digestive system; that to the contrary, Carter's preparation "is likely to interfere with the digestive process," and will not bring on, help or restore "regularity"; that it does not constitute a competent or effective treatment for constipation, and it will not produce in the users of the preparation the 36 different physical indications of abounding health and vitality (enumerated in this paragraph) and which Carter had advertised will result from the use of its preparation. Paragraph 9 further charges that Carter's preparation will not influence the production or flow of liver bile so as to enable one to overeat or overindulge in "good times" without experiencing the usual discomforts resulting therefrom; that it will not (if taken as directed by Carter) cause one to awaken feeling better (in the 36 ways specified in this paragraph) as advertised by Carter; that Carter's preparation does "contain strong medicines," and that "it is not safe to use under all circumstances"—that it is "an ordinary laxative or cathartic and possesses no therapeutic properties over, above, or in addition to, its laxative action."

Paragraph 10 of the complaint refers to and describes approximately 59 distressing physical conditions and unhappy mental attitudes mentioned in Carter's advertising. (See reference in paragraph 7 to these and/or similar physical troubles which Carter's advertising indicated would be eliminated by use of Carter's preparation.) Paragraph 10 charges that the existence of one or more of such 59 symptoms, manifestations or conditions does not indicate that the individual is suffering from irregularity of bowel movement or from constipation; that Carter's preparation is not a competent or effective treatment for such symptoms, manifestations or conditions; that when such symptoms or manifestations are caused by, or associated with, irregularity of bowel movement, then Carter's preparation "will have no greater therapeutic value in the treatment thereof than the temporary relief afforded by an evacuation of the bowels." It is further averred in this paragraph that Carter's pills "will have no therapeutic action, effect or influence on the secretion and flow of bile and will therefore have no therapeutic value, whatever, in the treatment of any symptom, manifestation or condition, under whatever name or names designated, caused by or due to disorders in the secretion and flow of bile—that according to the consensus of opinion of recognized scientific and medical authority, constipation does not poison one's body."

Paragraph 11 of the complaint alleges that calomel used with proper caution and given in proper doses for, and taken in a proper manner to act as, a laxative, is not dangerous; and it is no more drastic in its action, nor is the taking thereof any more of "an ordeal," nor does it "put one through the wringer" to any greater degree than Carter's preparation which is an ordinary laxative or cathartic possessing no other therapeutic property; that the action of Carter's preparation is no different from, nor will the results obtained from its use be any more effective or beneficial than, that obtained from the use of many other ordinary laxative preparations and compounds containing vegetable laxative or cathartic drugs sold on the market; that Carter's preparation is not superior to such other laxative preparations or compounds.

The complaint (paragraph 12) also generally charges, inter alia, that Carter engaged in further false and misleading representations in reference to its preparation through and by the use of the word "Liver" in the name of "Carter's Little Liver Pills" used in its advertising material to identify and describe the medicinal preparation it sold and distributed; that Carter there represented, directly and by implication, that its preparation is for use in the treatment of conditions, disorders and diseases of the liver and that said preparation will have some therapeutic action, effect and influence on the liver. The complaint further alleges that Carter's pills contain no ingredient or ingredients, recognized by competent medical or scientific authority, either alone or in any combination of the one with the other, as having any therapeutic value in the treatment of any condition, disorder or disease of the liver, or that the ingredients in the said pills, alone or in any combination of the one with the other, will have any action, effect or influence, corrective or otherwise on the liver.

The complaint (paragraph 13) further avers that Carter's advertisements were false inasmuch as they represent its pills as a competent, effective, safe treatment for common and recurrent pains and fail to reveal facts material in the light of such representations or material in respect to the consequences that may result from the use of the preparation under conditions described in the said advertisements or under such conditions as are customary or usual; that Carter's preparation is an irritant laxative or cathartic which is potentially dangerous if taken by persons suffering from abdominal pains, nausea, vomiting or other symptoms of appendicitis.

The complaint avers generally in paragraph 14 that Carter's advertising material does not accurately disclose or describe its preparation or the true results to be obtained from its use, all of which misleads the public into the erroneous and mistaken belief (1) that the use of Carter's preparation will have the effect and accomplish the results claimed for it by Carter, as set forth in paragraphs 6 and 7 of the complaint, (2) that its preparation is superior to calomel and superior to other ordinary laxatives sold on the market, (3) that it will have some therapeutic action, effect and influence on the liver, and/or that it is for use in the treatment of conditions, disorders and diseases of the liver, (4) that it is safe to take. The complaint further avers in this paragraph that Carter's advertising material "has had and now has the tendency and capacity to, and might easily, induce a substantial portion of the purchasing public, because of such erroneous and mistaken beliefs, to purchase" Carter's preparation.

And see our later reference to dismissal of two charges set forth in the Commission's complaint. Commission's finding No. 19 orders dismissal of these two charges.

The complaint finally avers that the acts and practices of Carter (in its noted advertising) are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and constitute unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Act.

Carter's Answer

Carter filed an answer in July, 1943 in which it admitted its identity, the sale of its product and the dissemination of advertisements containing statements and representations concerning its laxative pill, a list of which is set forth in the Commission's Complaint.

While admitting in its answer the use of certain of the representations appearing in its advertising material (as shown by the evidence) the answer averred that as to such representations the Commission's complaint was so framed as to attribute to many of Carter's therapeutic claims a meaning which Carter did not intend in making the claims. It further averred therein that some of the advertising claims noted in the complaint had been abandoned for a long time; that some of these advertising claims were regarded by Carter "as permissible trade puffery or permissible sales talk," and others as being supported by competent evidence. The answer charged that paragraph 6 of the complaint "contains facts, innuendoes and inferences built upon inferences."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

The answer admitted that many of the words and phrases set forth in paragraph 7 of the complaint had been used to advertise Carter's pills, and denied that it had claimed that constipation poisons one's body. It averred that the drugs in its pills "act upon the liver to stimulate the flow of bile," and denied that it had ever represented its products "for treatment of disorders of the liver generally."

Carter finally averred that its advertising of its product "truthfully describes its properties"; that "the mere fact that one may be mistaken in some respects with regard to the physiological action of Carter's Little Liver Pills does not establish as a matter of law that the seller is guilty of unfair or deceptive acts or practices or that its advertising is misleading in a material respect."

Without going further into detail, it is our view that the averments in Carter's answer put in issue all of the material averments in the Commission's complaint.

The pleadings as thus framed remained unchanged through all stages of the instant litigation. After issue was thus joined, the first series of extended hearings were held before an examiner, beginning in November 1943 and ending in November 1945. Upon completion of these first hearings, the examiner made his formal "Report" to the Commission on July 22, 1946. In an earlier part of this opinion we called attention to the procedures which were standard practice in proceedings before the Commission at the time this controversy began. The proceedings were therefore continued under this practice after this court had remanded the cause for such further proceedings.

This (1946) "Report" of the Hearing Examiner occupies (with its two addendums) approximately 267 pages of the printed transcript. It sets forth a carefully detailed analysis of the testimony and evidence submitted in the first series of hearings. It includes his conclusions of fact and law and a recommendation that the Commission issue a Cease and Desist Order prohibiting Carter (and its then co-respondent Street & Finney, a New York Corporation which had been handling Carter's advertising) from continuing the acts and practices which the examiner found to be in violation of the Act.

In the Commission's first disposition of this case by its Cease and Desist Order issued in 1951 the Commission followed the then applicable (and above referred to) procedure in which the Hearing Examiner filed only a "recommended decision," this being done pursuant to a rule of the Commission in effect when the proceedings were originally instituted in 1943. In the second series of hearings held after and pursuant to our order of remand under the order of the Supreme Court, the Hearing Examiner and the Commission continued to proceed under the above noted Commission's rules effective in 1943, since the remand merely continued proceedings which had been interrupted by the first review proceeding in this court. In disposing of the issues arising out of the second series of hearings following the remand, the Hearing Examiner continued to follow the said 1943 Commission rules and did not make an "initial decision" as is required by procedures now followed. In the (1956) record before us on this review the Commission ultimately made its own findings as to the facts, its own Conclusion of Law, and formulated its own Order to Cease and Desist. Thus, its ultimate decision now before us on review was not one fashioned by the Hearing Examiner but was that of the Commission itself. This decision was rested upon the entire record in all of the various proceedings had in this controversy save and except that part relating to the testimony of Dr. Lockwood.

At the conclusion of all testimony taken after our above noted order of remand, and under date of March 31, 1955, the Hearing Examiner filed his Supplemental Report upon the additional evidence received, along with his recommendations to the Commission. In this document the Hearing Examiner, among other matters, described certain past proceedings had in this litigation and this recital was followed by his description of the additional evidence presented by and through the testimony of Doctors Case and Bollman (see footnote 2) and comments on contentions raised by counsel for Carter.

This (1955) Supplemental Report ends with the "Conclusion" of the Hearing Examiner wherein he stated that he finds no reason to alter, change, amend, add to, or detract from, his original Findings as to the Facts, Conclusion of Law and Recommendation for Appropriate Action, all as set forth in his above noted original Report to the Commission of July 22, 1946. The Hearing Officer also stated therein that "the deletion of the testimony of (the deceased) Dr. Lockwood in nowise detracts from the validity of this decision to adhere to the original recommendations, nor does the disregard of Dr. Bollman's testimony in support of [a certain Commission exhibit] alter such determination * * *." The "Conclusion" ends with the Examiner's general comment that "because of the additional testimony [of Doctors Case and Bollman] and the opportunity to again study, review and appraise the entire record after a lapse of nine years [he] is firm in his conviction that the record fully justifies all findings, conclusions and recommendations originally made [in 1946] and hereby renews his recommendations that an appropriate order be issued consonant therewith."

The "Decision" of the Commission

Prior to the making and entry of the final and formal "Decision" of the Commission before us in the instant proceeding (which document bears date of October 4, 1956) counsel for both sides filed briefs with the Commission in which they tendered comprehensive arguments on the merits of the entire case.

Following the filing of these briefs counsel presented oral arguments before the Commission on June 18, 1956 in support of the contentions set forth in their respective briefs. Thereafter, the "Decision" above mentioned was entered. Among other matters discussed in this Decision, the Commission made a preliminary comment on certain antecedent procedures in this prolonged controversy including therein a reference to the denial by the Commission of a motion by Carter (referred to supra in this opinion) to disqualify the Hearing Examiner for alleged bias and prejudice. The Decision also refers to the oral arguments of counsel presented before the Commission on June 18, 1956.

A formal "Opinion" of the Commission was also entered on October 4, 1956. In this Opinion the Commission also discusses the (April 18, 1955) motion of Carter to disqualify the Hearing Examiner who had previously taken all of the testimony in this proceeding. In this motion Carter prayed for an order disqualifying the said Hearing Officer and sought a hearing de novo before another hearing officer, or in the alternative, an order dismissing the entire proceeding for failure of proof. The Commission's Opinion rejected Carter's above noted motion and, inter alia, recites that its "Decision" represents "the result of its own exhaustive examination of the record." Earlier in this opinion we held that the Commission did not abuse its discretion in rejecting Carter's said motion.

The "Decision" of the Commission contains the formal findings of ultimate probative facts developed in the evidence and testimony in this proceeding and occupies approximately 50 pages of the printed transcript in cause No. 15373. Of necessity we must confine ourselves to a summary of the findings which deal immmediately and directly with what we regard as the most pertinent fact issues in this case. Preliminarily, the Commission recites that having "exhaustively considered the entire record, including the evidence adduced after the remand and [after] the briefs and oral arguments of counsel," it "makes this its modified and supplemental findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom, the same to be in lieu of those contained in its decision of March 28, 1951." (See footnote 1.)

After other preliminary findings in the Decision as to Carter's status as a corporate entity and as a litigant, the findings refer to the sale practices of Carter which bring its Commission-condemned advertising operations into the current of interstate commerce and portray its use of this advertising material as one designed for the purpose of inducing, directly or indirectly, the purchase of its medicinal preparation in such commerce. The Decision then sets forth various findings of fact as to the precise nature and character of the advertising representations disseminated by Carter in commerce all as more completely charged in the Commission's complaint and as shown in detail in the exhibits in evidence.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Both the Decision and the Opinion of the Commission contain pointed references to the briefs of counsel and their oral argument on the merits at the conclusion of all proceedings before the Commission. In the margin we comment on this phase of the proceedings.[1]

THE COMMISSION'S FINDINGS OF FACT

The ultimate findings of fact entered by the Commission appear in and as part of its Decision dated October 4, 1956. These findings are set forth in twenty separate and numbered paragraphs and the length of this instrument makes it necessary to summarize certain of the Commission's many

[1] The final oral arguments before the Commission were presented on June 18, 1956. They appear in Volume 8 of the Printed transcript in proceeding No. 15373 in this court at pp. 3472 to 3530, inclusive. The findings of fact set forth in the final Decision of the Commission and in its formal Opinion contain several comments upon these oral arguments but their length forbids inclusion in this opinion. However, a brief reference to the arguments before the Commission, and the very significant contentions therein voiced, will be helpful in arriving at a definite understanding of just what opposing counsel regarded as the exact issue or issues which had to be finally decided by the Commission. The great value of these arguments lies in their refreshing candor and frankness, and the purpose of counsel was to narrow the issues facing the Commission to the limited area of controversy there clearly portrayed by counsel. And additionally, it is to be noted that subsequently (and in four of its later noted findings) the Commission on its own motion also materially narrowed the material fact issues which this court is called upon to resolve in its review of the record.

In his oral argument, counsel for Carter stated to the Commission: "I have argued in my brief that one of the tasks this Commission has before it is to review the entire record and make new findings, because the old ones [set out at pages 305 to 333 of the printed transcript in cause No. 12940 in this court] are out the window. You can't make findings on the basis of an incomplete record."

(We have noted in an earlier part of this opinion, that following the second set of hearings the Commission did make and enter an entirely new, second, final and controlling set of Findings of Fact, a Conclusion of Law based thereon, and a formal Cease and Desist Order, these being the instruments made and filed on October 4, 1956.) (See footnotes 1 and 2, supra.)

Concerning just what material issues had finally emerged as the end result of the two series of hearings before the Hearing Examiner during which proceedings (according to Carter's counsel) "thousands of exhibits" had been introduced in evidence, Carter's counsel frankly stated to the Commission: "I think over the course of the years, it has pretty much simmered down to two issues, one, whether or not the ingredients of Carter's Pills—namely aloes and podophyllin will stimulate the flow of bile from the liver. The other is a corollary that flows from that, is the company entitled to use the word 'liver' in the title of its name, Carter's Little Liver Pills, as it has done now, I think, for about 75 years?" This statement is certainly blunt enough to remove any and all doubt as to what Carter regarded as the controlling issues which remained for final determination by the Commission.

The here noted oral statement of counsel for Carter was clean-cut and distinctly posed the ultimate issue for decision as Carter would have the Commission see it. As we read its briefs on this review, counsel for the Commission does not aggressively part company with Carter's statement of the dominant and controlling issue before the Commission.

However, the Carter briefs on this review range over the entire body of testimony. Vigorous exception is generally taken to most of the ultimate findings of fact made by the Commission, and the basic argument is that in reviewing and analyzing the evidence and testimony in its aforesaid final Decision and Opinion rendered in 1956, the Commission did not squarely face up to the facts developed in the hearings, but to the contrary, it unfairly slanted its fact determinations thereby wilfully distorting the real fact picture presented by the testimony. On the basis of the expert testimony in the record, Carter indicts as grossly unfair and prejudicial the Commission's general comments on the testimony and evidence. It charges that the record there made by the Commission demonstrates its biased attitude, a condition which caused it to improperly and unjustly weigh the evidence and thereby deny Carter due process of law.

The final Decision and the final Opinion of the Commission occupy approximately 62 pages of the printed transcript. In these two pronouncements the Commission appears to have squarely met the dominating issue so clearly posed in Carter's final oral argument before the Commission. We think that the extensive and careful analysis given the testimony of certain of the most important expert witnesses serves to clearly indicate a sincere desire on the part of the Commission to reach to the heart of what Carter's counsel frankly assured the Commission in oral argument was the crucial issue for determination. We are convinced (as was the Commission) that Carter was trying to correctly identify the controlling issue finally tendered in this litigation.

Since we are convinced that the persuasiveness of the great mass of expert testimony and other evidence and the probative weight to attach to it, presented fact issues which were clearly for consideration of and determination by the Commission, we must and do conclude and therefore hold that the Commission acted well within the legitimate orbit of its fact finding powers when it determined, as facts, (1) whether or not the expert medical testimony and evidence, taken as a whole, compelled the conclusion that use of Carter's pills, as adver-fact determinations which we consider particularly pertinent to our present inquiry.

In footnote 9, infra, we have set out the text of the Commission's findings 3, 4, 18, 19 and 20 and these five findings are not repeated at this point in our summary of other findings.

The Commission found as a fact (without dispute on this point) that the quantitative formula for Carter's medicinal preparation is Podophyllum Resin U.S.P. 1/5 gr.

Po. Purified Aloes 1/4 gr.

It also found as a fact that Podophyllum Resin, also known as podophyllin, is used as a laxative, purgative or drastic cathartic, and aloes is one of the irritant cathartics ranking with senna, rhubarb and cascara sagrada; that Carter's preparation serves to increase temporarily the motility of the large bowel by irritation and thus induces partial evacuation of the large intestine.

The Commission, inter alia, also found that in connection with the sales of its laxative pills, Carter had represented to the tised, would in any way increase the secretion and/or flow of liver bile, and thereby affect the human biliary system, (2) whether or not this same testimony and evidence, taken as a whole, established the existence of any relationship between bile flow and constipation which would or could be affected in any way by use of Carter's Little Liver Pills, (3) whether or not use of Carter's pills would (also) produce a beneficial effect "in the treatment of conditions, disorders and diseases of the liver." (As to point 3 here noted see Commission's Order set out in footnote 5, supra.)

---

Our comment on the position of Counsel for Carter calls for a further comment on assertions in the Commission's brief. Stress is there laid on the contention that "the actual area of factual conflict relates simply and solely to what influence, if any, petitioner's laxative pill will have on the production and flow of bile." The Commission's brief also emphasizes this point in somewhat different manner in stating that in Carter's (later noted) specification of errors 1 through 8, it states that the Commission's findings are erroneous because of the alleged method and manner in which the Commission considered or failed to consider the testimony and other evidence relating to experiments and tests conducted by witnesses for the Commission and for Carter. (See our comment on this point in footnote 4, supra.) The Commission's brief asserts that this evidence was admitted into the record as being responsive to allegations in the complaint that Carter's statement as to the effect of its laxative pill on the production and flow of bile was false and misleading. It is urged that as a consequence, Carter's specifications must, therefore, relate to the Commission's findings that Carter's laxative pill will have no effect on the formation or flow of bile. As respects this argument the Commission's brief contends that this is borne out by the argument in Carter's brief that there is no substantial evidence to support a Commission finding that Carter's pill will have no effect upon the formation or flow of bile, i. e., that use of Carter's pills will not increase the production and flow of bile.

The Commission's brief also emphasizes the fact that the finding that Carter's laxative pill will have no effect upon the formation or flow of bile is only one of the many findings of fact made by the Commission relating to the falsity of petitioner's statements as to the therapeutic value of its laxative pill. Additionally, it is asserted that "there is no evidence of any nature in the record that any doctor has ever prescribed petitioner's laxative pill for any purpose other than to produce an evacuation of the bowels."

Counsel for the Commission content themselves with the ultimate argument that the only issues raised by Carter on this review are: (1) whether the findings that petitioner's laxative pill will have no effect on the formation or flow of bile is supported by the greater weight of the evidence and (2) whether petitioner was denied a fair and impartial hearing in this proceeding.

It is our considered judgment that the Commission reached its final determinations as to what had been established as facts, by a reliance on a body of testimony and evidence which it firmly believed to be substantial. As we have indicated, it then had before it for consideration not only the briefs and final oral arguments of counsel in 1956, but also the many thousands of pages of the reporter's transcripts of the testimony in the two sets of hearings held before the Hearing Examiner, along with more than 2000 exhibits of a highly technical character. We cannot find any legitimate basis for charging the Commission with dereliction of duty because it kept the analytical comments appearing in its Decision and Opinion within what we regard as a reasonable compass.

The Opinion of the Commission contains an illuminating and enlightening survey of the evidence and testimony as finally viewed by the Commission. This document, along with the Commission's comments on the evidence appearing in its findings of fact which are set out in its Decision, leaves no doubt in our minds that the Commission's final Decision (as averred in the Opinion) reflects the fact that its Decision represents "the result of its own exhaustive examination of the record."

It is also our conclusion from a careful appraisal of the entire record on this review that the Commission made and entered its final findings of fact and its final 1956 Decision, Opinion and Order based thereon, with a full understanding of the content and significance of the entire record in this case which was then before it. That the final oral arguments of counsel were made in May of 1956, and the Decision and Opinion of the Commission (which were entered in the first part of October 1956) bespeaks, if anything, a conscientious and painstaking examination and appraisal of the then record of monumental proportions before reaching the final conclusion announced in these two documents.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

purchasing public that its said preparation (1) represents a fundamental principle of nature in self-treatment; (2) is a competent and effective treatment for "a sluggish liver"; (3) will "wake up the flow of bile," is "effective in making bile flow freely"; (4) will cause the proper flow of gastric juices, vital digestive juices and vital alkaline juices; (5) is based on the fundamental principle of the operation of the digestive system, will "help food digestion," "lessen food decay," regulate digestion and the digestive system; (6) restore regularity, is a cure and remedy and constitutes a competent and effective treatment for constipation; (7) will clear away the "dark clouds of listlessness and despondency" and "give one's personality a chance"; (8) will "keep up one's pep and vigor," "make one feel good and up to par again" and "keep one smiling and happy"; (9) will eliminate bad disposition and keep good dispositions "cheerful, happy and a regular thing"; (10) will help in more ways than one to make one feel better again fast and differently and will provide two-way relief; (11) follows nature's own order for regularity and so regulate the digestive process that if taken at night one will awaken feeling the way one wants to feel, "full of normal old-time pep and vigor," "alive," "alert," "cheerful," "peppy," "eager," "robust," "bright," "lively," "full of pep," "bounce," "energy," "springy," "snap," "go and vigor," "spry and chipper again," "perked up," "up on your toes," "up to snuff," "up to par again," "fit as a fiddle," "chipper as a chipmunk," "on top of the world," "up and up," "rarin' to go," ready to "jump out" or "roll out" of bed, "singing like a lark," "singing a song for the sheer joy of living," "fresh as a daisy," "glad to be alive," "ready for a big breakfast"; (12) will influence the flow of liver bile so that one can overeat and overindulge without any discomfort and if one has overeaten or overindulged it will overcome such discomforts and enable one to wake up, "roll out of bed," "rosy and bright," "clear-eyed and steady-nerved," "feeling just wonderful," "feeling like a million," free from that "blue-Monday feeling," "ready for a great big breakfast," "alert and ready for work"; (13) does not contain any strong medicine and is safe to use; (14) is a competent and effective treatment for the mental and physical disorders set forth in paragraph Seven of the complaint (see our summary of the allegations in this paragraph referred to supra in this opinion); (15) will have therapeutic value in the treatment of disorders and diseases of the liver.

Upon consideration of the entire record before it, the Commission further found that the advertising representations of Carter, as just above summarized, were false and misleading in material respects. It also specifically found that through advertising which used the word "Liver" in the name "Carter's Little Liver Pills," Carter thereby represented that its preparation would have some therapeutic action, effect and influence on the liver, and is for use in the treatment of conditions, disorders, and diseases of the liver, and that such a representation was false and misleading.

The Commission's finding as to the false and deceptive character of the advertising representations made by Carter was based on its further findings that "Inasmuch as the laxation afforded by an irritant laxative or cathartic is not a normal physiological method of evacuation and is not based on any principle having relation to natural bowel motility, it is not true that the preparation represents a fundamental principle of nature in self-treatment." This finding in turn was based on the evidence of a witness supporting the Commission's complaint, and of several doctors who testified for Carter.

The Commission also found that > "In a scientific sense, constipation is a term used to connote a slower rate of evacuation of the large bowel than the one normal for that individual. Although it has reference to delay in the passage of indigestible residues through the alimentary tract and to infrequency of bowel action, and may be used to describe the condition in which the stools are dry and hard, constipation has been described also as being that condition which causes a person to believe that a cathartic is necessary to cause a bowel movement. Normal frequency in bowel movement varies widely among individuals. Because varied notions obtain with respect to what represents normal frequency, the average layman may not diagnose constipation properly and there is a tendency for self-diagnosis to be made on the basis of symptoms having no relationship to constipation. In its chronic form, there are two general types of constipation: (1) spastic, and (2) atonic. The state of the musculature of the large bowel differs in the two conditions named. In the spastic variety, the musculature is abnormally contracted and rigid and does not propel the contents thereof forward in a normal manner. In the atonic condition usually associated with an enlargement of the large bowel due to tremendously increased content, the musculature does not contract and retain its tonus or state of partial contraction. Atonic constipation is attributable to constitutional weakness of the muscles of the colon and is supposed to occur principally in the rectum, while the spastic type is supposed to be due principally to anxiety, worry, or nervous strain. Among the causes of constipation or irregularity of bowel movement are improper diet and stool habits, insufficient intake of fluids and variations or obstructions of the alimentary tract such as fissure, cancer and debilitating conditions. Factors predisposing to constipation are numerous and thorough study by the physician is necessary before comprehensive treatment is undertaken. Its treatment, therefore, varies in individual cases, but is directed to correcting the basic conditions which are responsible."

(As to the fundamental propositions noted in this finding, the several doctors who testified appear to be in agreement.)

The Commission further found that with regard to the type of constipation known as spastic, Carter's Little Liver Pills "will tend to aggravate any state of spasticity which is present." The Commission also found on undisputed evidence that the habitual use of irritant laxatives and cathartics tends to produce irregularity rather than to restore regularity and the use of Carter's preparation will not restore regularity of bowel movement.

The Commission also found (without dispute) that the statements appearing in Carter's advertising to the effect that its product is composed of two simple vegetable medicines and the references therein to "gentle action purportedly afforded by its use" imply that Carter's Little Liver Pills do not contain strong medicines.

The Commission found (and we think correctly) that Carter's pills do contain "strong medicines." The Commission declares, and the record shows, that though the ingredients of these pills are obtained by purification of members of the plant kingdom, their ingredients are "irritant purgatives." This record also provides substantial evidence that aloes taken in sufficient amounts leads to some hyperemia and increased vascularity; that neither aloes nor podophyllin is absorbed to any great extent, and as long as they remain in the colon may be causative of local irritation. It also found (in the first series of hearings) that podophyllin was removed from the U. S. Pharmacopoeia when the scientific group responsible for the preparation of this publication recognized it as a "drastic," or member of that class of irritant drug which includes colocynth and jalap.

The Commission also found (without dispute) that Carter's product is not safe for and harmless to all individuals who are constipated or suffering from delay or irregularity of bowel movement and symptoms thereof, or from failure of digestion. It also found (without dispute) that Carter's pills are potentially injurious if taken by persons suffering from abdominal pains, nausea, vomiting, or other symptoms of appendicitis. It further found (without dispute) that use of Carter's pills may cause perforation of the intestine in instances where delay in the evacuation is due to obstruction in the tract. (It was emphasized in the evidence that in some instances the use of Carter's pills may be attended with griping and stomach discomfort, and when used in the presence of constipation of the spastic type may serve to increase and aggravate such state of spasticity.)

The Commission also found, and the evidence is uncontradicted, that use of a laxative is contraindicated in many conditions.

It also found specifically that the ingredients in Carter's pills, alone or in combination of one with the other, will have no therapeutic action, effect, or influence, corrective or otherwise, on the liver. This finding rests upon the testimony of three experts whose testimony supported the allegations of the Commission's complaint.

The Commission also found that the greater weight of the testimony and other evidence introduced in the record supports informed determinations that Carter's preparation will not stimulate the formation of bile by the liver or increase the secretion of bile by the liver.

It also found, inter alia, that Carter's preparation will not increase the flow of bile or any constituents thereof into the duodenum —also that Carter's preparation is not an effective treatment for sluggish liver function and will have no therapeutic action on the liver or diseases thereof; that it will not wake up the flow of bile or cause bile to flow freely, or favorably influence the formation or flow of bile either as to quantity or the vital and effective constituents thereof; (As pointed out in footnote 7, supra, the vital controversy in this case centers in this area.)[8] that this preparation does not provide two-way relief and has no therapeutic effect beyond that of an ordinary laxative, that is to say, of any substance which increases the movements of the large bowel either through irritation, bulk or fluid content; that it will not influence the production or flow of liver bile so that an individual can overeat and overindulge in "good times" without such discomforts as may normally attend them, nor enable an individual to wake up "clear-eyed and steady-nerved," "feeling just wonderful," and "alert and ready for work"; that Carter's preparation has no chemical action on food which will prevent decay thereof, and the representation that it will lessen food decay is misleading.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

It also found that use of Carter's product will not increase the effectiveness of the gastric juices or cause the proper flow of any of the vital digestive juices, and it will not help digestion or regulate the digestive system or digestion, or have any salutary effect upon the gastro-intestinal tract aside from affording temporary partial evacuation of the colon; that to the contrary, in some instances, use of Carter's pills may interfere with and disturb digestion.

The Commission went further and found that when certain conditions exist that are associated with constipation, Carter's pills do not constitute a competent and effective treatment for such manifestations (referred to in finding No. 4—see footnote 9 infra) when they are associated with or caused by constipation; that Carter's preparation is not an effective treatment for indigestion, or "lazy digestion" or retarded digestion in any circumstances in which such conditions may occur.

Based upon its consideration of the evidence as a whole, and its appraisal of the weight to be given the probative value of all of the evidence and testimony adduced in the many hearings over the years, the Commission also found, inter alia, that evidence introduced in support of the complaint, particularly when considered in connection with the results afforded by certain of the scientific experiments, constitutes a full [8] Certain of the Commission's expert medical witnesses testified that Carter's laxative preparation would have no influence on bile flow.

Certain of Carter's expert witnesses differed somewhat in their views on this particular problem; one expert medical witness testified on direct examination that Carter's laxative pill would effect bile flow; one of such witnesses said that his experiments would not permit a conclusion, and a third medical expert (characterized by Carter in its brief as its "key witness") said that Carter's pill would increase bile flow if three conditions were present at the same time.

The "three conditions" mentioned by this third witness were as follows: (1) Carter's pill must be taken in sufficient doses over a sufficient period of time to "produce laxation either within normal limits of fresh weight stools or the maximum effect." This witness stated that to accomplish this, 5 of Carter's pills must be taken every day for 1 week. He admitted that what is a normal limit of fresh weight stools varies in the individual from time to time. He stated that he was not willing to say if a person met this requirement that it would mean the flow of bile would be increased. (2) As to the second "condition," this witness stated that "the rate of flow of bile into the duodenum will be increased in individuals and, only in individuals who show during periods within which they have been taking no [Carter's laxative] pill 'low values' for the biliary constituents in the duodenal fluid in response to a stimulus introduced into the duodenum of the type of Peptone."

As to the way this (second) condition could be met, the expert admitted that unless the purchaser of Carter's pills had had a duodenal drainage performed, he would not know whether such drainage was high or low and unless he did know, he would not be in a position to tell whether Carter's pill would have any effect upon the flow of bile. Again, this witness was not willing to say that even though this second condition was met together with his other "conditions," Carter's laxative pill would secure an increase in bile flow.

The third condition was that Carter's pill will increase the flow of bile "in individuals who show signs, during periods in which they are not taking Carter's pills, of diminished rates of intestinal motility as indicated by abnormally low fresh weight stools and symptoms depending upon the abnormally low rate of intestinal motility."

Counsel for the Commission finds this testimony concerning the third condition to be "difficult of interpretation" and points out that Carter's witness interprets it to mean "that the individual be one who shows signs when not taking the pills of low or diminished rates of intestinal motility as indicated by abnormally small stools or absence of stools."

On cross-examination, this "key witness" of Carter was asked whether, if these "three conditions" he had named were met, he was willing to state that whenever any one takes Carter's Little Liver Pills (under these three conditions) the level of the flow of the biliary constituents into the duodenum would be raised. The witness replied that he was not willing to make such a statement.

refutation of the scientific view by witnesses for Carter to the effect that "a favorable influence on bile flow may result from the increased intestinal motility afforded by the irritating action of a laxative" of the Carter type. It also found that "not only is it apparent that the augmented intestinal motility through this (Carter) type of laxative affords bowel evacuation does not significantly increase bile flow, but the greater weight of the scientific evidence received shows that there is no causal relationship between constipation and bile flow"—that "this conclusion has support in other scientific evidence indicating that constipation will not, under any circumstances, decrease bile in the system to such an extent that there is not sufficient bile to carry on its function in the digestive process."

The Commission further reached and expressed the factual conclusion and opinion on the entire record before it, "that the greater weight of the testimony and other evidence introduced into the record supports informed determinations that the preparation Carter's Little Liver Pills will not stimulate the formation of bile by the liver or increase the secretion of bile by the liver"; that "inasmuch as the evidence further shows that the respondent's product will not cause the gall bladder to contract or cause relaxation of the sphincter of Oddi or prevent its contraction in the first instance or serve in any way to milk bile from the ampula of Vater or the bile duct, the Commission further concludes that the respondent's preparation will not increase the flow of bile or any constituents thereof into the duodenum."

In Paragraph 12 of the Findings the Commission found that > "Counsel supporting the complaint maintains that the evidence relating to the test studies submitted in support of the complaint conclusively establishes that Carter's Little Liver Pills do not act in any way to increase the secretion or flow of bile. In contending that the greater weight of the evidence fully supports determinations to the contrary, counsel for the respondent asserts that the record shows that a relationship exists between constipation and bile flow in that a large number of people who suffer from constipation also have a subnormal flow of bile; and that, concomitant with the laxation afforded them and the relief of their associated symptoms, the (Carter) preparation causes significant increases in the levels of biliary constituents for these individuals. Each counsel contends in effect that the scientific evidence presented by his adversary is based on defective experimental procedures and reflects erroneous interpretations of those studies and unsound expressions of medical opinion." [Italics supplied.]

See our comments in footnote 4, supra, concerning these "experimental procedures." (See reference in footnote 9 to text of Commission's Finding No. 19 in which it dismisses certain charge in its Complaint.)

The Four Controlling Findings

Four of the Commission's final findings of fact here noted require special emphasis by us, this for the reason that they clearly indicate that the Commission finally elected to support the injunctive provisions of its Cease and Desist Order of October 4, 1956 (footnote 5) by an ultimate reliance on the facts which the Commission, in and by these particular findings, determined had been fully and finally established by a body of evidence of a substantial character. In the margin we set out the text of the four crucial findings of fact here referred to.[9] The language of Finding No. 20 serves to [9] Finding No. 3 reads as follows:

"In furtherance of the sale and distribution of the aforesaid medicinal preparation, the respondent has disseminated, and has caused the dissemination of, advertisements concerning said preparation by the United States mails and various means in commerce, as 'commerce' is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act; and the respondent has disseminated, and has caused the dissemination of, advertisements concerning such preparation by various means for the purpose of inducing, and which have been likely to induce, directly or indirectly, the purchase thereof in commerce, as 'commerce' is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act."

Finding No. 4 reads as follows:

"All the representations hereinafter referred to have been made directly or by implication in advertising material which the respondent has disseminated or caused to be disseminated in the manner noted in the preceding paragraph. [The preceding paragraph is Finding No. 3.]

"(a) Through use of words, phrases and statements purporting to be descriptive of the therapeutic value, beneficial effects and advantages afforded by use of the preparation 'Carter's Little Liver Pills,' the respondent has represented, directly and by implication, among other things, that its product represents a fundamental principle of nature in self-treatment, that it is a cure and remedy and constitutes a competent and effective treatment for constipation, and will bring on, help, and restore regularity of bowel movement.

"The respondent also has represented that its preparation does not contain any strong medifurther clearly identify the particular advertising representations employed by Carter in the sale of its product (which the Commission ultimately condemned as false and misleading) these including the advertising representations carefully described in Findings Nos. 4 and 18. (Among these false and misleading advertisements is the use of the word "Liver" in the name "Carter's Little Liver Pills.") Finding No. 3 describes these advertising representations as having been disseminated in commerce.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Since the Commission saw fit in these four findings to specify the ultimate basis for its Order here assailed by Carter, we think that by this action the Commission cine, and that it is harmless and safe for use by those individuals who have constipation or are experiencing delay in bowel movement or in whom a failure to digest food has occurred.

---

"(b) The respondent similarly has represented that the preparation is a competent and effective treatment for sluggish liver function, liver ills, and disorders affecting the liver; that its use will 'wake up the flow of bile,' will make 'bile flow freely' by getting the liver back to normal and back to producing; that its use will so influence the production or flow of liver bile that one can overeat and overindulge in 'good times' without the ordinary discomforts resulting therefrom; that if one has overeaten and overindulged in 'good times' that the preparation 'Carter's Little Liver Pills,' by its influence on the production or flow of liver bile, will overcome the discomforts that usually and ordinarily follow such indiscretions and will enable the user to wake up 'clear-eyed and steady-nerved,' 'feeling just wonderful,' and 'alert and ready for work'; that such preparation through its favorable influence on bile flow and in helping to restore regularity provides two-way relief, and that it is not an ordinary laxative but possesses therapeutic properties over and above and in addition to its laxative action.

"(c) The respondent's advertising also has contained statements representing that use of its preparation will cause the proper flow of the gastric juices and natural vital digestive juices; that it will lessen food decay and is based on the fundamental principle of the operation of the digestive system; that such preparation will help food digestion, including the stopping of fatty indigestion, and will regulate digestion and the digestive system; and that it so follows nature's own order for regularity and so regulates digestion that it will make the user 'fit as a fiddle,' and full of 'bounce.'

"The respondent further has represented that constipation poisons the body.

"(d) Through the use of colloquial words and phrases, which purport to be descriptive of various physical and mental conditions, the respondent has represented, directly and by implication, among other things, that when caused by constipation or irregularity of bowel movement, the preparation designated 'Carter's Little Liver Pills' is a competent and effective treatment for those conditions in which an individual feels: 'Down-and-out,' 'blue,' 'down-in-the-dumps,' 'worn out,' 'sunk,' 'logy,' 'depressed,' 'headachy,' 'sluggish,' 'all-in,' 'listless,' 'mean,' 'low,' 'cross,' 'tired,' 'stuffy,' 'heavy,' 'miserable,' 'sour,' 'grouchy,' 'bilious,' 'irritable,' 'cranky,' 'peevish,' 'fagged out,' 'dull,' 'sullen,' 'what's-the-use,' 'bogged down,' 'grumpy,' 'run-down,' and 'gloomy.'

"The respondent similarly has represented that its product is a competent and effective treatment for headache, ugly complexion, bad breath, coated tongue, bad taste in the mouth, 'lazy digestion,' and 'indigestion,' when caused by constipation."

Finding No. 18 reads as follows:

"Through use of the word 'Liver' in the name 'Carter's Little Liver Pills' which is featured in the advertising, the respondent represents, directly and by implication, that the preparation 'Carter's Little Liver Pills' will have some therapeutic action, effect, and influence on the liver, and is for use in the treatment of conditions, disorders, and diseases of the liver. Said representations are false and misleading. The ingredients in the preparation 'Carter's Little Liver Pills,' alone or in any combination of one with the other, will have no therapeutic action, effect, or influence, corrective or otherwise, on the liver. The preparation will have no therapeutic value in the treatment of any condition, disorder, or disease of the liver or the biliary system. Upon consideration of the remedy which should be applied in this connection, the Commission is of the opinion that only excision of the word 'Liver' from the product name will serve to eliminate the deception engendered by its use."

Finding No. 20 reads as follows:

"The Commission, therefore, finds that the representations appearing in the advertising for the preparation 'Carter's Little Liver Pills,' as set forth in Paragraph Four and Paragraph Eighteen hereof, are misleading in material respects, and that the advertisements thus disseminated by the respondent Carter Products, Inc., constitute 'false advertisements,' as that term is defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act. The use of such representations and of the word 'Liver' in the name 'Carter's Little Liver Pills,' by the respondent has had, and now has, the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that all such statements and representations are true, and to induce a substantial portion of the purchasing public, because of such erroneous and mistaken belief to purchase the respondent's preparation." (Italics is ours.)

In addition to the Commission's "four controlling findings" above referred to, the Commission made Finding No. 19 which is favorable to Carter. This particular finding reads as follows:

"(a) The complaint charges also that the respondent's advertisements constitute false advertisements for the further reason that they fail to reveal certain facts as to potential dangers inherent in the use of such preparation under conditions described in the advertisements or conditions as are customary and usual by persons suffering from abdominal pains, nausea, vomiting, or other symptoms of appendicitis. The Commission is unable to find, how-has materially narrowed our task in reviewing the record. As we view the problem now before us, it is whether the record of evidence and testimony, taken as a whole, presents a body of evidence of a substantial character which provides support for these particular findings of fact. If so, they must be sustained.

In appraising the entire record we were at pains to examine the testimony of the array of witnesses produced by the parties. In so doing we noted the weight which the Commission saw fit to give the various conflicts in the testimony of the several witnesses for both sides as well as to the points of agreement developed in their testimony, a fact to which we have previously adverted. And we think that in view of the great length of this record (including the exhibits) and the complexities enshrined in its mass of highly technical testimony from experts, the Commission is not to be criticized for refraining from engaging in a lengthy recital and appraisal of every facet of this extensive testimony, as buttressed by the exhibits. From our consideration of the record we are fully persuaded that the Commission did carefully and conscientiously consider and appraise the probative force of the entire body of testimony and evidence before entering the Order here assailed. In our judgment its final pronouncements in its decision and formal opinion bear witness to that sort of treatment.

When Carter made the representations as to the therapeutic qualities and effect of its pills in the advertising claims particularly described in Findings Nos. 4 and 18, it was therein making statements of fact, and the truth or lack of truth in these representations presented an issue of fact to the Commission. Carter has vigorously assailed the Commission for referring to the "inconclusive" and/or "impersuasive" character of certain phases of the testimony presented by it, and charges that the record shows that this kind of a conclusion was the result of faulty evaluation of the evidence. The burden of proof was on the Commission, and its legitimate administrative task was to primarily determine, as it did, whether the probative weight of the proof submitted in Carter's defense served adequately to rebut the proof presented by witnesses supporting the Commission's complaint. Whether Carter's evidence was sufficient in this respect presented a question of fact primarily for the Commission to decide from the entire record. The duty of the Commission was to weigh all of the evidence before it, and in so doing to determine therefrom whether all or any part of this evidence was convincing in its probative weight or was so inconclusive or unconvincing as to lack the probative weight necessary to carry conviction of its truth. We think that in expressing its determination as to the proper weight to be given the entire body of evidence, the Commission did not err in employing our common vernacular to describe the definite impression this evidence established in the minds of members of the Commission.

As a final comment on the four crucial findings here mentioned, it should be noted that so far as concerns Carter's far-reaching advertising claims in evidence, the record clearly indicates that the several claims described in Findings Nos. 4 and 18 are fairly typical of, and embrace many of the aggregate of Carter's advertising claims as to the therapeutic qualities of its product, all as set forth and described in several other findings of fact entered by the Commission which are supported by substantial evidence. We think that the evidence introduced to show that the claims described in Findings Nos. 4 and 18 had been made in Carter's extensive advertising, was most substantial in character. Our conclusion is that by Findings 4, 18 and 20 the Commission made plain that in the last analysis it elected to rest its injunctive Order of 1956 on Carter's use of the particular advertising claims so carefully identified in these critical findings.

Carter's Specification of Errors

[Twelve Claims of Error]

On this review on the merits, Carter's Specification presents twelve claims of error ever, that the potential danger to the public health inherent in the use of the respondent's preparation is so serious as to require a disclosure in the advertising of the matters to which this charge relates and, in the circumstances, is of the opinion that dismissal of such charge without prejudice is warranted.

"(b) Additional allegations of the complaint charge that the respondent has falsely represented that calomel is a drastic and dangerous laxative compound, the use of which is an ordeal. Although testimony was introduced into the record directed to showing, among other things, that calomel, when taken in proper doses, would not be painful, it is not believed that the charges are supported by the record, and they are, accordingly, dismissed."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

on the part of the Commission. It accompanies these claims with a brief preliminary comment charging that the record itself demonstrates that the Commission committed all of the errors relied on in this Specification, and that the Commission's proof does not in fact or in law constitute substantial evidence including conviction sufficient to warrant the issuance of the Commission's Order.

Before reaching Carter's Specification and the supporting argument in the briefs, we note the fact that Carter (also) supports the said claims of error by reference to, and adoption of, its formal "Petition to Review and set aside the Commission's Order" and its "Petitioner's statement of Points." In the margin we note some of the salient points raised in these documents.[10] These points are keyed to the general arguments in Carter's briefs in support of its formal Specification of Errors.

Carter's claims of error are supported in two briefs containing 215 pages of argument and citation of approximately 206 cases thought to be pertinent to the issues presented in this review. Statutes and text matter are also cited as authority. We set [10] In its "Petition to Review" here noted, Carter, inter alia, complains that on March 3, 1955, the Hearing Examiner entered his order closing the case; that Carter then moved the Commission to disqualify this hearing officer and terminate the entire proceedings; that before the Commission could decide this motion, the said officer filed his Supplemental Report with respect to the proceedings on remand from this court and recommended the issuance by the Commission of the Cease and Desist Order now before this court; that on September 20, 1955, the Commission denied Carter's motion to disqualify the said Hearing Officer and also refused to grant the relief sought in Carter's said motion; that an appeal was taken on November 29, 1955 to the Commission from the rulings and Supplemental Report of the Hearing Examiner on which the motion to disqualify him was rested; that the Commission thereafter issued its Cease and Desist Order of October 4, 1956 which is now before us.

In summary, the grounds for relief asserted by Carter in its said "Petition to Review" are as follows:

The Commission's said Cease and Desist Order, and its aforesaid order of September 20, 1955, along with the Decision and findings of fact "are erroneous in law and fact, not supported by the evidence, or by any probative evidence or by substantial evidence;" are contrary to the evidence and the weight of the evidence; are violative and in excess of the Commission's statutory and jurisdictional powers; are violative of Carter's constitutional rights; are contrary to the Federal Administrative Procedure Act; are not in the public interest and are (also) contrary to the mandate of this court heretofore issued; that the aforesaid Cease and Desist Order of the Commission and its denial of the aforesaid motion of Carter are (also) based upon the failure of the Hearing Officer and the Commission "to weigh, consider or receive the competent, material and relevant evidence offered or adduced in these proceedings."

Carter further complains therein that the Commission did not pass "properly" upon its exceptions and proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law; that as a consequence Carter was deprived of due process and a fair and impartial trial on the entire record made in both sets of hearings.

Petitioner's "Statement of Points" contains a vigorous attack upon the validity of the proof tendered by the Commission's witnesses, and the Decision and Opinion of the Commission resting on this proof. It is urged that the said Decision and Opinion are "irresponsive" to Carter's claims; are contrary to the evidence and weight of evidence, and are not supported by reliable, "convincing," probative or substantial evidence or such evidence "as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion," or as would "logically and rationally permit findings to be made," and are not supported by proof of (and contrary to) the consensus or general agreement of qualified medical opinion. In short, the charge of Carter in his pleading is that the Commission's findings of fact, its Decision and Opinion are, on their face, and inherently, self-destructive and self-contradictory of each other, and on their face, demonstrate the Commission's failure to sustain its burden of proof and convincingly show that the Commission "has never weighed, considered or passed upon this record" in accordance with the letter and the spirit of the mandate of this Court.

It is further urged in these "Points" that the Commission has not subjected the record to "any proper scrutiny at all" in that it failed to pass separately, fairly and carefully upon all of Carter's original and supplementary exceptions and proposed findings.

Carter's "Statement of Points" is lengthy, and is set forth in nineteen paragraphs. It is in the main a vigorous frontal attack on the testimony and proof tendered by witnesses supporting the Commission's complaint. It challenges the validity of the proof dealing with so-called "experimental proof" and the opinion evidence given by the Commission's witnesses in connection therewith. It likewise asserts that the testimony of the Commission's witnesses did not constitute proof by "general medical agreement" or "consensus of medical opinion"—that proof that Carter's "honest, harmless therapeutic claims" were false was not established as required in this type of conflict.

It is obvious that the above noted reference to the "honest, harmless therapeutic claims" of Carter is a comment upon the many claims asserted in the advertising material disseminated by Carter.

out in the margin the text of the first six claims of Carter's Specification of Errors.[11]

Carter's arguments supporting these six claims emphasizes, and to a marked degree appears to be predicated upon, the assumption that the Commission's final (1956) administrative findings of ultimate probative facts in this case are fatally tainted and should and must be rejected on this review as invalid because portions (or possibly all) of the actual testimony of some of the Commission's witnesses was (to quote Carter) "unreported in its findings," that is to say, such testimony was not set out verbatim in the Commission's findings of fact. If it be Carter's theory that in order to be valid and be tolerated in this court the Commission's findings of fact should repeat part, or all, of such testimony, we must and do reject such a theory as lacking validity under established practice in our system of law. And it should be added that our attention has not been drawn to any responsible authority which gives sanction to such a theory concerning the fact-finding functions of an administrative tribunal like the Commission.

We summarize in the margin[12] the remaining six claims of error asserted by Carter.

---

[11] "(1) the Commission's findings disregard the testimony and express admissions (unreported in its findings) of its own witnesses that their abnormal surgically performed test methods, employed primarily on animals, either changed entirely the physical conditions or did not reproduce conditions which could be properly compared to the normal conditions of use of Petitioner's product;

"(2) the Commission's findings disregard the testimony and ignore express admissions (unreported in its findings) of its own witnesses that the protocols of all their tests, whether upon animals or humans, were patently and fatally faulty in design and their tests themselves both fatally defective and irresponsive to Petitioner's claims;

"(3) the Commission's findings disregard the testimony and ignore express admissions (unreported in its findings) of its own witnesses (destructive of their test procedures), that dosages of various drugs or the same drugs in animal and man are not comparable and introduce a disturbing variable which renders the Commission's evidence unsubstantial;

"(4) the Commission's findings disregard and ignore testimony and express admissions (unreported in its findings) of its own witnesses that under the 'abnormal condition of the experimentees' the reactions of man and animal to the same or similar drugs are not identical or substantially identical and require to be supplemented by experimentation on representative groups of normal human beings;

"(5) the Commission's findings disregard and ignore the testimony and express admissions of its own witnesses (not reported in its findings) that because of the concededly delayed reaction time of the drugs tested, the Commission's experiments were on their face prolonged for an insufficient length of time to constitute substantial evidence inducing conviction that those drugs do not possess the effects claimed by Petitioner;

"(6) the Commission's findings disregard and ignore the testimony and express admissions by its own witnesses (not reported in its findings) that their liver function tests performed on animals are not translatable to man;"

[12] The Commission's findings (1) are mutually self-destructive and self-contradictory because the very same defects which they impute to Carter's experiments in order to disqualify those experiments "by the same token destroy the Commission's own experiments," thus, on their face they demonstrate that the experiments of the Commission's witnesses "cannot possibly constitute substantial evidence inducing conviction"; (2) the findings are based on an erroneous and illegal standard of proof imposed on Carter alone, namely, that its proof be conclusive, thus applying a dual standard of proof, one for its own and another for Carter; (3) the findings (a) were arrived at by "ignoring the spirit and purpose" of this court's remand by excluding proper offers of proof, by prejudiciously restricting, through its Examiner, the cross-examination of Commission's witnesses designed to test the experiments of these witnesses, and by erroneously restricting Carter's examination of its own expert witnesses for the purpose of explaining or amplifying their experiments; (b) are based upon the misconduct of these proceedings by an Examiner whose bias and prejudgment of the issues have now been demonstrated beyond question, and show that the Commission shared the prejudgment and failed to make a fair estimate of the worth of the testimony; (c) were based on its reversible error in denying Carter's motion to disqualify the Examiner and (d) establish beyond question that the Commission has again denied Carter due process of law; (4) that the issues involve a medical field —the liver and biliary system—which is one of the most problematical, controversial and highly unsettled frontiers in the whole realm of medicine and where due process demanded of the Commission, before snuffing out Carter's huge investment and property in this product, particularly high and exacting methods of modern and up-to-date scientific proof and an evaluation based on a disinterested inquiry in the spirit of science; (5) the defects in the Commission's proof are so gross and its misjudgment of that proof so great that it is unnecessary to review Carter's evidence presented in defense, because there has been so clear and so glaring a failure on the part of the Commission to sustain its affirmative burden of proof, and because the Commission made a wholly erroneous disposition of that evidence throughout its Findings which deprived Carter of due process; (6) that however the evidence is viewed, impelling and important constitutional considerations, involving novel questions

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Before leaving the subject of Carter's claims of error, we point out that after our remand, the cross-examination of Commission witnesses Doctors Case and Bollman was resumed (on the 146th hearing in this prolonged litigation which had then spawned a transcript of record containing approximately 13,000 pages). This appears from a statement by the Hearing Examiner. See also footnote 15, infra. The cross-examination of both of these witnesses was searching and extensive. Including a re-direct examination by Commission counsel, this part of the record occupies about 300 pages of the printed transcript now before us. A reading of this segment of the huge record induces our belief that Carter's questions on cross-examination after the remand reached into every material phase of the crucial issues present in this case, including a re-examination by Carter of certain views and opinions expressed by these two Commission witnesses in the testimony they had given in the prior series of hearings.

[Cross-Examination]

As to the breadth of allowable cross-examination here referred to, the Hearing Examiner stated to counsel in the case that he was "going to give the respondent (Carter) as full leeway as I possibly can irrespective of any objection of the attorney in support of the complaint," this so that counsel might "pursue this cross-examination until he can go no further." At the conclusion of the testimony of Dr. Case, counsel for Carter was asked by the Hearing Examiner if he was satisfied that he had been given ample opportunity to cross-examine this witness, and counsel then stated that he had asked all of the questions he wanted to ask.

At the conclusion of all of the testimony of Dr. Bollman, counsel for Carter stated that he had no further questions.

Bollman was extensively questioned by Carter's counsel as to the method he employed in conducting his animal experiments. He was asked to compare his views and supporting data with certain views he had previously expressed, and to justify his views in light of conflicting views expressed by Carter's witnesses and certain other experts. The cross-examination was so thorough and searching that it would be difficult to envision a more complete exploration of professional opinion dealing with a highly technical subject upon which differences of opinion had been developed. In any event, whether Bollman used a correct method in experimentation was a factual question for decision by the Commission when it weighed the evidence. See our comments in 201 F. 2d 446, 449, 450.

[Evidence—FTC's Duty]

Under the decisions later noted it will not be contended that it is the duty of this Court to weigh the evidence before the Commission and/or choose between inferences which might arise from an appraisal of the probative worth of this evidence, since exercising those important functions became the primary duty of the Commission. We agree with Commission counsel that it was for the Hearing Examiner and the Commission, not the Courts, to pass upon the credibility of witnesses and the weight to be accorded their testimony. See decision of this Court in Tractor Training Service, et al. v. Federal Trade Commission [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,196], 227 F. 2d 420, 424. See also Corn Products Refining Co., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,363], 324 U. S. 726, 739. Many decisions of like purport fully support this well established rule. So much may also be said concerning the weight to be given by the Commission to the facts and circumstances admitted as well as inferences reasonably to be drawn therefrom. The possibility of drawing either of two inconsistent inferences from the evidence does not prevent the Commission from drawing one of them.

[Medical Testimony]

The overwhelming mass of evidence and testimony in this case dealt almost exclusively with not only highly technical problems in the field of medicine, but also with what we regard as pure questions of fact—(1) what therapeutic action, effect or influence, if any, would the use of Carter's of law, preclude the issuance in this case of any cease and desist order at all.

In presenting the six claims of error just above noted, Carter assails the Commission's findings because they did not contain an "express finding" that Carter's experimental proof does not constitute substantial evidence, the findings only stating that such proof was "not conclusive."

preparation have upon the human liver or diseases thereof, (2) would use of Carter's preparation stimulate the formation of bile by the liver or increase the secretion of bile by the liver, (3) what therapeutic effects, if any, followed the use of Carter's preparation when employed by human beings for the purpose of securing satisfactory relief from the array of human ills and achieving the many physical benefits so vividly described and promised in Carter's widely diffused advertising?

We are quite convinced that answers to such technical questions in the field of medicine could come only from medical experts. Their testimonial conclusions and opinions as to the effect upon the human system arising from the use of Carter's preparation had to rest upon and derive from their "experiments" (later referred to); their knowledge of the character and therapeutic qualities of the two drugs used in Carter's preparation; their own practical professional experience, and upon medical texts and technical opinions of other medical experts which appear to have found their way into the testimony. Confronting the record as a whole, including the testimony from all medical experts, the Commission faced the duty of concluding and determining from this body of evidence just what medical facts had been established as true by evidence of a substantial character.

As to the experiments above referred to, Commission finding No. 11 makes plain that expert witnesses for both sides had extensively experimented upon anesthetized dogs and human being to demonstrate the results on these animals from use of the drugs employed in Carter's pills, or from use of drugs possessing similar characteristics. The elaborate testimony of these witnesses, with supporting data, was received in evidence to support the basic contentions of both parties as to results achieved from such experiments. In its Finding No. 12 the Commission was at pains to find that "each counsel contends in effect that the scientific evidence presented by his adversary is based on defective experimental procedures and reflects erroneous interpretations of those studies and unsound expressions of medical opinion." The lengthy comments of the Commission in its findings dealing with the testimony of expert witnesses concerning results of their experiments on dogs and human beings convinces us that this phase of the evidence and testimony was given a searching and conscientious study by the Commission before it made its final findings of fact. (See our comments in footnote 4, supra, concerning our first opinion which dealt with admissibility of evidence and testimony relating to such experiments.)

In its attack on the substantiality of the Commission's evidence, Carter vigorously argues that the testimony of the expert witnesses presents a conflict of general informed medical opinion on basic medical issues; that this conflict is so substantial "as to compel enforcement by this Court of the standard of certainty in the proof of the falsity of a harmless, honest therapeutic claim prescribed by the Legislature in enacting the Walter [Wheeler]-Lea amendments to the Federal Trade Commission Act and by the Federal Constitution."

Parenthetically, we point out that we disagree with Carter's contention concerning the effect of these amendments.

Our careful examination of the record demonstrates to us that the issue concerning "general informed medical opinion on basic medical issues," was not only a subject of comment appearing in various professional opinions tendered by Carter's expert medical witnesses, but their opinions on this subject were countered by conflicting views expressed by Commission witnesses. From the tenor and purport of testimony offered by Carter's witnesses it is clear that such testimony was introduced to demonstrate the existence or non-existence of a substantial fact, i. e., whether there existed a "consensus of informed medical opinion" which sustained the validity of Carter's advertising claims concerning the many therapeutic virtues of its medicinal preparation.

Carter's position seems to be that this Court should now proceed to weigh all of the evidence on this particular issue and decide just what this evidence had proved, or failed to prove concerning the existence of some sort of a body of "informed medical opinion" as to the therapeutic worth of Carter's product. We disagree. In our view the testimony presented a fact issue which, in any event, would have to be primarily resolved by the Commission in light of all of the expert testimony on the subject. Whatever might be our personal judgment concerning the probative worth of a huge mass of medical testimony which tended to prove or disprove the existence of such a body of "medical opinion," our views would have to yield to the specialized experience and knowledge of the Commission. The judges of this Court are not equipped by education, training or experience to resolve a factual question of this character which obviously concerns the accuracy of the respective scientific views of men who are practicing the art of medicine. The futility of an attempt by a reviewing court to exercise such a function becomes all the more obvious in face of the fact that medical experts have reached different conclusions on this issue. (See footnote 15, infra.)

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

PART TWO

[Scope of Judicial Review]

The reports contain a host of decisions dealing with the scope of judicial review of orders of federal administrative agencies, and an imposing array of them deal with decisions of the Federal Trade Commission. It is unnecessary to analyze the holdings in many of the apposite decisions [12] since a comparatively few of them serve to provide a satisfactory answer to the basic review problem confronting us. These few cases have delineated the controlling principles we must apply.

The landmark decision and the one most frequently cited is Universal Camera Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 340 U. S. 474. In this decision the Supreme Court spelled out with care the general rules that should govern Courts of Appeal in their work of reviewing orders and/or decisions of administrative agencies. The Court held, inter alia, (in conformance with a requirement of the Administrative Procedure Act) that such decisions must be supported by substantial evidence "on the record con-

[12] Federal Trade Commission v. Pacific States Paper Trade Association, 273 U. S. 52, 63; Corn Products Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,363], 324 U. S. 726, 739; Jacob Siegel Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,451], 327 U. S. 608, 612, 613; American Power & Light Co. v. Securities & Exchange Commission, 329 U. S. 90, 103, 106, 115, 116; Reilly v. Pinkus, 338 U. S. 269, 274, 276, 277; United States et al. v. Storer Broadcasting Co., 351 U. S. 192, 203; Federal Trade Commission v. Standard Oil Co. [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,917], 355 U. S. 396, 400, 401; Federal Trade Commission v. Mandel Brothers, Inc. [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,342], decided May 4, 1959.

American Medicinal Products, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,329], 136 F. 2d 426, 427; Charles of the Ritz Dist. Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,267], 143 F. 2d 676, 679, 680; J. E. Todd, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,308], 145 F. 2d 858; Research Laboratories, Inc. v. United States, 167 F. 2d 410, 415, 416, cert. denied 335 U. S. 843; Willapoint Oysters Inc. v. Ewing, 174 F. 2d 676, 685, 689, 691, cert. denied 338 U. S. 860; Bristol-Myers Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,722], 185 F. 2d 58, 61, 62; P. Lorillard Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,747], 186 F. 2d 52; National Labor Relations Board v. Howell Chevrolet Co., 204 F. 2d 79, 85; Koch et al. v. Federal Trade Commission [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,526], 206 F. 2d 311, 315, 318, 319, 320; Standard Distributors Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,689, 67,712], 211 F. 2d 7, 12; Dolcin Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,791], 219 F. 2d 742, 749, 751, 754, 755; Tractor Training Service v. Federal Trade Commission [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,196], 227 F. 2d 420, 425; R. S. Kalvajtys et al. v. Federal Trade Commission [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,525], 237 F. 2d 654, 656, cert. denied 352 U. S. 1025; Jacques DeGorter v. Federal Trade Commission [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,691], 244 F. 2d 270, 273, 281, 283; Abel Allan Goodman, etc. v. Federal Trade Commission [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,690], 244 F. 2d 584, 589, 591, 593, 594, 603, 604; Arrow Metal Products Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,847], 249 F. 2d 83; Loesch v. Federal Trade Commission [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,078], 257 F. 2d 882, 885; G. H. Miller & Co. v. United States et al., 260 F. 2d 286, 296, 297, 302.

The following cases hold that the Commission has authority to resolve conflicts in expert medical testimony.

Federal Trade Commission v. Raladam Co., 283 U. S. 643, 646; Justin Haynes & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,233], 105 F. 2d 988, 989; Dr. W. B. Caldwell, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,305], 111 F. 2d 889, 891; Neff v. Federal Trade Commission [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,308], 117 F. 2d 495, 497; D. D. D. Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,189], 125 F. 2d 679, 680, 682; John J. Fulton Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,319], 130 F. 2d 85, 86, citing cases, cert. denied 317 U. S. 679; Aronberg v. Federal Trade Commission [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,324], 132 F. 2d 165, 170.

It is for the Commission and not the courts to pass upon the credibility of witnesses and/or weight to be accorded their testimony. Tractor Training Service, et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 9 Cir. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,196], 227 F. 2d 420; also see Corn Products Refining Co. et al. v. Federal Trade Commission [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,363], 324 U. S. 726; Federal Trade Commission v. Standard Education Society et al. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,170], 302 U. S. 112; Standard Distributors, Inc. et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, supra, P. Lorillard Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, supra.

sidered as a whole." If after canvassing and fairly assessing the entire record a reviewing court cannot conscientiously find that the evidence supporting an agency decision is substantial, "good conscience" dictates that the agency decision be reversed. In so appraising the whole record the reviewing court must take into account whatever in the record fairly detracts from the weight of the evidence which underlies the agency order and is "opposed to the agency's view."

The Court also indicated that an order of an administrative agency should be set aside unless justified "by a fair estimate of the worth of the testimony of witnesses or its [the agency's] informed judgment on matters within its special competence or both"; but the Court also emphasized that the requirement for "canvassing the whole record" in order to ascertain substantiality, was not "intended to negative the function of the [there Labor] Board as one of those agencies presumably equipped or informed by experience to deal with a specialized field of knowledge, whose findings within that field carry the authority of an expertness which courts do not possess and therefore must respect." (Italics supplied.)

In an opinion issued on the same day, the Supreme Court applied one of the principles announced in Universal Camera. National Labor Relations Board v. Pittsburg Steamship Co., 340 U. S. 498. It again emphasized the fact that Congress had charged the Courts of Appeal, and not the Supreme Court, with the normal and primary responsibility for granting or denying enforcement of Labor Board orders. It held that decisions of the Courts of Appeal would not be disturbed when they involve solely a fair assessment of a record on the issue of unsubstantiality; that the Supreme Court is not the place to review a conflict of evidence nor to reverse a Court of Appeals even if the Supreme Court (in the place of the Court of Appeals) would find the record tilting one way rather than the other, and even though fair-minded judges could find it tilting either way. The Court indicated its adherence to the rule that where conclusions of Courts of Appeal "depend on appreciation of circumstances which admit of different interpretations," the decision of that intermediate court should not be disturbed.

In Federal Trade Commission v. Standard Education Society [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,170], 302 U. S. 112, the Court considered "unfair practices" related to the methods of sale of certain kinds of books. In passing upon the judicial function of a reviewing court the Court stated:

> "The courts do not have a right to ignore the plain mandate of the statute which makes the findings of the Commission conclusive as to the facts if supported by testimony. The courts cannot pick and choose bits of evidence to make findings of fact contrary to the findings of the Commission. The record in this case is filled with the evidence of witnesses under oath which support the Commission's findings."

In Federal Trade Commission v. Algoma Lumber Co. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,041], 291 U. S. 67, the Court again dealt with the findings of the Federal Trade Commission. In reversing a decision of this Court (Algoma Lumber Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 64 F. 2d 618) the Supreme Court quoted the Act here involved which provides: "The findings of the Commission as to facts, if supported by testimony, shall be conclusive." 15 U. S. C. Sec. 45. It then went on to hold that "the Court of Appeals, though professing adherence to this mandate, honored it, we think, with lip service only. In form the court determined that the findings of unfair competition had no support whatever. In fact, what the court did was to make its own appraisal of the testimony, picking and choosing for itself among uncertain and conflicting inferences. Statute and decision [citing Federal Trade Commission v. Pacific States Paper Trade Assn., 273 U. S. 52, 61, 63] forbid that exercise of power."

The Court concluded with a further holding that "the finding of unfair competition being supported by the testimony, the Commission did not abuse its discretion in reaching the conclusion that no change of the name short of the excision of the word 'white' would give adequate protection."

Applicability of the principles announced in the Standard Education Society and Algoma decisions, supra, to the problem of review confronting us in the instant case, is clearly demonstrated by the recent reversal of a decision of this Court reported in James H. Sewell v. Federal Trade Commission [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,508] 240 F. 2d 228. The Supreme Court reversed this decision in a per curiam opinion in which we were directed to "affirm and enforce the order of the Federal Trade Commission" on authority of the two Supreme Court decisions just above cited. See [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,720] 353 U. S. 969.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

The judge of this Court who dissented in our Sewell opinion expressed the view that this Court's decision had "meddled in a decision which it is not authorized to make" and he predicated this conclusion on the holdings of the Supreme Court in the Algoma and Standard Education Society cases. The Supreme Court agreed with him.

A late decision of the Supreme Court directly touching the authority of the Commission to formulate orders designed to effectuate the conclusions it has reached, is Federal Trade Commission v. National Lead Co. [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,629], 352 U. S. 419, 429. In that case the Court cited an earlier case wherein it pointed out that "Congress had placed the primary responsibility for fashioning orders upon the Commission"—that the cases have served to narrow the issue to the question: "Does the remedy selected have a 'reasonable relation to the unlawful practices found to exist'." In this connection also see Federal Trade Comm. v. Mandel Brothers, Inc. [1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,342], U. S. —, May 4, 1959.

The Commission is deemed to have expert experience in dealing with matters of the character involved in the instant case. Federal Trade Commission v. R. F. Keppel & Bros. (1934) [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,042] 291 U. S. 304, 314. And it may draw upon its own experience in order to determine (even) in the absence of consumer testimony, the natural and probable result of the use of advertising expressions. E. F. Drew & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission (1956) 2 Cir. [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,408], 235 F. 2d 735, 741. See footnote 60 in De Gorter v. Federal Trade Commission, 9 Cir. [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,691], 244 F. 2d 270, 283.

In the Keppel case, supra, the court also took occasion to emphasize that the Commission "was created with the avowed purpose of lodging the administrative functions committed to it in a body specially competent to deal with them [practices or methods of competition] by reason of information, experience and careful study of the business and economic conditions of the industry affected, and it was organized in such a manner, with respect to the length and expiration of the terms of office of its members, as would give to them an opportunity to acquire the expertness in dealing with these special questions concerning industry that comes from experience."

In the margin [13] we cite a group of cases presenting typical examples of how federal courts have applied and elaborated upon vital phases of the problem which confronts us in the case at bar. We think that these decisions are in harmony with the basic principles laid down in the several decisions of the Supreme Court just above cited in this part of our opinion. In many instances these decisions dealt with challenges to the scope of authority of the Commission to make the particular findings involved which concerned facts in evidence, and/or to fashion a remedy or remedies which, under all of the evidence would best afford a just and rational solution for the evils revealed by the evidence.

Part Three

[Courts' Appraisal of Record]

The conclusions expressed below are intended as a supplement to what we have previously said concerning the several issues of law and fact presented in this long-drawn-out controversy.[14]

The many years consumed in this litigation, the claim of Carter that the Commission's Order will have ruinous effects on its business, the highly involved nature of the lengthy expert medical testimony in the record, plus the vigorous arguments of counsel covering practically all of the material issues of fact along with controversies over procedural points, have provided an added incentive to a scrutiny of the entire record with that degree of care suggested by the Supreme Court. Our scrutiny included a reading of the oral arguments of counsel before the Commission just prior to submission of the case (1956) to the Commission for its final decision on the merits.

In our appraisal and assessment of the record as a whole, we endeavored to make a fair estimate of the worth of the medical testimony of the expert witnesses, having in mind that in the last analysis, the evaluation of the Commission as to the weight to be given such testimony concerning medical truths was a matter committed for decision to the informed judgment of the Commission, and that making a primary decision on that question was a duty that fell within the area of its competence. So far as concerns any conflicts in such testimony, we are also of the view that all such conflicts presented questions of fact for resolution by the Commission and not for resolution by this Court. See Irwin v. Federal Trade Commission [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,258], 143 Fed. 2d 316, 323, and note 13, supra.

[13] [See footnote 13 on page 75,469.]

[14] On the day the Hearing Examiner announced that the record was (then) being closed in the last series of hearings, he stated to counsel that the hearing then being concluded was the "149th hearing" in this long case; that "on the basis of a five day week, that is approximately three and a half months of actual, continuous hearings."

Our assessment and estimate of the probative weight of the entire body of evidence also took into account the contradictory evidence offered by Carter from which conflicting inferences could be drawn which detract from the weight of the evidence supporting the Commission's view.

The meaning of, and the truth or lack of truth in the florid advertising representations of Carter concerning the therapeutic worth of its pills,[15] and also the tendency or capacity of its elaborate advertising to mislead and/or deceive the using public, presented questions of fact to be determined by the Commission under all of the evidence. (See Kalwajtys, et al., v. Federal Trade Commission (7 Cir.) [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,525], 237 F. 2d 654, 656). Its conclusions on this phase of the case must be upheld by a reviewing court unless it can be said that the Commission's rulings on such questions were arbitrary or clearly wrong. Our conclusion is that the rulings here referred to are not to be condemned. The Commission did not err in making and entering its ultimate findings of fact which reflect its conclusions on these matters.

To an overwhelming degree the expert testimony in this case dealt with highly complicated questions of fact, answers to which had to be found in the realm of medical knowledge. We are fully persuaded that this Court is without authority to substitute its judicial judgment on purely medical facts for that of the Commission by weighing the probative force and effect of a body of testimony dealing directly and exclusively with the effect of a certain combination of drugs on the human system. The function of weighing the rational probative force of such testimony was a primary duty imposed upon the Commission. Our assessment of the evidence and testimony leads to the conclusion that the order of the Commission was not clearly wrong nor was it arbitrary.

[Abdication of Duty Claimed]

In argument supporting its claims of error Carter asserts that the Commission's own Findings and Opinion demonstrate on their face fatal defects of proof; that taken [15] Carter suggests that the Commission was here dealing with a case which involves "harmless therapeutic claims honestly made." It contends that at the time the Commission made its (1956) Order the record then before the Commission failed to reveal that there was a "general agreement of medical opinion" concerning the "falsity of the claim"; that for this reason we should reverse the Commission's Order under authority of the holding in Belmont Laboratories v. Federal Trade Commission [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,215], 103 F. 2d 538, 543, 7 Cir., 1939. As we view this argument, it at least carries the suggestion that the Commission's Order should not be sustained by this court if any conflict whatever appears in the medical testimony of the expert witnesses concerning the truth or falsity of the various therapeutic claims appearing in Carter's advertising.

We cannot agree with the foregoing argument. The basic purpose of the entire proceeding was to inquire into the factual truth or falsity of many elaborate "therapeutic claims," employed in Carter's advertising. Whether these many "therapeutic claims" were true or false could only be demonstrated through the testimony of medical experts, and that course was followed. The record shows that when the proceedings ground to a close the parties were apparently in agreement that the dominating and controlling area of factual conflict in this case was what influence, if any, Carter's pills would have on the production and flow of liver bile. Carter claimed that the record then before the Commission demonstrated that its pills would produce that result. Its advertising in evidence had claimed that use of its pills would stimulate an increase in the production and flow of liver bile and thereby produce the many beneficial therapeutic results described in this lavish advertising. On the entire body of evidence and testimony the Commission finally decided that the several therapeutic claims of Carter which were carefully noted in its Order did constitute false and misleading advertising, and as such were unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce. We find no rational reason for disturbing the Commission's judgment on this point all as reflected in its Order.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

in light of the record as a whole, they demonstrate beyond peradventure of a doubt that there was a complete abdication by the Commission of its duty to weigh the proof in the record which fairly detracted from the weight of its own proof. It is urged that this abdication was due either to the Commission's complete disregard of evidence received or its exclusion of evidence offered by Carter.

It is also argued that every line of the Commission's Decision reflects "the unmistakable badges of a corrosive bias, of refusal even to explore (much less to rectify) the deficiencies of proof and procedure recommitted to it by this Court and a consistent demonstration of sheer abdication of its duty to weigh or consider the evidence."

We disagree with the contentions set forth in the two preceding paragraphs and we reject them as without real substance or merit.

[Disqualification Issue]

We also find no merit in Carter's claim of error based on the Commission's action in refusing to disqualify the Hearing Examiner and to terminate the proceedings. Furthermore, the reasons assigned to support Carter's general claims of unfairness (including a denial of its demand to introduce additional evidence and for a de novo hearing before a different examiner on all of the issues in this litigation) do not appeal to us as possessing that degree of substance and real worth which would justify a reversal of the Commission's Order and possibly result in an indefinite continuation of this controversy. In this connection, we are also persuaded that the record, as a whole, fails to show that in this proceeding the actions of the Hearing Examiner and the Commission shifted the burden of proof to Carter. A contention to that effect is without merit.

[Substantiality of Evidence]

Viewing the record in its entirety, we find no sound reason which, in good conscience, would justify us in impeaching the substantiality, the evidentiary worth, force and persuasiveness, of the body of evidence which the Commission ultimately relied upon to support its Findings of Fact Nos. 3, 4, 18 and 20 to which we made specific reference earlier in this opinion. As we read the record it is plain that much that appears in these four findings is but a recapitulation or restatement of portions of the totality of facts as found by the Commission in some of its other findings. So far as concerns the factor of "substantiality," our considered judgment is that the body of evidence which sustains the four findings here mentioned was substantial and that this evidence provides adequate support for the Order here on review.

[Excision of "Liver" from Trade Name]

Even the most casual inspection and appraisal of the entire record would reveal that in all material phases of the long controversy between the parties to this proceeding, the dominating fact issue stressed in the testimony of the expert medical witnesses was whether use of Carter's laxative pills would, or would not, have any influence in stimulating an increase in the production of bile by the liver and would or would not, increase the flow of liver bile.[15] (See footnote 7, supra.) From all the evidence, the Commission found as a fact that this particular claim which Carter characterizes as its "basic therapeutic claim" was false and misleading; that use of Carter's pills would have no effect whatever on functions of the liver, and would not cause the liver to produce an increased flow of bile nor would it have any influence in the production of bile by the liver. On this factual basis which directly concerned the therapeutic value of Carter's pills, the Commission Order also enjoins the further use of the word "liver" in the trade name of "Carter's Little Liver Pills." We think the Commission was acting well within the orbit of its authority when it ordered excision of the word "liver" from the trade name of Carter's product.

[Scope of FTC Order]

And we point out that despite Carter's sweeping claim in its brief that its business will be totally destroyed if the Commission's Order is sustained, the Order does not enjoin Carter from use of advertising claims concerning the cathartic properties of its pills unless such claims are of a character clearly prohibited by the express terms of the Commission's Order.

The Commission concluded (in its Order) that "the acts and practices of the respondent, as herein found, are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and constitute unfair and deceptive acts and practices in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act." We agree with this conclusion. Furthermore, we think that the Commission made an allowable judgment in its choice of a remedy to be applied. The Commission is the expert body to determine what remedy is necessary to eliminate the unfair and deceptive practices disclosed by the record, and it has wide latitude for judgment. Shaping a remedy is essentially an administrative function. Congress has entrusted the Commission with the responsibility of selecting the means of achieving a statutory policy—the relation of remedy to policy is peculiarly a matter for administrative competence. Here, the Commission had discretion to fashion a remedy of a civil nature to attain the desired goals, and its choice fell within an allowable area of its discretion. Only in cases where the remedy selected has no reasonable relation to the unlawful practices found to exist, should a reviewing court interfere. We are convinced that this is a case where an interference by this Court with the breadth of the Commission's Order would clearly lack justification.

[15] [See footnote 15 on page 75,472.]

[Statutory Tests Met]

The Act prescribes that the findings of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by evidence, shall be conclusive on a reviewing court. 15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 45(c). The Administrative Procedure Act added the further requirement that to be valid, the findings of federal administrative agencies must be supported by substantial evidence in the record considered as a whole. The record meets this test.

[Consideration of Present Circumstances]

Carter urges in its brief that this case is unique in the annals of Federal Trade Commission proceedings; that in view of the great age of the litigation, the end issue which involves purely questions of "general medical opinion," and particularly in view of "the changing nature of these specific medical frontiers"—where the criteria for establishing the truth or falsity of a therapeutic opinion are peculiarly in constant flux, this court should not only refuse to approve the Commission's Order but should remand the case to the Commission with directions to take additional evidence which would show that the entry and enforcement of the Commission's 1956 Order "is appropriate under present circumstances"—which evidence would also "reflect the present day status of these controversial medical topics."

Our answer to the foregoing claim is that the Commission was the body to decide whether (in 1956) the totality of evidence then in the record refuted the "therapeutic opinions" advanced by Carter in its profuse advertising claims and supported in the testimony of its witnesses. While Carter had pleaded in its Answer that it had abandoned the use of some of the advertising claims referred to in the Commission's Complaint, nonetheless in this same pleading it also frankly avowed that "the advertising of Carter's Little Liver Pills truthfully describe it properties." Its brief also urges that its convincing presentation of the merits of its case, and its analysis of its evidence and its experiments, should impel us to conclude that such a showing resulted in "fully establishing the truth of its therapeutic claims."

In argument to this Court the Commission's brief urges that except as to the representations that Carter's laxative will effect the production or flow of bile, Carter's counsel made little or no effort to establish the truth of the many other representations made in Carter's advertising as to the therapeutic value of its laxative pill. (See footnote 7.)

It is our considered judgment that the instant Order of the Commission requiring Carter to cease and desist from further disseminating certain specified false and misleading claims concerning the therapeutic virtues of its pills, presents the only barrier to a possible renewed use of many or all of such therapeutic claims in any future advertising by Carter. On the whole record we would not be justified in substituting our judgment for that of the Commission in shaping the remedial provisions of its Order. The Commission urges in its briefs that there is no evidence in the record which would show that Carter had discontinued the various advertising statements found to be false and misleading, and which statements furnish the basis for the Commission's Order to cease and desist. In view of this situation and under all of the circumstances of this case we conclude, and therefore hold, that the Commission did not abuse its discretion in issuing this Order. See Marlene's Inc., et al., v. Federal Trade Commission [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,882], 216 F. 2d 556, 560.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Order Affirmed]

The petition of Carter to reverse and set aside the Cease and Desist Order of the Commission is denied. The said Order is affirmed, and obedience to its terms is hereby Ordered.

[¶ 69,391] Lou Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.; CBS Television; J. L. Van Volkenburg; H. K. Akerberg; Bartell Broadcasters, Inc.; and Thad Holt.

In the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. Civil Action No. 3761-56. Filed June 12, 1959.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Broadcasting System's Cancellation of "Affiliation" Contract with Television Station—Refusal to Deal—Injury to Plaintiff—Causation.—An assignee of the owner of a television station, in a treble damage action charging a broadcasting system with cancelling its contract to supply the station with shows or programs and with acquiring a competing station, failed to allege a cause of action because he showed no injury to himself that was caused by a violation of the antitrust laws. In actions brought by the United States, the Government need only show that the defendant violated the antitrust laws; a plaintiff in a private action, however, must also establish that he was injured by the defendant's violation. In the instant case, the cancellation of the contract injured the plaintiff and reduced the value of the station, but that loss resulted from the broadcasting system's exercise of its legal rights. It is a general principle that any person has a right to buy or sell from or to whom he chooses, and he may deal or refuse to deal with anyone that he selects, provided that he does not enter into an illegal conspiracy with someone else to exclude another person from the channels of trade. Here, the broadcasting system was within its rights in choosing to buy the competing station rather than the plaintiff's station, and, in cancelling its contract with the plaintiff, it was exercising a right it had under that contract. Therefore, even if the broadcasting system had violated the antitrust laws, those alleged violations did not result in the damage that the plaintiff sustained.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.785; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.720; and Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.275, 9009.350.

For the plaintiff: William M. Smith and George R. Beneman, Washington, D. C., and Abraham L. Freedman, Philadelphia, Pa.

For the defendants: Leon R. Brooks, Washington, D. C., and Samuel I. Rosenman, New York, N. Y.

Opinion

[Treble Damage Action]

Alexander Holtzoff, District Judge [In full text]: This is an action to recover triple damages for violations of the antitrust laws. The action is before this Court at this time on defendants' motion for summary judgment.

The suit is predicated both on Section 1 of the Sherman Act, which proscribes unreasonable restraints of trade, and Section 2 of the statute, which bans monopolies and attempts to monopolize. The plaintiff is the assignee of the owner of a television station that was operating in the City of Milwaukee under the call letters of WCAN. It was a UHF station. The plaintiff claims that as a result of activities which it is asserted were in violation of the Sherman Act the defendant, Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., practically destroyed the value of the plaintiff's station.

[Private Actions]

It must be borne in mind at the outset that the issues presented in an action brought by a private individual for triple damages caused by violations of the antitrust laws are entirely different from those in an action brought by the United States to enjoin such violations. In a private action it is not sufficient to show violations of the antitrust laws committed by the defendant. That is all that the government need show in an action brought by the United States.

In a private action, however, it is essential for the plaintiff to establish that such violations resulted in an injury to the plaintiff.

["Affiliation" Contract—Cancellation Provision]

The facts are not in dispute so far as their salient features are concerned, and insofar as there is any difference in the approach or inferences to be drawn from the facts the Court necessarily will construe them most favorably towards the plaintiff since it is the defendants who move for summary judgment. The defendant, Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., generally known as CBS, is a business concern that produces shows or programs to be broadcast by individual television stations. It distributes its shows or programs among numerous television stations throughout the United States, making a contract with each of them known as an affiliation contract, by which it undertakes to supply broadcasting material for the station, and the station in turn undertakes to allocate a certain amount of time for the production of such programs. In this instance, the plaintiff's station, WCAN, had an affiliation contract with the principal defendant, Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. This affiliation contract, as was true with many other such contracts, contained a provision reserving to CBS the right to cancel at the end of any six months' period. In other words, CBS could cut off the affiliation of the station on six months' notice at any time.

[Cancellation—Injury to Plaintiff]

The plaintiff's station was a UHF station. There was at the time in question another UHF station operating in Milwaukee. Under the then existing rules of the Federal Communications Commission a broadcasting corporation such as CBS was not permitted to become the owner of more than five television stations. The rule was modified so as to permit each television broadcasting corporation, in addition to owning five VHF stations, also to acquire not more than two UHF stations. When that rule became effective or was about to become effective, CBS determined to acquire a UHF station in Milwaukee. Instead of, however, acquiring the plaintiff's station it decided to acquire his competitor's station WOKY. It did so by procuring an option on WOKY through an intermediary, so that the owner of WOKY was not aware that the real purchaser was CBS. Having procured this option, CBS then cancelled the affiliation contract with the plaintiff's station, taking advantage of the six months' provision. Obviously the cancellation of the affiliation contract seriously injured the plaintiff and greatly reduced the value of his station.

[Basic Question—Causation]

The basic question in this action is, however, whether this injury is damnum absque injuria or whether it was caused by any violation of the antitrust laws. It is claimed that certain uniform provisions that were inserted in affiliation contracts generally by CBS known as clauses providing for option time and similar provisions constitute illegal restraints of trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. It is also claimed that as a result of the transaction just described CBS acquired a monopoly of UHF in Milwaukee in violation of Section 2 of the Act.

The view that this Court takes of the issues in this case makes it unnecessary to determine whether the challenged clauses in the affiliation contracts constitute a violation of the Sherman Act or whether a monopoly was created or existed in this instance. The question to be determined in this litigation is a much narrower one, namely, whether anything that the defendant did in respect to the plaintiff constituted a violation of either Section 1 or Section 2 of the Sherman Act. To repeat, what the plaintiff complains of is that when the defendant desired to purchase a UHF station in Milwaukee, it failed to buy his station but acquired his competitor's station and, further, that it cancelled his affiliation contract, as it had a right to do under the six months' provision.

[Refusal to Deal]

We must approach this question from the general principle that any person has a right to buy or sell from or to whom he chooses and he may deal or refuse to deal with anyone that he selects, provided he does not enter into an illegal conspiracy with someone else to exclude another person from the channels of trade. The leading case on this point is United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U. S. 300. This case was but recently followed in this district in Orbo Theatre Corp. v. Loew's Inc. [1957 TRADE

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

CASES ¶ 68,869], 156 F. Supp. 770, 779; affirmed 261 F. 2d 380 [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,185], cert. denied, 359 U. S. 943. Consequently, the defendant was entirely within its rights in choosing to buy the competing station. It was also exercising its contract right to cancel the plaintiff's affiliation.

The Court is of the opinion that this case is governed by the case of Packard Motor Car Co. v. Webster Motor Car Co. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,682], 243 F. 2d 418; 100 U. S. App. D. C. 161. That case involved an automobile manufacturer who had several dealers selling the manufacturer's cars in the City of Baltimore. Each of the dealers had a contract or franchise, as it was known, the term of which was only one year. The plaintiff in that action was one of the dealers in question. One of the plaintiff's competitors came to the manufacturer and stated that he would not continue as a dealer unless the manufacturer agreed not to renew the plaintiff's franchise and to grant an exclusive agency to him. The manufacturer came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was less important to him than the competitor and accordingly declined to renew the plaintiff's franchise. Plaintiff brought suit for triple damages, alleging that the transaction constituted a conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act. The Court of Appeals for this Circuit held otherwise and reached the conclusion that the manufacturer was exercising his rights as a businessman.

A precisely similar situation was presented in a case decided in the Fourth Circuit, Schwing Motor Co. v. Hudson Sales Corporation [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,292], 138 F. Supp. 899, affirmed 239 F. 2d 176 [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,564]. In both cases applications were made to the Supreme Court for writs of certiorari but were denied.[1]

So in the case at bar the defendant chose to exercise the option that the affiliation contract reserved to it, of cancelling the agreement on six months' notice. The defendant chose to buy a competing station instead of buying the plaintiff's station. While there is no doubt that considerable financial hardship must have resulted to the plaintiff, nevertheless, the Court is of the opinion that such hardship constitutes damnum absque injuria. If the defendant had been violating the Sherman Act, either as to Section 1 or Section 2, which the Court is not deciding and in respect to which it is making no intimation, such alleged violations did not result in the damage that the plaintiff sustained. The plaintiff's loss resulted from the exercise by the defendant of the defendant's legal rights.

[Summary Judgment Granted]

The Court concludes that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover and the defendants' motion for summary judgment is granted.

[¶ 69,392] Scapa Dryers, Inc. v. Abney Mills.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. No. 17281. Dated June 30, 1959.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Georgia. FRANK M. SCARLETT, District Judge.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies—Exclusive Franchise to Use Patented Device—Reasonableness as to Time and Territorial Restrictions—Exclusive Use in United States "in Perpetuity."—An agreement making a textile manufacturer the exclusive user, in the United States, of patented "looms" used in the paper making industry would have been invalid under the antitrust laws if the franchise agreements had, as held by a trial court, given the manufacturer an exclusive use "in perpetuity." The contractual limits upon the time and territory involved in an agreement in restraint of trade, or the absence of such limits, are factors to be considered in determining the reasonableness of the restraint. Since the patentee had agreed to assign its United States patents to the manufacturer, it could not be said that it was unreasonable to include the entire United States as the territory for which the exclusive use was granted. But as to the question of time, the agreement would have been invalid if the parties had intended the exclusive use to be one of perpetual duration. Preferring, however, a construction that would sustain the validity of the agreement, the reviewing court held that the parties did not intend that the exclusive use should continue beyond the expiration of the patents. Since those patent rights had expired, the exclusive use had also terminated, and the manufacturer had no cause of action against a competitor which had used the looms.

[1] Schwing Motor Co. v. Hudson Sales Corp., 355 U. S. 823. Webster Motor Car Co. v. Packard Motor Car Co., 355 U. S. 822.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.315, 2013.

For the appellant: Robert B. Troutman and Griffin Bell, Atlanta, Ga.; L. J. Bennett, Brunswick, Ga.; L. E. Pedrick and John W. Bennett, Waycross, Ga.; and Laszlo Kormendi, New York, N. Y.

For the appellee: Charles L. Gowen, Brunswick, Ga., and J. Frederic Taylor, New York, N. Y.

Before RIVES, JONES and WISDOM, Circuit Judges.

[Exclusive Franchise—Perpetuity]

JONES, Circuit Judge [In full text]: Hindle, Son & Co., Ltd., is an English corporation which, among other activities, manufactured looms for the weaving of dryer felts. Dryer felts are thick, wide and long. They are used in the paper making industry and require replacement at periodic intervals. The Hindle looms were patented in England, the United States and other countries. These patents were issued to and held by J. H. Hindle and Thomas Hindle, his son. Thomas Hindle procured patents on dryer felts and associated items. Similar patents were issued to Thomas Hindle and Sam Lord. In 1931 the Messrs. Hindle had made an agreement with Ayers, Limited, a Canadian corporation,[1] by which the Hindles were to assign a one-third interest in certain Canadian patents, were not to grant licenses for the manufacture of dryer felts or offer looms for sale in Canada without the consent of Ayers, nor sell looms in the United States without prohibiting their re-export to Canada.

[Issue—Interpretation of Agreement]

The Brandon Corporation, a South Carolina corporation, was a textile manufacturer. It included dryer felts as one of its products. In 1936 it negotiated with the Hindles for the purchase of Hindle looms and their exclusive use in the United States. A written proposal of the Hindle Company was made to Brandon but[2] it felt it could not spare the money that would be required to buy the Hindle looms. Its interest did not vanish, however, and early in 1939 there was a renewal of discussions. The negotia-

[1] John Henry Hindle and Thomas Hindle, mechanical and Textile Engineers, and both of Haslingden, in the County of Lancaster, England, hereby agree to assign to Messrs. Ayers, Limited, of Lachute, Province of Quebec, Canada, a ONE THIRD interest in the following Canadian letters patent for cotton and composite dryer felts and also for looms for weaving such materials, in consideration of a cash payment of Five thousand pounds, receipt of which sum is hereby acknowledged.

[List of Patents]

The joint owners of the patents, viz, Messrs. Ayers Limited, and John Henry and Thomas Hindle jointly and severally agree as follows:

The said Thomas Hindle hereby agrees not to license any other person, firm, or company in the Dominion of Canada for the manufacture of the said Cotton and composite dryer felts without the previous consent of the said Ayers Limited.

The said John Henry Hindle and Thomas Hindle hereby agree not to sell, or offer for sale, in the Dominion of Canada, looms constructed in accordance with the above patents, or otherwise, for weaving Cotton dryer felts of any kind, without the previous consent of the said Ayers Limited.

If the said John H. Hindle and Thomas Hindle, individually or jointly export looms for the manufacture of cotton dryer felts to the United States of America, or any other country, it must be stipulated that such looms will not at any time be re-exported to Canada.

The said Ayers Limited agree not to license any person, firm or company to manufacture the said looms in the Dominion of Canada, without the previous consent of the said John Henry Hindle and Thomas Hindle.

[2] "14th Sept. 1936.

"HINDLE DRYER FELT LOOMS.

"U. S. A. Proposition.

* * *

"General Proposal. In conformity with the policy already established in respect of Gt. Britain, Canada and France, it is not proposed to supply Hindle Looms to more than one individual company in the U. S. A. The prospective Purchaser of such looms will be expected to acquire the exclusive rights in U. S. A. for the use of the Hindle Patent Looms, the manufacture of the various Patented Dryer Felts tions on behalf of Brandon were commenced in 1939, as they had been in 1936, by Edward H. Hall. Hall was a representative of Morey Paper Mill Supply Company which handled the selling of dryer felts produced by Brandon pursuant to an arrangement with Woodward, Baldwin & Co. which controlled Brandon and acted as its general sales agent. The negotiations, which had their origin in correspondence, culminated in a conference held in July, 1939, in New York City between the Messrs. Hindle and the president and other representatives of Brandon. As a result of this conference Hindle and Brandon executed the so-called 1939 Memorandum. This Memorandum provided for the sale and delivery by the Hindle corporation to Brandon of two looms at stated prices. The times and place of payment were designated, a paragraph was included which obligated the Hindle corporation to supply Brandon with further looms at then existing prices "plus or minus any intervening difference in the cost of manufacture". A provision captioned "Exclusive Franchise—U. S. A."[3] was incorporated. The primary issues of this litigation depend upon the interpretation and legal effect to be given to this provision. Except for a supplemental letter, which is not here material, the 1939 Memorandum is the only written agreement between the Hindle corporation and Brandon, or its successor in interest, Abney Mills, which bears upon this controversy. Assignments of the patents described in the Memorandum were made to Brandon.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Legality of "Perpetual" Franchise]

Brandon merged with Abney Mills, the appellee, and all of Brandon's rights under the Memorandum became vested in Abney (including the general technique of their manufacture) and the Link Seam.

"An essential condition of such arrangement will be the Purchaser's undertaking that no loom or its patented products shall be exported to any country in which similar exclusive rights for the same have been or may be assigned. In a similar manner other users of Hindle Looms have agreed to respect the rights to be acquired in the U. S. A.

"A further condition of such arrangement will be the Purchasers' undertaking that no license to manufacture the Hindle Loom or its components or its patented product shall be issued by the Purchaser without the prior consent in writing of the original Patentees.

"The Patentees will agree to give the Purchasers a first option for the purchase of any patents of improvement that may be granted, but only in respect of U. S. A.

"It is realized that the Purchaser may consider a gradual development necessary or desirable, and with the object of facilitating such programme, it is proposed that a contract should be entered into for the purchase of six looms within a period of three years commencing from the date of such contract. This contract to provide for the immediate supply of three looms and the purchase of the sole rights of looms and their patented products in the U. S. A. The remaining three looms covered by such contract to be ordered at any time within the specified period at prices equivalent to those quoted herein, plus such increase or minus such decrease as may be indicated as a consequence of altered cost of manufacture due to wages and/or materials, as compared with conditions existing at this date. Further looms to be available to the Purchaser on a similar basis, either before or after the expiration of the three year period.

* * *

"Subject to the conditions briefly on page 11, the owners will assign to the Purchasers the U. S. Patents enumerated, relating to Looms, Dryer Felts, etc., conveying to the Purchasers the sole and exclusive rights to the Hindle Dryer Felt Looms and their patented products in the U. S. A., in consideration of the payment by the Purchasers of the sum of $50,000 (Fifty Thousand Dollars)."

* * *

[3] "EXCLUSIVE FRANCHISE—U. S. A.

"Agreements will be entered into by the responsible parties making you the exclusive user in U. S. A., of Hindle Dryer Felt Looms (regardless of whether such Looms are constructed under existing Patents or otherwise), and assigning to you the following U. S. Patents covering Looms, Cloths, Seams, etc.:—

No. 1630428	1927 Looms	J. H. & T. Hindle
1678434	1928 Looms	J. H. & T. Hindle
1687865	1928 Looms	J. H. & T. Hindle
1801081	1931 Dryer Felts	T. Hindle
1812206	1931 Looms	J. H. & T. Hindle
1812148	1931 Dryer Felts	T. Hindle
1834343	1931 Dryer Felts	T. Hindle
1976169	1934 Sew. Machine	T. Hindle
1994280	1935 Dryer Felt	T. Hindle
2010302	1935 Link Seam	T. Hindle & S. Lord
2066974	1937 Link Seam	T. Hindle & S. Lord
(Pending)	1939 Dryer Felt (P.M.)	T. Hindle & S. Lord

"The consideration required for the above U. S. rights is the sum of:—£5,000.

"We suggest that payment of this particular item shall be made by 20% upon signing of the contract, with four further payments each of 20% of the total sum at consecutive intervals of six months, thus spreading the payments over two years.

It will be our object, of course, to maintain close cooperation with you, exactly as we have during the last twelve years with Messrs. Ayers, Ltd., of Canada."

Mills. The United States patents on looms which had issued to the Hindles had all expired in 1948. In 1948 the appellant, Scapa Dryers, Inc., was incorporated in Georgia. Its stockholders are Scapa Dryers, Ltd. and Ayers Limited. Scapa Dryers, Ltd. is an English corporation manufacturing dryer felts in England on Hindle looms. The Messrs. Hindle are associated with it. Ayers Limited is the Canadian corporation which manufactures dryer felts on Hindle looms. The Hindles are not connected with Ayers. Scapa Dryers, Inc., the appellant, set up a plant in Waycross, Georgia, where it embarked upon the manufacture of dryer felts on Hindle looms. This suit followed. Abney Mills asserted that by the 1939 Memorandum, of which the Georgia Scapa corporation had knowledge, it acquired an exclusive right to the use of Hindle dryer felt looms in the United States in perpetuity or for as long as it should maintain its corporate existence under its perpetual charter, that Scapa of Georgia wrongfully and tortiously interfered with the contractual relationship and deprived it of the economic advantage resulting from the agreement incorporated in the Memorandum. Damages, an accounting and injunctive relief were sought. The appellant contended that the Memorandum, properly construed, granted Brandon and Abney, its successor by merger, no exclusive franchise beyond the life of the patents, and if the agreement be construed as attempting to grant an exclusive perpetual franchise it would be contrary to public policy, violative of the anit-trust laws, and unenforceable.

[Intentions of Parties]

Testimony, oral and documentary, was received. Thomas Hindle testified that the Hindles did not intend to grant to Brandon an exclusive right to use Hindle looms for any period beyond the term of the patents. The President and General Manager of Brandon, Mr. C. E. Hatch, testified that he expected that the exclusive franchise would be perpetual and based his expectations solely on the language of the agreement. It will be remembered that the 1939 renewal of negotiations on behalf of Brandon with the Hindles was made by Hall and much of the correspondence for Brandon was written by him. On April 10, 1939, he requested authority from Thomas Hindle to make patent investigations in the United States. In the course of the letter it was said, "It strikes me that we will actually be paying the franchise cost for what these patents are worth in this country, and we feel a careful investigation of these patents is entirely in order, and hope you may see our point." Again, during the same month he wrote,

> "The first reactions of Mr. Hatch and Mr. Baldwin are too much money involved. They have, some time ago, got price on one loom from Compton & Knowles of Worcester, Mass., and of course this price is way below your loom prices. Furthermore, they point out that the only felt Patent which it seems we will definitely need under our program, will be the Porous Matt felt, because the ordinary asbestos felts, such as are made by Hill, and which would also be made on your looms, are not Patented nor Patentable.
>
> "Therefore, the 5,000 pounds franchise cost seems to pare down to the one Porous Matt Patent, which may still simply be Patent applied for in the United States, plus the franchise on the Patented looms themselves. I must admit that when this is boiled down to these facts, and unless I am incorrect, the franchise price does seem high."

Other letters by Hall were of the same tenor suggesting that the franchise payment was to be for the patents and hence for the duration of the patents. Mr. Hatch wrote to his company's attorney on August 2, 1939, saying, "There is no question but that a loom can be built by any other manufacturer which will satisfactorily weave Cotton Dryer Felts without infringing on any existing patents. We have never thought that owning the United States patents to the Hindle Looms would prohibit other felt manufacturers making satisfactory Dryer Felts, but we do believe that we will have a four or five year jump on the other manufacturers and this is all that we can hope for". Thus there is much doubt as to the correctness of a statement of Mr. Baldwin, of Woodward, Baldwin & Co., made in a letter to the Morey Company that "I feel sure that your Mr. Hall thinks Brandon should have a paper of some sort from Hindle outlining his agreement that no further Hindle looms will ever be sold or operated in this country."

[Holding of Lower Court—Appeal]

The district court held that by the "Exclusive Franchise" clause Brandon and its successor Abney Mills had been given an exclusive right in perpetuity, or for so long as the right should be exercised, to manufacture dryer felts on Hindle looms. Scapa of Georgia appealed.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Much has been said by the parties as to whether consideration should be given to the offers and representations made during the 1936 negotiations. The conclusions we reach make it unnecessary to pass upon the contentions made in connection with this phase of the case. We think that the 1939 discussions which culminated in the July agreement, were new negotiations and not a continuation of those of 1936. Nor do we find it necessary to consider the proposition, urged by the appellee, that the fact that Ayres Limited continues to be the exclusive Hindle operator in Canada requires the construction that the contract with Brandon was intended to grant an unlimited right of exclusive use in the United States.

[Antitrust Laws]

The district court construed the agreement as a valid enforceable contract prohibiting Hindle, in perpetuity or for as long as Brandon or its successors should be in business, from selling in the United States looms manufactured by Hindle for the weaving of dryer felts. Such an agreement would restrict Hindle in the sale of its manufactured looms. Competition would be limited. The agreement as found by the district court would be in restraint of trade. An agreement in restraint of trade is illegal at common law or under the Sherman [4] and Clayton Acts [5] only if the restraint is unreasonable. The test as to whether or not a restraint of trade is unreasonable has been stated in this manner:

"A restraint of trade is unreasonable, in the absence of statutory authorization or dominant social or economic justification if it

"(a) is greater than is required for the protection of the person for whose benefit the restraint is imposed, or

"(b) imposes undue hardship upon the person restricted, or

"(c) tends to create, or has for its purpose to create, a monopoly, or to control prices or to limit production artificially, or

"(d) unreasonably restricts the alienation or use of anything that is a subject of property, or

"(e) is based on a promise to refrain from competition and is not ancillary either to a contract for the transfer of good-will or other subject of property or to an existing employment or contract of employment." Restatement, Contracts § 515.

[Time and Territorial Extent of Restraints]

The concept of reasonableness, by which the enforceability or unenforceability of an agreement in restraint of trade is determined, is not to be measured by any fixed formula of legal interpretation. The rules are but guides to decision. The reasonableness of the restraint is to be determined by the circumstances of the case and the particular contract involved in it. Gibbs v. Consolidated Gas Co., 130 U. S. 396, 9 S. Ct. 553, 32 L. Ed. 979.

The restraining covenant of "exclusive user" was ancillary to the sale of the two looms by Hindle to Brandon and the assignment of the patents.

The contractual limits or absence thereof, upon the period of time and the territorial extent of the restriction are factors to be considered in determining reasonableness. They are not, by the present trend of the authorities, fixed rules of decision. 17 C. J. S. 622 et seq., Contracts §§ 238-250; 6 Corbin on Contracts, 472, § 1381; Annot. 45 A. L. R. 2d 77; Annot. 46 A. L. R. 2d 119. But, it may be said, the longer the period of time and the larger the extent of the area, the greater will be the likelihood that the restraining covenant will be regarded as unreasonable and unenforceable.

[Interest to Be Protected]

Since Hindle agreed to assign its United States patents to Brandon it can hardly be said that it was unreasonable to include the entire United States as the territory for which the exclusive use was granted. As to the question of time the problem has a dual aspect, first, whether the district court correctly found that there was an intent of the parties that the exclusive franchise should be for so long as Brandon or its successors should be in the dryer felt business or, in other words, of indefinite or perpetual duration; and second, if so intended, could the agreement withstand a charge of invalidity. Our task would be easier if the parties, by the agreement, had fixed or attempted to fix the period for which exclusive user was to continue. The duration of the agreement was neither specified in the agreement nor discussed at any time during the negotiations. When we consider whether the interest of Brandon, now Abney Mills, requires a perpetual right of exclusive user we look to the purpose for which the Hindle looms were purchased and the exclusive user was acquired. The felts which Brandon had been making were not such as could compete with those of other manufacturers. It was feared by Brandon in 1937 that unless it was able to make a satisfactory asbestos felt it would be entirely out of the dryer felt business in a few years. In the same year the mills prepared to operate on a three-day week. The Hindle looms were then regarded by Brandon and are now regarded by Abney Mills as the best dryer felt looms obtainable. Brandon believed that the use of the Hindle looms would give it a commanding competitive position in the American dryer felt market. The President of Brandon, about a week after the deal with Hindle was closed, wrote the Company's attorney and, commenting upon the patents, said, "We do believe that we will have a four or five year jump on the other manufacturers and this is all that we can hope for." The patents expired in 1948 and so had a remaining life of about nine years at the time of the transaction. We conclude that the interest which Brandon sought to protect was the exclusive use provided by the patents and for the remaining period covered by the patents. That protection it has had.

[4] 15 U. S. C. A. § 1, et seq.
[5] 15 U. S. C. A. § 12, et seq.

Construing the agreement as would Abney Mills and as did the district court, Hindle would be forever prohibited from selling looms in the United States except to the extent, if at all, Brandon should be a customer. There was no agreement by Brandon to ever buy another loom. That it did so is true but to determine the intent of the parties we look at the situation of the parties and their undertakings at the time their agreement was made. We think the inference is unwarranted that Hindle intended to so limit its potential market by forever excluding itself from what would perhaps be its most promising trade area.

[Policy of Patent Laws]

By the patents the Hindles had a monopoly on the looms. This monopoly is sought to be extended and perpetuated by Abney Mills, to the extent of the exclusion of Hindle and those claiming under it or using looms made by it. Such an extension of the patent monopoly is in conflict with the policy of the patent laws. By the decision in Scott Paper Company v. Marcalus Manufacturing Company, Inc., 326 U. S. 249, 66 S. Ct. 101, 90 L. Ed. 47, reh. den. 326 U. S. 811, 66 S. Ct. 263, 90 L. Ed. 495, it was held that a contract between a patentee and the assignee of the patent which attempts to exclude the assignor-patentee from using the patented article after the expiration of the patent is contrary to the public policy laid down by our patent laws and consequently is unenforceable. The consuming public is entitled to the benefits which flow from the free and unrestricted use and development of the invention by others, including the assignor, after the expiration of the patent. This is a part of the consideration for which the monopoly for a limited duration is granted. In the course of its opinion the Court said:

> "By the patent laws Congress has given to the inventor opportunity to secure the material rewards for his invention for a limited time, on condition that he make full disclosure for the benefit of the public of the manner of making and using the invention and that upon the expiration of the patent the public be left free to use the invention. [Citing authorities]. As has been many times pointed out, the means adopted by Congress of promoting the progress of science and the arts is the limited grant of the patent monopoly in return for the full disclosure of the patented invention and its dedication to the public on the expiration of the patent. [Citing authorities].
>
> "The aim of the patent laws is not only that members of the public shall be free to manufacture the product or employ the process disclosed by the expired patent, but also that the consuming public at large shall receive the benefits of the unrestricted exploitation, by others, of its disclosures. [Citing authority]. If a manufacturer or user could restrict himself, by express contract, or by any action which would give rise to an 'estoppel', from using the invention of an expired patent, he would deprive himself and the consuming public of the advantage to be derived from his free use of the disclosures. The public has invested in such free use by the grant of a monopoly to the patentee for a limited time. Hence any attempted reservation or continuation in the patentee or those claiming under him of the patent monopoly, after the patent expires, whatever the legal device employed, runs counter to the policy and purpose of the patent laws. And for the same reason a stranger, such as respondent Marcalus, cannot, by securing and assigning a patent on the invention of the expired Inman patent, confer on petitioner any right to deprive the public of the benefits of the free use of the invention for which the public has paid by the grant of a limited monopoly.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

"By the force of the patent laws not only is the invention of a patent dedicated to the public upon its expiration, but the public thereby becomes entitled to share in the good will which the patentee has built up in the patented article or product through the enjoyment of his patent monopoly. Hence we have held that the patentee may not exclude the public from participating in that good will or secure, to any extent, a continuation of his monopoly by resorting to the trademark law and registering as a trademark any particular descriptive matter appearing in the specifications, drawings or claims of the expired patent, whether or not such matter describes essential elements of the invention or claims. [Citing authorities].

"It is thus apparent that the patent laws preclude the patentee of an expired patent and all others including petitioner from recapturing any part of the former patent monopoly; for those laws dedicate to all the public the ideas and inventions embodied in an expired patent. They do not contemplate that anyone by contract or any form of private arrangement may withhold from the public the use of an invention for which the public has paid by its grant of a monopoly and which has been appropriated to the use of all. The rights in the invention are then no longer subject to private barter, sale, or waiver. [Citing authorities]." 326 U. S. 255-257.

[Governing Principle]

The Scott Paper Co. case has been criticized and referred to as the "Dreadful Scott decision". Lechner, Estoppel Against Patent Assignors-The Scott Paper Company Case. 28 J. Pat. Off. Soc'y 325. Cf. 4 Toulmin, Anti-Trust Laws 194, § 7.24. Whether or not the decision is sound, and we think it is, we are bound by it and the doctrine which it states is a principle governing the decision in the case before us.

["Perpetual" User Would Be Invalid]

If the district court's construction of the meaning of the contract be followed, we would have no choice but to hold it invalid. Where an agreement is susceptible of two constructions, one of which would render the contract invalid and another which would sustain its validity, the latter construction is to be preferred. W. C. Shepherd Co. v. Royal Indemnity Co., 5th Cir. 1951, 192 F. 2d 710. So we conclude that Hindle and Brandon did not intend that Brandon's exclusive rights to the use of Hindle looms should continue beyond the time when all of the patents described in the agreement had expired. The rights under the patents have terminated and so has the right of exclusive user granted to Brandon and assigned by it to Abney Mills. Therefore the judgment of the district court for the appellee was erroneous. That judgment is reversed and judgment is here rendered for the appellant.

Reversed and Rendered.

[¶ 69,393] Rita Gottesman, et al. v. General Motors Corporation and E. I. du Pont de Nemours and Company.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. October Term, 1958. Argued April 13, 1959. Decided June 18, 1959.

On petition for an interlocutory appeal from an order of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, SIDNEY SUGARMAN, Judge.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Interlocutory Appeals—Requirements—"Substantial Grounds for Difference of Opinion"—Shortening Litigation.—In a minority stockholders' derivative antitrust action against a chemical company which had wrongfully acquired and used 23 per cent of their corporaton's stock, a petition to enter an interlocutory appeal from a trial court's order denying a motion to dismiss the complaint was denied. Such an appeal should not be permitted unless the order under attack "involves a controlling question of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion" and "an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation." Here, there was no "substantial ground for difference of opinion" as to the correctness of the trial court's refusal to require the minority stockholders to demand, of the majority stockholders, the bringing of the action. Such a demand would have been futile because of the chemical company's sizable ownership of the corporation's stock, the number and diffusion of the remaining shareholders, and the inability of the shareholders as a body to cause their corporation to prosecute the action. Also, such an interlocutory appeal would prolong rather than shorten the litigation. A shareholders' vote cannot prevent the institution of a derivative suit, annul one already begun, or ratify violations of the antitrust laws. Thus, a reversal of the trial court's ruling could, at most, lead only to a remand for repleading, with possibilities of further interlocutory appeals thereafter.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9005.70, 9015.

For the plaintiffs: Edward A. Rothenberg of Netter & Netter, New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Henry M. Hogan, Detroit, Mich., and George A. Brooks, William A. Grier, and Edward B. Wallace, New York, N. Y., for General Motors Corporation; Charles A. Horsky of Covington & Burling, Washington, D. C., and Frank H. Gordon, New York, N. Y., for E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Company.

Denying a petition for an interlocutory appeal from an order of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, 1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,332. For a prior opinion of the court, see 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 68,928.

Before: CLARK, Chief Judge, and SWAN and MOORE, Circuit Judges.

Defendants, General Motors Corporation and E. I. du Pont de Nemours and Company, petition for permission to enter an interlocutory appeal under 28 U. S. C. § 1292(b) from an order, D. C. S. D. N. Y. [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,332], 171 F. Supp. 661, denying their motion to dismiss the complaint in a consolidated shareholders' derivative action. Petition denied.

See also D. C. S. D. N. Y. [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,928], 158 F. Supp. 526.

[Stockholders' Antitrust Action]

CLARK, Chief Judge [In full text]: General Motors Corporation and E. I. du Pont de Nemours and Company, defendants in a shareholders' derivative action, seek permission to take an interlocutory appeal under 28 U. S. C. § 1292(b) from the denial of their motion to dismiss the complaint for failure to comply with Rule 23(b), F. R. C. P. This suit, a consolidation of three actions instituted shortly after the Supreme Court's decision in United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,723], 353 U. S. 586, is prosecuted by stockholders of General Motors seeking to recover treble damages and other relief on behalf of their corporation for activities of Du Pont held unlawful in the above Supreme Court decision.

[Interlocutory Appeal]

By their motion to dismiss, defendants attack the rather lengthy allegations of paragraphs 7 and 21 of the consolidated complaint as failing to meet the requirements of F. R. 23(b) as to a demand on the shareholders of General Motors or an excuse for a failure to make one. In substance these paragraphs say that demand for action by the stockholders would be futile because of Du Pont's commanding position by virtue of its ownership of at least 23 per cent of General Motors common stock, with the remaining interest divided between several hundreds of thousands of small holders residing in widespread parts of the world. No attempt is made to attack corresponding allegations of paragraphs 7 and 20 excusing a lack of like demand upon the Board of Directors of General Motors. Judge Sugarman denied the motion to dismiss in a reasoned opinion in which he held the allegations sufficient, citing inter alia Delaware & H. Co. v. Albany & S. R. Co., 213 U. S. 435. But then he proceeded to give the certificate of substantial question which is the first step in the procedure for limited interlocutory appeals provided in the new statute, 28 U. S. C. § 1292(b). D. C. S. D. N. Y. [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,332], 171 F. Supp. 661.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Legislative Intent]

In granting this certificate we think the judge acted improvidently and contrary to the legislative intent; and we cannot now take the second and final step toward allowing an appeal without creating troubles for ourselves and litigants for the future in wasteful and delaying appeals not contemplated by the framers of the act, as is carefully explained in Milbert v. Bison Laboratories, 3 Cir., 260 F. 2d 431. The limited purposes of the new statute have been made very clear. Although the federal rule against "piece-meal appeals" had been of long and cherished standing, certain vigorous attacks upon it led to the appointment of a distinguished Committee of the Judicial Conference of the United States under the chairmanship of the late Judge Parker to study the question. Rep. Jud. Conf. Sept. 24-26, 1951, pp. 32, 33. The Committee held hearings and took the views of the federal judges, who generally opposed the change. The Committee then reported unanimously disapproving the original proposal as unduly encouraging "fragmentary and frivolous appeals with the evils and delays incident thereto," and this report was approved by the Conference. Rep. Jud. Conf. March 20-21, 1952, p. 7; App. to Rep. Jud. Conf. Sept. 22-24, 1952, p. 203.

At Judge Parker's suggestion the Committee was continued to receive other proposals. One of these was to apply the principle then recently embodied in amended F. R. 54(b) of allowing an appeal of separable matters when both trial and appellate courts agreed on its propriety. The validity of that rule had been under attack in a limited number of cases, although ultimately it was sustained in Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Mackey [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,370], 351 U. S. 427, and Cold Metal Process Co. v. United Engineering & Foundry Co., 351 U. S. 445. In any event that rule applied only to civil actions, and it was thought that a limited and controlled right of appeal substantially along these lines might be useful. Accordingly the Conference, with some members still dissenting, accepted the proposal while stressing its limited nature. Rep. Jud. Conf. Sept. 24-25, 1953, pp. 27, 28. The Report of the Judicial Conference and the House and Senate Reports all stress the limited and exceptional character of the cases to which it applies and condemn any indiscriminate use of the authority given. See extensive quotation from these reports in Milbert v. Bison Laboratories, supra, 3 Cir., 260 F. 2d 431, 432-435, which holds that the power must be strictly limited to the precise conditions stated in the law. At least three courts of appeals have already passed local rules limiting and regularizing the procedure by which such appeals may be sought. See also In re Heddendorf, 1 Cir., 263 F. 2d 887; Wright, The Interlocutory Appeals Act of 1958, 23 F. R. D. 199, 202; and Sen. Rep. No. 2434, 85th Cong., 2d Sess., 1958 U. S. Code Cong. & Adm. News 5255, 5262, quoting the restricted proposals originally suggested by the writer of this opinion. We are in agreement with this interpretation of the legislation.

[Requirements for Interlocutory Appeal]

Hence an interlocutory appeal should not be permitted unless the order under attack "involves a controlling question of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion and * * * an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation." 28 U. S. C. § 1292(b). It would seem axiomatic that appeals challenging pre-trial rulings upholding pleadings against demurrer could not be effective in bringing nearer the termination of litigation; on the contrary, they only stimulate the parties to more and greater pre-trial sparring apart from the merits. We are not accustomed to criticize or reverse such pleading decisions, and the chance of reversal here seems so slight as to be quite negligible. Further, a reversal at most could lead only to a remand for repleading, with possibilities of further interlocutory appeals thereafter. If the district judge had thought that there was anything of permanent effect here, he could have severed the issue under F. R. 42(b) and tried it on the facts to a conclusion more meaningful than a ruling on the merit form of plaintiffs' allegations.

As the issue now stands there is no "substantial ground for a difference of opinion" as to the district court's refusal to require plaintiffs to make a demand on General Motors' shareholders. One need not be made where it is "not reasonable to require it," Hawes v. Oakland, 104 U. S. 450, 461, or where it "would be 'futile,' 'useless,' or 'unavailing.'" Cathedral Estates v. Taft Realty Corp., 2 Cir., 228 F. 2d 85, 88. Cf. Swanson v. Traer, 354 U. S. 114, 115; Smith v. Sperling, 354 U. S. 91, 94 n. 2. Without a doubt the combination of Du Pont's sizable ownership of General Motors stock, the number and diffusion of the remaining shareholders, and the inability under relevant state law of the shareholders as a body to cause General Motors to prosecute this action renders a demand on these shareholders unnecessary in the instant case. Delaware & H. Co. v. Albany & S. R. Co., 213 U. S. 435; Citrin v. Greater New York Industries, D. C. S. D. N. Y., 79 F. Supp. 692, 697; Berg v. Cincinnati, Newport & Covington Ry. Co., D. C. E. D. Ky., 56 F. Supp. 843, 845; Steinberg v. Hardy, D. C. Conn., 90 F. Supp. 167; Continental Securities Co. v. Belmont, 206 N. Y. 7, 15-16, 99 N. E. 138; Steinberg v. Adams, D. C. S. D. N. Y., 90 F. Supp. 604, 609. The absurdity of defendants' contention that plaintiffs must so canvass their fellow stockholders is pointed up by the complete lack of mention of such a requirement in Judge Leibell's careful opinion in the famous case of Winkelman v. General Motors Corp., D. C. S. D. N. Y., 44 F. Supp. 960, 1022-1023.

[Derivative Suits—Shareholders' Role]

We are bound to say, moreover, that from the nature of the principles governing shareholders' actions we see no chance that even a more meaningful resolution of the issues attempted to be formulated below can decisively advance the termination of this litigation. As is evident from the alternative relief defendants seek—that this action be stayed and the plaintiffs directed to seek approval of the suit at the next annual stockholders' meeting, the suit to be dismissed "in the event they do not secure such approval"—defendants' petition here is predicated on a fundamental misconception of the role of the shareholders as a body with respect to derivative suits. A shareholders' vote cannot prevent the institution of a derivative suit or annul one once it has been brought; had that been possible it is obvious that very few such suits could or would have been maintained. At best a ratification by the body of shareholders merely compels the minority shareholder plaintiffs to shift slightly the legal theories on which they rely so as to raise charges of fraud, waste of corporate assets, or the like. See Continental Securities Co. v. Belmont, supra, 206 N. Y. 7, 18-20, 99 N. E. 138; Pollitz v. Wabash R. Co., 207 N. Y. 113, 100 N. E. 721; Steinberg v. Hardy, supra, D. C. Conn., 90 F. Supp. 167; 2 Fletcher, Cyclopedia of Corporations § 764 (1931); 13 id. § 5795. In the instant case even this slight effect on the litigation cannot occur, since the wrongful acts alleged—violations of the antitrust laws by Du Pont—can in no way be ratified or rectified by a vote of the shareholders of General Motors. Cf. Chicago v. Mills, 204 U. S. 321, 328-330.

[Shortening Litigation]

In short, the question before these shareholders, were a poll of them here to be ordered, would be not whether this action should be stopped, but merely who ought most properly to press it forward. See Hawes v. Oakland, supra, 104 U. S. 450, 460-461; Corbus v. Alaska Treadwell Gold Mining Co., 187 U. S. 455, 463; Quincy v. Steel, 120 U. S. 241, 244-249; Taylor v. Holmes, 127 U. S. 489; Dimpfel v. Ohio & Mississippi Ry. Co., 110 U. S. 209, 211; Berg v. Cincinnati, Newport & Covington Ry. Co., supra, D. C. E. D. Ky., 56 F. Supp. 843, 845; Cohen v. Industrial Finance Corp., D. C. S. D. N. Y., 44 F. Supp. 491, 494-495. Obviously an interlocutory appeal to test the desirability of such a poll can only prolong, rather than shorten, this litigation.[1] We recognize that defense of a derivative suit of this kind may be hard and expensive. But no substitute method of minority corporate supervision has yet been developed, and, as experience shows so repeatedly, delays and evasion of the merits are only wasteful in the long run. A decision such as that of the Supreme Court in the Du Pont case is almost sure to result in stockholder attack which must be met soóner or later, if not at the hands of these self-appointed fiduciaries, then of some others. It would seem to the interest of court and litigants that these issues be promptly faced and finally adjudicated.

[1] As this action invokes the federal question of jurisdiction of the district court, any realignment of General Motors as a plaintiff, which might follow a highly unlikely shareholders' vote approving the prosecution of this action, could not terminate the action as it might possibly in a suit founded on diversity of citizenship. Smith v. Sperling, 354 U. S. 91.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Ruling]

Petition denied.

[Dissenting Opinion]

MOORE, Circuit Judge (dissenting) [In full text]: For many years, particularly in the Southern District and to some extent in other large metropolitan areas, one of the principal causes of trial calendar delays has been the time consumed by the trial of the protracted case, namely, a case which would require trial time of a judge of three to eight months. There have been protracted conferences by Bench and Bar as to ways and means of remedying the situation. Some results have been achieved by merely putting these cases to one side but the backlog nevertheless remains.

[Right to Maintain Action]

As is so frequently the case with procedural reforms, they come long after the need therefor has arisen. One of the reforms finally enacted was the adoption of the so-called Interlocutory Appeals Statute (28 U. S. C. A. § 1292(b)). This statute was intended to give to the trial judge who is charged with the responsibility of facing a future burdened by one of these protracted cases discretion in sending some important phase of the case which might materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation to an appellate court for review. In this case the trial court, recognizing that his decision "enables a relatively small stockholder interest to plunge two large corporations into inevitably long and expensive litigation which, should this determination be erroneous, would result in a futile waste of time and money by both the plaintiffs and the defendants," has granted a certificate in which he says the order involves "a controlling question of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion" and that "an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation;". Such a certification, in my opinion, is entitled to great weight and should not be rejected unless it is apparent on the face that the considerations which prompted the trial court to issue it have no basis in law or fact. It certainly cannot be said that this new statute has opened the floodgates to needless appeals because thus far a bare trickle of interlocutory appeals has flowed into the stream of appellate litigation. Nor should it be the role of appellate courts judicially to nullify, in effect, the statute without at least giving it a fair trial to see whether the beneficial purpose for which it was enacted may not result in the disposition or the material shortening of the long case. Surely no better example of the type of case which moved the supporters of the statute to action can be found than in that here presented. (See House Report No. 1667, 85 Cong. 2d Sess., pp. 1, 2; Senate Report No. 2434, 85 Cong. 2d Sess., pp. 3, 4.) Milbert v. Bison Laboratories, 3 Cir., 1958, 260 F. 2d 431, does not apply because the sole basis of the decision was the failure of the district court judge to make the certificate and the failure of counsel to apply for permission to appeal within 10 days. The two reports of House and Senate from which quotations were made indicate that this might well be the type of case to which the interlocutory appeals section should apply because they refer to "protracted and expensive litigation," "long drawn out cases" and cases where a long trial would be necessary for the determination of liability or damages upon a decision overruling a defense going to the right to maintain the action. Certainly it will be too late so far as time and expense are concerned at the end of any hearing on the merits to determine that the plaintiffs had no right to bring this action.

[Substantive Law Involved]

Consideration must now be given to the substantive law involved. It is a fundamental principle of corporate law that the management of a corporation is vested in its directors. No individual stockholder is empowered to take over the reins of corporate management. There are certain circumstances, however, which permit a stockholder in a derivative capacity to sue on behalf of his corporation. Before this radical step is permitted certain definite facts must be alleged and proved. Thus, if the directors are personally guilty of misfeasance or malfeasance so that a suit should be instigated against them by the corporation for damages, it would be but natural that they would not be likely to authorize a suit against themselves. Upon such allegations a stockholder would be justified in seeking to represent the corporation. However, this is by no means the situation here. When analyzed it appears that there is no charge whatsoever in the complaint that the directors or any of them have personally profited at the expense of the corporation or that the proposed derivative stockholders suit seeks damages from or even names any director of General Motors as a defendant. There is no showing as to the names of any of the directors of General Motors, their business affiliations, their connection, if any, with the defendant du Pont, or the circumstances under which they were elected directors. There is no allegation that any one of the directors is beholden to du Pont in a business way or personal way. The only allegation is that du Pont owned approximately 23% of the outstanding common stock of General Motors, followed by the allegation that by reason of this fact "du Pont's stock interest in General Motors exerted a potent influence on the affairs of General Motors, promoted the acts and transactions herein alleged, and induced General Motors to participate therein." There is the further allegation that "defendant du Pont had working control (sometimes hereinafter referred to as 'control') over General Motors, which permitted it to nominate and elect and/or dominate and control the majority of the Board of Directors and/or officers of said corporation, and to select and/or dominate and control a large part of the personnel of said corporation concerned with the acts and transactions herein alleged, to determine a large part of said corporation's policies including those relating to said acts and transactions, and to cause General Motors to participate in said acts and transactions." There is no allegation that any demand was made upon "the managing directors or trustees," namely, the Board of Directors but only an allegation that no demand had been made on the body of stockholders of General Motors. This failure is attempted to be excused by alleging that if the majority of stockholders had demanded that suit be brought it would not have been honored by General Motors Board of Directors. No facts in support of such allegation are set forth. There is no presumption in corporate law that the mere holding of 23% of stock in another corporation is sufficient to justify a stockholder in imposing upon the corporation the burdens and expenses of a protracted law suit against the 23% stockholder. However, the least that should be done here before isolating some trial judge for a period of many months to try such case as there may be is to make sure that at the outset this time and effort will not be wasted.

[Procedural Point of View]

From a procedural point of view the plaintiffs quite apart from the ultimate merits of the suit itself should be required to substantiate the allegations that the 23% du Pont stock interest was responsible for all of the so-called domination and control alleged in paragraph 7 of the complaint. These plaintiffs holding a small amount of stock, as the trial judge said, have no right to "plunge two large corporations into inevitably long and expensive litigation" unless they can establish this right at the threshold. It is not too much to ask these plaintiffs to make specific charges and to prove them rather than to create a new principle of corporate law that the ownership of less than 25% of the stock is to be an irrebuttable presumption of domination and control. The question before the court below goes far beyond "the mere form of plaintiffs' allegations" (as says the majority) and deals with the allegations essential to entitle these plaintiffs to proceed. However, the merits of the question are not, and should not be, before the court on this application. Enough appears both from the trial court's certification and from the legal issues involved to entitle the appeal to be heard on the merits. I find it quite inappropriate to suggest that, were the majority of the stockholders to ratify action properly taken, minority shareholders would be compelled to get around this difficulty and "to shift slightly the legal theories on which they rely so as to raise charges of fraud, waste of corporate assets, or the like" (see majority opinion). It scarcely behooves the courts to suggest to litigants that they can satisfy pleading formalities merely by alleging fraud and waste. More seemly would it be to require (as does the law) that fraud charges (if the facts support them) be made as a prerequisite to bringing the action. At least then the party alleging fraud will be under the burden of proving it. Nor is there any presumption that every major antitrust case "is almost sure to result in stockholder attack." This practice may develop if the legal requirements for bringing such suits are abolished but every governmental attack upon alleged monopoly does not carry with it the presumption of director or stockholder wrongdoing.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Cases Considered]

The court below relied on Delaware and Hudson Company v. Albany and Susquehanna Railroad Company, 213 U. S. 435 (1909), saying, "The facts here presented are governed by the ruling in the Delaware case * * *" A reading of that case shows that the directors and executive officers of both companies were virtually the same. The Supreme Court said that "The situation was unique" and that "Rule 94 is intended to have practical operation, and to have that it must, as to its requirements, be given such play as to fit the conditions of different cases." Furthermore the case came before the court after a final money decree. The Delaware case stands upon its own facts leaving other cases to be judged upon theirs.

In Cohen v. Industrial Finance Corporation, 44 F. Supp. 491, the defendant corporation was the majority stockholder and as the court said the facts showing director domination were "pleaded with considerable particularity." The same is true in Winkelman v. General Motors Corporation, 44 F. Supp. 960, 1022. There 22 out of 27 members of the Board were named as defendants. The court said "Directors could not be expected to sue themselves on behalf of the corporation with any enthusiasm." In Citrin v. The Greater New York Industries, 79 F. Supp. 692, the allegations claimed that all members of the Board had participated in the acts complained of. This court said quite recently in Cathedral Estates v. Taft Realty Corporation, 2 Cir., 1955, 228 F. 2d 85, that demand on the directors or shareholders need not be made when it would be futile but also added that it need not be made "where the directors and controlling shareholders are antagonistic, adversely interested, or involved in the transactions attacked." At least the complaint there alleged that no demand was made "for the reason that the individual defendants whose acts are complained of control Taft Realty and it would be futile to ask them to sue themselves." Smith v. Sperling, 354 U. S. 91 (1957), involved the question of jurisdiction, although even there there were facts which showed that the defendant sought to be sued, namely, United States Pictures Inc., was the corporation of the son-in-law of a director of Warner Bros. Thus in these cases far more is alleged than in the present complaint. Nor is it any answer to say that curative allegations could be made. The whole point of forcing a plaintiff to make an allegation sufficient in law is to force him to prove it if he is to prevail.

I would grant the motion for leave to appeal.

[¶ 69,394] United States v. Hamilton Cosco, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil Action No. 147-345. Filed June 29, 1959.

Case No. 1465 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Resale Price Fixing—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Resale Price Agreements—Fair Trade Agreements with Wholesalers.—A furniture manufacturer was prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any agreement with any wholesaler to fix prices for the sale of the manufacturer's products to any third person. The manufacturer was also prohibited from entering into or enforcing any wholesale "fair trade" agreements.

See Resale Price Fixing, Vol. 1, ¶ 3015.20, 3015.80.

Resale Price Fixing—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Resale Price Fixing—Boycott—Coercion.—A furniture manufacturer was prohibited by a consent decree from requiring, compelling, or coercing any wholesaler or retailer to maintain prices fixed or suggested by the manufacturer or any wholesaler for the sale of the manufacturer's products to any third person. The decree also prohibited the manufacturer from (1) boycotting or otherwise refusing to deal with any of its regularly designated wholesalers who adequately represented it in selling its products and who complied with its reasonable standards, not inconsistent with the decree, for wholesalers, (2) entering into any agreement with any wholesaler to limit or restrict the persons to whom, or the terms under which, any wholesaler might sell the manufacturer's products, or (3) restricting the free choice of any wholesaler in selecting its customers for the manufacturer's products.

See Resale Price Fixing, Vol. 1, ¶ 3015.70, 3015.80.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief —Cancellation of Furniture Manufacturer's Fair Trade Contracts with Wholesalers.—A furniture manufacturer charged with conspiring with wholesalers to fix minimum prices to be charged for its products was ordered by a consent decree to cancel all wholesale "fair trade" agreements to which it was a party.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.45.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Permissive Provisions—Fair Trade Agreements with Retailers.—A provision in a consent decree prohibiting a furniture manufacturer from requiring, compelling, or coercing any wholesaler or retailer to maintain fixed or suggested resale prices was not to be construed as denying the manufacturer the right to enter into and enforce fair trade contracts against retailers.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8321.39, 8421.

For the plaintiff: Robert A. Bicks, Acting Assistant Attorney General; and W. D. Kilgore, Jr., Baddia J. Rashid, Richard B. O'Donnell, Augustus A. Marchetti, and Paul D. Sapienza, Attorneys, Department of Justice.

For the defendant: Cahill, Gordon, Reindel & Ohl, by Jerrold G. Van Cise (D. A. O'Mara and Sheldon Oliensis, of counsel).

Final Judgment

[Consent Decree]

ARCHIE O. DAWSON, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on June 29, 1959; the defendant having appeared and filed its answer to the complaint denying the material allegations thereof; and the plaintiff and the defendant, by their respective attorneys, having consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without this Final Judgment constituting evidence or an admission by either party hereto in any respect of any such issue;

Now, Therefore, before the taking of any testimony and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon consent of the parties hereto, it is hereby

Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed as follows:

I

[Jurisdiction]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter herein and of the parties hereto. The complaint states a claim upon which relief against the defendant may be granted under Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Wholesale fair trade agreement" means any resale price maintenance contract, or supplement thereto, pursuant to which the resale price of Cosco products on sales by wholesalers is fixed, established or maintained under Federal law and under State fair trade laws in accordance with either Section 1 of the Sherman Act or Section 5(a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended;

(B) "Wholesaler" means any person insofar as such person purchases Cosco products for resale to persons other than consumers;

(C) "Cosco products" means metal and plastic furniture manufactured and sold by defendant under the brand name "Cosco";

(D) "Retailer" means any person who purchases Cosco products for resale to consumers;

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

(E) "Person" shall mean any indvidual, partnership, corporation, association or legal entity.

III

[Applicability]

The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to the defendant shall also apply to its subsidiaries, successors and assigns and to each of its or their officers, directors, agents and employees, and to all persons in active concert or participation with the defendant who shall have received actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

IV

[Wholesale Fair Trade Agreements—Cancellation]

The defendant is ordered to cancel all wholesale fair trade agreements to which it is now a party, and the defendant is enjoined from entering into, adhering to or enforcing, directly or indirectly, any wholesale fair trade agreement.

V

[Prohibited Agreements]

The defendant is enjoined from entering into, adhering to, maintaining, furthering or reviving, directly or indirectly, any combination, contract, agreement or understanding with any wholesaler:

(A) To fix, maintain or adhere to prices or minimum prices for the sale of Cosco products to any third person;

(B) To limit or restrict the persons to whom or the terms under which any wholesaler may sell Cosco products.

VI

[Price Fixing—Coercion]

The defendant is enjoined from requiring, compelling or coercing or from attempting to require, compel or coerce, directly or indirectly, any wholesaler or retailer to maintain or adhere to prices or minimum prices fixed or suggested by defendant or any wholesaler for sales of Cosco products to any third person; provided, however, that nothing in this Section VI shall be construed to deny the right of defendant to directly enter into, adhere or enforce against any retailer fair trade contracts with retailers for sales of Cosco products to consumers.

VII

[Boycotting]

The defendant is enjoined from:

(A) Boycotting or otherwise refusing to deal with, or from threatening to boycott or otherwise to refuse to deal with any wholesaler regularly designated by defendant to act as a wholesaler for the sale of Cosco products who adequately represents defendant in the sale of Cosco products and who complies with defendant's reasonable standards for wholesalers of Cosco products not inconsistent with any of the terms of this Final Judgment;

(B) Impeding or restricting, or from attempting to impede or restrict, directly or indirectly, the free choice of any wholesaler in selecting the latter's customers for Cosco products.

VIII

[Notice of Judgment]

Defendant is ordered to mail, within ninety days after the date of entry of this Final Judgment, a true and complete copy of this Final Judgment to each wholesaler on defendant's current distribution list for sales or advertising materials or with whom defendant has in effect on the date of entry of this Final Judgment a wholesale fair trade agreement.

IX

[Enforcement and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, upon written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to the defendant, made to the principal office of the defendant, be permitted (1) access during the office hours of the defendant to books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of the defendant relating to any subject matter contained in this Judgment and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of the defendant and without restraint or interference from it to interview officers and employees of the defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters. Upon such written request, said defendant shall submit such written reports with respect to any of the matters contained in this Final Judgment as from time to time may be necessary for the purpose of enforcement of this Final Judgment. No information obtained by the means provided in this Section IX shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Executive Branch of the plaintiff except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

X

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained for the purpose of enabling any party hereto to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the amendment or modification of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof.

XI

[Modification]

Defendant may, at any time after the expiration of three years from date of entry of this Final Judgment, and upon one month's notice to plaintiff, with consent of the plaintiff, or in the absence of such consent, in five years, petition the Court to modify this Final Judgment to permit defendant to enter into, adhere to and enforce wholesale fair trade agreements, and, upon such application, the Court may so modify this Final Judgment if the defendant establishes to the satisfaction of this Court that the defendant is entitled to exercise such rights under applicable Federal and State legislation.

[¶ 69,395] United States v. New York Produce Exchange, E. W. Saybolt & Co., Inc., Joseph H. McCabe, and Randolph W. Sluter, d. b. a. Chas. Martin & Co.

In the United States District Court for the the Southern District of New York. Civil Action No. 147-349. Filed June 30, 1959.

Case No. 1467 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Exclusion from Trade—Business of Licensing "Petroleum Inspectors."—An exchange which issued "licenses" qualifying persons as "petroleum inspectors," in an action charging the exchange, a firm, and two individuals with excluding qualified individuals from entering the business of "petroleum inspection" through a policy of refusing licenses to persons other than those associated with the two individuals and their respective companies, was prohibited by a consent decree from rejecting, except in accordance with procedures provided for in the decree, any application for a petroleum inspector's license. The exchange was also prohibited from (1) permitting the individuals, or any person holding one of its licenses, to participate in the granting, rejecting, suspending, or revoking of any license, (2) hindering any individual from applying for a license, (3) granting a license with geographical limitations, and (4) granting a license with functional limitations unrelated to the licensee's qualifications. The individuals were prohibited from urging or influencing the exchange to deny, suspend, or revoke a license, hindering any individual from applying to the exchange for a license, or hindering any individual from engaging in the business of petroleum inspection.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.660.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief—Publication of Uniform Standards for Licensing Petroleum Inspectors—Maintenance of Records—Reports.—An exchange which issued "licenses" qualifying persons as "petroleum inspectors" was ordered by a consent decree to publish uniform, reasonable, and non-discriminatory standards for the issuance of licenses, and to grant such licenses to all applicants qualified under those standards. The exchange was also ordered to (1) provide a copy of those licensing standards to any person requesting it, (2) maintain written records relating to the approval, rejection, suspension, or revocation of licenses, (3) file with the court an annual report showing the action taken on each application for a license, and (4) cancel or amend any of its by-laws which were inconsistent with the decree.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.60.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Permissive Provision—Discontinuance of Program of Licensing Petroleum Inspectors.—A consent decree which prohibited an exchange, a firm, and two individuals from hindering any person from engaging in the business of "petroleum inspection" provided that nothing contained in the decree should prohibit the exchange, after notice to the United States, from discontinuing its program of issuing petroleum inspectors' licenses by revoking all then existing licenses and refusing to grant any further licenses.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8321.48, 8421.

For the plaintiff: Robert A. Bicks, Acting Assistant Attorney General; and W. D. Kilgore, Jr., Baddia J. Rashid, Harry N. Burgess, Richard B. O'Donnell, John D. Swartz, Morris F. Klein, Donald A. Kinkaid, and J. Paul McQueen, Attorneys, Department of Justice.

For the defendants: Howard M. Holtzmann of Holtzmann, Wise & Shepard, New York, N. Y., for New York Produce Exchange and Randolph W. Sluter, d. b. a. Chas. Martin & Co.; William J. Walker, New York, N. Y., and Howard M. Holtzmann of Holtzmann, Wise & Shepard, New York, N. Y., for E. W. Saybolt & Co. and Joseph H. McCabe.

Final Judgment

[Consent Decree]

ARCHIE O. DAWSON, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on June 30, 1959, the defendants having respectively appeared and filed their separate answers to such complaint denying the substantive allegations thereof, and the plaintiff and the defendants, by their respective attorneys herein, having severally consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without admission by any party hereto in respect of any issue of fact or law herein.

Now, Therefore, before any testimony has been taken herein, and without trial or adjudication of or any admission with respect to any issue of fact or law herein, and upon the consent as aforesaid of all of the parties hereto, it is hereby Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed as follows:

I

[Jurisdiction]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter herein and of all the parties hereto. The complaint states claims upon which relief may be granted against the defendants, and each of them, under Sections 1 and 2 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Petroleum" means crude oil and any product or products refined from crude oil;

(B) "Business of petroleum inspection" means the service of inspecting, weighing, measuring, sampling, testing or issuing certificates as to the quality or quantity of:

(1) cargoes and other shipments of petroleum or

(2) tankers and other carriers or containers used for the shipment of petroleum.

(C) "Petroleum inspectors' licenses" means and refers to any license granted by defendant New York Produce Exchange and relating to the business of petroleum inspection;

(D) "Exchange" means the defendant New York Produce Exchange;

(E) "Defendants" means defendants Exchange, E. W. Saybolt & Co., Inc., Joseph H. McCabe and Randolph W. Sluter d/b/a Charles Martin & Company;

(F) "Person" means any individual, corporation, partnership, association or any other legal or business entity.

III

[Applicability—Notice of Decree]

(A) The provisions of this Final Judgment, applicable to any defendant shall also apply to each of the subsidiaries, successors, or assigns thereof, and to each of its officers, directors, managers, partners, employees, nominees and agents and to all other persons in active concert or participation with any of the foregoing who shall receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise;

(B) Defendant Exchange is ordered and directed forthwith to serve, by registered mail, a copy of this Final Judgment upon (i) each member of its Board of Managers; (ii) each of its executive officers who is not a member of its Board of Managers and (iii) each member of defendant Exchange who, on the date of this Final Judgment, holds a petroleum inspector's license;

(C) Defendant Exchange is ordered and directed, within sixty (60) days after the date of this Final Judgment to file with this Court and serve upon the plaintiff an Affidavit of its compliance with subsection (B) of this Section III setting forth in said Affidavit the name, position and address of each person upon whom a copy of this Final Judgment shall have been served as therein directed;

(D) Defendant Exchange is ordered and directed, for a period of five(5) years after the date of this Final Judgment, to furnish to any person requesting the same (i) a copy of this Final Judgment, and (ii) a copy of the standards for granting petroleum inspectors' licenses required by Section IV of this Final Judgment.

IV

[Issuance of License—"Standards"]

(A) Defendant Exchange is ordered and directed promptly to adopt and publish to the trade generally, uniform, reasonable and non-discriminatory standards for the granting by it of petroleum inspectors' licenses, and is ordered and directed to grant a petroleum inspector's license to any applicant who is qualified therefor under such standards;

(B) The standards required by the foregoing sub-section (A) of this Section IV shall be as objective in nature as the circumstances permit and must specifically provide:

(1) That any individual may apply to defendant Exchange for a petroleum inspector's license;

(2) That defendant Exchange will grant a petroleum inspector's license to any applicant who is qualified for a petroleum inspector's license under such standards;

(3) That membership in defendant Exchange shall not be a condition to the granting by defendant Exchange of a petroleum inspector's license;

(4) That the charge or fee to be assessed by defendant Exchange in connection with the handling and processing of any such application shall not exceed a reasonable and non-discriminatory charge intended solely to defray the costs of such licensing program.

(C) Defendant Exchange is ordered and directed, not later than November 1, 1959, to serve upon the plaintiff for its approval, a copy of the standards which it proposes to adopt pursuant to subsection (A) of this Section IV. Such standards shall not become effective for at least thirty (30) days after the date of such service upon the plaintiff. In the event the plaintiff, for any reason, shall within such thirty (30) days, in writing, disapprove such proposed standards, defendant Exchange is enjoined and restrained from placing such standards into effect or otherwise causing the same to become effective, without prior approval of this Court. In the event of disagreement between defendant Exchange and the plaintiff as to the content of such standards, the matter may be submitted to this Court for its determination by either the defendant Exchange or the plaintiff.

(D) Defendant Exchange is enjoined and restrained from adopting, promulgating, or otherwise making effective any amendments to such standards for a period of five (5) years after the initial effective date thereof except pursuant to the same procedures as are contained in sub-section (C) of this Section IV. After the expiration of five (5) years from the initial effective date of such standards, and for an additional period of five (5) years, defendant Exchange is ordered and directed to serve upon the plaintiff, sixty (60) days in advance of the effective date thereof, a copy of any modification or amendment of or to such standards;

(E) Defendant Exchange is enjoined and restrained from permitting any other defendant, or any partner, owner, officer, director or representative of such other defendant, or any person holding a petroleum inspector's license issued by defendant Exchange, to vote upon, or in any manner participate in the activities of any committee, board or other body of the Exchange in connection with any matter relating to the granting, rejecting, suspending or revoking of any petroleum inspector's license;

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

(F) The defendant Exchange is enjoined and restrained from rejecting any application made to it for a petroleum inspector's license except in accordance with the following procedures:

(1) The meeting of the appropriate Board or Committee of defendant Exchange charged with approving or rejecting such application shall be attended by not less than a quorum thereof and the vote to reject such application shall be concurred in by the votes of not less than a majority of those so attending;

(2) A poll shall be taken of the vote of each member of such Board or Committee and the vote of each such member shall be duly noted in the official minutes thereof;

(3) Defendant Exchange shall advise the applicant, in writing, of the specific reason or reasons for rejection of his application and shall, where reasonably possible, afford the applicant an opportunity to correct the condition constituting the reason or reasons for such rejection;

(4) Defendant Exchange shall serve upon the plaintiff (i) a copy of each letter of rejection of an application for a petroleum inspector's license, and (ii) a certified copy of the official minutes of the meeting of the Board or Committee at which the vote was taken to reject such application;

(G) In any suit or proceeding instituted by the plaintiff pursuant to Section XI of this Final Judgment based upon the rejection by defendant Exchange of any application for a petroleum inspector's license, the defendant Exchange shall establish to the satisfaction of this Court that the applicant was not reasonably qualified for such license under the standards required by subsection (A) of this Section IV.

V

[Prohibited Activities]

Each defendant, other than defendant Exchange, is enjoined and restrained from, directly or indirectly:

(A) Voting upon, or participating in the activities of any committee, board or other body of the Exchange, in connection with the approval, rejection, suspension or revocation of any application for a petroleum inspector's license;

(B) Urging or influencing, or attempting to urge or influence, defendant Exchange to refuse or deny a petroleum inspector's license to any applicant or to suspend or revoke any such license after its issuance;

(C) Hindering, restricting, limiting or preventing, or attempting to hinder, restrict, limit or prevent:

(i) Any individual from applying to defendant Exchange for a petroleum inspector's license; or (ii) Any person from engaging in the business of petroleum inspection.

VI

(A) Defendant Exchange is enjoined and restrained from hindering, restricting, limiting or preventing, or attempting to hinder, restrict, limit or prevent:

(i) Any individual from applying to it for a petroleum inspector's license; or

(ii) Any person from engaging in the business of petroleum inspection except that defendant Exchange may, pursuant to and in accordance with the provisions of Section IV of this Final Judgment, reject an application to it for a petroleum inspector's license.

(B) Defendant Exchange is enjoined and restrained from granting, or causing to be granted, any petroleum inspector's license, pursuant to the provisions of Section IV of this Final Judgment, which, in any manner, restricts or limits geographically the area or areas within which any person may engage in the business of petroleum inspection;

(C) Defendant Exchange is enjoined and restrained from granting or causing to be granted, any petroleum inspector's license pursuant to the provisions of Section IV of this Final Judgment, which, in any manner, is restricted or limited functionally except to the extent that any functional restriction or limitation imposed by defendant Exchange upon any such petroleum inspector's license may be related to the qualifications of the licensee under the standards required by Section IV of this Final Judgment.

VII

[Cancellation of By-Laws—Records]

Defendant Exchange is ordered and directed:

(A) Not later than November 1, 1959, or such later time as may be fixed by order of this Court to cancel any and all of its by-laws, rules or regulations which are, or may be inconsistent with any of the provisions of this Final Judgment and to amend the same so as to conform to the provisions hereof;

(B) To maintain, for a period of ten (10) years, all of its written records relating to the approval, rejection, suspension or revocation of any petroleum inspector's license including specifically, but without limitation: (i) the application of such license; (ii) the minutes of the meeting of the Board or Committee voting upon the same; (iii) and the letter to the applicant pursuant to Section IV(F)(3) of this Final Judgment advising the applicant of the reason or reasons for rejection of his application for license.

VIII

[Reports]

Defendant Exchange is ordered and directed to file with this Court, and serve upon the plaintiff, not later than the first day of April of each of the five (5) years following the date of this Final Judgment a report showing, for the preceding calendar year, the name and address of each person who has applied to it during such preceding calendar year for a petroleum inspector's license and the action or disposition of defendant Exchange on each such application.

IX

[Discontinuance of Program]

Nothing contained in this Final Judgment shall prohibit defendant Exchange, upon one hundred and twenty (120) days advance notice to the plaintiff, from discontinuing its program of issuing petroleum inspectors' licenses by revoking all then existing licenses and refusing to grant any further licenses. Upon service upon plaintiff of the 120 days' notice as specified herein nothing contained in this Final Judgment shall be construed to require defendant Exchange to consider further or take any further action upon any application for a petroleum inspector's license then pending or thereafter filed.

X

[Enforcement and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, upon written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to any defendant, made to its principal office be permitted:

(A) Access during the office hours of said defendant to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of said defendant relating to any matters contained in this Final Judgment, and

(B) Subject to the reasonable convenience of said defendant and without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers or employees of said defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters;

(C) Upon such written request the defendant shall submit such reports in writing to the Department of Justice with respect to matters contained in this Final Judgment as may from time to time be necessary to the enforcement of said Final Judgment. No information obtained by the means provided in this Section X shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Executive Branch of the Plaintiff, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

XI

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to the Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment or for the termination or modification of any of the provisions thereof, and for the purpose of the enforcement of compliance therewith and the punishment of violations thereof.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[¶ 69,396] R. E. Johnson v. W. D. Pate, Defendant and Relator, The Superior Court for Pierce County, Hardyn Soule, Judge, Respondent.

In the Washington Supreme Court. Department One. No. 35053. Dated April 23, 1959.

Application filed in the Supreme Court February 4, 1959, for a writ of prohibition restraining a Superior Court from issuing a temporary injunction. Denied.

Washington Unfair Practices Act

Sales Below Cost Under Washington Unfair Practices Act—Temporary Injunction—Writ of Prohibition—Appeal as Adequate Remedy.—An individual charged with selling dry-cleaning services below cost in violation of the Washington Unfair Practices Act was denied a writ of prohibition to restrain a trial judge from entering an order enjoining such sales. A writ of prohibition is an extraordinary remedy; as a prerequisite to its issuance, there must be no other adequate remedy, either by appeal or writ of review. Under Washington law, however, an appeal may be taken from an order granting a temporary injunction. Therefore, even assuming the correctness of the contention that the Washington Unfair Practices Act does not authorize the granting of a temporary injunction prior to a hearing on the merits, the individual has a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy by appeal if such an order should be entered.

See Sales Below Cost, Vol. 1, ¶ 7263.

For the defendant and relator: James P. Healy.

For the respondent: Scott, Langhorne & McGavick by Edward M. Lane.

[Sales Below Cost]

Rosellini, Judge [In full text]: This is an original application in this court for a writ of prohibition permanently restraining the respondent, as judge of the superior court for Pierce County, from entering an order enjoining the relator from selling dry-cleaning services below cost, pending the trial of an action brought against him under the provisions of RCW 19.90.040, forbidding price-cutting practices. The relator alleges that the court exceeded its jurisdiction, inasmuch as the applicable statute does not authorize the granting of a temporary injunction, prior to a hearing on the merits.

[Appeal from Temporary Injunction]

Assuming the correctness of the relator's contention, it appears that he can have the order reviewed on appeal, under Rule on Appeal 14(3), 34A Wn. (2d) 20, RCW Vol. 0, which provides that an appeal may be taken from an order granting a temporary injunction. Lewis Pac. Dairymen's Ass'n v. Turner, 50 Wn. (2d) 762, 314 P. (2d) 625.

[Writ of Prohibition]

The writ of prohibition is an extraordinary remedy and is available only where an inferior court is acting without or in excess of its jurisdiction and there is no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy, in the ordinary course of law, from the decision it renders or may render. It does not lie merely because the court decides erroneously or in excess of its jurisdiction. As a prerequisite to its issue, there must be no other adequate remedy, either by appeal or writ of review from the challenged decision. State ex rel. New York Cas. Co. v. Superior Court, 31 Wn. (2d) 834, 199 P. (2d) 581; State ex rel. Sibbald v. Huntington, 1 Wn. (2d) 413, 96 P. (2d) 446; State ex rel. Ernst v. Superior Court, 198 Wash. 133, 87 P. (2d) 294, and cases cited therein.

["Cost Survey"]

It is urged that the court proposed to use a cost survey submitted by the plaintiff as a guide for determining whether the relator is selling his services below cost, and that this survey has not been shown to be accurate or applicable to the relator's business. The relator contends that he will suffer irreparable harm if he is forced to raise his prices to correspond with those shown on the survey. The relator's apprehensions in this regard do not appear to be justified by the court's oral decision which indicates that the proposed injunction will only restrain the relator from selling below his actual costs, whatever they may be. In commenting on the order which it proposed to enter, the court said:

"In this case the prices complained of are not the usual and established prices,

I am satisfied, of Mr. Pate. He has other prices for this work in the normal course. I am not disturbing his normal prices by the order which I am suggesting should be entered, I am only preventing him from running these special promotional prices which on the evidence presented here would appear to be below rock bottom in the trade."

In any event, if any order is entered, whether or not it contains the provision which the relator fears, it will be subject to immediate appeal.

[Supersedeas]

If the effect of such order is to change the status quo of the parties, the trial court has the authority, which it is presumed it will exercise justly, to allow supersedeas pending the appeal. State ex rel. Burrows v. Superior Court, 43 Wash 225, 86 Pac. 632. If it should fail to do so, on proper application, and if upon appeal it should be made to appear to this court that the injunction should be superseded, this court has the authority, in order to maintain the existing status and to preserve the fruits of litigation to an appellant, in aid of its appellate jurisdiction and in the exercise of its discretion, to grant a supersedeas pending the determination of the appeal. State ex rel. Langlie v. Wright, 35 Wn. (2d) 703, 215 P. (2d) 407.

[Writ Denied]

It would appear, therefore, that the relator has a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy by appeal. Consequently, we refrain from passing on the merits of his contentions at this time.

The writ is denied.

Weaver, Chief Justice, Donworth, Foster, and Hunter, Judges, concur.

[¶ 69,397] Moviecolor Limited v. Eastman Kodak Company, Technicolor, Inc., and Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil Action 142-86. Filed June 30, 1959.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Motion to Compel Reply to Answer—Futility of Discovery as Basis for Motion.—Two photographic film companies, in an English corporation's treble damage action charging them with destroying its business by suppressing and sabotaging the use and development of a process of color photography, while promoting, in its stead, other processes over which they had exclusive control, were denied a motion to compel the corporation to reply to their answer. The court had the discretionary power to order the corporation to reply, but most of the companies' statements in support of their motion were conclusory and argumentative and did not measure up to the criteria controlling such motions. A reply to an affirmative defense is not to be utilized as a substitute for discovery and inspection, and should not be ordered unless there is a clear factual showing of necessity or other extraordinary circumstances. In the instant case, it would have been premature to accept the futility of the companies' impending discovery proceedings, although it had been contended that the corporation had no place of business, that most of its papers had been destroyed during World War II, and that the only person with an official position in the corporation, a "liquidator," had no personal knowledge of the facts in the case.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.160.

For the plaintiff: Cooper, Ostrin & DeVarco (Herman E. Cooper, of counsel).

For the defendants: Fulton, Walter & Halley (Hugh Fulton, of counsel), for Technicolor, Inc., and Technicolor Motion Picture Corp.; Donovan, Leisure, Newton & Irvine, and Nixon, Hargrave, Devans & Dey (James R. Withrow, Jr. and Arthur S. Stern, of counsel) for Eastman Kodak Co.

Opinion

[Reply to Answer]

Herlands, District Judge [In full text]:

Whether plaintiff should be ordered to reply to the answer [F. R. C. P. rule 7(a)] is the question posed by defendants' motions. Rule 7(a) confers upon the court the discretionary power to "order a reply to an answer."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Criteria for Ordering Reply]

The criteria for determining whether the court should grant or deny a motion to compel a reply have been described by commentators. Moore's Federal Practice (2d ed.) vol. 2, p. 1508; Note, 5 Fed. Rules Serv. 7a.222 (1942) at pp. 803 ff.

The decisions represent not only pragmatic judgments based on the facts of the particular case but also expressions of adherence to fundamental principles of federal pleading and practice.

[Factual Showing Required]

The courts recognize (1) that there is an essential difference in function between pleadings and pre-trial discovery and inspection; (2) that pleadings should be simple and brief, and should normally be limited to a complaint and an answer; (3) that a reply to an affirmative defense should not be ordered unless there is a clear and convincing factual showing of necessity or other extraordinary circumstances of a compelling nature; (4) that a reply is not to be utilized as a substitute for discovery and inspection [F. R. C. P. rules 26, et seq.] or for a pre-trial hearing [F. R. C. P. rule 16].

[Cases]

In the following cases, a reply to an answer has been ordered: Columbia Pictures Corporation v. Rogers (S. D. West Va. 1949), 81 F. Supp. 580, 584-585; Bankers Bond & Mortgage Co. v. Witherow (E. D. Pa. 1940), 3 Fed. Rules Serv. 7a.222, case 1, p. 44; Mason v. N. Y. Central R. Co. (W. D. N. Y. 1949), 8 F. R. D. 637; Mosher v. Snyder & Swanson, Inc. (W. D. Pa. 1948), 8 F. R. D. 100.

In the following cases, a motion to compel a reply has been denied: Keller-Dorian Colorfilm Corporation v. Eastman Kodak Co. [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,574] (S. D. N. Y. 1950) 10 F. R. D. 39; Maschmeijer v. Ingram [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,845], (S. D. N. Y. 1951) 97 F. Supp. 639; Mission Appliance Corporation v. Ajax Thermostatic Controls Co. (N. D. Ohio 1948) 8 F. R. D. 588; Johnson v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. (M. D. Pa. 1945) 4 F. R. D. 294; Von Mailath v. Order of Daughters of Divine Redeemer (W. D. Pa. 1950) 10 F. R. D. 420; Cramer v. Aluminum Cooking Utensil Co. (W. D. Pa. 1941) 1 F. R. D. 741; Monk v. United Life & Accident Ins. Co. (E. D. Pa. 1942) 2 F. R. D. 372.

With the foregoing decisions as a frame of reference, we turn to a consideration of the facts in the present case.

[Conspiracy Charged]

The action is for treble damages ($75,000,000.) under the antitrust laws. The complaint (filed on January 22, 1959) alleges that plaintiff, an English corporation, was organized in 1929 to manufacture, sell, use and otherwise exploit in all parts of the world, film and other things produced according to or forming part of a method of color photography known as the Keller-Dorian process.

The complaint asserts that defendants, in violation of the antitrust laws, have destroyed plaintiff as a business enterprise by various wrongful acts of combination and conspiracy to restrain and monopolize trade and commerce in the business of color still and color motion picture photography.

The complaint charges that defendants have suppressed and sabotaged use and development of the Keller-Dorian process and promoted in its stead other processes such as the Technicolor process, over which they have been able to exercise exclusive domination and control, and from which they have extracted vast profits. As a result of defendants' allegedly wrongful acts, plaintiff is said to be insolvent today and in the process of being liquidated.

[Answers]

Both answers (served May 14, 1959) contain a general denial and an almost identical set of separate and complete defenses; nineteen in number in the Eastman answer, and eighteen in the Technicolor answer. In addition, there are three separate and partial defenses. All of these defenses are based largely on various statutes of limitations and res judicata.

[Examinations]

In preparation for motions to dismiss on the basis of these defenses, Eastman noticed the examination of plaintiff commencing with its chief executive officer and managing agent.

Plaintiff's counsel opposed the proposed examination on the grounds that plaintiff "has no place of business, no officers, executive, managing agents, employees"; that "most of plaintiff's papers were destroyed by bombing during World War II"; and that plaintiff's liquidator, a Mr. Ortmans, allegedly the "only person presently with an official position" with plaintiff "has no direct personal knowledge of the facts of this case."

In addition to pleading that such examinations would be useless, plaintiff's counsel also asserted that plaintiff was completely insolvent and unable to bear the expense of examinations in New York.

[Priority]

Under such circumstances, plaintiff's counsel urged that plaintiff be accorded priority of examination and defendants be relegated to proceeding with their discovery by written interrogatories.

Judge Sugarman refused to upset the priority established by Eastman's notice of examination and authorized defendants to proceed with the examination of plaintiff commencing with the liquidator, Mr. Ortmans, subject, however, to the proviso that defendants pay Mr. Ortmans' transportation to the United States and reasonable sustenance while he is detained for such examination. See Judge Sugarman's memorandum decision filed April 24, 1959 (attached to the opposing affidavit as Exhibit "B.")

[Discovery—Alleged Futility]

As stated in the opposing affidavit, "all visible signs indicate that defendants are about to embark on extensive efforts at discovery, in which all opportunities available under the Rules will be utilized to the fullest." (See opposing affidavit of Herman E. Cooper, paragraphs "15" to "21," and "26.")

While events may substantiate defendants' fears as to the efficacy of their impending pre-trial discover proceedings, the present factual record is not adequate to warrant this court's departure from the general rule. Most of defendants' statements are conclusory and argumentative; and do not measure up to the criteria controlling the motions at bar. At this time, it would be premature and speculative to accept the futility of defendants' pre-trial discovery proceedings as a working premise.

[Motion Denied]

In view of the foregoing, the defendants' motions are denied but without prejudice to defendants' right to renew, if so advised, upon the completion of all pre-trial discovery proceedings.

This decision constitutes an order.

[¶ 69,398] United States v. Sun Oil Company.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. Civil Action No. 10483. Filed July 1, 1959; as amended October 9, 1959.

Case No. 1010 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Exclusive Dealing—Restrictive Trade Practices—Policy of Requiring Exclusive Dealing—Legality—Sale of Petroleum Products and Automobile Accessories.—An integrated oil company, producing and selling its own brand of gasoline, motor oils, and lubricants and selling a full line of automotive accessories (TBA) which it purchased or received on consignment for resale, violated Section 3 of the Clayton Act by adopting and pursuing a uniform policy and practice of requiring its more than 6,500 independent dealer service stations in eighteen states and the District of Columbia to handle its gasoline exclusively and of requiring such dealers to sell its motor oils, lubricants, and sponsored TBA exclusively. The company did not enter into gasoline supply agreements with dealers who sold a competitive brand of gasoline, and although its supply agreements did not contain provisions requiring the dealers to handle its gasoline exclusively, the dealers did not take on a competitive brand of gasoline. If a dealer took on a competitive brand of gasoline, the company would terminate his supply agreement upon the expiration of the current term. Also, the company refused to enter into a supply agreement with a dealer unless he orally or tacitly agreed to handle only the company's products and sponsored TBA, and it did not permit a dealer to display signs of competitive products. The fact that a dealer may have a few containers of competitive motor oil or several items of competitive TBA displayed was not indicative, in and of itself, that the dealer was free to handle such products in any quantity he desired.

© 1960, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

The provisions of supply agreements with dealers, who were independent contractors, were not the result of negotiation but were determined by the company alone and were imposed upon the dealers as a condition of their doing business with the company. The agreements did not contain express provisions which either prohibited the dealer from buying products from competitors or requiring him to purchase his products exclusively from the company; they did not provide for a price differential depending upon the exclusive handling of the company's products; and there were no clauses providing for penalties or liquidated damages in the event of a default. There were no written agreements with respect to the purchase and sale of TBA by the dealers. Real estate leases, which were executed by dealers who leased a station from the company and who also executed the supply agreement, did not require exclusive dealing.

The court found that the company pursued a continuous uniform policy of requiring its dealers to handle its gasoline exclusively and to force such dealers to discontinue the advertisement, display, and sale of competitive brands of motor oils and TBA as a condition to becoming and remaining dealers of the company, and that the company induced and coerced its dealers to enter into the written agreements supplemented by oral or tacit understandings, having the purpose and effect of requiring them to deal exclusively with the company. The court considered, among other things, the company's policy with respect to "undivided" and "divided" stations, right to cancel and its cancellation of supply agreements, minimum quantity purchase requirement, required ratio between gasoline and motor oil purchases, refunds to dealers on a progressive percentage scale based upon quantity of products purchased, and refusal to allow a new dealer to purchase competitive products carried by the outgoing dealer.

See Exclusive Dealing, Vol. 1, ¶ 4009.100.

Exclusive Dealing—Competitive Effect of Policy of Requiring Exclusive Dealing—Substantial Lessening of Competition.—An integrated oil company, producing and selling its own brand of gasoline, motor oils, and lubricants and selling a full line of automotive accessories (TBA) which it purchased or received on consignment for resale, violated Section 3 of the Clayton Act by adopting and pursuing a uniform policy and practice of requiring its more than 6,500 independent dealer service stations in eighteen states and the District of Columbia to handle its gasoline exclusively and of requiring such dealers to sell its motor oils, lubricants, and sponsored TBA exclusively. The effect of the company's written agreements, supplemented by oral or tacit agreements and understandings, with its dealers, the court held, "may be to substantially lessen competition in the sale of petroleum products and TBA" in the company's marketing area. Specifically, the court found that, as a result of the collective, but not collusive, policy and practices of the company and its major competitive suppliers of gasoline, others, unless they have the capital to establish their own stations, are denied the opportunity of selling gasoline in the company's market area, and the sale of competitive brands of gasoline has been almost completely eliminated at over 6,500 independent dealer stations selling the company's gasoline; that, as a result of the company's policy and practices, the sale of competitive motor oil and lubricants has been virtually eliminated and the sale of TBA not sponsored by the company has been substantially eliminated from over 6,500 stations selling the company's gasoline; and that, as a result of the company's policy and practices, the company's dealers are being prevented from handling competitive petroleum products and TBA at their stations, and competitive suppliers are being foreclosed or prevented from selling these products to over 6,500 dealers of the company.

In the area served by the company, there were 91,382 service station dealers, involving 68 brands of gasoline, and the company ranked fifth in the number of outlets. The company was not one of the dominant or leading marketers throughout the country; however, it was, as an established competitor, one of the nation's major marketers in the area it served. In terms of invested capital and domestic net income among the twenty largest oil companies, the company ranked twelfth, and its sales of gasoline were approximately 3.48 per cent of the total motor fuel consumption in the United States and approximately 8.42 per cent of the total in its market area. Its profits, although large, had not differed substantially from those of many of its competitors, and its marketing area was substantially smaller than that of many of its integrated competitors. It had not grown as rapidly as other companies, and its annual sales of all products to its dealers amounted to $155,780,774. Also, the number of independent service stations with which it had business dealings constituted a substantial part of the market for the retail sale of petroleum products and TBA, and the volume of its sales of such products was substantial. The qualifying clause of Section 3 of the Act is satisfied by proof that competition has been foreclosed in a substantial share of the line of commerce affected.

See Exclusive Dealing, Vol. 1, ¶ 4007.275, 4007.400.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Injunctive Decrees—Exclusive Dealing.—Upon finding that an integrated oil company violated Section 3 of the Clayton Act by adopting and pursuing a uniform policy of requiring its dealers to handle its gasoline, motor oils, lubricants, and sponsored TBA exclusively and that there was a likelihood that the company would continue such a policy, a court ruled that the Government was entitled to a decree prohibiting the company from inducing, coercing, and compelling independent service station operators with whom it does business to enter into and operate under written contracts, supplemented by oral and tacit agreements and understandings requiring them to purchase petroleum products and TBA for resale exclusively from the company.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8233.750.

For the plaintiff: Harold K. Wood, United States Attorney, Philadelphia, Pa.; Fred D. Turnage, Trial Attorney, Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.; and Larry L. Williams, William T. Collins, Victor R. Hansen, and Worth Rowley, Department of Justice, Washington, D. C., of counsel.

For the defendant: Philip H. Strubing, Trial Attorney, Philadelphia, Pa.; and John G. Bartol, Jr., Robert E. Jones, Samuel K. White, Richard L. Freeman, James Alan Montgomery, Jr., Henry A. Frye, and Rawle & Henderson, Philadelphia, Pa., of counsel.

For prior opinions of the U. S. District Court, Eastern District of Pennsylvania, see 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 67,930 and 1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,684.

Opinion

[Nature of Action]

GANEY, Chief Judge [In full text]: This is an action brought by the United States to enjoin the defendant Sun Oil Company from conducting its business allegedly in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 1, and § 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 14.

The complaint charges that for more than a quarter of a century the defendant has been unreasonably restraining interstate commerce and substantially lessening competition in a line of commerce by excluding its competitors from access to a substantial part of the market for petroleum products and automotive accessories in its marketing area. This has been and still is being accomplished, the complaint states, by defendant's inducing and coercing independent automotive service station operators to enter and operate under contracts, supplemented by agreements and understandings, having the purpose, intent and effect of requiring them to purchase petroleum products and automotive accessories exclusively from it, and to refrain from purchasing these products from its competitors. Defendant is not charged with acting in concert with any other supplier of one or more of those products; nor does the evidence adduced show that it has done so.

From the evidence presented to it, the court makes the following

Findings of Facts

[Defendant's Business]

1. Defendant Sun Oil Company, hereinafter called "Sun," is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of New Jersey. It transacts and has its principal place of business at 1608 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, within the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. Sun is known to the motoring public as "Sunoco."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

2. Sun is engaged in the business of producing, transporting, refining and marketing crude oil and petroleum products. It obtains and purchases crude oil in the principal oil producing fields of the United States and transports it to refineries owned by it at Marcus Hook, Pa., and at Toledo, Ohio. Among the principal petroleum products manufactured at these refineries are a single grade of gasoline, sold under the name "Blue Sunoco" (and for a time as "Sunoco Dynafuel"), motor oil sold under the trade names "Sunoco Mercury Made" (classified as a regular grade oil) and "Dynalube" (classified as a premium motor oil), and other automotive lubricants.[1] Sun transports, distributes and sells all of these products to over 6500 independent service station operators in the Sun marketing area. It markets petroleum products under the trade name "Sunoco." In order that its gasoline may be readily identified by the public, Sun colors it blue, and uses the color scheme of blue, white and yellow on its containers, dispensing equipment, signs and advertising matter, and service stations at which its gasoline is sold. It has adopted the symbols of the diamond superimposed upon an arrow as its identifying mark.

3. Sun also sells a full line of automotive accessories, which, with a few exceptions, it purchases or receives on consignment from other suppliers. These accessories include equipment items and replacement parts which are capable of being installed or applied on automotive vehicles at a service station without major mechanical operations, such as tires, batteries, spark plugs, oil filters, fan belts, automobile polishes, waxes, lamp bulbs, seat covers, and antifreeze preparations. For convenience they are referred to as "TBA" or "tires, batteries and accessories." The line of TBA which Sun purchases from manufacturers and distributors located in various states is also transported, distributed and sold by it in interstate commerce to more than 6,500 independent service station operators in Sun's marketing area. The manufacturers which supply Sun with TBA items do not sell their products directly to Sun dealers.

4. Some of the principal TBA products which Sun purchases for resale to its dealers include: Kelly tires, from Kelly-Springfield Tire Co., Cumberland, Maryland; Sunoco batteries, from Globe-Union Inc., Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Fram oil filters, from Fram Corporation, East Providence, Rhode Island; and Champion spark plugs, from Champion Spark Plug Company, Toledo, Ohio; Zerone and Zerex anti-freeze, from E. I. duPont deNemours & Company, Wilmington, Delaware; Westinghouse sealed beam lights and miniature lamps from Westinghouse Electric Corporation, Philadelphia, Pa.

5. Sun itself operates approximately only forty service stations throughout its marketing area. These stations, of course, sell Sun products exclusively and only the line of TBA sponsored by Sun. The attendants at these company-owned and operated stations, which are also used for training new Sun dealers, are employees or agents of Sun.

[Marketing Regions]

6. For sales purposes, Sun had divided its marketing area, involving eighteen states and the District of Columbia, into six regions, roughly as follows:

(a) Middle Atlantic Region—comprising eastern Pennsylvania, the larger portion of New Jersey, a small portion of New York, and all of Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia;

(b) New York Region—comprising practically all of New York, and small portions of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Connecticut, Massachusetts and Vermont;

(c) New England Region—comprising the New England States excepting those portions included in the New York Region;

(d) Central Region—comprising western Pennsylvania, eastern Ohio, West Virginia, and a small part of western New York;

(e) Western Region—comprising Michigan, eastern Indiana, western Ohio and northern Kentucky; and

(f) Southeastern Region—composed of portions of Florida.

These regions are further subdivided into sixty-four districts and in some instances into branches within the district. The boundaries of a district do not necessarily follow state lines. Each district contains a district office, a warehouse or warehouses and distribution facilities.

[1] It also sells and distributes furnace oils to consumers.

[Sales Personnel]

7. Sun's hierarchy of sales personnel in the market area is as follows:

(a) At the top is the executive officer who is in charge of Sun's marketing organization. At present his title is vice president in charge of sales. He is assisted by a general sales manager, formerly called a coordinator of sales, who sometimes acts for the vice president in charge of sales in dealing with marketing activities;

(b) In charge of each regional office is a regional manager who is the "executive officer" of his region, and as such supervises Sun's marketing operations in that region. Assisting the regional manager is an assistant regional manager, a regional TBA manager and other sales personnel. Generally, company marketing policy is determined at meetings of regional managers and is put into effect by the regional managers in their respective regions through a chain of command from regional to district managers, to salesmen. Since 1939, the regional manager has been responsible for the execution of real estate leases with dealers. He is the final arbiter in determining whether Sun will do business with a dealer.

(c) In charge of each district is a district manager who is the executive officer of his district. He is sometimes assisted by a motor products sales manager. Each district manager has authority to execute and terminate supply agreements with dealers but sometimes he is required to obtain the approval of the regional manager.

(d) Each district has a number of motor products salesmen who regularly call on an assigned group of dealers to sell them Sun's products and sponsored TBA and to convey to them company policy. Salesmen are selected, hired, trained and discharged by the district manager with the approval of the regional manager. These salesmen receive instructions and directions principally from their respective district managers and/or district motor products sales managers at weekly sales meetings and in individual conferences with such superiors. They assist in the selecting and contacting of new dealers and sometimes participate in the cancellation of agreements with dealers. Pursuant to instructions, they relate to dealers the quota of motor oil and TBA they should purchase. In addition to their regular salary, they receive a commission if the stations assigned to them obtain a certain ratio of the purchase of oil and gasoline. Sometimes their tenure of employment has been dependent in part upon the dealers maintaining such quotas.

(e) Most of the regional offices, from time to time, also employ "Inspectors" to obtain information concerning the operation and physical condition of the stations selling Sun's products. The information sought is for the purpose of aiding Sun in determining whether the stations' sales approach their potential, and Sun's salesmen are using their best efforts to sell Sun's products and sponsored TBA.

[Distribution of Products]

8. The main conduits through which petroleum products and TBA are distributed and sold to the consumer are the retail service stations located at sites adjacent to heavily traveled highways.[2] Suppliers maintain the bulk of the stock required for supplying the needs of the consumer because of the space limitations at service stations. The operators of the stations render a specialized service which is essential to drivers of automotive vehicles.

9. Almost all gasoline and motor oil, and many items of TBA, are offered for sale under brand names. As a group, the consuming public has no definite knowledge of the quality of the petroleum products which it buys repeatedly in small quantities. It buys a particular branded product by reason of its preference for the brand based upon past experience, the reputation of the supplier, the honesty and good will of the dealer, or because of the convenient location of the station. Suppliers strive mightily to establish a public attachment to their individual brand. To this end Sun spends a large sum of money to advertise its products. For example, in 1954 it spent close to

[2] The term station, as used herein, includes a drive-in filling station, garage, car dealership or other retail outlet for the sale of gasoline, lubricants and, in most cases, tires, batteries and automotive accessories to the motoring public.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

six million dollars on various advertising media. The name "Sunoco" is well known to the motoring public in Sun's marketing area.

10. The principal product and big attraction at most service stations is gasoline, a virtual consumer necessity. It accounts for the largest part by far of the business of both Sun and its dealers in terms of dollars. Close to 90% of the gross intake of the average dealer is accounted for by the sale of gasoline.[3] Other products, such as motor oils, lubricants and TBA, although important, are secondary as far as drawing customers is concerned. For example, in 1949, Sun's sales were as follows:

a. Gasoline	$149,000,000	(88.7%)
b. Motor oils and lubricants	9,500,000	(5.3%)
c. TBA	9,750,000	(6.0%)

11. Gasoline, because of its highly volatile and flammable nature, is not purchased in large quantities in advance of use and stored away until needed by the average motorist, as is coal or furnace oil. Presently, the only practicable way of buying gasoline for automotive purposes is at conveniently located service stations where it may be pumped into the vehicle from the tank at the time of purchase. It would follow that the prevention of the sale of a competitive brand of gasoline at service stations—Sun and all others included—in a particular retail market area by suppliers of established brands of gasoline, would in effect amount to foreclosing the sale of the competitive brand in that area, unless the owner of the brand has the resources to purchase his own retail outlets.

12. Motor oils, lubricants and TBA are, of course, not in the same class as gasoline. They may be purchased far in advance of use at the neighborhood shop and stored away until needed. However, because the time of need cannot always be anticipated, and dirty hands and soiled clothes usually eventuate from pouring oil into a combustion engine, draining a crankcase, installing or replacing a TBA item, the motoring public prefers to purchase those products, when the need arises, at the many conveniently located service stations where immediate service accompanies the purchase of the product. Lacking such service, auto accessory, hardware or department stores are not places as suitable as the service station to purchase those products. Therefore to restrict the sale of competitive motor oils, lubricants and TBA at all service stations in a market area is, as can be readily seen, tantamount to a foreclosure of the sale of competitive products in that area.

13. Displaying a product and advertising it at service stations facilitates its sale. Hence, inconspicuous, undisplayed and nonadvertised products cannot be effectively sold at such stations. Compelling the removal of signs displaying the fact that a particularly branded product is for sale at a dealer's station at least retards its sale, since motorists will not, as a rule, drive from station to station for the purpose of inquiring whether the brand of motor oil or TBA of their preference is being sold on the premises.[4]

14. The mere fact that a Sun dealer may have a few containers of motor oil not of Sun brand or several items of competitive TBA openly displayed either from left-over stock or because of token purchases to satisfy the brand preference of a few customers is not indicative in and of itself that the dealer is free to handle such products in any quantity he chooses.

[Brand Change Over]

15. The changing over from one brand of petroleum products to another by a dealer subjects him to an economic hardship and even to the risk of a business failure. To begin with, the major suppliers of petroleum products scrupulously respect the contractual arrangements of their competitors and will not supply a dealer with its brand of products unless it is certain that the full term of a previous supply contract has been legally terminated. And the dealer will not always be able to obtain the brand of petroleum products of his choice for his

[3] In his dissenting opinion in the Standard Stations case [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,432], 337 U. S. 293, 321 (1949) , Mr. Justice Jackson said at p. 323: "No retailer can long remain in business if he does not always, and not just intermittently, have gas to sell."

[4] A competing supplier of motor oil summed it up this way: "Well, to sell Quaker State Oil at a station without putting a sign out, you simply might as well not sell oil . . . you can't stop at every station to see if they have Quaker State. By then you would run out of gas."

station may not fit into the distribution plan of the supplier. Even when a new supplier is secured a time lag between the removal of Sun's dispensing equipment and signs and the installation of the new and the repainting of the station inevitably takes place. Moreover it takes time before all the motorists in the locality who have a preference for the newly installed brand of gasoline become acquainted with the fact that it is being sold at the location. And there is always the chance that the new brand of gasoline and motor oil will not attract customers as well as the former brand did. Consequently the supplier's threat of cancellation of a supply agreement is not lightly received by a dealer, and he will usually hesitate before accepting an ultimatum to discontinue an established business under the banner of a proven profitable product.

["Undivided" and "Divided" Stations]

16. An "undivided" station is a station where the petroleum products or the gasoline of a single supplier are sold, in contrast to the "divided" or "split" station where the gasoline of more than one supplier is sold. An exclusive or 100% outlet is a station where the products of a single supplier are sold.

17. In the wholesale distribution of branded gasoline and related branded petroleum products and TBA, it has become the almost universal practice in the industry in Sun's marketing area for suppliers of gasoline to compete for strategically located outlets which will sell their brand of gasoline exclusively.[5] Over 99% of branded gasoline purchased by the motoring public in Sun's marketing area is done at "undivided" retail stations which are identified as being stations selling the products of its particular supplier. By contrast wholesalers and jobbers of motor oils and/or TBA seek to distribute their products to all dealers even though they sell competitive products. The market areas of Sun's competitors are not necessarily co-extensive with that of Sun's; they embrace only those dealers, of which Sun dealers are but a segment, within the profitable reach of their supplies.

18. According to a station census taken by Sun in 1954, there were only 422 undivided stations out of more than 90,000 stations canvassed. The practice of dealing primarily with the divided stations is not restricted to the major oil companies alone. Southern States, a small cooperative, served no divided accounts in its chain of 25 outlets within Sun's marketing area; Jenney has one divided out of 497 stations; Sterling (Quaker State) served 47 divided to 487 undivided; Kendall has 61 as against 389; and Pennzol's stations numbered 13 and 507. Even new competitors seek to establish their own outlets, either by erecting new stations or by winning existing wholesale distributors or retail dealers from other suppliers.

19. Benzol Stations, Inc., with offices in Dearborn, Michigan, is the only supplier that follows the practice of selling its gasoline "Benzol" through undivided stations alone in Sun's marketing area; it does not own or lease service stations. Benzol gasoline is a premium or specialty gasoline which sells at a price higher per gallon than Sunoco gasoline. In the decade preceding the trial of this action, Benzol has lost ground to its competitors. For the total number of outlets in the territory in which it is sold in and about Detroit, Michigan, dropped from 355 to 286, and a dealer selling 3,000 gallons of Benzol gasoline per month is considered a large customer of Benzol Stations, Inc. In 1955, there were twenty-four undivided stations selling Benzol gasoline side by side with Sunoco, a drop of fifty-three since 1945.[6]

[Competitive Position in Market]

20. As of 1954, in the area served by Sun there were 91,382 service station dealers involving 68 brands of gasoline. Some of these outlets were part of chains ranging from 2 to 9,717 stations. In the group, Sun ranked fifth with 6,703 outlets. A partial list of the oil companies and their outlets at this time is as follows:

[5] As Mr. Justice Jackson put it in his dissenting opinion in the Standard Stations case [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,432], 337 U. S. 293, 321 (1949) at p. 323: "The retail stations, whether independent or company-owned, are the instrumentalities through which competition for the ultimate market is waged."

[6] Elmer J. Blaisdell, vice president of Benzol Stations, Inc., was the only person to appear on the witness stand at the trial of this action to complain of the difficulty or inability of a supplier of gasoline to obtain outlets already selling the gasoline of another supplier to take on an additional brand of gasoline.

© 1960, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

	Oil Company	No. of Stations	No. of Sun Districts in which Stations are located
1	Gulf	9,717	64
2	Esso	9,489	48
3	Mobilgas	9,173	34
4	Texaco	8,326	64
5	Sunoco	6,703	64
6	American	5,858	54
7	Sinclair	5,646	55
8	Atlantic	5,539	48
9	Shell	5,112	55
10	Tidewater	3,557	44
11	Cities Service	3,126	63
12	Pure	2,894	23
13	Standard of Ohio	2,819	11

21. Sun is not one of the dominant or leading marketers of gasoline, lubricants and TBA throughout the country. As an established competitor, it is, however, one of the nation's major marketers of such products in the market area it serves. In terms of invested capital and domestic net income among the twenty largest oil companies, Sun ranked twelfth as of the year 1954,[7] the last year for which statistics were available. In the same year its sales of branded gasoline were approximately 3.48% of the total motor fuel consumption in the United States and approximately 8.42% of the total in Sun's market area. Sun's profits, although large, have not differed substantially from those of many of its competing oil companies, and its marketing area is substantially smaller than that of many of its integrated competitors. In addition it has not grown as rapidly as Gulf, Shell, Phillips and Skelly.

22. Sun's annual sales, in terms of dollar value, of gasoline, motor oils and lubricants, and TBA to its dealers for the years 1945 to 1948 inclusive, were:

1945	$ 55,236,126
1946	89,948,046
1947	122,719,392
1948	155,780,774

23. The number (over 6,500) of independent service stations with which Sun has business dealings constitutes a substantial part of the market for the retail sale of petroleum products and TBA, and the volume of Sun's sales of these products is substantial.

[Exclusive Franchises]

24. Sun depends upon fewer dealers than are used by its major competitors to sell the same quantity of gasoline. This is so because Sun operates under the "franchise" plan of distribution whereby it does business with a dealer only if the station will not compete to an appreciable degree with another Sun dealer in the immediate adjoining area. In return for the privilege of being the sole marketer of Sun's products in what amounts to an exclusive territory, Sun expects the dealer to devote his entire efforts to selling Sun's products, or at least to give a "well-rounded performance"; that is, to sell Sunoco gasoline exclusively and a "reasonable" amount of its motor oils and sponsored TBA. The giving of an "exclusive franchise" is not expressed or implied in the written dealer agreement forms, but is one of the understandings had with the dealer at the time he enters into business relations with Sun.[8] Should the dealer refuse to operate his station according to Sun's expectations, Sun will seek to replace him with another dealer in the locality or cease to supply him with petroleum products as soon as the contractual relationship, as expressed in a supply agreement, will permit it to do so.

[7] In 1946 it ranked 15th.

[8] In answer to a letter of a Sun Oil Company stockholder who complained of Sun's policy in the New York City area, the vice president of Sun wrote on July 19, 1948:

"We would like to explain . . . that it is the policy of the Sun Oil Company not to establish duplication of outlets in the various areas in which we do business. Thus the dealer who handles our products in any one location is our sole representative, and if he does not actively press the sale of our products we have no other outlet to supplement his efforts. It is, therefore, essential that every one of our dealers be an enthusiastic proponent of Sunoco policies and products.

"We believe that in offering to a dealer a franchise to be the sole marketer of our products in a limited market area gives him the opportunity to wholeheartedly develop business for our products, without the fear that he is building up patronage for Sunoco products that may drift to another Sunoco dealer across the street."

Almost identical explanations were given by Sun to the Secretary of the Marketing Committee in a letter dated April 1, 1935, and to the Department of Justice in a communication dated September 24, 1941. (Exhibits G-289 and G-225, respectively.)

[Turnovers in Stations]

25. Although the total of Sun's stations may remain relatively constant over a period of time it does not mean that there are few turnovers in stations during the passing of that period of time. During a year's time, for example, Sun may lose a certain number of dealers and gain a similar number and thus end up with more or less the same total as it had at the end of the previous year. In 1954 Sun lost 326 stations and gained 143 new ones, for a net loss of 183. Not all losses of dealers are the result of direct competition, but may come about because the stations do not measure up to Sun's requirements. Over the years Sun has entered into supply agreements with more than 40,000 different dealers.

[Types of Stations]

26. Sun's dealers may be classified under either of two types: "A" or "AA." The "A" dealers are those who either own their stations or lease them from someone other than Sun. While the "AA" dealers (sometimes referred to as "operators or lessee dealers") are those who lease the station from Sun. Included in the latter type are the "lease and release" dealers who own their service stations but lease them to Sun which in turn releases them back to such dealers. These dealers, both "A" and "AA", are not employees or agents of Sun, but are independent contractors.

["Dealer's Agreement"]

27. Before a dealer may obtain Sun's products, he must sign a standard form supply contract designated as a "Dealer's Agreement." Taking into account the wide discrepancy in bargaining power between Sun and its dealers, the provisions of the supply contract are not the result of negotiation but are determined by Sun alone and are imposed upon the dealers as a condition of their doing business with Sun.

28. The pertinent provisions of the supply agreement ("Dealer's Agreement") are as follows:

(a) The duration of the agreement runs for a certain term, usually for one year, and then from year to year unless either party shall give the other sixty days' written notice of termination prior to the expiration of the initial term or yearly extension thereof;

(b) Sun agrees to loan the dealer the necessary equipment for the purpose of storing, advertising and dispensing Sunoco products;

(c) All equipment and signs loaned to the dealer by Sun are to remain the property of Sun. The dealer is to use such equipment only for the purpose of storing, advertising, selling and dispensing Sunoco products. Any equipment of the dealer not loaned by Sun and used by him during the term of the agreement for the storage, selling and dispensing of Sunoco products, is to be labeled and identified by the dealer with the appropriate trademark or trade name of Sun's products and decorated in the manner and colors adopted by Sun; and when the use of such equipment is discontinued, the dealer is to remove Sun's trademark or trade name and to redecorate the equipment with colors other than those used by Sun;

(d) The dealer is to operate under his own name all business conducted upon the premises, and is to display prominently at all times the name of the dealer. As proprietor and operator of the business, the dealer agrees not to represent in any manner his business as an agency of Sun, or that the dealer is an agent of Sun;

(e) During each calendar month of the agreement the dealer will buy not less than 75% of the number of gallons of Sunoco gasoline delivered by Sun to the premises during the corresponding calendar month of the preceding calendar year, and Sun in turn is not obligated to sell more than 125% of the number of gallons of gasoline delivered by it to the premises during the same period;

(f) During each month the dealer is to buy from Sun and Sun is obligated to sell to the dealer at least one gallon of motor oil for every sixty-five gallons of Sunoco gasoline, based upon the minimum set forth in paragraph (e) above. For the purpose of determining whether the ratio has been attained, eight pounds of lubricants is considered the equivalent of one gallon of motor oil;

(g) In those areas wherein Sun utilizes its Fair Trade Agreements, the dealer is not to sell Sunoco motor fuel except at prices stipulated by Sun;

(h) All trade-marked or branded Sunoco products purchased by the dealer or delivered to his station by Sun are to be sold by him as the respective trade-marked or branded Sunoco products, and he is prohibited from adulterating, mixing or blending such products with other substances before their delivery to the consumer. Sun has the right to enter upon the premises at any time for the purpose of inspecting any equipment used for storing or dispensing Sunoco products to test and take samples of Sunoco products offered for sale on the premises, and to make any repairs to any of Sun's equipment or signs it deems advisable;

© 1960, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

(i) Sun has the right, upon twenty-four hours' written notice to the dealer to cancel[9] the agreement if during the term or any extension thereof, the dealer shall abandon his business, or assign the agreement without Sun's consent, or be evicted by reason of a default under any lease of the premises, or shall substitute any products for those of Sun's, or shall mix, blend or adulterate any of Sun's trade-marked or branded products by or with any other substances before delivery to the consumer, or if attachment, execution or like process shall be made or issued against the dealer; if during any two calendar months within any twelve-month period of the term of the agreement the dealer fails or refuses to purchase the minimum quantities of Sun petroleum products, or Sun fails to supply the dealer with the contractual maximum, the party not in default has a right to cancel the agreement on giving written notice to the other.

[No Expressed Restrictions]

29. The supply agreements do not contain express provisions which either prohibit the dealer from buying products from Sun's competitors or require him to purchase his products exclusively from Sun; they do not provide for a price differential depending upon the exclusive handling of Sun's products; nor are there any clauses providing for penalties or liquidated damages in the event of a default. The agreement form is also silent regarding the purchase and sale of TBA, for Sun does not use, and never has used, written agreements in connection with the sale of TBA to dealers.

[Prices]

30. The wholesale prices for Sun's petroleum products and TBA also do not appear in the supply agreement for the cost of gasoline to the dealer is governed by Sun's official posted tankwagon or wholesale prices at its bulk plants at time and place of delivery, and the cost of motor oils, lubricants and TBA are set forth in price lists for those products. Subject only to the restraining influence of supply and demand and/or what competitors are charging for the same or similar products, these prices are set and revised by Sun according to its own discretion. With certain exceptions, prices for these products in particular geographical areas tend to be the same.

[Minimum Quantity Clause]

31. Oral or tacit agreements and understandings aside, if the dealer's monthly purchases of gasoline in any one calendar year remain the same as or are greater than the corresponding monthly purchase of the previous calendar year, the minimum quantity clause of the supply agreement will require him to buy 75% or less of his gasoline requirements. If on the other hand his monthly purchases of gasoline in any one year drop, the minimum quantity clause approaches a full requirement clause as the decrease approaches 25% of the corresponding monthly purchases of the previous year, and the clause goes beyond a full requirement clause if the decrease is greater than 25%.

32. Statistics reveal that sales of motor oil in ratio to gasoline increase when all stations, including car dealerships, garages and auto repair shops, which normally sell substantially more oil in relation to gasoline than service stations, are considered. But even if such sales are taken into account, the average gallon consumption ratio of motor oil and lubricants to gasoline in Sun's marketing area is less than the ratio of 1:65 (or 1.54% of the volume of gasoline) set forth in the supply agreements. And despite the fact that less oil is consumed in relation to gasoline during the fall-winter months than during the spring-summer months, the minimum monthly quantity clause requires the dealers to maintain the constant ratio of 1:65 on a monthly basis the year around without regard to seasons or the locale of the dealers. Moreover, since the ratio is made dependent upon the volume of gasoline delivered to the premises during the previous year, the minimum monthly quantity clause is or approaches a total requirement clause if the dealer's present purchases of Sunoco motor oil are equal to or less than the ratio of one gallon of motor oil for every sixty-five gallons of gasoline purchased in the corresponding month of the previous year. It is difficult or almost impossible for the dealer of the average service station to attain a Sunoco ratio of 1:65 if he sells competitive motor oils in fair amounts along with Sunoco motor oils.[10]

[9] The term "cancel" does not always appear in the printed agreement. It is used in the findings as meaning termination during the contract period in contrast to the term "termination" or the refusal to renew by giving the required notice prior to the expiration of the contract period.

["Real Estate Agreement"]

33. Each "AA" dealer must execute a lease designated as a "Real Estate Agreement." The lease relates only to the real estate, and its duration is coextensive with that of the supply agreement. It requires the dealer to make certain improvements when necessary, and, while the record discloses no exercise of the provision, and in most instances the word "none" was typed in the lease, the potential nevertheless obtained. The lease automatically terminates if the dealer should abandon the premises, become bankrupt or insolvent, or if any receivership or assignment for the benefit of his creditors be made. It gives Sun the option of cancelling the lease in the event of the non-payment of rent, or if attachment, execution or like process be issued against the dealer. It does not require exclusive dealing with Sun and no penalties are provided if the dealer chooses to handle products of Sun's competitors.

34. At the time the "AA" dealer executes the lease, he must also enter into a supply agreement with Sun. With certain omissions and slight modifications, the supply agreement is the same as that used by Sun with its "A" dealers. Prior to 1937, the supply agreement and the lease were combined in one written instrument.

35. Sun employs two types of financing arrangements, an "Improvement Lease" and a "Mutual Option Agreement", which enable "A" dealers, through the lease and release device, to construct new stations or to improve their existing ones.

(a) Improvement Lease. Pursuant to this arrangement a dealer who desires to construct a modern station, but lacks ready capital for that purpose, borrows money from a local bank and secures this loan by leasing his station to Sun in return for a monthly rental sufficient to amortize the loan over a period of years and by assigning the right to receive the rent to the bank. Sun in turn will release the station to the dealer on a yearly term at a rental slightly in excess of the monthly rental Sun agreed to pay the dealer.

(b) Mutual Option Agreement [and] Bailment Option Agreement. Pursuant to this agreement Sun pays a substantial consideration either in money or improvements in return for an option under which Sun acquires the right to lease the station for a number of years at a previously agreed monthly rental. The dealer is also given the option to require Sun to lease the station from him for the same period at the rental. The mutual option agreement and the bailment option agreement provided that Sun shall have the right, upon giving thirty days' notice, to remove the dealer and take over the operation of the station, and the dealer, likewise, has the privilege of revocation after thirty days.

[Termination of Lease]

36. When Sun cancels or terminates a lease and supply agreement with an "AA" dealer, it selects the new operator and prescribes the products he is permitted to purchase from the inventory of the outgoing operator. Sun will not allow him to purchase the competitive products, and the outgoing operator is left to dispose of the remaining inventory as best he can, usually at a loss.

[Refunds]

37. As has been its practice for many years, Sun offers refunds to dealers on a progressive percentage scale based upon the quantity of Sun's motor oils, automotive lubricants and dollar volume of Sun's sponsored TBA, and also on a ratio basis on every gallon of motor oil or certain dollar volume of TBA to a certain quantity of gasoline purchased during a contractual year. For the purpose of determining the refunds on oil purchases, eight pounds of lubricants is considered the equivalent of one gallon of motor oil. The refunds are not conditioned

[10] Sun's vice president admitted that the ratio figures were designed to cover at least 75% of the dealers' needs of motor oil. He further testified that they were intended "to impose upon the dealer a responsibility for the selling of a reasonable amount of oil compared with the amount of gasoline he was supposed to sell." And according to Sun's calculations, in 1955 Sun dealers were contractually bound to purchase 18.1 million gallons of motor oil as against their "computed requirements" of 19.3 million gallons. Hence by Sun's own figures, its dealers were contractually obligated to purchase 93.8% of their requirement of motor oil from Sun.

© 1960, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

upon exclusive dealings in Sun's products. The ostensible purpose of allowing these refunds is to offer an inducement to the dealers to sell more of Sun's motor oils, lubricants and sponsored TBA. However, it must not be overlooked that the purpose of such refunds is to encourage the dealers to look to Sun as a central source of supply both for petroleum products and TBA.

38. Effective October 1, 1950, Sun's schedule of motor oils and lubricant prices for dealers listed:

(a) a quantity refunded for purchases of gallons of motor oils as follows:

1 to 899	none
900 to 1199	2.0¢ per gal.
1200 to 1499	2.5¢ " "
1500 to 1999	3.0¢ " "
2000 to 2499	3.5¢ " "
2500 to 3499	4.0¢ " "
3500 to 4499	4.5¢ " "
4500 or over	5.0¢ " "

(b) a ratio refund of 1¢ for every gallon of motor oil if the dealer attained a purchase ratio of one gallon of motor oil for every sixty-five gallons of gasoline.

39. Effective July 5, 1949, Sun's dealer price schedule for TBA provided:

Quantity Refund

A refund in accordance with the following rates and based on the annual total net invoiced dollar value of following merchandise purchased and paid for by Dealer while this price schedule remains in effect, shall be paid to Dealer by Company each time the Dealer's Agreement between Company and Dealer has an anniversary of its commencement.

. . .

Refund For Contract Year Payable At Following Rates:

$1,500 to $1,999	1%
2,000 to 2,999	2%
3,000 to 3,999	3%
4,000 to 4,999	4%
5,000 to 5,999	5%
6,000 to 6,999	6%
7,000 to 7,999	7%
8,000 and over	8%

Ratio Refund

. . .

Ratio per 1,000 Gallons [of Sun gasoline]	Refund
$20.00 to $29.99	1%
30.00 and over	2%

Because of Fair Trade or Franchise Agreements between Sun and the manufacturer, the dealer is not permitted by Sun to include certain items of TBA in computing the total amount of purchase for refund purposes. The price schedule indicates the cost price of which items the dealer may take into account in determining the dollar volume of TBA purchased for refund purposes.

[Sales Policies]

40. With the exception of undivided stations in the Detroit, Michigan, area, which sell Benzol gasoline along with Blue Sunoco, it is the policy and settled practice of Sun not to enter into supply agreements with dealers who sell a competitive brand of gasoline. And although its supply agreements do not contain provisions requiring the dealers to handle Sunoco products exclusively, the dealers do not take on a competitive brand of gasoline. None of Sun's major competitors will sell their gasoline to a dealer who has an outstanding supply agreement with Sun. If a dealer should perchance take on a competitive brand of gasoline after signing up with it, Sun will give timely notice of its desire to terminate the agreement upon the expiration of the current term, and will not renew the supply agreement, if at all, with that dealer unless he foregoes selling the competitive brand of gasoline. Therefore Sun's marketing practice with respect to gasoline does not foreclose all its competitors from selling their brand of gasoline at Sun's independent dealer stations for such competitors choose not to sell to Sun dealers.

41. It is also Sun's policy to require dealers selling Sunoco gasoline to sell Sun's motor oils, lubricants and sponsored TBA exclusively. To this end it refuses to enter into a supply agreement with a dealer unless he orally or tacitly agrees to handle only Sun's products and sponsored TBA. It does not permit the dealer to display signs of competitive products on the premises of the service station. Sun admits, at least, that about 12% of its dealers sell Sun products to the exclusion of others. However, those dealers who do sell competitive motor oils, lubricants and TBA do not do so openly, but store them in inconspicuous places, in most instances hidden from view, to await final disposal. They do not stock competitive products in visibly appreciable quantities.

42. A consumer demand for competitive motor oils and TBA exists in Sun's marketing area, and even though Sun widely advertises as a fact that the combined use of Sunoco gasoline and motor oil makes for better and less costly operation of an automotive vehicle, an appreciable number of motorists who have a preference for and purchase Sunoco gasoline also prefer, and even demand, competitive motor oil and items of TBA not sponsored by Sun. With some exceptions, Sun dealers are willing to stock and sell these competitive products in order to satisfy this customer preference and demand, provided they are not required to relinquish the selling of Sunoco gasoline to do so.

43. Sun has pursued and is pursuing a continuous uniform policy and course of conduct throughout its marketing area of requiring its independent dealers to handle its gasoline exclusively and to force these dealers to discontinue the advertisement, display and sale of competitive brands of motor oils and TBA as a condition to becoming and remaining Sun dealers.

44. Sun has induced and coerced its independent service station dealers to enter into written contracts supplemented by oral or tacit agreements and understandings, having the purpose, intent and effect of requiring them to purchase its petroleum products and TBA exclusively, and to refrain from selling, advertising or displaying these products at their stations.

[Results and Effects]

45. As a direct result of the collective, although not collusive, policy and practices of Sun and its major competitive suppliers of gasoline, others, unless they have the capital to establish their own stations, are denied the opportunity of selling gasoline in Sun's market area, and the sale of competitive brands of gasoline has been almost completely eliminated at over 6,500 independent dealer stations selling Sunoco gasoline.

46. As a direct result of Sun's policy and practices, the sale of competitive motor oil and lubricants has been virtually eliminated, and the sale of TBA not sponsored by Sun has been substantially eliminated from over 6,500 independent dealer service stations selling Sunoco gasoline.

47. As a direct result of Sun's policy and practices, Sun dealers are being prevented from handling competitive petroleum products and TBA at their stations, and competitive suppliers are being foreclosed or prevented from selling these products to over 6,500 independent Sun dealers.

48. The effect of Sun's written contracts, supplemented by the oral tacit agreements and understandings, with its dealers may be to substantially lessen competition in the sale of petroleum products and TBA in Sun's marketing area.

49. Unless Sun is enjoined by this Court there is a likelihood that Sun will continue its policy and practices regarding the sale of competitive petroleum products and TBA at its over 6,500 independent dealer stations.

SUN'S HISTORY

50. From 1901, the date of its incorporation by Joseph Newton Pew, until the end of the First World War, Sun's principal business was the manufacture of asphalt, gas oil and basic lubricating oils at refineries in Marcus Hook and Toledo. Gasoline was produced by it as a by-product of the refining process and was sold by Sun as an unbranded product to wholesale marketers.

51. After the First World War Sun tried to develop a domestic market for its motor oils, which it blended from its basic lubricating oils. However, it soon appeared to Sun that it could successfully sell its grade of oil to the motoring public only in connection with the sale of gasoline. In 1920, by which time the business of marketing gasoline and motor oil to the motoring public had become well developed, Sun entered the market and opened its first service station for the retail sale of its petroleum products in Ardmore, Pa. Although subsequent to 1920 Sun slowly increased the number of its own company-operated stations, it sought out and depended mainly upon independent divided or split dealers, whether they were curb-side or drive-in stations, to sell the greater volume of its gasoline to the motoring public. Sun continued this practice even though in the mid twenties the major suppliers began to withdraw from divided stations and gasoline was being marketed increasingly through dealers handling one brand of gasoline.

52. In 1927 Sun developed a new high-grade gasoline possessing the favorable qualities of the so-called premium grades. It gave the gasoline a blue coloring so that the motoring public could distinguish it from other brands, and sold it under the name "Blue Sunoco." It had wide public acceptance. By 1928 Sunoco petroleum products were being marketed through 2,370 dealers supplied directly by Sun.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

53. Effective January 1928, Sun's schedule of retail dealer's list prices for motor oils and greases in addition to permitting a discount for bulk sales, allowed a quantity refund for oil purchased during the contractual year of a supply agreement to the dealers as follows:

10 to 19 barrels	5%
20 to 49 barrels	8%
50 or more barrels	10%

For the years 1928 to 1936, inclusive, the only accessories purchased by Sun for resale were valve cases and caps, windshield wiper arms and blades, and grease fittings, which it sold only through its company-operated stations.

54. Like its competitors, Sun supplied petroleum products and storage and dispensing equipment to its "A" dealers pursuant to printed standard form supply agreements, and to its "AA" dealers in conformity with combined supply agreement and lease forms. Over the years Sun constantly changed and revised the provisions and conditions in the printed forms, and occasionally put out forms for the purpose of amending existing agreements. In the late twenties and early thirties, the following clauses or provisions, among others, appeared in most of the supply agreements with undivided "A" dealers:

(a) Term clause—a provision stating that the agreement was for a certain duration, usually from one to three years, and thereafter from year to year unless either party should give the other thirty days' written notice, prior to the end of the term or any extension thereof of the desire to terminate the agreement;

(b) Minimum quantity clauses—provisions requiring the dealer to purchase a stated minimum monthly volume of gasoline at Sun's official posted tankwagon, retail or posted price in effect at place and time of delivery, and motor oil and lubricants, with eight pounds of lubricants being considered as equivalent of one gallon of motor oil;

(c) Restrictive competitive product clause—a provision stating that the dealer shall not sell or use on the premises gasoline dispensing equipment or gasoline of any kind other than Sun's except equipment located on the premises at the time of the agreement and the products handled thereon; [11]

(d) Default clause—an option in Sun to cancel the agreement immediately or on short notice if the dealer substituted other products for those of Sun's, or adulterated Sun's products with another substance before delivering it to the consumer, or failed to purchase the minimum monthly amounts of Sun's petroleum products set forth in the agreement, and that if either of these events occurred, Sun would be entitled to recover, as liquidated damages, a sum equal to one cent on each gallon of the minimum quantities of gasoline and motor oil or grease which the dealer had agreed to purchase from date of default to the end of the term of the agreement.

55. As the number of automobiles grew, competition for the motorists' fuel needs became increasingly keen. To attract the motorist, the major oil companies began to provide modern drive-in stations which were clean and fully equipped. This required a large capital outlay beyond the average dealer's financial resources. In keeping with the trend, Sun purchased or leased favorably located abutting highway properties which could be used as drive-in stations. After erecting stations on these properties, it would enter into combined lease and supply agreements, with "AA" dealers.

56. The lease and supply agreement forms, designated as "Distributor's Special Agreement-Lease", uniformly contained a provision which obligated the "AA" dealers to handle Sunoco gasoline and lubricants exclusively, and that if they should sell or store any competitive petroleum product on or within 500 feet of the leased premises, or if they failed to purchase the quantities of petroleum products stipulated in the minimum quantity provisions, or if they adulterated Sun's products or substituted other products for them Sun had the right to cancel the agreement on twenty-four hours' written notice and charge the operators liquidated damages in the amount of one cent per gallon on their prior average sales of Sun's products projected over the remaining term of the lease. The duration of the agreement was for one or more years and months with options in Sun to renew for a specific number of additional yearly periods, and was terminable thereafter only upon thirty days' written notice by either party prior to the end of the initial term or any extension thereof.

[11] In 1931 the restriction in this clause was extended to include territory within 500 feet of the premises. Subsequently it was made to cover not only existing brands of gasoline, but existing grades. However, not all of the agreements contained the restrictive clause, the reason apparently being that before the case of N. L. R. B. v. Jones & Laughlin, 310 I. S. 1 was decided in April of 1937, it was the prevailing view that the transportation of petroleum products from local bulk plants without crossing state boundaries by refiners of those products to dealers pursuant to supply contracts was not a part of interstate commerce. See Lipson v. Socony-Vacuum Corporation [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,069], 76 F. 2d 213, 218 (1 Cir., March 9, 1935). Since the laws of some of the states in Sun's marketing area forbade such restrictions, Sun was under the impression that local law might govern the legality of supply contracts in those states.

57. Some of the "AA" dealers owned their stations and leased them to Sun which in turn leased them back to the dealers. These lease and re-lease arrangements were used by Sun, in part at least, for the purposes of controlling favorably located outlets over a period of years and preventing their being acquired by competitors. Sun also entered into supply agreements with "select" undivided "A" dealers which expressly required them to sell Sunoco products, or at least Sunoco gasoline, exclusively. This type of "A" dealer and the "AA" dealers, because of the exclusive dealings and other restrictive provisions in their written agreements, were sometimes referred to by Sun as "controlled accounts."

58. In 1930, Sun's gasoline sales to Sun dealers amounted to 276,354,071 gallons or 3.69% of the total gasoline consumption in Sun's marketing area, and its sales of motor oil and lubricants to such dealers were equivalent to 5,183,543 gallons, or a ratio of one gallon of motor oil to 53 gallons of gasoline.

59. By 1931, in conformity with the prevailing practice of the major suppliers of petroleum products, Sun adopted the policy of deterring the further growth of divided stations which sold Sunoco products, or of endeavoring to convert them to undivided Sun stations.

60. As an inducement to divided independent "A" dealers to sell Sunoco gasoline exclusively, Sun sold its gasoline ½ cent cheaper pursuant to its official posted prices to those dealers who sold such gasoline exclusively. Sometimes this ½ cent differential was expressly provided for in the agreement. The practice of granting a ½ cent differential to undivided stations was commonplace in the industry in Sun's marketing area at the time. Since the dealer often operated on a small margin of profit, sometimes as low as 2 to 3 cents per gallon, this price differential, although small, was a sufficient economic inducement to prevail upon some dealers to sell one brand of gasoline exclusively. Nevertheless many dealers found it more profitable to continue as divided stations, and even though the divided dealer was selling more Sunoco gasoline than an undivided dealer, he was still required to pay ½ cent more per gallon than the latter.

61. Occasionally, Sun would enter into an agreement with a divided "A" dealer who expressedly agreed to terminate any and all supply agreements with suppliers other than Sun at the earliest time permitted. However, such dealer was not permitted to receive the benefit of the ½ cent differential until all the competitive supply agreements had been terminated, and Sun retained the right to cancel the agreement if the dealer failed to terminate the supply agreements with the other suppliers at the time he agreed to do so.

62. In 1931 Sun marketed for the first time a "regular" grade of motor oil under the brand name "Sunoco Mercury-Made." This oil, although possessing peculiarly low carbon-deposit characteristics, did not have long wear qualities, especially under strenuous conditions. Since it was consumed more quickly than the so-called "premium" grade and Pennsylvania oils, it did not compete very well in the market with those oils. For this reason many dealers who sold Sunoco gasoline relied upon some of the higher priced brands of premium motor oils, and the Pennsylvania grade oils, such as Quaker State, Pennzoil, Kendall, Wolf's Head and Valvoline, in addition to "Sunoco Mercury-Made" brand to satisfy their customers.

63. Effective June 1, 1931, Sun's contract anniversary for refunds on motor oil and lubricants was:

0 to 4 barrels	none
5 to 9 barrels	1¢ per gal.
10 to 19 barrels	2¢ " "
20 to 34 barrels	3¢ " "

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

35 to 49 barrels..... 4¢ per gal.
50 to 99 barrels..... 5¢ " "
100 or over..... 6¢ " "

64. For the period 1932 to the latter half of 1949, inclusive, no fixed motor oil ratio had been printed in the supply agreement forms. Minimum monthly quantities for motor oil were expressed in so many gallons without any reference to gallons of gasoline purchased. In some instances, however, a ratio figure rather than a gallonage figure was typewritten in the agreement. These ratios ranged from 1 to 50 to 1 to 75, depending on the locality of the dealer.

65. In the early and middle thirties because of the economic conditions prevailing, third grade gasoline appeared on the market in quantity. Many dealers found it desirable to sell the lower priced gasoline in addition to one or more higher priced or better known brands of gasoline. As a matter of policy, Sun was strongly opposed to dealers selling a cut-rate gasoline along with Sunoco gasoline. To combat this practice, Sun adopted and enforced a policy of requiring such dealers to agree to discontinue the sale of the third grade gasoline as a condition to being permitted to sell Sun gasoline.

66. In the latter part of 1934, Sun adopted an amendment for agreements with undivided stations. This amendment provided that the dealer would lose the benefit of the ½¢ differential as soon as he received on his premises any gasoline and/or motor oil or grease other than the Sunoco brand.

67. In January of 1935, Sun put out a new supply agreement (Form S-290) for undivided "A" dealers with a "term clause" stating that the duration of the agreement would be for 36 monthly periods with the sole option in Sun to cancel the agreement at the end of any one of the monthly periods by giving 30 days' notice before the additional monthly period would otherwise commence; and after the expiration of the 36 periods, the term was to be continued from year to year unless either party gave the other 30 days' written notice prior to the end of the current term of his or its desire to terminate the agreement. According to what would seem to be its initially intended purpose, this rather roundabout thirty-day clause and the subsequent direct one in Form S-407 [12] was successfully used by Sun to require dealers to relinquish selling third grade gasoline at cut-rate prices side by side with Sunoco or else have his supply agreement with Sun cancelled.

68. A memorandum dated February 15, 1935, entitled "Marketing Policy for Blue Sunoco Motor Fuel", provided as follows:

> All new accounts, or renewals thereof, must be made on Form S-290 which permits cancellation by either party on 30 days' notice. We, of course, desire to, whenever possible, change split accounts into 100% customers. This, however, may not always be possible.
>
> We should withdraw our equipment as promptly as our legal position will permit from all split accounts where cut price products are sold, whether they be the third grade of the major companies or independent brands. In other words we will not permit our Motor Fuel to be sold at the same station with products that do not sell at the regular posted price of nationally branded motor fuel in that district.

69. Beginning in 1935, Sun, for a period of about three years, ceased the direct operation of stations except for a limited number of training stations, and leased them to others. In so doing, Sun gave preference to its former employees and sought to have such stations operated in the same manner as Sun had in the past. In August of 1935, Congress passed the Social Security Act under which employers became liable for employee social security tax.

70. In April of 1936, Sun, on the advice of its legal department, revised the supply agreement and also the combined lease and supply agreement forms under which it sold Sunoco petroleum products and leased service stations. All stipulations for the exclusive handling of Sunoco products and restrictions on the handling of additional brands of competitive products were omitted as were the provisions for cancellation upon twenty-four hours' notice and for liquidated damages. Leases, designated "Real Estate Leases", were drawn so that they concerned themselves solely with matters relating to real estate and Sun's storage equipment. And although a 30 day cancellation clause was omitted from the supply agreement forms for "AA" dealers, the following clause was inserted in such forms:

[12] See Finding of Fact No. 71 post. In June of 1935, Form S-290 was revised in form but not in substance by Form S-401, and for the time being this form was used with divided "A" dealers.

"The term of this agreement shall commence . . . and continue in full force and effect for a period of one (1) year and from year to year thereafter, provided, however, either Company or Lessee may terminate this agreement by giving to the other thirty (30) days' written notice prior to the end of the first six (6) months of said term, or prior to the end of any ensuing period of six (6) months. . . ."

71. In May of 1936, Sun amended the term clause of its supply agreements for "A" dealers by adding the following undisguised 30 day cancellation clause to be exercised solely by Sun: ". . . provided nevertheless, that Company may cancel and terminate this agreement at any time by giving Dealer thirty (30) days' written notice." This proviso first appeared in Form S-407 10M 5-36, and it appeared in future forms long after the third-grade gasoline problem ceased to exist.

72. The new agreement forms and leases were transmitted to responsible personnel in Sun's marketing area with instructions that the new forms were to be used in contracting with new accounts and that all existing dealer agreements were to be replaced by the new forms on the expiration of the current term. When the new supply agreement forms for "AA" dealers were executed, the amounts in the minimum quantity clauses were either left blank or the words "None" or "No minimum requirements" were typewritten in the space. Since the issuance of these new forms all new "AA" dealers have executed both a supply agreement and a lease, in contrast to the prior practice of signing a single document designated as a lease which covered the entire transaction. And except in financing transactions, the practice of leasing stations from dealers and re-leasing them back to them was discontinued by Sun.

73. The change in the printed agreement forms did not mean a reversal of its former sales policy, for Sun believed that with the short term cancellation clause coupled with vigorous, aggressive salesmanship, it could attain the same result as was obtained with the exclusive dealing provision in the prior agreements. And even with the "control" provisions omitted from the agreement, Sun, as formerly, never leased a station to an "AA" dealer unless he agreed to handle Sunoco gasoline and/or motor oil on an exclusive basis.

74. The most significant development influencing Sun's decision to revise its agreement forms was the adoption of chain store tax legislation by one state after another in Sun's marketing area. Some of these chain store taxes provided for a rate as high as $500 a year per outlet for supplies having a large number of retail establishments within a single state, with the result that a supplier, like Sun, could be held liable for as much as $1,000,000 or more annually for the privilege of doing business on the chain-outlet basis in any one state. The potential liability for taxes under these statutes was not to be based upon "ownership" or "management" of outlets, but upon "control" over them. In addition, under the Social Security Act, suppliers "controlling" stations might possibly be held liable for social security tax payments on the profits of dealers and the wages of station attendants. Thus all provisions in the agreements from which Sun thought that control over the dealer could be construed were eliminated by it to forestall the possibility of tax liability on its part under the federal and state legislation.

75. In 1936, Sun's petroleum products were on sale at 9,747 outlets, 9,185 or 94.23% of which were "A" dealers, and 562 or 5.77% were "AA" dealers, supplied directly by Sun. The sale of Sunoco gasoline to these dealers was 494,515,217 gallons at a price of $46,725,879, and Sunoco motor oil and lubricants 5,509,667 gallons at a price of $2,283,405. The average gallon of motor oil to gallons of gasoline was approximately 1 to 90.

76. In October of that year when the number of Sun stations totaled 9,546, the number of undivided stations was 6,518 or 68%, and the divided was 3,028 or 32%.

77. During the year 1937 Sun conducted a survey which caused it to change its marketing approach to motor oils and TBA. This survey revealed that in many respects outlets selling Sunoco products were below par in that their physical equipment was inferior, they were short on proper lubrication facilities and their gallon ratio of motor oil sales to gasoline was poorer than that of competitive outlets. In many cases Sun outlets found it necessary to carry one or more competitive motor oils. Moreover such outlets were selling approximately 2,000 less gallons of gasoline per month than the 14,000 gallon average of competitive stations, and they were distinctly behind in the handling of TBA.

© 1960, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

78. In the latter part of 1937 Sun issued charge account cards to motorists whose credit rating met its approval. These cards were to be used for buying Sunoco products on credit. When a dealer was permitted to honor these cards under a written agreement which could be canceled at any time, Sun would reimburse him for "all credit sales of Sunoco products or other merchandise and services designated" by Sun which the dealer makes to customers possessing the charge account cards. Despite the fact that dealers were not permitted to include the retail price of competitive products in credit sales, Sun refused to allow dealers who did not sell Sunoco gasoline and motor oils exclusively to honor such cards or permit them to indicate to motorists that they could do so. If a dealer was discovered to have been selling competitive motor oil after having been given permission to honor the credit cards, Sun would withdraw the privilege by canceling the agreement. The reason advanced by Sun for its refusal to grant or to withdraw such privilege was that dealers carrying competitive products would charge the sale of those items on credit sales to customers possessing Sun credit cards, and that the only way it could avoid subsidizing the sale of such competitive products was to refuse to grant or to withdraw the privilege of honoring charge account cards to those dealers.

79. Further, as a result of the survey, Sun, in the early part of 1938, inaugurated a systematic A to Z lubrication service and widely advertised that it would guarantee the proper lubrication of motor vehicles to those who used the service at stations displaying the A to Z lubrication signs. Sun urged all its dealers, where possible, to construct lubritoriums and to accept Sunoco A to Z lubrication franchise. In addition to having to be qualified and equipped to render the type of lubrication service of the standard for A to Z lubrication, the dealer had to purchase a complete inventory of Sunoco automotive lubricants, and agree to follow the systematic lubrication service as outlined in the Sunoco Lubrication Guide. However Sun would not allow dealers carrying competitive oils and greases to display, or to continue to display, A to Z lubrication signs and banners, even though they had the necessary equipment to perform the proper lubrication service. Sun's guaranty, of course, presupposed the use of Sunoco lubricants exclusively in the A to Z service.

80. In addition, Sun urged its dealers to stock and sell TBA, and issued recommended model inventory lists based on the experience of dealers whose stations were successful in marketing TBA. The dealers were left free to purchase any of the recommended TBA items from distributors of their own choosing.

81. Sun then reversed its thirty-six year old practice of distribution which had permitted it to sell petroleum products on a large scale thus enabling it to get in contention and keep pace with the leaders of the industry. It adopted the policy of refusing to enter into new supply agreements with dealers having divided stations and thereafter selected dealers who agreed orally or indicated their willingness to devote their entire efforts to selling Sunoco gasoline and/or motor oil before entering into a supply agreement with them. Also about this time Sun began to put into high gear the practice of eliminating the unfavorably located stations with poor volume purchases of gasoline and motor oil. This process of weeding out stations which did not fit into its franchise plan of distribution was called "Objective Development Plan" by Sun.

82. Effective October 10, 1938, Sun's schedule of prices for dealers contained a provision for refunds each time the dealer's agreement had an anniversary of its commencement, as follows:

Quantity Refunds

1 to 599 gallons inclusive	none
600 to 1,199 gallons inclusive	2¢ per gallon
1,200 to 1,799 gallons inclusive	3¢ per gallon
1,800 to 3,799 gallons inclusive	4¢ per gallon
3,800 or over	5¢ per gallon

Ratio Refunds

A refund of one cent (1¢) per gallon on the total quantity of Sunoco Motor Oils and Automotive Lubricants purchased and paid for by Dealer while this price schedule is in effect, shall be paid by Company to dealer each time the > Dealer's Agreement . . . has an anniversary of its commencement, if a ratio in Dealer's purchase thereunder is maintained of one gallon of Sunoco Motor Oils and Automotive Lubricants to Sixty (60) gallons of Blue Sunoco Motor Fuel. . . .

In computing quantities for refunds, the dealer was allowed to take eight pounds of automotive lubricants as the equivalent of one gallon of motor oil. In addition a dealer received a discount of six cents a gallon when he bought 100 cases of motor oil at one time.

83. In 1939, 1,089 of Sun's "A" dealers, a drop of 2,119 within three years, were still unpersuaded to operate as undivided Sun stations and continued to pay Sun and their other suppliers ½¢ more per gallon of gasoline.

84. On October 23, 1939, Sun entered into a so-called "override" agreement with U. S. Tire Dealers Corporation, a subsidiary of United States Rubber Company. In return for ". . . the general cooperation and merchandising assistance of your sales promotion department in connection with our sale of U. S. Brand tires, tubes, batteries and accessories to your service station dealer and wholesale distributor customers, including the use of U. S. Brand product in your T. B. A. course of your service station training schools, and your permission to present our merchandising and sales promotion programs at your sales meeting for dealers. . .", U. S. Tire Dealers Corporation agreed to pay Sun commissions of from 7% to 8½% on all sales of U. S. Brand TBA by the former to Sun dealers and wholesale customers.

85. During the period of November 1939 to about March of 1944, Sun required its dealers to execute a U. S. Tire Dealer's franchise as a condition to becoming or continuing as a Sun dealer. Although the franchise agreement form used by U. S. Tire Dealers did not require the Sun dealer to purchase any specific amount of U. S. Brand TBA, he was expected by Sun to give preference to the U. S. Brand products when such line contained the items desired by the dealer.

86. In 1940 Sun was among the major oil companies named defendants in a complaint filed by the United States, charging, among other things, that each had violated the anti-trust laws by allegedly requiring their respective dealers to handle their products exclusively. This complaint was not dismissed until about the time the complaint in the case before us was filed. Thus officials of Sun were aware that the Department of Justice was actively investigating its marketing policies at least for ten years prior to the filing of the instant complaint.

87. After the intervention of World War II, gasoline was rationed and credit sales of petroleum products were prohibited. On April 20, 1942, the Office of Petroleum Coordinator for National Defense recommended that until further notice:

> § 1508.50 Exclusive-dealing. No person, natural or artificial, shall after the effective date hereof, convert, or cause to be converted, by any means or devise whatsoever, any retail outlet from a non-exclusive or so-called "Split" account to an exclusive or so-called "100 per cent account." [13]

In addition the shortage of TBA items became acute. As a consequence the business of service station operators dropped considerably. Since the local U. S. Brand TBA distributors did not make their supplies available to Sun dealers, Sun, in order to help its dealers, went into the TBA business on a limited scale. It purchased tires, batteries and other automobile replacement parts at wholesale from manufacturers in its marketing area and sold them directly to its dealers. But as time went on, it increased its purchases of TBA items.

88. Effective January 1, 1945, Sun's dealer price schedule for TBA, for the first time, provided for a percentage refund on a progressive scale of from 1 to 8% based on annual dollar volume purchases, and a ratio refund based on a certain dollar volume to purchases of a thousand gallons of gasoline. See Finding of Fact No. 39, supra.

89. By July of 1946, Sun's policy of converting divided accounts to exclusive Sunoco gasoline stations had been so successful

[13] In reply to a letter by the assistant Western Region sales manager seeking advice as to the continuation of their present efforts to sell Sunoco products, particularly motor oil, in view of § 1508.50, the acting general sales manager wrote on June 5, 1942: ". . . I am going to answer this by asking you the question 'What would you do if you were the salesman on the territory and what do you think competitive companies are doing?' " that, not counting those stations in the Detroit, Michigan, area that sold Benzol gasoline along with Sunoco, only 198 such accounts remained. In that month Sun adopted the policy of withdrawing from all divided stations. It decided that at the expiration of the contract term or sooner, unless the dealer agreed to convert his station to an undivided Sun account, the supply agreement would not be renewed and termination or cancellation notice would be sent to him. Within three months the number of divided stations had been reduced to eighty-eight. During this period twenty-six divided dealers in a single district were canceled simultaneously.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

90. After the restriction on credit sales was removed in 1946, Sun permitted all undivided stations selling gasoline to honor Sun charge account cards since the major competitors of Sun were carrying out a liberal policy in connection with credit sales at their stations.

91. In 1946, as a result of the advancements made in the solvent refining process during the war by which ordinary crude oils could be refined into motor oils of high quality, Sun began marketing a "premium" grade motor oil, which had been in production for some months previous, under the trade name "Dynalube." This product has been stated to possess outstanding wear characteristics as well as low carbon-forming qualities. Sun believed that "Dynalube" was as good as other "premium" grade motor oils then on the market, since it had a viscosity index allegedly greater than the Pennsylvania grade oils. Thus, after the war, Sun was in a position to offer its dealers a "premium" motor oil in addition to the regular grade "Mercury-Made." It therefore could see no reason why its dealer should continue to sell the competitive oils even though they had stocked these oils in the past.

92. Although the supply of "Dynalube" was plentiful at its refineries, Sun did not require dealers to stock this motor oil at that time because there was a container shortage which prevented the free distribution of the product to the dealers. However, Sun did not wait until the container shortage disappeared before starting a campaign to drive out competing motor oils and TBA at stations selling Sunoco gasoline in order to make room for "Dynalube" and Sun's sponsored TBA. It therefore decided to make a detailed survey of the dealers and service stations and also to check upon the performance of its sales organization for the purpose of ascertaining the direction in which additional sales effort should be applied. To that end it used inspectors to make written reports on its dealers in some of the regions in Sun's marketing area. Similar, although not as comprehensive, surveys had been made in the latter thirties and early forties in other portions of Sun's marketing area.

93. The inspectors' reports contained a list of questions seeking information concerning, among others, the following: (a) Type of supply agreement and its expiration date; (b) Location of the station and the type and condition of the building and equipment; (c) Lighting conditions and the appearance of rest rooms; (d) Number and the appearance of station attendants, their hours of operation and the extra services given motorists; (e) Complaints of the dealer and his attitude toward Sun; (f) Average monthly gasoline and the ratio of Sun motor oil to gasoline purchased; (g) Whether the dealer had an A to Z service franchise; (h) Line of TBA, and (i) Whether competitive motor oils and TBA are being displayed and sold, and the brands of those competitive products.

94. The inspectors personally visited the stations assigned to them and obtained the information sought in the reports. The completed reports, in addition to revealing that most of the dealers' purchases of Sun motor oil were less than the ratio of one gallon to every sixty of gasoline, showed that the dealers, with few exceptions, were selling competitive TBA and motor oils, with the Pennsylvania grade oils being the main culprit.

95. After these inspectors' reports were received and reviewed at the regional office, they were sent to the various district offices within the region, with notations thereon or in accompanying letters of "deficiencies" to be corrected. In almost every instance the deficiencies noted included the matter of dealers advertising, displaying and selling competitive products.

96. The district supervisory personnel, either orally or in writing, brought the "deficiencies" to the attention of the salesmen for corrective action. They informed the salesmen to instruct the dealers (and that they could go so far as to tell them that they had thirty days in which to comply) to eliminate competitive motor oils and TBA, or else their agreements would either be canceled or not renewed and a new dealer obtained to take their place.[14]

"Please examine each report carefully. On all reports showing other oils carried and on which a notation has not already been made showing that the item is being discontinued, I want a notation stating the dealer's decision to either cancel or carry our lubricants only within the next thirty days."

97. The salesmen called on the dealers who were selling competitive motor oils and TBA and used the selling approach by pointing out to them the advantages of devoting their efforts to selling Sun products exclusively: they could do a better job in selling the products of a single company, their bookkeeping would be simpler, and they would receive annual rebates in the higher brackets on Sun motor oils and sponsored TBA. As a result, a majority of the dealers, some of them mindful of the thirty day cancellation clause, agreed to go along 100%. This meant removing all signs displaying brands of competitive products[15] on the premises and to discontinue the selling of competitive products at the earliest possible moment if they wanted to do business with Sun. A number committed themselves to discontinue to sell competitive products if Sun would keep them supplied with the necessary grades of motor oil and items of TBA. They agreed to do so despite the fact that they could often purchase competitive motor oils and TBA from local sources under better delivery conditions and at lower prices and that they preferred to sell competing brands because of customer demand and better customer acceptance. Those dealers who agreed to go 100% Sun after their "old" stock of competitive products was depleted were subsequently checked by the inspector or salesman to see that the old stock was not replenished.

98. Sometimes Sun would either make at nominal cost to the dealer or grant him a substantial allowance or credit for repairs or improvements of his station to induce him to go along 100% with Sun. It also used indirect methods to have dealers operate their stations according to its requirements, such as tardy deliveries of gasoline, delaying needed repairs to dispensing equipment and signs, and withholding needed additional storage and dispensing equipment.

99. When some of the dealers were undecided what to do, the salesmen reminded them of Sun's right to cancel the agreement on thirty days' notice, and if they did not go along 100%, they would be replaced by a new operator or their station would be replaced by another Sun outlet nearby. As a result of such "reminders," some of them either discontinued the sale of the competitive items or ceased stocking them to any substantial degree. In the latter situation, the competitive products were not prominently displayed or were stored out of view of the salesmen. In other cases some of the dealers were obstinate.

100. After they had taken action, the salesmen reported their efforts to their superiors who, in turn, with or without comment, returned the reports to the regional office. Their efforts in almost every instance related to what had been done and was being done to eliminate the advertisement, display and sale of competitive products at Sun stations.

---

[14] For example, one of the memoranda sent by a district manager to his salesmen in May of 1948, states:

"Attached hereto are copies of the inspectors' reports, one for each dealer. While considerable progress has been made in some territories, it appears that there has been some backsliding in others. I refer particularly to other oils in the location.

* * *

"We do not care to continue in a location where the above condition prevails. I do not care about any reasons present or past that have caused dealers to follow the lines of least resistance and stock other oils. You are to inform such dealers to find another supplier. They may buy any product they have in mind to, but we also have a right to protect our good name and to sell to those dealers who understand our products well enough to want to help us preserve it. I feel very strongly about this, and you are held personally responsible to have this situation cleaned up once and for all within the next thirty days and no exceptions. We shall be happy to apply the gallonage from cancelled accounts to our real Sunoco dealers."

[15] A manager of the Toledo, Ohio district was able to report to his regional manager on June 17, 1948: "To the best of our knowledge there are only six signs out of 154 dealer stations which are advertising these competitive products."

© 1960, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

101. In those cases where the dealers proved unyielding or remained undecided, Sun sent them written notice of cancellation or termination. These notices brought some of them around to Sun's point of view, while the others ceased to do business with Sun rather than comply with its demands. This conduct of eliminating "unfavorable" dealers was far removed from "selection of customers" by Sun.

102. Effective February 6, 1948, Sun's motor oil schedule of prices for dealers provided:

Quality Refund

900 to 1199 gal. incl.	2.0¢ per gal.
1200 to 1499 " "	2.5¢ " "
1500 to 1999 " "	3.0¢ " "
2000 to 2499 " "	3.5¢ " "
2500 to 3499 " "	4.0¢ " "
3500 to 4499 " "	4.5¢ " "
4500 or over	5.0¢ " "

The refund of one cent a gallon was made dependent upon the ratio of 1 to 55.

103. In the year 1948 when its new gasoline refinery was nearing completion in Toledo, Sun had, or anticipated having, a sufficient supply of gasoline to satisfy dealer demand in its marketing area while its large competitors were experiencing a shortage. Also about this time the war scarcity of TBA items began to vanish and such supplies were becoming plentiful. In those days there was no need for Sun to seek out new Sun dealers; they came to Sun. Since the demand for gasoline was great, Sun used its advantage to assist its campaign to drive out competitive oils and TBA from stations selling Sunoco gasoline, and to require new accounts to stock supplies of Sun's motor oils and sponsored TBA in amounts beyond their normal needs.

104. On June 7, 1948, the United States District Court for the Southern District of California enjoined the Standard Oil Company of California, and its wholly owned subsidiary, Standard Stations, Inc., from enforcing or entering into exclusive supply contracts with some 5,937 independent dealers in one or more petroleum products and TBA because such contracts were in violation of the antitrust laws. See United States v. Standard Oil Company of California, et al. [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,269], 78 F. Supp. 850.

105. In February of 1949, Sun received a refund check in the amount of $392,189.40 for its purchases of Kelly-Springfield tires during the year 1948.

106. In May of 1949, the total of Sun stations was 6,630. Not counting the stations selling Benzol along with Sunoco gasoline, 6,624 or 99.9% were undivided stations, and only 6 or 0.1%, as compared to 3,028 or 32% in 1936, were still divided.[16]

107. On June 13, 1949, the Supreme Court of the United States affirmed the decree of the District Court in the Standard Stations case. See Standard Oil Company of California, et al. v. United States [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,432], 337 U. S. 293. On page 314 of its opinion the Court stated that "the qualifying clause of § 3 [of the Clayton Act] is satisfied by proof that competition has been foreclosed in a substantial share of the line of commerce affected."[17]

108. Beginning in July of 1949, the ½¢ differential in Sun's official posted prices and agreements for gasoline was discontinued and the thirty-day cancellation clause was removed from the remaining supply agreements with "A" dealers. In addition the minimum monthly quantity of motor oil and lubricants to be purchased clause in all supply agreements was made to be expressed in terms of a ratio of one gallon of motor oil for every sixty-five gallons of gasoline purchased during the corresponding month of the previous year,[18] and the default clause was modified slightly to provide that if the dealer failed to live up to the minimum quantity provisions in any two months of the twelve month period, Sun could cancel the agreement upon giving written notice.

109. By the end of 1949, Sun's petroleum products, as well as its sponsored TBA items, were being distributed through 6,562 dealers supplied directly by Sun. Of these, 4,716 or 71.87% of the total were "A" dealers, and 1,846 or 28.13% were "AA" dealers. This was a decrease since 1936 of 2,623 in the total number of all dealers, and an increase of 22.36% in the number of "AA" dealers. In that year it sold 1,020,040,400

[16] Under these circumstances the ½¢ price differential in the price per gallon of gasoline in favor of the undivided station had either served its purpose or was no longer necessary.

[17] This has been referred to as the "quantitative substantiality" test.

[18] See Finding of Fact No. 28(f) and (i), supra.

gallons of gasoline and 14,396,369 gallons of motor oils and lubricants, or a ratio of one gallon of motor oil for every seventy-one gallons of gasoline. It also purchased approximately eleven million dollars worth of TBA from various manufacturers.

110. By January of 1950 the number of stations selling Benzol gasoline along with Sunoco in the Detroit area had been reduced from 77 in 1944 to 26.

111. On January 22, 1950, the instant action was instituted.

112. Effective October 10, 1950, the refund of one cent a gallon in Sun's dealer's schedule of prices for motor oils and lubricants was made dependent upon the attainment of the ratio of 1 to 65.

113. In 1951 a dealer in New Jersey was canceled on sixty days' notice because he refused to give up selling competitive gasoline at a station "adjacent" to his Sun station and because he refused to sell only Sun products at both stations. As late as 1955, a dealer not maintaining his 1:65 oil ratio was told by Sun that other dealers were available.

114. Although the territory in which Sun marketed its petroleum products was increased approximately 36% from 1936 to 1956, the number of dealers was reduced from 9,185 or 9,051 to 6,984.

Conclusions of Law:

1. This Court has jurisdiction over the subject matter of this action. 15 U. S. C. A. §§ 4, 25.

2. This Court has venue jurisdiction over the defendant. 15 U. S. C. A. § 22.

3. The defendant, Sun Oil Company, is and has been engaged in commerce among the several states.

4. The effect of defendant's agreements and understandings with its dealers may be to substantially lessen competition in the selling of petroleum products and "tires, batteries and accessories" in defendant's marketing area contrary to § 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 14. See Standard Oil Company of California et al. v. United States [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,432], 337 U. S. 293 (1949).

5. The plaintiff, United States of America, is entitled to a decree enjoining the defendant from inducing, coercing and compelling independent service station operators with whom it does business to enter into and operate under written contracts, supplemented by oral and tacit agreements and understandings requiring them to purchase petroleum products and "tires, batteries and automotive accessories" for resale exclusively from the defendant.

[¶ 69,399] United States v. Standard Oil Company of California; Shell Oil Company; The Texas Company; Richfield Oil Corporation; General Petroleum Corporation; Tide Water Associated Oil Company; and Union Oil Company of California.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, Southern Division. Civil Action No. 11584-C. Dated June 19, 1959.

Case No. 1024 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Prohibited—Price Fixing—Prices Fixed by Agreement Between Competitors—"Posting" Prices—Petroleum Products.—Six oil producers in the "Pacific States Area" were each prohibited by a consent decree from (1) agreeing with any of the others to fix prices for crude oil produced in the area, (2) agreeing or offering to buy crude oil at prices referenced to those posted by any of the others and (3) posting prices for crude oil in or for any field in which it was not producing, receiving on exchange, purchasing, or seeking to purchase crude oil. The decree also prohibited the producers from agreeing with each other to fix or post prices for refined petroleum products sold in the area.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2011.181; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.600.

Resale Price Fixing—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Agreement to Maintain Resale Prices—Resale Price Control Through Refusal to Sell—Fair Trade Contracts.—Six oil producers in the "Pacific States Area" were each prohibited by a consent decree from entering into contracts with its dealers whereby the dealers agree to resell refined petroleum products at a price designated by the producer. Each of the producers was also prohibited from forcing dealers to resell at such designated prices by threats of cancellation or threats of non-renewal of supply agreements or leases. In the absence of such threats, however, a producer was not prohibited from suggesting, urging, or persuading the dealers to resell at any price. Further, the decree did not limit a producer's right to do business with dealers of its own selection, or prevent it from exercising any right it might otherwise have had to "fair trade" all refined petroleum products other than gasoline. After five years, the decree would not prohibit a producer from fair trading gasoline.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

See Resale Price Fixing, Vol. 1, ¶ 3015.20, 3015.70, 3015.80.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Prohibited —Production Control.—Six oil producers in the "Pacific States Area" were each prohibited by a consent decree from agreeing with any producer to control the production of crude oil in the area with the object of fixing the price of crude oil or refined petroleum products. Each of the producers was enjoined from entering into any crude oil purchase contract, exchange agreement, or transportation agreement (1) requiring the seller to curtail his production to any quota, allotment, or production rate which was determined by any person other than the producer of the oil or a person with a right in the oil or the land from which it was produced, or (2) permitting a producer to refuse to accept crude oil produced in the area in excess of any such quota, allotment, or production rate. Also, each producer was enjoined from entering into any agreement with any other person to refuse to purchase from, transport for, or exchange with any third person crude oil produced in excess of such quota. In addition, each of the producers was prohibited from entering into or renewing any contract for the purchase of crude oil which extended over a period of more than one year, unless such contract contained a provision giving the seller the right to terminate upon written notice.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.760; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.800.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Prohibited —Allocation of Sales Territories to Distributors.—Six oil producers in the "Pacific States Area" were each prohibited by a consent decree from requiring any "reseller distributor" in the area to refrain from selling refined petroleum products or tires, batteries, and accessories (TBA) to any class of customers, or outside the limits of any prescribed territory, unless (1) the right to make such sales had been reserved, by written agreement, to the producer or others handling its products, or (2) the producer or one of its other distributors was then selling, or offering to sell, the products to the customers in question.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.468; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Prohibited —Exclusive Dealing—Requirements Contracts.—Four oil producers in the "Pacific States Area" were each prohibited by a consent decree from entering into agreements with their dealers whereby the dealers would agree to (1) purchase all or substantially all of their requirements of refined petroleum products or tires, batteries, and accessories (TBA) from a producer or from a source designated by it, or (2) refrain from handling refined petroleum products or TBA obtained from any other person. Also, the producers were each prohibited from selling refined petroleum products to any dealer in the area on the condition that the dealer purchase other petroleum products or TBA from it or from a source designated by it, or refrain from handling refined petroleum products or TBA obtained from any other person.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.690, 2005.703, 2005.825, 2005.848; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.300, 2610.760.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Prohibited —Boycotts—Discriminations.—Six oil producers in the "Pacific States Area" were each prohibited by a consent decree from boycotting or discriminating against others with respect to exchange agreements or other agreements for the use of pipelines or other facilities for transporting, storing, or loading crude oil or refined petroleum products. The producers were also prohibited from agreeing with each other to follow a policy or practice of refraining from entering into any lease or supply contract with a dealer unless the consent of the producer who had been supplying the dealer was obtained.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.533; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.280.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Prohibited—Trade Association Membership as Means of Trade Restraint.—Six oil producers in the "Pacific States Area" were each prohibited by a consent decree from holding membership in any oil producers' organization or association which sponsors programs to control the production of crude oil in the area with the objective of fixing the price of crude oil or refined petroleum products.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2017.121.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief—Oil Producers' Supply Contracts with Dealers—Minimum Terms.—Six oil producers in the "Pacific States Area" were required by a consent decree to offer to their dealers, one year after entry of the decree and for a period of ten years thereafter, contracts and leases having terms of not less than three years. However, that provision applied only to dealers who were being supplied with gasoline by a producer, its assignee, or other agent and did not apply to dealers supplied through a "reseller distributor." The producers were also required to include in those agreements provisions for termination by the dealers upon ninety days' written notice.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.50.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Nature and Use—Duration of Decree—Effective Date.—A consent decree entered against oil producers in the "Pacific States Area" provided that, with certain exceptions, the final judgment was to take effect six months after the date of its entry and was to continue in effect for fifteen years thereafter.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8241.195.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decree—Modification of Consent Decrees—Proof Required—Substantial Impairment of Ability to Compete.—A consent decree entered against oil producers in the "Pacific States Area" provided that, should any consenting defendant, upon application for modification or termination of any provision of the decree, show that its ability to compete in the area with any nonsignatory defendant was substantially impaired by reason of any provision in the decree, the court could grant such relief as it found proper.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8361.18.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Scope of Decrees—Estoppel.—A consent decree entered against oil producers in the "Pacific States Area" provided that it was based upon an accord and a full compromise and settlement between the Government and the producers, as of the date of the decree's entry, of all issues raised by the charges made in the Government's complaint and its "Outline of Plaintiff's Contentions." It was further provided that the decree, as a condition to the consent of the producers to its entry, should operate as an estoppel and bar to any charge in any proceeding instituted by the Government and based upon, or alleging, any combination, conspiracy, agreement or monopolization charged in the present action. In addition, it was provided that the decree would preclude evidence to support any claims or contentions that, prior to the date of the decree's entry, any two or more of the producers were guilty of any of the several violations of the Sherman Antitrust Act charged in the action. Except as noted in the decree, however, it did not constitute a bar or estoppel to a suit against one or more of the producers (1) for activities occurring after entry of the decree, (2) for acts of any producer individually or in conjunction with a nondefendant, or (3) for acts of two or more of the producers which were not within the scope of the charges made in the present action.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8241.65.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Permissive Provisions—Taking Action with Regard to Legislation and Regulations.—A consent decree entered against oil producers in the "Pacific States Area" provided that nothing therein should be deemed to prevent the producers from (1) taking action to induce the Federal and state governments or their agencies to take action or refrain from taking action, (2) proposing, supporting, or opposing legislation or regulation by any such government or agency, or (3) doing anything required or refraining from doing anything prohibited by the laws, regulations, or orders of the Federal or state governments or their agencies.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8321.48, 8421.

For the plaintiff: Robert A. Bicks, Acting Assistant Attorney General; William D. Kilgore, Jr., Baddia J. Rashid, Homer W. Hanscom, George B. Haddock, Lawrence W. Somerville, Walter M. Lehman, John H. Waters, Malcolm F. Knight, and Elliott Chaum, for the United States.

For the defendants: Marshall P. Madison, Francis R. Kirkham, Richard J. MacLaury, and William E. Mussman of Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, for Standard Oil Co. of Cal.; S. R. Vandivort, George Harnagel, Jr., and McCutchen, Black, Harnagel & Shea (by George Harnagel, Jr.), for Shell Oil Co.; William J. De Martini, Everett B. Clary, William W. Alsup, and O'Melveny & Myers (by Everett B. Clary), for Richfield Oil Corp.; P. E. Bermingham, Howard Painter, and Dolley, Jessen & Painter (by Howard Painter), for General Petroleum Corp.; William F. Kiessig and Edmund D. Buckley (by Edmund D. Buckley), and Wayne H. Knight of Overton, Lyman & Prince (by Wayne H. Knight), for Tidewater Oil Co.; L. A. Gibbons, Douglas C. Gregg, and A. Andrew Hauk (by L. A. Gibbons), and Moses Lasky of Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison (by Moses Lasky), for Union Oil Co. of Cal.

For prior opinions of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of California, see 1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,240 and 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,212.

Final Judgment

[Consent Decree]

James M. Carter, District Judge [In full text]: The original complaint herein was filed by plaintiff on May 12, 1950, and an amended complaint speaking as of May 12, 1950, was filed herein on August 24, 1956, and the latter was amended on its face pursuant to order of Court filed herein on the date last mentioned. Each defendant named therein filed answers to the original and the amended complaints denying any violation of law. Plaintiff and defendants Standard Oil Company of California, Shell Oil Company, Richfield Oil Corporation, General Petroleum Corporation, Tidewater Oil Company (named as a defendant herein under its former name of Tide Water Associated Oil Company) and Union Oil Company of California, by their respective attorneys, severally consent to the entry of this Final Judgment, before the taking of any testimony and without trial, and without anything in this judgment constituting evidence or an admission by any party hereto in respect of any issue involved in this action, and the defendants not admitting that the alleged combination and conspiracy to monopolize and to restrain trade and commerce and the alleged monopolization of trade and commerce charged in the amended complaint to have existed as of May 12, 1950, ever did exist or that they have done or are doing any act or thing that they are hereafter in this judgment enjoined from doing or have refrained or are refraining from doing any act or thing that they are hereinafter in this judgment required or directed to do.

[Settlement Negotiations]

The consent of the plaintiff and defendants signatory hereto to the entry of this Final Judgment grows out of the following described matters:

> At a pre-trial hearing on March 14, 1957, the Court referred to the arguments of defense counsel that while they denied defendants had done anything wrong, they also contended that methods of operation and conditions in the petroleum industry in the Pacific States Area had substantially changed since the filing of the complaint. After referring to the lengthy and expensive trial that would be involved, the Court asked if the parties had ever discussed the possibility of settlement. The Court was advised that there had been such discussions with some defendants but they had been abandoned because of impossibility of reaching any agreement due to plaintiff's insistence on a prohibition against retail selling by defendants, as prayed for in Prayer 17 of the amended complaint. The Court urged plaintiff and defendants to meet to explore the possibility of settlement of all or some of the issues.

The Court expressed its conviction that all of the parties were believers in the competitive system of the United States and wanted the industry to operate competitively. The Court stated that in this respect the objectives of the parties were identical. The Court urged further settlement talks and stated that they would not be considered as weakness on the part of any of the parties or as a concession that the defendants had done anything wrong.

During 1957 several such meetings were held, but at a pre-trial hearing on December 17, 1957, the Court was informed that discussions of possible settlement had again broken down because, among other things, of defendants' rejection of plaintiff's continuing demand that each defendant be enjoined from engaging in the business of selling refined petroleum products at retail, either through its own employees or by other persons designated as agents, consignees or managers, as prayed for in Prayer 17.

In May 1958, defendant Conservation Committee of California Oil Producers filed a motion for summary judgment of dismissal on the ground that the case as to said defendant had become moot by reason of changes in conditions within the oil industry and in the activities of said defendant since the filing of the original complaint in 1950. On October 24, 1958, after a hearing on said motion, the Court dismissed the case as to defendant Conservation Committee on the ground that the case had become moot as far as said defendant was concerned.

On May 29, 1958, the defendants filed a proposal that the Court consider, in the light of events occurring since the filing of the complaint, trying issues of mootness and relief before the issue of law violation. After a hearing on this proposal in July 1958, the Court deferred a ruling on such proposal, and expressed a desire to explore the type of relief that could be granted to plaintiff under Prayer 17 of the amended complaint. In Prayer 17, plaintiff sought "divestiture" and "divorcement," defining divestiture as a requirement that defendants divest themselves of all right, title and interest, whether ownership, leasehold or other proprietary interest, in service stations and other retail outlets and that they not be permitted to acquire any in the future; and defining divorcement as a requirement that the defendants now engaged in the business of selling refined petroleum products at retail either through their own employees or by agents, consignees or managers, should cease such business and that no defendant be permitted to engage in such business in the future.

The Court directed plaintiff to submit a statement setting forth in some detail the relief sought under Prayer 17 and the reasons therefor. The Court directed defendants to present their views, together with information concerning the existing situation compared to that in 1950 with respect to numbers of service stations; their locations; their relationship to suppliers; the names and numbers of nondefendant refiners and marketers; the number of stations handling their products; the areas in which they operate; the length of leases; and such other data as would give to the Court an over all picture of present marketing of refined petroleum products compared to that existing when the complaint was filed. The requested showing was to be by statement of counsel and not by way of taking of testimony, and as far as possible as an agreed presentation of the parties. All of these matters would be presented and considered on the assumption that the case had been tried on the issue of whether the antitrust laws had been violated by the defendants prior to the commencement of the action on May 12, 1950, and that the Court had found that violation had occurred. The Court announced as its purpose an effort to determine whether, on the basis of such an assumption, the Court would grant all or part of the relief sought by plaintiff in Prayer 17.

Written statements and presentations were made at a pre-trial hearing on October 28 to 31, 1958, pursuant to the Court's direction. At that hearing plaintiff generally conceded the accuracy of the showing made by counsel for defendants as to post-complaint data, as far as it went.

The Court stated that defendants had made a substantial showing of competition in marketing since 1950, both as between defendants and with new marketers entering the Pacific Coast Area since 1950 and with others; and that it was unlikely, on the basis of plaintiff's evidence as to activities of defendants occurring since 1950 and the situation existing at the present time, that plaintiff would now file a suit making those charges contained in the amended complaint herein.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

On the basis of the written statements, presentations and oral arguments made during said hearing, which were not as a part of trial or the taking of testimony, the Court ruled that even if at the trial of the case it should be proved to the Court's satisfaction that the defendants had violated the law prior to May 12, 1950, the Court should not and would not grant divestiture or divorcement or relief beyond the type within the area of which the relief herein embodied falls.

The Court then again urged defendants to consult with plaintiff to see whether, in view of the foregoing ruling, further progress could be made toward disposing of all or part of this litigation. Plaintiff was charged with responsibility for arranging conferences with defendants concerning settlement. Such conferences were held and the within decree resulted.

It appears to the Court that, by reason of the aforesaid matters and the consent of the plaintiff and the defendants signatory hereto, it is unnecesary to proceed with the trial of the cause against said signatory defendants.

Now, Therefore, before any testimony has been taken herein, and without trial and without adjudication to the effect that any defendant has violated any of the antitrust laws, it is hereby Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed:

I.

[Jurisdiction]

The Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this action and of the parties signatory hereto. The amended complaint states claims for relief against the defendants and each of them under sections 1 and 2 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II.

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment,

(a) "Consenting defendants" shall mean Standard Oil Company of California, Shell Oil Company, Richfield Oil Corporation, General Petroleum Corporation, Tidewater Oil Company and Union Oil Company of California.

(b) "Consignee" shall mean a person who, in the pursuit of an independent calling and not as an employee, is engaged by a consenting defendant as its agent to sell any of said defendant's refined petroleum products for it and at the price designated by it, and is vested by said defendant with possession or control of the product and authorized to receive payment from the purchaser.

(c) "Consignment contract" shall mean a written agreement by which a consenting defendant engages a person to act as its consignee.

(d) "Dealer" shall mean any person who is engaged as a consignee or reseller in the business of selling gasoline at a place of business serving highway automotive vehicles of the general public, but excluding any such place of business operated by or for the government of the United States or of any state or of any political subdivision thereof, or by or for any agency or instrumentality of any such government, such as but not limited to post exchanges, commissaries and ships' stores.

(e) "Defendants" shall mean the consenting defendants and Texaco Inc. (named as a defendant herein under its former name of The Texas Company).

(f) "Distributor" shall mean any person who operates facilities for the storage and distribution of gasoline and who is engaged primarily in the sale of such gasoline to dealers.

(g) "Exchange" and "exchange agreement" shall mean an agreement or arrangement whereby a person delivers crude oil or refined petroleum products to or for the account of another person at a specified place or places or at a particular time and receives in return therefor, from said other person or a third person, an amount of crude oil or refined petroleum products of approximately the same value at another place or places or at another time. The principal characteristic of an exchange is that it involves the transfer from a person to another person of possession and title to crude oil or refined petroleum products, the consideration for which is not primarily money but is the transfer to the first person of possession and title to other crude oil or refined petroleum products of approximately the same value.

(h) "MER" shall mean "Maximum Efficient Rate," which is the highest daily rate of production which can be sustained economically from a particular pool, from existing wells and facilities, for a reasonable period without loss of economically recoverable ultimate production of oil from such pool.

(i) "Pacific States Area" shall mean the area comprising the states of California, Washington, Oregon, Nevada and Arizona, or any part thereof.

(j) "Person" shall mean any individual, partnership, corporation, association or other legal entity.

(k) "Posted prices" and "prices posted" for crude oil shall mean prices announced to the public by or for a defendant which it will pay for crude oil produced in a field or pool or area in the Pacific States Area for such crude oil as it buys.

(l) "Posted prices" and "prices posted" for a refined petroleum product shall mean prices announced to the public by or for a defendant for the sale of such refined petroleum product in the Pacific States Area.

(m) "Refined petroleum products" shall mean any of the following products resulting from the refining of crude oil; gasoline, lubricating oils, light and heavy fuel oils, diesel oils, stove oil, greases and kerosene.

(n) "Reseller" shall mean any person who buys a refined petroleum product for resale, insofar as said product is concerned. As to any refined petroleum product which such person may handle under consignment contract or other arrangement not involving a purchase and resale by him, he is not deemed to be a reseller.

(o) "Supply agreement" shall mean an agreement of purchase and sale or a consignment contract.

(p) "Tires, batteries and accessories" shall mean replacement parts and articles used on or in the servicing or repairing of highway automotive vehicles and includes tires, tubes, batteries, spark plugs, oil filters, oil filter cartridges, fan belts, battery cables, auto lamp bulbs, fuses, windshield wipers and blades, tire repair and vulcanizing kits, anti-freeze preparations, tire chains, waxes and polishes and other like items.

III.

[Applicability]

This Final Judgment applicable to any consenting defendant shall be binding upon such defendant and its officers, agents, servants, employees and attorneys, and upon those persons in active concert or participation with them who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise. For the purposes of this Final Judgment a defendant and its officers, agents, servants, employees and attorneys when acting in such relationship shall be deemed to be one person.

IV.

[Permissive Provisions]

Nothing in this Final Judgment shall be deemed to prevent consenting defendants from jointly or severally: (i) taking action to induce the government of the United States or of any state or of any political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality of any such government or any official of any such government, agency or instrumentality to take action or refrain from taking action; (ii) proposing, supporting or opposing legislation or regulation by any such government, agency, instrumentality or official; or (iii) doing anything required or refraining from doing anything prohibited by any law, regulation or order of the United States or of any agency or instrumentality thereof, or by any law, ordinance, regulation or order of a state or political subdivision thereof or of any agency or instrumentality of any thereof which is valid and within the competence of said state, subdivision, agency or instrumentality.

Within the meaning of this Section IV a defendant shall be deemed (a) to be required to take action even though it may have the alternative of not taking action and thereby incurring a penalty or sanction resulting from failure to comply with any law, ordinance, regulation or order of the government of the United States or any state, or any political subdivision, agency instrumentality or official thereof, and (b) to be prohibited from taking action even though it may have the alternative of taking action and thereby incurring a penalty or sanction resulting from failure to comply with any such law, ordinance, regulation or order.

V.

[Association Membership—Production Control]

(A) Each consenting defendant is enjoined from holding membership in or participating in the activities of any organization, association or group composed of crude oil producers or representatives of crude oil producers which sponsors, recommends or carries out any agreement or program to control the production of crude oil in the Pacific States Area with the objective of fixing or stabilizing the price of such crude oil sold in the Pacific States Area or the price of refined petroleum products refined and sold in said Area.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

(B) Each consenting defendant is enjoined from agreeing with any other defendant to control the production of crude oil in the Pacific States Area with the objective of fixing the price of such crude oil sold in the Pacific States Area or the price of refined petroleum products refined and sold in the Pacfic States Area.

(C) Nothing in subsections (A) or (B) of this Section V shall prevent any consenting defendant from entering into or carrying out any agreements between or among two or more defendants, or between or among one or more defendants and any other person or persons, providing for the joint leasing, joint ownership or joint operation of lands or mineral interests therein, or for the control or limitation of production for economic or other reasons from a pool or connected pools in which all the parties to the agreement are producers or have a proprietary or other financial interest, including, but not limited to, unit plans, ratable taking plans, operating agreements, pool MER agreements, well spacing agreements, secondary recovery programs and pressure maintenance programs.

VI.

[Price Fixing—Crude Oil]

(A) Each consenting defendant is enjoined from agreeing with any other defendant to fix prices for crude oil produced in the Pacific States Area; provided that where any defendants are parties to any purchase or sale of crude oil or to any agreement for the purchase or sale of crude oil, with or without one or more other persons, the parties to any such purchase, sale, or agreement may agree upon the price of the crude oil covered thereby.

(B) Each consenting defendant is enjoined from agreeing or offering to buy crude oil produced in the Pacific States Area at prices referenced to those posted in said area by another named defendant, unless so requested by the seller; provided, however, that nothing in this subsection (B) shall: (i) prevent a defendant in the purchase of crude oil from offering or agreeing to pay for said crude oil a price which is referenced to, or is expressed to be based upon, the highest, lowest or average of the prices posted by any two or more persons, defendants or others, who may be named; or (ii) apply to contracts in effect upon the effective date of this Final Judgment or to contracts with the government of the United States or of any state or of any political subdivision thereof or with any agency or instrumentality of any such government.

(C) Each consenting defendant is enjoined from posting prices for crude oil in or for any field in the Pacific States Area in which said defendant is not at that time producing, receiving on exchange, purchasing or seeking to purchase crude oil.

VII.

[Boycotting Other Producers]

Each consenting defendant is enjoined from entering into any agreement with any other defendant

(i) to adopt or pursue any continuing system or practice of extending to other defendants discriminatory treatment as compared to that extended to nondefendants, or

(ii) to boycott any nondefendants with respect to exchange agreements or other agreements for the use of pipelines or other facilities in the Pacific States Area for transportation, storage or loading of crude oil or refined petroleum products.

In the construction or application of this Section VII it shall be recognized that exchange agreements and agreements for the use of pipelines or other facilities do or may involve different types of crude oil or refined petroleum products, different types of pipelines and different transportation, storage or loading facilities, and that such agreements are entered into at different times when the situation of a party having pipelines or other facilities is or may be different with respect to its own needs or capacities, and that every such actual or suggested agreement and its terms involves complex elements of business judgment.

VIII.

[Purchase Contracts—Time Period]

(A) Each consenting defendant is enjoined from entering into or renewing any contract for the purchase of crude oil produced in the Pacific States Area the term of which extends for a period of longer than one year unless such contract contains a provision giving the seller the right to terminate such contract upon written notice, the length of which shall be set forth in the contract, but no notice of more than twelve months shall be required except that a notice of up to five years may be required in a contract for the purchase of crude oil from one seller, or group of sellers having a common interest in the crude oil being sold, which obligates the buyer to accept more than 2,000 barrels of crude oil per day; provided: (i) that exercise of such rights of termination may be limited to cases in which the contract is terminated by the seller for the purpose of refining the crude oil himself or selling the crude oil covered thereby to a nondefendant; and (ii) that in any instance in which a consenting defendant is required by its crude oil purchase contract or another related contract to supply crude oil or petroleum products to or for the account of the seller or a subsidiary or affiliate of the seller the term of the crude oil purchase contract may continue as long as the obligation to supply such crude oil or petroleum products continues.

(B) The provisions of this Section VIII shall not apply to contracts: (i) between a consenting defendant and persons with whom said consenting defendant has a joint or concurrent proprietary or other financial interest in lands within a pool or field, or in crude oil produced from a pool or field, for the purchase or sale of crude oil produced within such pool or field, including but not limited to contracts with lessors of a consenting defendant, co-lessees, joint venturers, owners of royalty or overriding royalty interests or participating interests, and parties to unit and other operating agreements, "farm-out" arrangements and oil payment agreements; or (ii) with the government of the United States or of any state or of any political subdivision thereof or any agency or instrumentality of such government.

IX.

[Production Control]

(A) Each consenting defendant is enjoined from entering into any crude oil purchase contract, exchange agreement or transportation agreement which (a) requires the seller to curtail his production of crude oil in the Pacific States Area to any quota, allotment or production rate determined, suggested or recommended by any person or persons other than (i) the producer of said crude oil or (ii) any person or persons having a right, title or interest in said crude oil or the lands from which it was produced, or (b) permits a consenting defendant to refuse to accept crude oil produced in said Area in excess of any such quota, allotment or production rate.

(B) Each consenting defendant is enjoined from entering into or carrying out any agreement with any other person to refuse to purchase from transport for or exchange with a third person crude oil produced in the Pacific States Area in excess of any such quota, allotment, production rate or recommended production rate.

(C) Nothing in this Section IX shall prevent any consenting defendant (i) who is a producer or has any proprietary or other financial interest in any pool or connected pools from agreeing with any other person who is a producer or has any proprietary or other financial interest in such pool or connected pools to refuse (or from including in its crude oil purchase contracts, exchange agreements or transportation agreements provisions permitting it to refuse) to purchase, exchange or transport crude oil produced in excess of a seller's fair share of the MER of such pool or connected pools; or (ii) from agreeing in any contract upon the quantity of crude oil to be purchased, exchanged or transported by the parties thereunder.

X.

[Price Fixing—Refined Products]

Each consenting defendant is enjoined from agreeing with any other defendant (i) to fix prices for refined petroleum products sold in the Pacific States Area or (ii) that any defendant will post prices or will adhere to its posted prices for the sale of refined petroleum products in the Pacific States Area; provided that where any defendants are parties to any purchase or sale or any agreement for the purchase or sale of refined petroleum products, with or without one or more other persons, the parties to any such purchase, sale or agreement may agree upon the price of the refined petroleum products covered thereby.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

XI.

[Resale Price Fixing]

Each consenting defendant is enjoined from entering into or adhering to any agreement with any reseller by which said reseller agrees to resell, or from forcing any such reseller by threatening him with cancellation or nonrenewal of a supply agreement or lease to resell, in the Pacific States Area, any refined petroleum product at a price, or at not less than a minimum price, or at not more than a maximum price, designated by such defendant; provided that this Section XI shall not prevent a consenting defendant, in the absence of such a threat, from suggesting to a reseller of its petroleum products a resale price for any of such products, or from urging or persuading such reseller to resell any of such products at any price; nor shall anything in this Section XI limit in any way (i) the rights of a consenting defendant set forth in subsections (E), (G), and (H) of Section XII or (ii) the right of a consenting defendant to do business with resellers of its own selection whether as lessor, supplier, or otherwise.

Provided that as to all refined petroleum products other than gasoline, this Section XI shall not prevent any consenting defendant from exercising, and as to gasoline shall not prevent any consenting defendant after five years from the effective date of this judgment from exercising, any right it may have, but for this Section XI, (i) to fair trade any product, or (ii) to fix, maintain or enforce by agreement or otherwise the price, or the maximum or minimum price, at which any product may be resold; and Provided further, that in view of pending litigation between the plaintiff and other parties which plaintiff believes to have a bearing on the legality of action of the type referred to in this further proviso, this Final Judgment shall not have any application to any consenting defendant's granting, increasing, decreasing or withdrawing an allowance or price reduction to a reseller, whether in the form of a rebate, subsidy or otherwise, which is based, calculated or conditioned by such consenting defendant upon the amount or level of a resale price established by such reseller in the exercise of his own decision and choice; and in any future suit, proceeding, or litigation instituted by plaintiff this Final Judgment shall not operate as a bar or estoppel against any charge that such action violates the antitrust laws except to the extent that such charge may fall within the provisions of subsection (A) of Section XVI of this Final Judgment.

XII.

["Dealer" Arrangements]

As used in this Section XII the term "lease" means "lease or sublease," the term "lessee" means "lessee or sublessee," and "dealer" means a dealer as defined in Section II who sells gasoline under the brand of the consenting defendant supplying him.

(A) Each consenting defendant is required and directed (i) to offer to each dealer operating at any location in the Pacific States Area where he is being supplied with gasoline by such defendant or its consignee or other agent and not through a reseller distributor and (ii) to grant to each such dealer who accepts such offer a supply agreement wherein such defendant undertakes to supply such dealer with gasoline for sale at such location. Each such agreement shall be for a term of at least three years; provided that the term of any such agreement relating to any such location may be for less than three years if it is concurrent with the term of any lease of such location which may properly be made for a term of less than three years under paragraph (4) of subsection (B) of this Section XII; and provided, further, that each such agreement with a dealer who, with the consent of such defendant, as a dealer occupies premises owned or leased by such defendant, shall contain a provision granting to such dealer a right to terminate said agreement upon ninety days' written notice.

(B) Each consenting defendant is required and directed insofar as it has the right to do so (i) to offer or cause to be offered to each dealer who, with the consent of such defendant, as a dealer occupies premises owned or leased by such defendant in the Pacific States Area and (ii) to grant or cause to be granted to each such dealer who accepts such offer a lease of such premises having a term of at least three years, with provision for right of termination by such dealer upon ninety days' written notice; provided that no consenting defendant is required or directed:

(1) To offer or grant or cause to be offered or granted any lease of any premises to any dealer who is not required by such defendant to assume a rental obligation with respect to such premises;

(2) To make or cause to be made a lease with any dealer unless such dealer concurrently enters into an agreement with such defendant as contemplated by subsection (A) of this Section XII;

(3) To offer or grant or cause to be offered or granted a lease to a dealer supplied by a reseller distributor; or

(4) Where such defendant itself holds any such premises as lessee and not as owner, to offer or grant or cause to be offered or granted any lease of such premises for a term extending beyond the thirtieth day preceding the expiration of the term of the lease under which such defendant holds the premises at the time of such offer or grant; and in any such instance, such defendant may satisfy the requirements of this subsection (B) by offering or causing to be offered, and if the offer is accepted granting or causing to be granted, a lease for a term of less than three years, provided such term expires not earlier than such thirtieth day.

(C) In all instances where any consenting defendant offers or causes to be offered such an agreement or such a lease to any dealer and such dealer rejects such offer, or does not accept it within 15 days, or having accepted it fails within 5 days after such acceptance to enter into the agreement or lease offered to it, nothing herein shall require such defendant to renew said offer or cause it to be renewed at any time, or at any time to offer or cause to be offered to such dealer any other agreement or lease relating to said premises; and the preceding subsections (A) and (B) of this Section XII shall thereafter be inapplicable to any dealing between such defendant and such dealer at said premises.

(D) Each such agreement and each such lease may provide in substance or effect (i) that the supply obligation of the defendant party thereto need not exceed half the dealer's requirements as of the date of the agreement or lease for use or sale at the location to which it relates (subject to proration in case of shortage) and (ii) that deliveries thereunder may be suspended and/or that it may be terminated by the defendant party thereto at any time prior to the expiration of its stated term, upon written notice stating the grounds therefor given to the dealer in the manner specified in the agreement or lease (or automatically or without notice in such cases as death, incompetency or insolvency, for the breach of any provision thereof or upon the occurrence of any other event or condition specified therein not prohibited by Section XI or Section XIV of this Final Judgment. Where a dealer holds such an agreement and such a lease covering the same location each or either of them may provide in substance or effect that a breach of one shall constitute a breach of the other and/or that the cancellation or termination of one shall be effective to cancel or terminate the other.

(E) Each such lease and each such supply agreement with a dealer who has not been operating as a dealer in the gasoline of the defendant supplying him at the location therein referred to for a period of twelve months immediately prior to the execution of the same may contain a provision granting to the lessor or supplier the right to terminate the same without cause upon thirty days' written notice of termination at any time within twelve months after the date such dealer began operating as a dealer in the gasoline of said defendant at such location. For the purposes of this subsection (E) it shall be deemed there is a new dealer at the location whenever a new person commences operating at such location.

(F) Nothing in this Section XII shall require that the price or prices payable under or the commission rates provided for in any supply agreement shall remain constant throughout the term of such agreement; and nothing in this Section XII shall prevent the inclusion in any lease of a provision for changes in rental if the circumstances under which said changes in rental shall be made are specified in the lease and the amount of said changes in rental is determinable by the terms of the lease.

(G) The provisions of this Section XII shall not take effect until one year after the date of entry of this Final Judgment and shall apply only in respect of dealers who may be within the terms of this Section XII on or after the effective date of this Section XII. It is understood that each consenting defendant is now supplying many dealers on a spot basis, or under supply contracts having less than a three-year term, with whom such defendant may be unwilling to enter into a supply agreement or a lease having a three-year term.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

(H) Nothing in this Section XII shall prevent any consenting defendant from: (i) declining or failing to renew or cause to be renewed for any reason any supply agreement or lease upon the expiration or termination thereof, or from advising the dealer of the reason or reasons therefor a reasonable time in advance of such expiration or termination; provided that if, after the expiration or termination of any such supply agreement or lease, a consenting defendant or its consignee or other agent continues thereafter for more than three months to supply such dealer with gasoline at such location or to permit such dealer to occupy premises owned or leased by such defendant, then this Section XII shall again apply to such dealer; or (ii) discontinuing to supply gasoline to any dealer for any reason or terminating any supply contract or lease for any reason within one year from the date of entry of this Final Judgment.

(I) The provisions of this Section XII shall terminate ten years after the date of entry of this Final Judgment, provided that this subsection (I) shall not be deemed to affect the terms of any agreement or lease executed prior to the end of such ten-year period.

XIII.

["Distributor" Agreements]

Each consenting defendant is enjoined:

(A) From including in any supply contract or in any agreement executed in connection with the making of a supply contract with any reseller distributor in the Pacific States Area a provision granting to such defendant an option or right to purchase or rent from such distributor any of such distributor's properties, facilities or equipment used or usable in the handling or distribution of refined petroleum products, and from exercising after the effective date of this Final Judgment any such option or right in any such contract or agreement then existing; provided that a consenting defendant (i) may contract for and exercise a right of first refusal, with respect to offers made or received by a distributor while his supply contract is in effect, to purchase or lease any of such distributor's properties, facilities or equipment and (ii) may take and enforce security rights in properties, facilities or equipment of a distributor.

(B) From requiring any reseller distributor in the Pacific States Area to refrain, or agreeing with any such reseller distributor that such distributor shall refrain, from selling or offering to sell any refined petroleum products or tires, batteries, or accessories to any existing or prospective customer or customers or classes of customers or outside the limits of any prescribed territory, unless said defendant, by written agreement with said distributor, reserves or has reserved for itself or for others handling such defendant's products the right to make such sales of said products or any of them or unless said defendant or another distributor of said defendant is then selling or offering to sell said product or products to the customer or customers in question.

XIV.

[Requirements Contracts—Exclusive Dealing]

Each of the consenting defendants other than Standard Oil Company of California and Richfield Oil Corporation is enjoined:

(1) From entering into or enforcing the provisions of any agreement with any dealer reseller in the Pacific States Area, or forcing any such dealer to enter into any agreement, whereby such dealer agrees

(i) to purchase from said defendant or from a source designated by said defendant all or substantially all of such dealer's requirements of any refined petroleum product or of tires, batteries, or accessories, or

(ii) to refrain from handling refined petroleum products or tires, batteries or accessories obtained from any other person;

(2) From selling any refined petroleum product to any dealer in the Pacific States Area on the condition

(i) that said dealer shall purchase other petroleum products or tires, batteries or accessories from said defendant or a source designated by said defendant;

(ii) that said dealer shall not sell or handle refined petroleum products or tires, batteries or accessories obtained from any other person;

Provided that any consenting defendant may require that any pump or tank or other container or receptacle for refined petroleum products or for tires, batteries or accessories furnished by it and marked as such to a dealer shall be used solely for the storing, handling or dispensing of such products supplied by such defendant or source designated by such defendant, and may prescribe by agreement or regulations not inconsistent with this Section XIV for the storage, handling or dispensing of such products.

Provided, further, that any consenting defendant may limit use of its credit cards to whatever merchandise it chooses.

XV.

[Boycotting Dealers]

Each consenting defendant is enjoined from agreeing with any other defendant to follow a policy or practice of refraining from entering into any lease or supply contract with a dealer in the Pacific States Area unless consent is obtained from another defendant who has been or is currently supplying refined petroleum products to such dealer; provided that this Final Judgment shall not prevent such a defendant who is considering the solicitation or acceptance of a dealer supplied by another defendant or other person from making inquiry of such defendant or person to ascertain the existence and terms of any lease, contract, liens, mortgages or the like to which the dealer is a party or to which he is subject.

XVI.

[Estoppel]

(A) This Final Judgment is based upon an accord and a full compromise and settlement between plaintiff and the consenting defendants as of the date of entry of this Final Judgment of all issues raised by the charges made in the amended complaint herein and by the Outline of Plaintiff's Contentions filed herein on January 10 and February 4, 1957. This Final Judgment shall operate (and it is a condition to the consent of the consenting defendants to this Final Judgment, and this condition is agreed to by plaintiff, that this Final Judgment shall operate) as an estoppel and bar to any charge in any suit, proceeding or litigation instituted by plaintiff based upon or alleging: (i) any combination, conspiracy or agreement between two or more defendants, or monopolization, charged in the amended complaint or alleged in the aforesaid Outline of Plaintiff's Contentions; (ii) any continuation of such combination, conspiracy, agreement or monopolization; (iii) the effects or continued effects of any such combination, conspiracy, agreement or monopolization; or (iv) that any acts were done in furtherance of or pursuant to any such combination, conspiracy, agreement or monopolization or in the exercise of or aided by the monopoly power resulting from such combination, conspiracy, agreement, or monopolization. This Final Judgment shall preclude evidence to support any claims or contentions that prior to the date of entry hereof any two or more defendants jointly possessed such monopoly power or were otherwise guilty of any of the several violations of section 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act referred to above.

(B) This Final Judgment shall not constitute a bar or estoppel (and it is a condition to the consent of plaintiff to this Final Judgment, and this condition is agreed to by consenting defendants, that this Final Judgment shall not constitute a bar or estoppel) other than the bar and estoppel referred to in subsection (A) of this Section XVI, to any suit, proceeding or litigation which may hereafter be instituted by plaintiff against any one or more of said defendants: (i) for activities occurring after the date of entry of this Final Judgment; (ii) for acts of any defendant individually or in conjunction with a nondefendant including but not limited to acts or practices in the retail marketing of refined petroleum products; or (iii) for acts of two or more defendants not within the scope of the charges made in the amended complaint or alleged in the aforesaid Outline of Plaintiff's Contentions.

XVII.

[Enforcement and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment and for no other purpose duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, upon written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on notice reasonable as to time and subject matter given to any consenting defendant at its principal office, be permitted, subject to any legally recognized privilege:

(A) Access in the presence of such defendant's counsel and other representatives, during the office hours of such defendant, to those parts of the books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant which relate to any matters contained in this Final Judgment.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

(B) To interview officers or employees of such defendant, subject to the reasonable convenience of such officers and employees and of such defendant, and without interference or restraint from it, regarding any such matters, at which interviews counsel for the officer or employee interviewed and counsel for such defendant may be present.

(C) To require a consenting defendant to submit reports in writing with respect to any matters or activities of such consenting defendant as the Department of Justice considers may constitute a possible violation by said defendant of Section XI of this Final Judgment.

No information obtained by the means provided in this Section XVII shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of such Department, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment.

XVIII.

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to the Court at any time for such further orders or directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this judgment, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, for punishment of violations thereof, and for the purpose of enabling any consenting defendant to move the Court for a protective order in respect of any request and notice by plaintiff under Section XVII.

Should any consenting defendant, upon application for modification or termination of any provision of this Final Judgment, with due notice to plaintiff and opportunity to be heard thereon, show to the satisfaction of the Court that the ability of such consenting defendant to compete in the Pacific States Area with any nonsignatory defendant is substantially impaired by reason of any provision of this Final Judgment, the Court may grant such relief to said defendant as it finds proper.

XIX.

[Effective Date—Continuation]

Except as otherwise provided in Section XII, this Final Judgment shall take effect six months after date of entry and shall continue in effect for fifteen years thereafter.

[¶ 69,400] United States v. Wichita Eagle Publishing Company, Inc., and Wichita Eagle, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the District of Kansas. Civil Action No. W-1876. Entered June 29, 1959.

Case No. 1466 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Exclusive Dealing—Consent Decree—Practices Prohibited—"Tying" Arrangements—"Combination" Sales of Newspapers and Advertising.—Two newspaper publishers were prohibited by a consent decree from (1) refusing to sell "display" advertising separately in their morning, evening, or Sunday newspapers, (2) refusing to sell "classified" advertising separately in their morning, evening, or Sunday newspapers, and (3) refusing to sell separately their morning, evening, and Sunday newspapers to home subscribers and carriers. However, the publishers could require their carriers to service subscribers to all three of the newspapers. In addition, the publishers were prohibited from coercing or requiring advertisers to purchase more space in the newspapers than the advertisers desired.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.848; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.850; Exclusive Dealing, Vol. 1, ¶ 4009.925.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Exclusive Dealing—Consent Decree—Practices Prohibited—Exclusive Dealing Arrangements—Publishers' Restrictions on Advertisers' Use of Other Advertising Media.—Two newspaper publishers were prohibited by a consent decree from (1) publishing advertisements on the condition that its advertisers would not use other advertising media, (2) refusing to sell advertising in their morning newspaper until their advertisers refrained from using other advertising media, (3) refusing advertisers certain space, location, or arrangement of advertisements until the advertisers refrained from using other advertising media, and (4) granting advertisers special space, location, or arrangement of advertisements on the condition that they would not use other advertising media. In addition, the publishers were prohibited from limiting or restricting advertisers' use of other advertising media by discriminating as to rates charged among advertisers of the same general category, or by discriminating as to space, location, or arrangement of advertisements.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.690, 2005.825; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.280, 2610.300; Exclusive Dealing, Vol. 1, ¶ 4009.050, 4009.100, 4009.280.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Prohibited—Refusal to Deal—Refusal to Publish Newspaper Advertisements.—Two newspaper publishers were prohibited by a consent decree from refusing to publish advertisements which, along with the advertiser, met reasonable standards uniformly applied by the publishers.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.785; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.720.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief—Notice of Decree—Publication of Terms of Decree in Defendants' Newspapers.—Newspaper publishers charged with exclusive dealing and "tie-in" sales of their newspapers and advertisements published therein were ordered by a consent decree to publish once weekly, for three weeks, the full terms of the decree.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.60, 8421.

For the plaintiff: Robert A. Bicks, Acting Assistant Attorney General; and William D. Kilgore, Jr., Charles Whittinghill, Earl A. Jinkinson, Raymond P. Hernacki, Robert L. Eisen, and Sam J. Betar, Jr., Attorneys, Department of Justice.

For the defendants: Wayne Coulson, Paul R. Kitch, and John Paul Stevens.

Final Judgment

[Consent Decree]

DELMAS C. HILL, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on June 29, 1959; defendants having appeared and filed their answer to said complaint denying the substantive allegations thereof, and the plaintiff and defendants by their respective attorneys having consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and without admission by any party with respect to any such issue,

Now, Therefore, before taking any testimony and without trial or adjudication of any facts or law herein, and upon consent as aforesaid of the parties hereto, it is hereby

Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed as follows:

I

[Jurisdiction]

The Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter herein and of the parties hereto. The complaint states claims upon which relief may be granted against defendants under Sections 1 and 2 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled, "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies", commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended, and under Section 3 of the Act of Congress of October 15, 1914, entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies and for other purposes", commonly known as the Clayton Act.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Metropolitan Wichita" shall mean the Wichita City Zone, as defined by the Audit Bureau of Circulation;

(B) "Person" shall mean any individual, partnership, firm, corporation, association or other business or legal entity;

(C) "Display advertising" shall mean any advertising carried in a newspaper of a defendant except classified advertising;

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

(D) "Classified advertising" shall mean any advertising carried in the classified columns of a newspaper of a defendant.

III

[Applicability]

The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to any defendant shall apply to such defendant, its officers, directors, agents, employees, subsidiaries, successors and assigns, and to all other persons in active concert or participation with such defendant who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

IV

[Refusal to Sell]

Defendants are enjoined and restrained from:

(A) Refusing to contract to sell, or refusing to sell, display advertising separately in the morning, evening or Sunday newspapers published by any defendant; provided, however, that this subsection (A) shall not prohibit defendants from granting discounts on such advertising on multiple insertions (within a period not to exceed five days) of identical copy and size in said morning and evening newspapers which do not exceed twenty per cent (20%) of the sum of the rates for the same amount of advertising when purchased separately, provided that change of copy is not permitted;

(B) Refusing to contract to sell, or refusing to sell, classified advertising separately in the morning, evening or Sunday newspapers published by any defendants; provided, however, that this subsection (B) shall not prohibit defendants from granting discounts on such advertising on multiple successive insertions (without a time lag) of identical copy and size in said morning and evening newspapers which do not exceed twenty-five per cent (25%) of the sum of the rates for the same amount of advertising when purchased separately, provided that change of copy is not permitted;

(C) Refusing to contract to sell, or refusing to sell to home subscribers or to carriers of defendants The Wichita Eagle, The Evening Eagle, or The Wichita Sunday Eagle, separately, provided that defendants may require their carriers to service their morning and evening and Sunday subscribers. Defendants shall permit their subscribers in Metropolitan Wichita to purchase defendants' morning, evening and Sunday newspapers on the following options:

Option A Morning only . . . (6 newspapers)
Option B Evening only. . . . (6 newspapers)
Option C Sunday only. . . . . (1 newspaper)

Provided, however, that, for a period of two years following the date of entry of this Final Judgment:

(1) Each of defendants' prices for Option A, Option B and Option C to subscribers in Metropolitan Wichita shall be no lower than their current prices for the same options, except that if the subscription prices actually paid by persons who subscribe to the daily newspaper published by defendants' competitor in Metropolitan Wichita are lower than such prices in any area, or areas, defendants shall be entitled to meet such lower prices in such area or areas;

(2) Defendants may offer any combination of the three above specified options, however, the price for any such combination shall be no less than the total of the options forming the combination;

(3) Defendants' rates to their carriers for any combination of Options A, B, and C shall be not less than the total of the options forming the combination, and shall not be reduced with the effect of causing a reduction contrary to paragraph (1) of this subsection (C);

(4) Nothing contained in this subsection (C) shall prohibit defendants from offering prizes or awards to their carriers or some gratuity to new subscribers as a form of short-term promotional inducement customarily used in newspaper subscription campaigns, except that any reduction in price to such a subscriber shall not exceed a two-month period and provided that nothing in this subsection (C) shall prevent defendants from granting the same promotional inducements offered by defendants' competitor in the daily newspaper field in Metropolitan Wichita.

Following the expiration of the said two-year period, defendants may at any time apply to the Court, after reasonable notice to plaintiff, for approval to institute or reduce combination rates, and in seeking such court approval, defendants shall have the burden of proving:

(a) That there is no reasonable probability that said combination rates will substantially injure, destroy or prevent competition in the daily newspaper field in Metropolitan Wichita; and

(b) That there is sound justification, such as actual or anticipated cost savings in publication, sales or distribution, for any discount sought on any combination of Options A, B and/or C.

V

[Exclusive Dealing]

Defendants are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from directly or indirectly:

(A) Limiting or restricting, or attempting to limit or restrict any advertiser's use of any other advertising medium by discriminating:

(1) As to rates charged for advertising among advertisers of the same general category; or

(2) As to the space, location or arrangement of advertisements except as such discrimination may be necessitated by the objective dictates of the makeup of the paper;

Provided, however, that nothing contained in this subsection (A) shall prohibit defendants from granting concessions as to rates, space, location or arrangement of advertising, which represent no more than the good faith meeting of like concessions afforded by competing advertising media;

(B) Refusing to publish or threatening to refuse to publish advertisements where the advertiser and the advertisements meet the reasonable standards uniformly applied by defendants;

(C) Coercing or requiring advertisers to purchase more advertising space in defendants' newspapers than they desire; provided, however, that the mere refusal to publish promotional material as requested by advertisers shall not be considered coercion;

(D) Negotiating for publication, accepting for publication, or publishing advertisements, or entering into contracts for the publication of advertisements, on or accompanied by the condition, agreement or understanding that the advertiser shall not use, or shall limit or restrict his use of other advertising media;

(E) Refusing to contract to sell, or refusing to sell, advertising in the morning newspaper published by defendants until such time as the advertiser refrains from using, or limits or restricts his use of, other advertising media;

(F) Refusing an advertiser certain space, location or arrangement of advertising, until such time as the advertiser refrains from using, or limits or restricts his use of, other advertising media, or granting an advertiser special space, location or arrangement of advertising on the condition, agreement or understanding that the advertiser shall not use, or shall limit or restrict his use of, other advertising media;

(G) Publishing classified advertising without designating it as classified advertising and without the use of sub-heads of the kind customarily used to designate divisions or classes of classified advertising.

VI

[Notice of Decree]

Defendant, Wichita Eagle Publishing Company, Inc., is ordered and directed upon entry of this Final Judgment:

(A) To publish for three weeks, once weekly in all editions of The Morning Eagle, The Evening Eagle, and The Wichita Sunday Eagle in a conspicuous location on the front page thereof, the new subscription rates for the defendants' newspapers, in the size of type used for general news;

(B) Publish for three weeks, once weekly in all editions of The Morning Eagle, The Evening Eagle, and The Wichita Sunday Eagle the full terms of this Final Judgment, in the size of type used for general news;

(C) Notify promptly all regular advertisers (except such as have already received such notice) the rates applicable to them in conformity with the terms and conditions of this Final Judgment;

(D) Advise promptly, in writing, all officers, advertising agents, advertising solicitors and employees in its advertising departments of the terms of this Final Judgment and of the fact that each and every such person is subject to the provisions of this Judgment; and it shall make readily available to such persons a copy of this Final Judgment and inform them of such availability.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

VII

[Enforcement and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, upon written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to any defendant made to its or his principal office, be permitted:

(A) Access, during the office hours of such defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda, and records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant relating to any matters contained in this Final Judgment;

(B) Subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant and without restraint or interference from it or him, to interview officers or employees of such defendant who may have counsel present regarding any such matters. Upon such request said defendants shall submit such reports in writing to the Department of Justice with respect to matters contained in this Final Judgment as may from time to time be necessary to the enforcement of this Final Judgment. No information obtained by the means provided in this Section VII shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Executive Branch of the plaintiff except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

VIII

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the carrying out of this Final Judgment or the modification of any of the provisions thereof and for the purpose of enforcement of compliance therewith and punishment for violation thereof.

IX

[Duration of Judgment]

This Final Judgment shall terminate twelve (12) years from the date of its entry.

[¶ 69,401] Allied Properties v. Board of Equalization of the State of California.

In the California District Court of Appeal for the First District, Division One. Civ. No. 18342. May 18, 1959, as corrected May 25, 1959, and June 9, 1959. Petition for rehearing denied, June 9, 1959.

Appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco. ALBERT C. WOLLENBERG, Judge. Reversed.

Proceeding in mandamus to compel the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control to vacate a liquor license suspension. Judgment granting writ, reversed.

California Alcoholic Beverages Act

Fair Trade—Mandatory Fair Trading of Liquor Under California Alcoholic Beverages Act—Constitutionality—Alleged Delegation of Legislative Power.—The California Alcoholic Beverages Act, in making it mandatory that liquor manufacturers fair trade their products and imposing penal sanctions on non-complying retailers, did not delegate legislative power to private individuals in violation of the California and United States Constitutions. The statute was not invalidated by the fact that it (1) required the fair trading of all brands, while the general Fair Trade Act left that decision to the discretion of each brand owner, (2) imposed disciplinary action by the state on non-complying retailers instead of granting, like the general Fair Trade Act, a right of action to those injured by violations, (3) gave wine producers an option of submitting retail price lists to the California Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control instead of entering into fair trade contracts, and (4) excluded the sale of beer and over-the-bar drinks from its fair trade provisions.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3480.05.

For the appellant: Stanley Mosk, Attorney General, and Charles A. Barrett, Deputy Attorney General.

Amici Curiae on behalf of the appellant: Athearn, Chandler, Hoffman, Emmett E. Doherty, Arden & Arden, Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, Heller, Ehrman, White & McAuliffe and J. Albert Hutchinson.

For the respondent: Steinhart, Goldberg, Feigenbaum & Ladar.

Amicus Curiae on behalf of the respondent: Samuels, Jacobs & Sills.

[Appeal]

BRAY, Presiding Justice [In full text]: The Board of Equalization of the State of California and its constitutional successor, the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, appeal from a judgment of the superior court ordering the issuance of a writ of mandate commanding the department to vacate its decision imposing a 15-day suspension against the off-sale general licenses of petitioner Allied Properties and that certain accusations against said petitioner be dismissed.*†

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

[Mandatory Fair Trading—Constitutionality]

Are sections 24750, 24757, 24850 and 24881, Business and Professions Code (formerly §§ 55.5, 55.6 and 55.65 of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act (Stats. 1935, p. 1123, as amended Stats. 1937, p. 2126)) and rule 99 of the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, which require the manufacturer or his agent, wholesaler or rectifier to file fair trade contracts, unconstitutional in that they delegate legislative power and authority in violation of article IV, section 1, California Constitution, and the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution and of article I of the California Constitution? Primarily the question is whether the state may lawfully provide that all distilled spirits and wines be sold at the retail level only pursuant to fair trade contracts or schedules filed with the department.

RECORD

[Judgment Below]

Petitioner Allied Properties owns the Plaza and Clift Hotels in San Francisco and the Santa Barbara Biltmore in Santa Barbara. In 1953 accusations were filed against petitioner charging it with violation of the then sections 55.5, 55.6 and 55.65, A. B. C. Act, and department rule 99. The sections prohibit the sale of distilled spirits by an off-sale license holder except at the prices established by fair trade contracts filed as therein required, and also prohibits the sale of wines unless sold at the fair trade contract prices or at the price set in price schedules filed as therein required. The wholesalers, distributors or rectifiers of the alcoholic beverages that are within the purview of the statute must file price schedules with the authority and the retailer to whom they sell must comply with these price schedules or be faced with the penal sanctions of the act. At the hearing of the accusation petitioner stipulated to the facts as charged in the accusations, and readily admitted the sale at less than the fair trade prices. Petitioner's licenses were suspended for 15 days. Thereupon petitioner filed a petition for writ of mandate in the superior court. That court held that the statute requiring retail sales of distilled spirits at fair trade prices is unconstitutional.

IS THERE AN UNLAWFUL DELEGATION OF LEGISLATIVE POWER?

[Price Fixing—Legislative Standards]

Petitioner and the amicus curiae in support of petitioner concede that the Legislature, in the proper exercise of the police power of the state, has the right to fix retail prices of distilled liquors and wines for the protection of the general welfare. They contend that in doing so, however, (1) the Legislature cannot delegate the power to fix such prices to private individuals or groups, and (2) that it cannot delegate that power without establishing ascertainable standards as a guide for the exercise thereof. They further contend that the statute in question here violates both of those principles.

* Subsequent to the filing of the writ of mandate proceeding in the superior court against the Board of Equalization, the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, by constitutional amendment, succeeded the Board of Equalization. Herein "department" refers to whichever entity was acting at the time.

† Four amici curiae briefs were filed in support of appellant, one in support of respondent.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

As said in Scovill Mfg. Co. v. Skaggs etc. Drug Stores [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,234], 45 Cal. 2d 881, 887 [291 P. 2d 936],

> "It is beyond question that this state has aligned itself with the great majority of its sister states and with the decisions of the federal courts in sustaining the constitutionality of fair trade laws . . ."

In that case the defendant was selling products at retail below the fair trade prices established by the plaintiff manufacturer in contracts made by the plaintiff with its buyers and wholesalers. The contracts complied with section 16902, Business and Professions Code, the general fair trade contracts section. The defendant was not a party to any of these contracts. Section 16904, Business and Professions Code, provided:

> "Wilfully and knowingly advertising, offering for sale or selling any commodity at less than the price stipulated in any contract entered into pursuant to this chapter, whether the person so advertising, offering for sale or selling is or is not a party to such contract, is unfair competition and is actionable at the suit of any person damaged thereby."

The constitutionality of those sections was there attacked upon the same grounds that the constitutionality of the statute in question here is attacked. The court said (pp. 884-885):

> "All of the constitutional objections raised by the defendant have been expressly or by necessary implication decided against it. In Max Factor & Co. v. Kunsman (1936), 5 Cal. 2d 446 [55 P. 2d 177], this court held that the Fair Trade Act, and in particular the provision as to nonsigners, was a proper exercise of the police power; that it was not arbitrary nor unreasonable legislation, and that it was not a denial of due process of law nor of the equal protection of the laws. That decision (see also Pyroil Sales Co., Inc. v. Pep Boys, M. M. & J., 5 Cal. 2d 784 [55 P. 2d 194]) was in effect affirmed unanimously by the United States Supreme Court in Pep Boys, M. M. & J. v. Pyroil Sales Co., 299 U. S. 198 [57 S. Ct. 147, 81 L. Ed. 122], on the authority of Old Dearborn Distributing Co. v. Seagram Distillers Corp. (1936), 299 U. S. 183 [57 S. Ct. 139, 81 L. Ed. 109, 106 A. L. R. 1476]. The last case cited upheld the validity of the Illinois Fair Trade Act, which is substantially identical with the California act."

It then discussed the California cases and those in other states and the federal cases on the subject, and said (pp. 885, 888):

> "From the foregoing it also appears that the question whether the Fair Trade Act is a reasonable and non-discriminatory exercise of the police power in the field of interstate commerce has been covered by the federal and state legislation and settled by court decisions. . . . Nor is there a delegation of legislative power to fix prices in the present case. The act is only a legislative declaration that contracts between private parties establishing certain retail prices is not against public policy.
>
> "Although the question of delegation of legislative power was not expressly considered in the Max Factor case, the United States Supreme Court in Old Dearborn Distributing Co. v. Seagram Distillers Corp., supra, 299 U. S. 183, 194, rejected the contention that in fair trade acts 'there is an unlawful delegation of power to private persons to control the disposition of property of others.' The contention that such delegation does not accord due process of law or violates provisions of state constitutions which vest legislative power in the Legislature only (similar to Cal. Const., art. IV, § 1) has been rejected in several state courts. (Triner Corp. v. McNeil, 363 Ill. 559 [2 N. E. 2d 929]; Goldsmith v. Mead Johnson & Co., 176 Md. 682 [7 A. 2d 176]; Johnson & Johnson v. Weissbard, 121 N. J. Eq. 585 [191 A. 873]; Lilly & Co. v. Saunders, 216 N. C. 163 [4 S. E. 2d 528, 125 A. L. R. 1308]; Weco Products Co. v. Reed Drug Co. supra, 225 Wis. 474; see also 11 Am. Jur., Const. Law, § 221, p. 933.) Here the acts of private parties in entering into contracts for the sale of commodities constitute the facts in contemplation of which the Legislature acted, and upon the existence of which the provisions of the enactment were to be applicable. The private contracts are no more legislative in character than are other acts or conduct of private parties undertaken as a prerequisite to the application of a statute. The consequence that the statute has become applicable, and conduct in violation thereof has become actionable is in no way due to the exercise of any assumed legislative power on the part of the contracting parties. (See Weco Products v. Reed Drug Co., supra, 225 Wis. 474 [224 N. W. 426].) We conclude that there is no delegation of the legislative function in violation of constitutional prohibitions."

(See also Old Dearborn Distributing Co. v. Seagram Distillers Corp. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,141] (1936), 299 U. S. 183 [57

S. Ct. 139, 81 L. Ed. 109, 106 A. L. R. 1476], upholding an Illinois Fair Trade Act similar to the California one.)

People v. Dunn, 80 Cal. 211 [22 P. 140, 13 Am. St. Rep. 118] held that the provisions in an act giving the board of trustees of the California Home for the Feeble Minded and two citizens authority to select a site for such a public home did not constitute a delegation of legislative functions or powers. In Trinity County v. Mendocino County, 151 Cal. 279 [90 P. 685], an act declaring in advance of the work that the line which might be surveyed and marked by a surveyor selected in accordance with its provisions should be the boundary line between the two counties, was held not to be an unlawful delegation of legislative power, the court saying (p. 286):

> "The case is similar in principle to those cases where it is held it is not a delegation of legislative power to commit to some officer, person or board the power to determine the fact that an applicant for some license or privilege is or is not of good character, or possesses or does not possess some other qualification necessary to entitle him, under the law, to the license or privilege, and empowering such officer, person or board, if it shall determine that such person has the necessary qualifications, to forthwith issue the license. In such cases the law declares that a certain class of persons are entitled to the license. The determination of the fact that a particular applicant is of the class described in the law as so entitled, is not a legislative act, but one which is either ministerial or judicial, and, hence, to commit the power to make such determination to any other person or body is not a delegation of legislative power."

[Promotion of Temperance]

Under the other fair trade laws of the state (Bus. and Prof. Code, §§ 16900-16905) the Legislature has given to private parties the right to sue persons who wilfully and knowingly sell any commodity at less than the price stipulated in a fair trade contract, even though such persons are not parties to the contract. In the case of the A. B. C. Fair Trade Act the Legislature gives the department the right to discipline licensees violating the terms of such contract. As it has been held in Scovill Mfg. Co. v. Skaggs etc. Drug Stores, supra [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,234], 45 Cal. 2d 881, 888, that there is no unlawful delegation of legislative power in the other fair trade laws, we can see no reason why the A. B. C. Fair Trade Act should be interpreted differently from the others. Petitioner contends that there is a difference in that in the other fair trade laws the contract between the manufacturer and the retailer is a voluntary one, whereas under the A. B. C. Act the contract is compulsory. But even under the other fair trade laws, so far as they affect nonsigners of contracts which have been entered into between the manufacturer and its buyers and wholesalers, there is a compulsory feature. The nonsigner, if he has knowledge of such contracts, is compelled to charge the prices listed therein. Moreover, the power of the Legislature to regulate the liquor business is much greater than its power to regulate types of business which are not regarded as possessing the possibilities for evil and ill effects upon the public welfare as is the liquor business. Section 22 of article XX of the California Constitution gives the state broad and comprehensive powers to regulate all phases of the liquor business. It provides: "The Legislature may authorize, subject to reasonable restrictions, the sale in retail stores of alcoholic beverages contained in the original packages." The Legislature may even prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. If the business is permitted, its regulation may be drastic, provided only that the regulations are reasonable. (See Cooper v. State Board of Equalization, 137 Cal. App. 2d 672, 679-680 [290 P. 2d 914].) Of course, it could not be reasonable if it were for any reason unconstitutional. The test of reasonableness is not that applicable to ordinary businesses but to the liquor business which requires far more restrictions than the former. (See Cooper v. State Board of Equalization, supra, 137 Cal. App. 2d 672, 679.) The courts presume that legislative acts are valid and will not declare them unconstitutional unless they are clearly repugnant to the organic law. (See 45 Cal. Jur. 2d 624.) Also a statute regulating commercial transactions does not violate the due process clause of either the federal or California Constitutions unless it is proved so unreasonable as to dispel the presumption that it rests upon some rational basis within the knowledge and experience of the legislators. (United States v. Carolene Products Co., 304 U. S. 144, 154 [58 S. Ct. 778, 82 L. Ed. 1234]; In re Fuller, 15 Cal. 2d 425, 428 [102 P. 2d 321].) It is obvious that the purpose of the provisions requiring sale of distilled spirits and wines pursuant to fair trade contracts is to discourage price cutting at the retail level, and thereby prevent the attendant threat of overindulgence by the public who might be enticed into buying particular brands of liquor because of bargain prices offered by a retailer. One of the objects of the A. B. C. Act as set forth in section 1 (now Bus. and Prof. Code, § 23001) is "to promote temperance in the use and consumption of alcoholic beverages." Again it is to insure to the public the fact that when brand liquor is purchased the purchaser will know that his retailer is selling it at the same price as it is sold elsewhere and hence eliminates discrimination against the consumer. The section further states: "It is hereby declared that the subject matter of this division involves in the highest degree the economic, social, and moral well-being and the safety of the State and of all its people. All provisions of this division shall be liberally construed for the accomplishment of these purposes." The restriction is one more aid in the promotion of temperance.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Police Power]

In making the sale of distilled spirits pursuant to fair trade contracts mandatory the Legislature has acted within the police power of the state and within the authority granted by article XX, section 22, California Constitution. We cannot say that the legislative assumption that price stability at the retail level of comparable brands will prohibit price wars and bargain sales and thereby will encourage and promote moderation and temperance in the use of alcoholic beverages is unfounded. On the contrary, it appears that the restriction which prevents use of particular brands of distilled spirits as "loss leaders" which use might increase the consumption of such beverages is a reasonable one.

[Compulsion]

Petitioner relies heavily on State Board of Dry Cleaners v. Thrift-D-Lux Cleaners, Inc., 40 Cal. 2d 436. There the Legislature created a State Board of Dry Cleaners, consisting of seven members, six of whom must be engaged in the dry cleaning business, the seventh a member of the general public. The board was empowered to establish minimum price schedules for the various items of cleaning, dyeing and pressing services. The act provided that violations of the minimum price schedule could be prevented by injunctive relief. The statute was held unconstitutional because it (1) dealt with a business which in nowise was affected with a public interest and the price fixing provision was in nowise an enactment providing for the public health, safety, morals or general welfare and hence there was an improper exercise of the police power; (2) attempted to delegate legislative powers to an administrative board comprised of persons directly interested in the operation of the regulatory rule with no guide for the exercise of the delegated authority. The court held that the delegation was clearly arbitrary. Obviously the first ground could not apply in our case as the liquor business is one affected with a public interest and the restriction here is for the public health, safety, morals and general welfare, and the regulation is a proper exercise of the police power. As the court in Scovill Mfg. Co. v. Skaggs etc. Drug Stores, supra, 45 Cal. 2d at p. 887, pointed out, the California Fair Trade Act is completely dissimilar to the price fixing statute of the Thrift-D-Lux Cleaners case. The court said (pp. 887-888):

> "As held in the Max Factor case and here confirmed the Fair Trade Act is a proper exercise of the police power by the Legislature in the protection of private contractual rights relating to the manufacture and sale of certain classified commodities deemed by the Legislature to require freedom from governmental interference in the economic field. The Dry Cleaners case expressly recognized that to be the basis for the decision in the Max Factor case (40 Cal. 2d 436 at p. 447). Nor is there a delegation of legislative power to fix prices in the present case. The act is only a legislative declaration that contracts between private parties establishing certain retail prices is not against public policy."

[Testing Constitutionality—Method]

The method of interpreting the A. B. C. Act cannot be the same as that used in interpreting the statute involved in the Thrift-D-Lux case. So long as some public interest is found (which of course it is in the liquor business) the method to be used in testing the statute's constitutionality is not that used in the Thrift-D-Lux case, but that used in such cases as Serve Yourself Gas etc. Assn. v. Brock, 39 Cal. 2d 813, and In re Fuller, supra, 15 Cal. 2d 425.

Under the California Fair Trade Act the manufacturer makes two decisions, (1) whether his product should be fair traded, and (2) what the price shall be. Under the A. B. C. Act he can make the second decision only. The Legislature has determined the first decision. As it has been held that there is no delegation of legislative authority to the manufacturer where he has two decisions to make, how can there be such delegation where he has only one of those decisions to make? While the voluntary aspect of the contract under the Fair Trade Act is stressed by petitioner, it should be remembered that it is compulsory that nonsigners of the contract comply with it. In holding such compulsion to be valid the principle of compulsion in fair trade contracts has been established. In the interests of the public welfare it is more important that compulsion be applied to the liquor business than to the ordinary business where strict regulation is not required. In Levine v. O'Connell (1949), 275 App. Div. 217 [88 N. Y. S. 2d 672], affirmed 300 N. Y. 658 [91 N. E. 2d 322], cited by petitioner, and which condemned a New York statute not because the Legislature required liquor to be fair traded, but because the Legislature had delegated to an administrative board the authority to determine whether resale prices should be determined by fair trade contracts, the court said (p. 674):

> "We assume, but without deciding, that it would be within the competence of the legislature to determine that mandatory price-fixing in the sale of alcoholic beverages would be a proper exercise of the police power. The important point for this case is that the legislature has not done so . . ."

[Price Fixing]

The A. B. C. Act does not fix, or authorize anyone to fix, uniform prices for alcoholic beverages, while the dry cleaners' statute did fix uniform prices for the services involved. Section 16720, Business and Professions Code, expressly forbids any agreement or combination to fix uniform prices. The fair trade provisions merely provide for the orderly marketing of distilled spirits by requiring that each brand be fair traded. Each brand owner sets the retail price for his brand alone and for no other brand. Such price is required to be fixed "in fair and open competition with alcoholic beverages of the same general class produced by others . . ."

[Disciplinary Action by State]

The fact that, as contended by petitioner, the general Fair Trade Laws leave the discretion of fair trade prices to each brand owner while the A. B. C. Act requires that all brands of distilled spirits be fair traded, and the fact that the general law gives a right of action to a person damaged by a violator's breach of the fair trade contract while the A. B. C. Act provides for disciplinary action of a licensee violating such contract, do not convert the legislative determination of policy in favor of fair trading liquor into a delegation of legislative power. As it has the right to do in regulating the liquor business, the Legislature provided mandatory price fixing by the distillers, etc., with disciplinary action by the state for failure to comply. The mandatory feature proves to some extent that there is no unlawful delegation of authority. The manufacturer has no discretion, as in the general fair trade situation, in determining whether fair trade prices shall prevail. Nor is the Legislature bound in dealing with the liquor business to apply the same penalties for violations of fair trade contracts as are applied to other types of business. Actually, suspension or revocation of a liquor license is not penal, but disciplinary. (Cornell v. Reilly, 127 Cal. App. 2d 178, 184 [273 P. 2d 572].) Scovill Mfg. Co. v. Skaggs etc. Drug Stores, supra [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,234], 45 Cal. 2d 881, stated, in effect, that fair trade statutes were not primarily designed for the regulation of prices, but were principally designed to protect the property and contract rights of the manufacturer. In the A. B. C. Act this is not the primary purpose. As pointed out before, the primary purpose is to prevent price cutting in the interests of temperance, to regulate the liquor business. The fact that it also protects the property rights of the manufacturer does not make the statute unreasonable nor unconstitutional. Nor is it a price fixing statute any more than the general fair trade statutes are.

[Free Competition]

Nelson v. Reilly [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,326], 88 Cal. App. 2d 303 [198 P. 2d 694], assumed the legality of the then section 55.5, A. B. C. Act. (Apparently its legality was assumed by the parties as it was not challenged except as to the application of the Cartwright Law which the court held could not apply.) There it was contended that at the time rule 99 was amended to make fair trade contracts mandatory, section 55.5, A. B. C. Act, provided that they were permissory. The court pointed out that in 1947 said section 55.6 was added to make such contracts mandatory and held that as now a retailer's duty arose from the statute, and as the rule now imposed the same duty as the statute the question of its previous situation was moot, and the rule could now be enforced.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

In Levine v. O'Connell, supra, 88 N. Y. S. 2d 672, affirmed 91 N. E. 2d 322, it was held that a legislative act which gave a liquor board the discretion to determine whether or not fair trade liquor contracts should be mandatory, was invalid. However, the court indicated that if the Legislature had made fair trading mandatory, the act would have been valid. Thus, the New York court felt that the exercise of the legislative function was in the making of fair trade contracts mandatory, and not in the setting of the price. See Schwartz v. Kelly [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,559], 4 Conn. 176 [99 A. 2d 89], upholding a Connecticut statute requiring the manufacturer to place on its brand label a statement that a minimum consumer retail price had been filed with the liquor control commission, and which made a violation punishable by suspension or revocation of the violator's permit. Even though there were, as contended by petitioner, a delegation of power to the manufacturer, nevertheless such delegation would not be without standards provided by the Legislature. The price set by the manufacturer is what the market will bear, and is determined by the standards present in any market where goods are competing with each other. The standards are those which control prices in any free market. This distinguishes the "price fixing" in the Thrift-D-Lux case. There prices were fixed on a horizontal level for the whole industry. The cost to the consumer was predetermined and no matter to what dry cleaning shop he went the cost would be the same. Under the instant act the cost to the consumer of a bottle of a certain brand will be the same wherever he goes. But the consumer may find that the cost of a comparable brand is not the same as that of the first mentioned brand. The manufacturer of the latter brand may not control the price of the competing brand. The manufacturer's determination of the price of his product will, of course, be affected by other manufacturer's prices for comparable brands, but this is true in any free market, and, in fact, is the crux of free competition. Unquestionably, the Legislature could have set minimum prices for various types of alcoholic beverages. It did not do so. It undoubtedly felt that it is more in the public interest that the prices be not so strictly controlled, and that the prices set in open competition by the manufacturer will be of more benefit to the public than by the Legislature rigidly controlling the price. These standards have controlled our American economy in the past, and presumably have aided the economy in becoming as prosperous as it is. We see no reason why the Legislature may not adopt these standards in the regulation of the liquor business. Here there is no setting of prices multilaterally as in the Thrift-D-Lux case. In fact, the setting of prices among competing manufacturers is made illegal. Retailers are not permitted either under permissive fair trade, or under mandatory fair trade to set their own prices to compete with other retailers. One of the purposes of the regulation is to prevent monopoly by large liquor retailers, particularly multiple unit retailers ("chains") to the ultimate destruction of the smaller neighborhood store. This is in the interest of the public welfare.

While it is true that in leaving competition free at the manufacturing level and the manufacturers may cut prices, it is reasonable to assume that the Legislature believed that such competition would not cause such drastic reductions in prices as might occur at the retail level, there being vastly more retailers than manufacturers.

[Means Adopted by Legislature]

The means adopted by the Legislature to bring about an orderly distribution of liquor at the retail level and to obtain temperance is not arbitrary or discriminatory. For this purpose the Legislature has made mandatory the use of fair trade contracts. The Legislature knew the effect of fair trade contracts when it made fair trade contracts permissible. This legislation has been upheld by the California Supreme Court twice. (Max Factor & Co. v. Kunsman [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,100], 5 Cal. 2d 446 [55 P. 2d 177]; Scovill Mfg. Co. v. Skaggs etc. Drug Stores, supra [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,234], 45 Cal. 2d 881.) The Legislature to accomplish the same effect, although perhaps for a different purpose (see supra), saw fit to make fair trade contracts mandatory in the liquor industry. It cannot be said that this course, to accomplish a desired result, was unreasonable.

[Other State Courts]

Other state courts faced with the problem of the constitutionality of price regulation in the liquor industry have generally held such statutes valid. See 14 A. L. R. 2d 699; Gaine v. Burnett, 122 N. J. L. 39 [4 A. 2d 37] (an administrative rule by the state liquor commissioner which required that alcoholic beverages be fair traded, and that retailers sell at the prices so established, held valid); Nocera Bros. Liquor Mart v. Liquor Control Hear. Board, 81 R. I. 186 [100 A. 2d 652] (statute allowing liquor board to fix prices on a cost plus percentage mark up, held valid); Reeves v. Simons, 289 Ky. 793 [160 S. W. 2d 149] (same); Gipson v. Morley, 217 Ark. 560 [233 S. W. 2d 79] (same).

In Schwartz v. Kelly, supra [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,559], 99 A. 2d 89, contentions similar to most of those made in our case were made and well answered (pp. 91-93):

"In passing upon the constitutionality of a statute, a court is bound to make every presumption and intendment in favor of the statute and to sustain it unless it is clearly invalid. [Citations.] . . . The court's only function is to determine whether the object of the enactment is within the power of the legislature and, if so, whether the particular statute bears a reasonable and substantial relation to the object sought to be accomplished and is neither arbitrary nor discriminatory. (Carroll v. Schwartz, 127 Conn. 126, 129 [14 A. 2d 754].)

"Although the act here in question does not contain a statement of the objects sought to be accomplished, the purposes which the General Assembly had in mind in adopting it are easily discernible. They were both to promote temperance in the consumption of intoxicating liquor and, by stabilizing the industry, to encourage observance of the Liquor Control Act by those who are permitted to sell liquor not to be consumed on the premises. It may reasonably be presumed that, without the establishment of a minimum retail price for brand liquor, price wars among retail dealers are apt to occur. The cutting of prices which occurs during such wars may induce persons to purchase, and therefore consume, more liquor than they would if higher prices were maintained. Moreover, the cutthroat competition which ensues is apt to induce the retailers to commit such infractions of the law as selling to minors and keeping open after hours in order to withstand the economic pressure. To prevent the occurrence of such conditions promotes public health, safety and welfare. Like all reasonable restrictions on the liquor traffic, such a purpose is well within the police power of the state. [Citations.]

"To accomplish this purpose, the General Assembly has, in this instance, adopted the method of permitting wholesalers to fix minimum prices at which each brand of liquor may be sold at retail. Price fixing is well recognized as a method reasonably suited to effectuate such purpose and, therefore, is not a violation of due process. [Citations.] Clearly, the act which requires wholesalers as a condition of doing business in this state to schedule minimum prices at which their brands of liquor may be sold and prohibits permittees from selling at retail for less than those prices is within the police power of the state. . . .

"The second broad claim of the plaintiffs is that the act is unconstitutional because it delegates legislative powers both to the wholesalers of intoxicating liquor and to the liquor control commission without prescribing standards to control the exercise of those powers. [Citations.] The act affects the wholesalers in only two ways. In the first place, it prohibits their doing business in this state until they have filed their schedules of retail prices. In the second place, it protects the property rights which they have in their respective brand names by prohibiting the sale of their branded liquors at cut rates. In filing the schedule of minimum retail prices to be charged for their liquor, they are not legislating. They are merely complying with the law enacted by the General Assembly. Their fixing of prices, by itself, does not have the force of law. It is the General Assembly that has directed that retailers shall not sell for less than the established prices. There has been no delegation of legislative powers to the wholesalers. Old Dearborn Distributing Co. v. Seagram Distillers Corporation, 299 U. S. 183, 194 [57 S. Ct. 139, 81 L. Ed. 109, 106 A. L. R. 1476]."

Schwegmann Bros. v. Louisiana Board etc. Control (La.) [43 So. 2d 248, 14 A. L. R. 2d

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

680], and Scarborough v. Webb's Cut Rate Drug Co., 150 Fla. 754 [8 So. 2d 913], have held price regulation to be unconstitutional. They are against the weight of authority. Moreover, we deem the reasoning of the majority cases better, particularly in view of the attitude of the California Supreme Court as expressed in Scovill Mfg. Co. v. Skaggs etc. Drug Stores, supra [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,234], 45 Cal. 2d 881.

[Optional Requirement]

Under Business and Professions Code, sections 24750 through 24757, manufacturers of distilled spirits (liquor) are required to enter fair trade contracts, whereas under sections 24850 through 24881 manufacturers and producers of wine have the option of submitting retail price lists with the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, rather than entering fair trade contracts. This difference would not seem controlling since under either scheme the manufacturers are the ones who "fix" the retail prices. If fair trading is legal (and it is concluded that it is), the optional requirement of submitting price lists would also seem allowable. The sections relating to beer (§§ 25000-25010) are inapposite to this litigation because petitioner was not charged with violations of these sections.

[Exclusions]

The fact that the Legislature has not seen fit to apply fair trade requirements to the sale of beer and over the bar drinks does not invalidate the restrictions which the Legislature did impose. Historically there has always been a distinction in the manner of regulating the sale of beer as compared to other alcoholic beverages. As far as fair trading over the bar drinks is concerned, the obviously many practical difficulties of making and enforcing such regulations could well have actuated the Legislature. The answer to somewhat similar contentions made in Miller v. Wilson, 236 U. S. 373, 383-384 [35 S. Ct. 342, 59 L. Ed. 628, L. R. A. 1915F 829], is applicable here: "The contention as to the various omissions which are noted in the objections here urged ignores the well-established principle that the legislature is not bound, in order to support the constitutional validity of its regulation, to extend it to all cases which it might possibly reach. Dealing with practical exigencies, the legislature may be guided by experience. Patsone v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 138, 144 [34 S. Ct. 281, 58 L. Ed. 539]. It is free to recognize degrees of harm, and it may confine its restrictions to those classes of cases where the need is deemed to be clearest. As has been said, it may 'proceed cautiously, step by step,' and 'if an evil is specially experienced in a particular branch of business' it is not necessary that the prohibition 'should be couched in all-embracing terms.'"

[Judgment Reversed]

The judgment is reversed.

WOOD, (FRED B.), J., concurred.

[Dissenting Opinion]

HANSON, Justice pro tem. [In full text]: I dissent from the opinion and judgment of the court in this case, and wish simply to state the grounds of my dissent, with a few observations thereon, without any attempt to do more. I concede, of course, that the result reached by the majority of the court probably is a desirable one if the aim is to achieve temperance, but I have difficulty in understanding how it can be deduced that the ruling does not trench upon constitutional principles. We must never forget that decisions which are classed as desirable must nevertheless meet and square with those principles embodied in our Constitution—state and federal. In 1919 temperance was sought to be achieved by legislation taking the form of a constitutional amendment which made the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors illegal. That amendment, the 18th, did not reach the objective, in the view of the majority of the citizens of our nation, and hence was repealed in 1933. We now have a statute before us for interpretation purporting to have much the same objective in view. That it restricts free enterprise cannot be gainsaid; that it may, if upheld, create a measure of greater temperance, as the Legislature hoped, is possible; but that we should not whittle down constitutional safeguards to achieve a single desirable result seems to me equally clear. What is more, or so it seems to me, is that our free enterprise system should not enrich a small minority at the expense of the great majority. In the statute before us the "brand" liquor dealer is benefited and the consumer is harmed so far as "price" is concerned.

[Delegation of Price Fixing Power]

Turning to the legal aspects of the case we find that under the statute here involved no distiller or brand owner of distilled liquors can sell his product in California unless he schedules the minimum price at which the retailer may sell his products within the state, and, having done so, a retailer must abide by the price so set. This then gives to the original purveyor a price monopoly; that is, he not only must set his own minimum price to the retailer on his product regardless of its intrinsic value but require the retailers to sell at or above the retail price he names as the minimum price. But this is not all; it is the further duty of the state through the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act to enforce the scheduled price through its penal sanctions, one of which is to suspend the retail dealer's liquor license, if and when he violates the act. Granted, for the sake of argument that the trend of judicial decisions in this state and elsewhere favors the view of the majority of this court, no decision is extant in this state that goes as far as the majority does in this case.

In the legislative act before us, for interpretation and decision, the Legislature has delegated the right to fix the minimum price at which a retail liquor dealer, with a valid license, can sell a "brand" or "non-brand" bottle of liquor, not to a board or officer of the state, but to a private individual. Thus, the very person or corporation that manufactures or distributes the product sets the price at which the retailer may and must sell without any right of any kind or character on the part of any representative of the state to challenge it for price, quality, or otherwise. This to me is uncontrolled monopoly run riot with state sanction.

[¶ 69,402] The American Securit Company v. Shatterproof Glass Corporation.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. Nos. 12,706, 12,739. Argued February 17, 1959. Filed July 14, 1959. Amended August 3, 1959.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Delaware. EDWIN D. STEEL, JR., District Judge.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Patents—Package Licensing—Payment of Royalties on Expired Patents—Patent Misuse and Violation of Government Consent Decree—Defense to Patent Infringement Suit.—A company's policy of compulsory package licensing constituted a violation of a Government antitrust consent decree entered against the company and constituted a misuse of patents of such a character as to prohibit the company from maintaining a suit for the alleged infringement of four patents owned by it and included among some thirty-five patents covered by the consent decree. There was no question that the company maintained a policy of requiring its licensees to accept package licensing. The defendant in the infringement suit, amounts of royalty for certain patents not being obtainable from the company, made a bona fide application to the company for licensing under the decree, which required the company to license any, some, or all of its patents covered in the litigation. The question of whether or not the defendant made a bona fide application for licensing was material only by way of corroboration of the company's policy. If the defendant's hands were unclean in that it made no bona fide application, that uncleanliness would not render the company's hands clean if it is unlawfully extending a patent monopoly. The court noted that none of the patents covered by the consent decree, which included the four patents sued on, was in the record, and that, therefore, it could not tell whether patents which the company had offered to the defendant as a package were dominant in the flat glass-making art. It appeared that some of the patents were apparatus or process patents in the art. However, the court further noted that it was not presently concerned with the issue of whether those patents offered by the company to the defendant would sustain a charge of violation of the antitrust laws. The conjoint licensing by mandate of the patentee of two or more apparatus or process patents in the same art, whatever the nature of their disclosures, whether for basic inventions or mere minor improvements, will sustain a charge of patent misuse.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

"Each patent gives its owner a monopoly in respect to its disclosures, so much and no more. It is a grant of the exclusive right to manufacture, use and sell the invention which is disclosed. That invention is what the patent grant protects by the monopoly, not that invention plus some embellishment, improvement, or alternate product or process, which also happens to be patented. * * * Each monoply must stand on its own footing. * * * Mandatory package licensing is no more than the exercise of the power created by a particular patent monopoly to condition the licensing of that patent upon the acceptance of another patent but that is too much. The protection, or monopoly, which is given to the first patent stops where the monopoly of the second begins." Also, a provision of the company's standard licensing agreement which provided that such agreement shall continue "in full force and effect to the expiration of the last to expire of any" of the company's patents set forth in the agreement constituted a patent misuse. It "extends the payment of royalties of patents under patents which may expire to the expiration date of that patent most recently granted to" the company. The company, therefore, misused its patents, and such misuse constituted a valid defense to the company's infringement suit.

Also, the company violated the Government consent decree, which prohibited the company from including any restriction or condition whatsoever in any license or sublicense granted by it and from granting any license which provided as a condition that the applicant should accept a license under another patent owned or controlled by the company. The company's actions demonstrated a violation of the decree's conditions. The court did not agree with a contrary ruling by the court which had entered the decree.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2013.460, 2013.500; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9041.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decree—Patent Misuse and Violation of Decree—Jurisdiction of Court Which Did Not Enter Decree to Determine Issues—Power to Enjoin Relitigation of Issues in Court Which Entered Decree.—The United States District Court for the District of Delaware had the jurisdiction to construe and interpret, in a patent infringement action, the provisions of a Government consent decree entered in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, for the purpose of determining whether or not the plaintiff in the infringement action violated provisions of the decree. The defendant in the infringement action was not a party to the proceeding in the Ohio court when the consent decree was entered, and it did not subsequently become a party to that proceeding. The Delaware court had jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject matter and was entitled to adjudicate the issues presented. An order of the Ohio court, construing the provisions of the decree differently from the Delaware court, was entered after the Delaware court's rulings. The reviewing court noted that while the interpretation given to the decree by the Ohio court, which framed the decree, was entitled to great weight, it could not agree with that interpretation.

An order of the Delaware court enjoining the plaintiff in the infringement action from taking any action in the Ohio court (in the Government action) "which will seek a determination, finding or any other type of adjudication or judicial expression as against * * * [the defendant in the infringement suit] which is in conflict with any one or more of the * * * views" expressed by the Delaware court was affirmed.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8401, 8421; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9041.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Antitrust Law Violations as Defense—Unfair Competition Claims—Misuse of Patents and Violation of Government Consent Decree—Relation Between Patent and Unfair Competition Claims.—The dismissal of unfair competition claims asserted by a patentee in its patent infringement suit, where it had been held that the patentee was not entitled to enforce its patents because of its misuse of the patents and actions in violation of a Government antitrust consent decree, was affirmed on the basis of the trial court's opinion. The trial court had held that the unfair competition claims were related to the patent claims, and that, since the patentee could not enforce its patents against the defendant, the defendant's alleged acts of unfair competition with respect to those patents did not constitute actionable wrongs. In other words, unless the patentee was entitled to enforce is patents against the defendant, the defendant's alleged acts of unfair competition constituted no invasion of any right possessed by the patentee.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9041.640.

For the appellant: John L. Seymour and Joseph W. Burns, New York, N. Y.

For the appellee: William C. McCoy, Jr., Cleveland, Ohio.

Affirming decisions of the U. S. District Court, District of Delaware, 1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,275 and 69,274 and 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,802.

Before Biggs, Chief Judge, and McLaughlin and Kalodner, Circuit Judges.

Opinion of the Court

[Decree Against Plaintiff]

By Biggs, Chief Judge [In full text]: The background of the appeals at bar is complicated.[1] We begin with facts relating to the so-called "Toledo decree" as follows. The United States charged The American Securit Company, the plaintiff in the case at bar, and certain other corporate defendants, with violations of the antitrust laws of the United States in connection with certain patents for the tempering of glass owned or controlled by them. This resulted, on October 30, 1948, in a final judgment by consent decree entered by Judge Kloeb in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, Western Division at Toledo, against Securit and other defendants named in that suit, Civil Action No. 5239 [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,323], the Ohio suit.

[Compulsory Licensing Provision]

The consent decree provided that if a request for license was made to one of the patentees, defendants in the Ohio suit, including Securit, for use of "any, some, or all" of the patents covered by that litigation and an agreement as to the royalty to be paid by the applicant could not be reached between the patentee and the applicant for a license within sixty days of the request, the applicant could apply to the Ohio District Court to fix a reasonable royalty. In the meantime, pending the fixing of a royalty rate, the applicant should be entitled to make use of the patent or patents without being charged with infringement and without payment of royalties. The decree stated also that the burden of proof should rest on the owner of the patent to establish the reasonableness of the royalty demanded. The decree provided as well that either the applicant or the owner of the patent could apply to the Ohio court to fix an interim royalty rate, the decree stating further that:

> "Where an interim license or sublicense has been issued pursuant to this Subsection, reasonable royalty rates, if any, as finally determined by the Court shall be retroactive for the applicant and all other licensees under the same patents to the date the applicant filed his application with the Court."

The Ohio court also retained jurisdiction for the purposes of making such further orders or directions as might be necessary to construe or carry out the purposes of the decree. Any party to the judgment, including, of course, Securit, could apply for a construction of the Toledo consent decree. Section XIV(B) of the consent decree provided in substance that each of the corporate defendants was restrained from including any restriction or condition in any license or sublicense granted by it subject to certain exceptions not pertinent here.

[Negotiations for License]

On March 20, 1951, negotiations were opened by Shatterproof Glass Corporation with an inquiry to Securit respecting the possibilities of obtaining a license under certain patents owned by Securit. Correspondence continued between the two corporations until February 1955. It appears from the correspondence between the two companies that Securit did not desire to license Shatterproof under any of the patents unless it licensed Shatterproof under all of them, as set out and described in "Schedule A" attached to Securit's Standard Licensing Agreement referred to more specifically hereafter. Securit offered to Shatterproof the Standard Licensing Agreement which Securit had employed with several other licensees. The royalty for the entire package of patents was to be two cents (2¢) per square foot of glass manufactured and sold by the licensee regardless of the number of patents actually used. Correspondence between Shatterproof and Securit ceased temporarily on July 12, 1951. About September 1952, it appears that Shatterproof installed equipment for the manufacture of tempered flat glass. On March 4, 1953, Shatterproof renewed the correspondence and in its letter to Securit requested licenses under the Toledo decree and asked for royalty under four different combinations of patents. Securit's reply of March 19, 1953, indicated that that company would issue licenses restricted to patents specified by Shatterproof but that the royalty would be the same, 2¢ per square foot, whether one or more patents would be used by the licensee.

[1] A factual history is set out in the opinion of Judge Steel of the court below. [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,274, 69,275], 166 F. Supp. 813, 818-822. See also the opinion of Chief Judge Leahy, [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,802], 154 F. Supp. 890 (1957).

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

It appears that Shatterproof commenced commercial production of glass in June 1953, and has not paid any royalty for the use of the patents to date.

[Infringement Action—Defense]

The suit at bar was commenced on March 7, 1955, and contained six counts. Counts I to IV, inclusive, mutatis mutandis, alleged that Shatterproof constructed apparatus infringing four individual patents[2] and thereby deprived Securit of profits. Counts V and VI of Securit's complaint in the court below were designed to state causes of action based on unfair competition growing out of the alleged infringements and asserted that the negotiations initiated and carried on by Shatterproof with Securit were spurious, not looking toward securing licenses but were instituted in order to make use of the patents without paying royalties to Securit. Securit sought an accounting, damages and an injunction. Shatterproof filed an answer to this complaint, denying the validity of the patents or their infringement, and by way of affirmative defenses, asserted that Securit was insisting on package licensing and thereby (1) was itself indulging in misuse of patents, and (2) was in violation of the Toledo decree. Shatterproof also counterclaimed for a declaratory judgment to have the patents adjudged invalid and not infringed.

Several affidavits were executed on behalf of the respective parties. Extensive depositions were taken. The Toledo consent decree was introduced, as were portions of the proceeding in the Ohio court. Some of these documents are referred to more particularly hereinafter.

On June 13, 1955, Securit filed motions in the instant case to dismiss the defenses of patent misuse and violation of the Toledo decree. These motions were denied on May 25, 1956, in an opinion letter by Judge Leahy. Appropriate orders were entered.[3]

[Ohio Court Proceedings]

On July 25, 1955, Shatterproof filed an application in the Ohio court seeking, inter alia, a determination of a reasonable royalty for the patents sued on in the court below and for an order requiring Securit to comply with the Toledo decree. On September 14, 1955, Securit filed a motion in the case at bar to enjoin Shatterproof from prosecuting its application to the Ohio court referred to in the preceding sentence. On October 6, 1955, the United States filed in the Ohio court a petition for an order to construe and enforce the consent decree, alleging that Securit's action in bringing the suit at bar against Shatterproof was instituted as an attempt to defeat the Toledo decree and was barred by it and prayed that Securit be permanently enjoined from taking action in any court to prevent any applicant for a license from exercising any rights conferred by the Toledo decree. On October 7, 1955, the

[2] The patents were: United States Patent No. 2,131,406, Mosmieri; United States Patent No. 2,167,294, Despret; United States Patent No. 2,093,040, Eckert, expired September 14, 1954; and United States Patent No. 2,303,749, Long.

[3] Addressing himself to the second defense, Judge Leahy stated: "This defense refers to the Toledo decree and asserts its [Shatterproof's] right to a royalty-free license. Under this defense defendant shows that it has attempted to negotiate for several years with plaintiff in order to fix some reasonable royalty base for a license from plaintiff to defendant. Under the original Toledo decree any party may operate under plaintiff's patents during the period of negotiations for a license and before the license is actually granted. Here, on the record before me, it would appear defendant has made a bona fide effort to obtain a license." These orders are also appealed from as appears at a later point in this opinion.

United States intervened in the suit at bar and filed a "Representation" in which it asked the court to refrain from taking any further action pending a decision by the Ohio court on the petition of the United States filed therein which we have referred to in this paragraph. On October 10, 1955, the court below entered an order denying Securit's motion to restrain Shatterproof from prosecuting its application in the Ohio court and staying the case at bar until after the determination by the Ohio court of the petition of the United States filed therein. On October 19, 1955, Judge Kloeb, of the Ohio court, delivered an oral opinion in which he stated his reasons for declining jurisdiction.[4] On December 13, 1955, Judge Kloeb dismissed the petition of the United States and the application of Shatterproof seeking respectively an injunction against Securit from taking any action in any court preventing an applicant for license from exercising any rights conferred by the Toledo decree and a determination of reasonable royalties. On January 20, 1956, Securit filed a motion in the court below entitled a "Motion to Proceed", based upon Judge Kloeb's actions in the Ohio suit.

[Summary Judgment]

On December 26, 1956, Shatterproof filed a motion in the court below for summary judgment to dismiss the patent infringement counts, Counts I through IV, urging misuse and violation of the Toledo decree as grounds for the dismissal. Securit opposed the motion for summary judgment. On February 20, 1957, the defendant Shatterproof moved for dismissal of Counts V and VI on the ground that they failed to state a claim upon which relief could have been granted. On July 19, 1957, Judge Leahy filed an opinion on the motion of December 26, 1956, concluding that Securit's policy of refusing to grant a license under one or more of its patents, unless a license was taken under all in the package for a fixed royalty, constituted (1) unlawful coercion and an illegal extension of patent monopoly and (2) a violation of the Toledo decree, and that for these reasons Securit was barred from enforcing its patent rights in the instant case.[5] Judge Leahy stated that he would grant summary judgment under Rule 56, Fed. R. Civ. Proc., 28 U. S. C., on Counts I through IV of the complaint. Judge Leahy, however, entered no order or decree.[6]

[Other Ohio Court Proceedings]

On July 9, 1958, Securit filed a petition to the Ohio court and referred to Judge Leahy's opinion which stated, as we have said, that the court below would grant Shatterproof's motion for summary judgment, and also to a suit brought by Securit against Hamilton Glass Company, Inc. in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Indiana (TH55-C-37) in which Securit alleged that Hamilton had infringed certain patents covered by the Toledo decree. In this suit Hamilton had filed a counterclaim and had alleged unfair competition, monopolization and restraint of trade by Securit. The Indiana district court found that Securit was barred from maintaining its suits against Hamilton because Securit had misused its patents and had violated the Toledo decree. The Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit reversed but took the position, however, that the Indiana District Court had the authority to construe the consent decree for the purpose of adjudicating a charge of misuse of patents based on alleged violation of the consent decree. In its petition of July 9, 1958, Securit alleged that both the Delaware and the Indiana courts misinterpreted the consent decree by holding that Securit's refusal to grant licenses except by way of the [4] Judge Kloeb stated in part: "It [the action by Shatterproof in applying to the Ohio Court to fix a reasonable royalty rate] is somewhat like a little fellow who annoys his neighbor's boy, taunts and berates him, and finally puts a stick on his shoulder. When the other fellow knocks it off he runs to mamma and hides under her skirts.

"I don't believe I want to accept jurisdiction under these circumstances. It seems to me the Court is being used as an alternative recourse, as a last resort."

[5] Judge Leahy considered Securit's offer to license its patents individually, but stated that the result of such an offer was also an unlawful coercion on the licensee. He did not, however, consider the nature of the patents involved, e.g., whether they were patents for alternate methods of manufacture of tempered flat glass or the impact of package licensing when all patents relate to manufacture of a single product, if such were the case.

[6] Judge Leahy stated: "For the foregoing reasons, defendant's motion for summary judgment as to Counts I through IV of the Complaint is granted. An appropriate order may be submitted but only after there is a determination by trial, or otherwise, of the remaining counts in plaintiff's complaint." [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,802] 154 F. Supp. 890, 898.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

package was a violation of the Toledo decree.[7, 8] On August 19, 1958, Judge Kloeb, pursuant to Securit's petition issued an order to show cause to the Attorney General of the United States, Shatterproof, and the Hamilton Glass Company why Securit's petition should not be granted, and set the matter down for hearing on September 16, 1958.

On September 3, 1958, Shatterproof filed a motion in the court below to enjoin Securit from prosecuting further its petition in the Ohio court until termination of the action in the court below and the disposition of any appeal. On September 15, 1958, the court below, by Judge Steel, concluded that its power to grant injunctive relief was not negatived by United States Gypsum Co. v. National Gypsum Co. [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,627], 352 U. S. 457 (1957), though conceding that the Ohio court, having rendered the consent decree, was peculiarly competent to construe it. The court below was of the opinion that because Securit had selected the Delaware forum it should be restricted to it, and enjoined Securit from taking any action under its petition of July 8, 1958, to the Ohio court. Nonetheless a hearing was held before Judge Kloeb on September 16, 1958. Shatterproof came into court and offered the injunction issued by Judge Steel the preceding day for the information of Judge Kloeb but took no further part in the proceedings. Judge Kloeb delivered an oral opinion[9] in which he concluded that there was no violation of the consent decree by the package licensing plan followed by Securit for the preceding ten years.

[Dismissal of Suit]

On September 22, 1958, Judge Steel, finding that there was no just reason for delay, and acting on Judge Leahy's opinion[10] of July 19, 1957, filed on the motion for summary judgment, entered an order dismissing Securit's Counts I through IV, under Rule 54(b), Fed. R. Civ. Proc. Judge Steel, employing the procedure required by Rule 54(b), also dismissed Counts V and VI, the unfair competition counts, basing this dismissal on the point that the adjudication that Securit could not enforce its patents against Shatterproof was conclusive as to claims of unfair competition. Judge Steel also denied a motion by Securit to amend the complaint, the amendment being designed primarily to buttress the unfair competition counts. A motion by Securit to dismiss the counterclaim filed by Shatterproof is still pending, as are applications for counsel fees. The court below suggested that since, in its view, the misuse issue was settled by the judgment dismissing Counts I to IV inclusive that judgment made the invalidity and non-infringement issues of Shatterproof's counterclaim "probably moot".[11]

[Appeals]

The appeal at our No. 12,706 is taken from the order of September 15, 1958, granting an injunction against Securit. The appeal at our No. 12,739 is taken from the final judgment dismissing Counts I through IV and Counts V and VI, and from the following interim orders: (1) order of Judge Leahy of May 12, 1955, allowing Shatterproof to file an answer out of time, (2) order of Judge Leahy denying Securit's motion to dismiss Shatterproof's defense of misuse, (3) order of Judge Leahy denying Securit's motion to dismiss Shatterproof's second defense, non-compliance with the Toledo decree, and (4) order of Judge Steel denying Securit's motion to file an amended complaint.

[Ohio Court Rulings]

On September 29, 1958, the Ohio court by Judge Kloeb, following his oral opinion of September 16, 1958 [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,147], made findings of fact and conclusions of law, construed the consent decree

[7] The precise allegation was as follows: "The Delaware and Indiana Courts have misinterpreted this Court's decree and have ruled that Petitioner violated the decree by (1) licensing all its patents in a single package, and (2) refusing to license less than all the patents for less than the royalty charged for the package."

[8] The decision of the Indiana court was reversed by the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,018], 254 F. (2d) 889 (1958), primarily on the ground that the case was not ripe for summary judgment.

[9] 119 U. S. P. Q. 86 (1958).

[10] See again 154 F. Supp. 890.

[11] The order and the judgments first referred to are appealable. The three considerations which would lead to a different conclusion, set out in Panichella v. Pennsylvania Railroad Co., 252 F. 2d 452 (3 Cir. 1958) are absent in the case at bar. The interim orders are appealable also since they are incidental to the judgment and the order first referred to.

of October 30, 1948, and held that a grant by Securit of a license to use all of the patents in its package under a flat or single royalty for all patents licensed would not violate the consent decree whether such licensing was or was not called a "package"; that Securit did not violate the consent decree by advising "an applicant" that it would not license an individual patent for less than the royalty charged for all of its patents; that Sections XIV and XVII of the consent decree do not require Securit to set a royalty on each individual patent subject to the consent decree and that Securit could set a flat royalty on "any, some, or all of its patents", that any dissatisfied applicant for a patent might apply to the Ohio court for relief; that Securit's practice of granting to any applicant a license to use any, some, or all of its patents for a flat royalty of 2 cents per square foot of glass tempered was reasonable and nondiscriminatory; that Section XIV(C) and Section XIV(D) did not provide an applicant with a free license to use patents subject to the consent decree but did provide that if a bona fide written application for a license were made to the patent owner, the applicant could commence using the patents, and any royalty agreed to by the applicant and patent owner or fixed by the court should be retroactive to the date the applicant commenced to use the patents; and that the objective of the consent decree was to prevent practices which violated the antitrust laws. The Ohio court also ruled that none of Securit's licensing practices, as described in the petition, and that none of the provisions of Securit's standard licensing contract violated the consent decree. The Ohio court held also that despite the voluminous exchange of correspondence between Securit and Shatterproof in which Shatterproof ostensibly was applying for licenses, Shatterproof had not made a bona fide application for a license; i. e., that Shatterproof's application was "not made in good faith."

The foregoing describes sufficiently the litigation in the court below and the proceedings in the Ohio court.

I

[Basic Issue]

The substantial issue presented by the appeals at bar is whether package licensing, compulsory, as distinguished from voluntary, insofar as the applicant for a license is concerned, is a violation of the consent decree entered by the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, Western Division, on October 30, 1948 (United States v. Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Company, et al., Civil Action No. 5239), or constituted a misuse of patents of such a character as to prohibit American Securit Company from maintaining a suit in the court below for the alleged infringement of four patents owned by it and included among some thirty-five patents owned by Securit covered by the consent decree entered by the Ohio court. The court below resolved this major issue in favor of Shatterproof and against Securit on motion for summary judgment. Rule 56, Fed. R. Civ. Proc., 28 U. S. C.

[Preliminary Issues]

Prior to deciding the issue referred to, other preliminary questions require discussion and disposition. Is there present a genuine issue of material fact as to whether it was the policy of Securit to license only by way of package licensing? Rule 56(c). We conclude, as did the court below, that there was not. There is no doubt but that Securit has maintained the policy of requiring its licensees to accept package licensing. Ingouf, Vice-President and Treasurer of Securit, testifying by deposition on July 26, 1956, was asked on direct examination as to whether Securit would grant licenses for individual patents, and replied: "We do not grant a license on that basis." [12] The record shows that no licenses were granted to any company by Securit except under its Standard Licensing Agreement providing for package licensing. The correspondence between Securit and Shatterproof demonstrates the refusal of Securit to set royalties on specified groups of patents covered by the Toledo consent decree.[13] We are of the opinion, particularly in view of Securit's [12] See Deposition of Mr. Robert Ingouf, Docket Item No. 102, pp. 121, 163-165. See also id. at pp. 309-310.

[13] See "Stipulation Re Certain Letters" and Securit's Standard Licensing Agreement, Docket Item No. 32. We conclude, as did the court below, that Securit's offer to license any patent at the rate of 2¢ per square foot of glass manufactured thereunder was a mere "catalyst" to compel Shatterproof to accept the package. 154 F. Supp. at p. 895.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

stated policy referred to in the preceding paragraph, that no genuine issue of material fact lurks in this phase of the case. Cf. International Salt Co. v. United States [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,635], 332 U. S. 392 (1947), at pp. 396, 398. We are also of the view, as apparently was the court below, though it did not expressly determine this question, that Shatterproof, insofar as it could, amounts of royalty for specified groups of patents not being obtainable by it from Securit, made a bona fide application to Securit for licensing under the Toledo decree.[14, 15] Indeed, if we correctly apprehend the law, whether Shatterproof made a bona fide application to Securit for licensing is material only by way of corroboration of Securit's settled policy, as found by the court below, of licensing only by way of package. Cf. Morton Salt Company v. Suppiger Co. [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,176], 314 U. S. 488, 494 (1942). Furthermore, if Shatterproof's hands be unclean in that it made no bona fide application to Securit for licensing, that uncleanliness will not render Securit's hands clean if it is unlawfully extending a patent monopoly.

[Patents Involved]

We come, therefore, finally, to the naked question: Whether Securit's mandatory package licensing per se constitutes a misuse of patents and a violation of the Toledo consent decree? We point out that not a single one of the patents covered by the consent decree, which includes the four patents sued on by Securit in the instant case, is in the record before us. An examination of "Schedule B.5.", attached to and made a part of the consent decree, demonstrates that at least thirty-one of the patents and one patent application owned by Securit and included in "Schedule A", attached to and made a part of Securit's Standard Licensing Agreement are included in the consent decree. From the descriptive titles of Securit's patents contained in the consent decree and Securit's Standard Licensing Agreement, it appears affirmatively that at least some of these patents are apparatus or process patents in the flat glass-making art. An examination of the consent decree and such portions of the record of the proceedings in the Ohio court as are before us, limited though they may be, nonetheless show that Securit's patents covered by the consent decree and included in the group of patents sought to be licensed by Securit to Shatterproof as a package, covered at least a portion of the flat glass-making art. We cannot tell on the present record whether the patents which Securit offered to Shatterproof as a package are dominant in that art but we are not presently concerned with the issue of whether those patents offered by Securit to Shatterproof licensed as a package, would sustain a charge of violation of the antitrust laws.

To put our problem in another form: Can it be said that the conjoint licensing by mandate of the patentee of two or more apparatus or process patents in the same art, whatever the nature of their disclosures, whether for basic inventions or mere minor improvements, will sustain a charge of a patent misuse? The following circumstances are present. It must be conceded that there are patents involved covered by the Toledo decree: that these patents are in the flat glass-making art and the patents are not in the record and that their nature is disclosed only by way of brief descriptive titles.

[Patent Misuse]

The control of a patent monopoly carries with it the power to fix royalties for the reward of the patentee, and the patentee may even refuse to license.[16] The power conferred by the patent monopoly may be great enough, assuming that the patented [14] See Shatterproof's letter of March 4, 1953, and Securit's reply of March 19, 1953. See also the subsequent correspondence contained in the Stipulation referred to in note 13, supra.

[15] In so stating we are not unaware of the conclusion of the Ohio court to the contrary. See the oral opinion of Judge Kloeb, Finding of Fact No. 10. 119 U. S. P. Q. 86, 90. Judge Kloeb's opinion is, of course, entitled to great weight but we cannot concur in his view.

It may be noted parenthetically that the finding referred to presents no element of res judicata insofar as Shatterproof is concerned, for the following reasons: (1) When Shatterproof first appeared in the Ohio court Judge Kloeb declined jurisdiction, note 4, supra; (2) When Shatterproof offered the Delaware injunction to the Ohio court it did not "appear" therein as Judge Kloeb stated, 119 U. S. P. Q. 86, 89-90, or subject itself to that court's jurisdiction; and (3) Judge Kloeb's order of September 29, 1958, construing the consent decree, was later in time than that of Judge Steel, as stated at a later point in this opinion.

[16] We are now putting to one side the terms of the Toledo decree requiring Securit to grant licenses to applicants without discrimination. This issue is disposed of at a later point in the opinion.

process or product is a desirable one, to compel the licensee to submit to other conditions. See the conditions referred to in the cases cited and discussed below. The patent monopoly can be used, as Securit has employed it, to compel licensees to accept licenses under other patents in the same art. Indeed, what conditions can be imposed by the patentees in the exercise of patent monopoly are limited, legal barriers aside, only by the ingenuity employed by the patentees in their attempts to obtain the maximum return for the use of their patented properties.

In Transwrap Corp. v. Stokes Co. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,532], 329 U. S. 637 (1947), the Supreme Court held lawful a requirement by the licensor that the licensee assign to the licensor improvement patents applicable to the patented and licensed machine. This was the use of "one legalized monopoly to acquire another legalized monopoly." Id. at p. 644. But use of a patent to restrain trade in unpatented articles was prohibited in International Salt Co. v. United States, supra. Even where control of the unpatented article may fall short of a prohibited restraint of trade, a court will not lend its aid to enforce the tying-in of an unpatented article to the patented article. Morton Salt Co. v. Suppiger Co., supra; Transwrap Corp. v. Stokes Co., supra, at p. 645. In determining whether the patents were lawfully used, the Supreme Court in the two cases last cited looked to the nature of patent monopolies. It is by the same inquiry that the boundary line of the lawful use of patents is discernible in the circumstances of the case at bar.

Each patent gives its owner a monopoly in respect to its disclosures, so much and no more. It is a grant of the exclusive right to manufacture, use and sell the invention which is disclosed. That invention is what the patent grant protects by the monopoly, not that invention plus some embellishment, improvement, or alternate product or process, which also happens to be patented. See Motion Picture Co. v. Universal Film Co., 243 U. S. 502, 502-513 (1917). Each monopoly must stand on its own footing. Cf. United States v. Paramount Pictures [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244], 334 U. S. 131, 158 (1948).[17] Mandatory package licensing is no more than the exercise of the power created by a particular patent monopoly to condition the licensing of that patent upon the acceptance of another patent but that is too much. The protection, or monopoly, which is given to the first patent stops where the monopoly of the second begins.

Whatever may be the asserted reason or justification of the patent owner, if he compels a licensee to accept a package of patents or none at all, he employs one patent as a lever to compel the acceptance of a license under another. Equity will not countenance such a result. We conclude that the court below committed no error in finding that the defense of misuse asserted by Shatterproof is a valid one.

We deem it unnecessary to discuss at length the application of the doctrine of licensee estoppel. It is sufficient to say here that this factor alone in our opinion is enough to render mandatory package licensing a patent misuse. See Automatic Radio Co. v. Hazeltine [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,634], 339 U. S. 827, 836 (1950).

We conclude also, and quite apart from all of the foregoing, that Paragraph 8(a) of Securit's Standard Licensing Agreement[18] which provides that that agreement shall continue "in full force and effect to the expiration of the last to expire of any" of Securit's patents set out in "Schedule A" constitutes a patent misuse for it extends the payment of royalties of patents under patents which may expire to the expiration date of that patent most recently granted to Securit. Indeed the expiration clause of the contract works an "aggravating hardship" on the licensee as Judge Leahy stated, in that it demands the renunciation of all patents, whether wanted or unwanted under the license.

We conclude for these reasons also that under the circumstances at bar the court below committed no error in ruling that Securit had misused its patents and that this misuse constituted a valid defense to the infringement suit.

[17] Compare Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,013], 309 U. S. 436, 459 (1940), where the Supreme Court stated that the patent monopoly of one invention may not be enlarged for the exploitation of another.

[18] Which provides: "Unless sooner terminated under the provisions of Articles 6 or 7 hereof, this agreement shall continue in full force and effect to the expiration of the last to expire of any of the Licensor's U. S. Letters Patent listed in Schedule A attached hereto."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

In so ruling we are not unaware of the principle enunciated in Kennedy v. Silas Mason Co., 334 U. S. 249, 257 (1948), as follows:

> "We consider it the part of good judicial administration to withhold decision of the ultimate questions involved in this case until this or another record shall present a more solid basis of findings based on litigation or on a comprehensive statement of agreed facts. While we might be able, on the present record, to reach a conclusion that would decide the case, it might well be found later to be lacking in the thoroughness that should precede judgment of this importance and which it is the purpose of the judicial process to provide."

We conclude nonetheless that the present record affords a sufficient basis to decide the ultimate and important issue involved in this case and that it is unnecessary to vacate the judgment of the court below to the end that the record may be enlarged. The techniques applicable under Rule 56 have been applied properly and are sufficient to afford a firm basis for our decision. Cf. Morton Salt Co. v. Suppiger Co.; International Salt Co. v. United States, and Automatic Radio Co. v. Hazeltine, supra, all decided under Rule 56.

II

[Violation of Decree]

We agree also with the ruling of the court below that Securit violated the Toledo consent decree. That it did so seems crystal clear despite Judge Kloeb's holding to the contrary as demonstrated by his oral opinion construing the consent decree, cited in note 9, supra. Paragraph XIV B. of the decree expressly provides, subject to other provisions not pertinent here, that Securit and the other corporate defendants in the Ohio court were enjoined and restrained "from including any restriction or condition whatsoever in any license or sublicense granted it . . ." Paragraph XVII(1)(a) of the decree enjoined Securit from granting any license which provided as a condition that the applicant should accept a license under another patent owned or controlled by Securit. Securit's actions in the case at bar demonstrates a violation of these conditions. We are aware, of course, that Judge Kloeb framed the consent decree and his views as to its interpretation are entitled to great weight but we cannot agree with them.

[Jurisdiction of Court]

We conclude also that the court below had the jurisdiction, the power, to construe and interpret the consent decree. As we have indicated, note 15, supra, Shatterproof was not a party to the proceedings in the Ohio court when the consent decree was entered, nor has it become such to this day. The court below had jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject matter and was entitled to adjudicate the issues presented. Moreover, as we have shown, the adjudication by the court below, by Judge Steel, preceded by several days the order of Judge Kloeb, construing the consent decree. Judge Leahy's opinion determining the scope and effect of the consent decree preceded by more than a year Judge Kloeb's opinion construing the consent decree.

III

[Other Issues]

Other points in the case, whether or not raised by the parties, do not require discussion.

We will make the following dispositions of the judgments and orders appealed from.

(1) The order of Judge Leahy allowing the filing of an answer by Shatterproof will be affirmed, no basis for reversal being present.

(2) The order of Judge Leahy denying Securit's motion to dismiss Shatterproof's defense of misuse will be affirmed for obvious reasons.

(3) The order of Judge Leahy denying Securit's motion to dismiss Shatterproof's second defense will be affirmed.

(4) The order of Judge Steel denying Securit's motion to file an amended complaint will be affirmed for the reasons stated by Judge Steel for denial of the motion.[19]

(5) The judgments dismissing counts I through IV and counts V and VI of Securit's complaint will be affirmed. Objection by Securit to the dismissal of Counts V and VI, the unfair competition counts, was not pressed before us, although of course, it was not abandoned, the dismissal having been complained of in Securit's brief. We affirm on the basis of Judge Steel's opinion.[20]

[19] See 166 F. Supp. at p. 827.

[20] See 166 F. Supp. 813.

(6) The order of Judge Steel enjoining Securit from taking any action in United States v. Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Company, et al., Civil Action No. 5239 in the Northern District of Ohio, Western Division, "which will seek a determination, finding or any other type of adjudication or judicial expression as against Shatterproof which is in conflict with any one or more of the . . . views" expressed by Judge Leahy at [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,802] 154 F. Supp. 890, and specified in Judge Steel's order, will be affirmed.

[¶ 69,403] United States v. Ciba Company, Inc.; Geigy Chemical Corporation; Sandoz, Inc.; and Toms River-Cincinnati Chemical Corporation.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil No. 134-90. Filed: July 9, 1959.

Case No. 1390 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Prohibited—Price Fixing—Circulating Price Lists.—A manufacturer of dyestuffs and three companies engaged in reselling those products to others were prohibited by a consent decree from agreeing among themselves or with any other person to fix the price or other terms or conditions for the sale of those products to third persons. The three resellers were also jointly and severally prohibited from disclosing to each other the price at which they would sell dyestuffs, prior to the time that such price was announced to the trade generally. In addition, the manufacturer was prohibited from (1) disclosing to any one of the resellers the price at which any of the other resellers sold or proposed to sell dyestuffs, (2) suggesting the price at which dyestuffs should be sold to third persons, or (3) selling dyestuffs at a discount or rebate from a list of prices for the sale of such products to ultimate consumers.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2011.181, 2011.218.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Permissive Provisions—"Separate" Discussions of Resale Prices.—A consent decree which jointly and severally prohibited a manufacturer of dyestuffs and three resellers of its products from agreeing among themselves to fix the price for the sale of those products to third persons did not prohibit "separate" discussions between the manufacturer and any of the resellers concerning the price at which that reseller sold or proposed to sell the manufacturer's products to any third person.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8321.48, 8421.

For the plaintiff: Robert A. Bicks, Acting Assistant Attorney General; William D. Kilgore, Jr., Lewis Bernstein, Philip L. Roache, Jr., Charles F. B. McAleer, and Joseph J. O'Malley, Attorneys, Department of Justice.

For the defendants: Appleton, Rice & Perrin, by Gerhard R. Gerhard, for Ciba Co., Inc.; Cravath, Swaine & Moore, by Carlyle Maw, for Geigy Chemical Corp.; Handel & Stumpf, by Donald L. Stumpf, for Sandoz, Inc.; and Cahill, Gordon, Reindel & Ohl, by Robert G. Zeller, for Toms River-Cincinnati Chemical Corp.

Final Judgment

[Consent Decree]

SYLVESTER J. RYAN, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on May 29, 1958, the defendants having appeared and filed their answers to the complaint denying the substantive allegations thereof, and the parties hereto, by their respective attorneys, having consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without said judgment constituting evidence or an admission by any party hereto with respect to any such issue;

Now, Therefore, before the taking of any testimony and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein or admission by any party hereto in respect of any such issue, and upon consent of all parties hereto, it is hereby Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed, as follows:

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

I.

[Jurisdiction]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this action and of the parties hereto. The complaint states a claim upon which relief may be granted against the defendants under Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II.

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Person" shall mean an individual, partnership, firm, corporation or any other legal entity;

(B) "Toms River" shall mean the defendant, Toms River-Cincinnati Chemical Corporation;

(C) "Defendants" shall mean the defendants Toms River, Ciba Company, Inc., Geigy Chemical Corporation and Sandoz, Inc., and each of them;

(D) "Dyestuffs" shall mean any substance which when dissolved in a suitable bath, is capable of and is used to color vegetable, animal and artificial fibers and products. "Dyestuffs", as opposed to pigments, are soluble in the vehicle in which used.

III.

[Applicability]

The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to any defendant shall apply to such defendant, its officers, directors, agents, employees, subsidiaries, successors and assigns, and to those persons in active concert or participation with any defendant who receives actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise, but shall not impose any obligation to take or omit any action outside the United States. This Final Judgment shall not apply to transactions between a defendant (other than Toms River) and its direct or indirect parent, or between a defendant and its subsidiaries (other than Toms River) or its directors, officers, agents and employees or any of them when acting in such capacity.

IV.

[Price Fixing]

(A) Defendants are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from, directly or indirectly, entering into, adhering to, maintaining or enforcing any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program, among themselves or with any other person, to fix, establish, maintain or determine the price or prices or other terms or conditions of the sale of dyestuffs manufactured in the United States to third persons;

(B) Defendants, Ciba Company, Inc., Geigy Chemical Corporation, and Sandoz, Inc., are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from disclosing, directly or indirectly, to each other the price, or other terms or conditions of sale, at which it will sell dyestuffs, prior to the time such price or terms or conditions are announced to the trade generally;

(C) Defendants are enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining or enforcing any contract, agreement or understanding among themselves which is contrary to or inconsistent with any of the provisions of this Final Judgment.

V.

[Circulating Price Lists]

Defendant Toms River is enjoined and restrained from, directly or indirectly:

(A) Disclosing to any one of the other defendants the prices, or other terms or conditions of sale, at which dyestuffs are, or are proposed to be, sold by any other defendant to any third person;

(B) Suggesting or attempting to suggest the price, or other terms or conditions of sale at which dyestuffs shall be sold to any third person;

(C) Communicating or otherwise disclosing to any officer, director, agent, employee or other representative of any other defendant the price or other terms or conditions of sale at which dyestuffs are, or are proposed to be, sold by any other defendant to any third person;

(D) Selling or offering to sell dyestuffs at a discount or rebate from a list of prices for the sale of dyestuffs to ultimate consumers.

VI.

[Permissive Provision—Resale Prices]

Nothing in subsections (A) or (C) of Section IV or subsection (B) of Section V shall be deemed to prohibit any separate discussions between Toms River and any other defendant or other customer, concerning the prices, or other terms or conditions of sale, at which dyestuffs manufactured by Toms River are, or are proposed to be, sold by any such defendant or customer to any third person.

VII.

[Enforcement and Compliance]

(A) For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to any defendant made to its principal office, be permitted, subject to any legally recognized privilege:

(1) Access, during the office hours of said defendant, to those books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of said defendant which relate to any matter contained in this Final Judgment;

(2) Subject to the reasonable convenience of said defendant and without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers or employees of the defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters.

(B) Upon such written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, said defendant shall submit such reports in writing with respect to the matters contained in this Final Judgment as may from time to time be necessary to the enforcement of this Final Judgment;

(C) No information obtained by the means provided in this Section VII shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Executive Branch of the plaintiff except in the course of legal proceedings in which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

VIII.

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained by this Court for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the amendment or modification of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith and for the punishment of violations thereof.

[¶ 69,404] Federal Trade Commission v. Douglas T. Orton, Secretary, The Borden Company.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Misc. 18-304. Filed July 13, 1959.

Clayton and Federal Trade Commission Acts

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Access to Documentary Evidence Under FTC Act, Section 9—Subpoena Duces Tecum—Census Data—Privilege.—The Federal Trade Commission was denied an order to require a company, by subpoena duces tecum, to produce its "schedules submitted to the Bureau of the Census on Form MC 20C * * *." That census was taken pursuant to the provisions of Title 13, United States Code, which provides for the preparation of a census of manufactures in each fifth year. That Title also provides that the information furnished can only be used for the statistical purposes for which it was supplied. Also, the form on which the information was submitted stated that it was confidential and could not be used for purposes of taxation, investigation, or regulation. Further, the President of the United States, in a proclamation, announced that information furnished in that census was to be privileged and confidential. In view of the Government's assurances that the information would always remain confidential, the efforts of another branch of the Government to invoke the aid of the court in compelling the release of the information offended the court's sense of justice. Thus, the census data was privileged, and the company could not be compelled to produce it.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611, 8741.55.

Order denying a Federal Trade Commission petition to require production of documentary evidence in Dkt. 6652.

For the petitioner: Albert G. Seidman, Attorney in Charge, New York Office, Federal Trade Commission; Andrew C. Goodhope and F. P. Favarella, Attorneys, Federal Trade Commission.

For the respondent: Dewey, Ballantine, Bushby, Palmer & Wood, New York, N. Y. (John E. F. Wood, Charles E. Stewart, Jr., and C. Lamar Barnes, of counsel).

[Subpoena Duces Tecum]

DAWSON, District Judge [In full text]: This is a motion, pursuant to the provisions of § 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 49, for an order requiring respondent to appear before the petitioner's hearing examiner and produce certain documentary material referred to in a subpoena duces tecum served upon the respondent.

[Census Report]

The only issue relates to that portion of the subpoena duces tecum which would require respondent to produce

> "All schedules submitted to the Bureau of the Census on Form MC 20C by all plants, manufacturing establishments or units owned or controlled by your concern in conjunction with the 1954 census of manufacturers together with copies of all correspondence clarifying or amending said schedules or reports."

It is to be noted that the subpoena duces tecum does not require the respondent to submit any work papers or other material used by the respondent in compiling the information submitted to the Bureau of the Census, or file copies thereof, but requires production of the actual schedules submitted to the Bureau, together with all correspondence clarifying or amending said schedules or reports.

[Privilege]

Respondent contends that this subpoena duces tecum calls for confidential and privileged data and it cannot be compelled to produce the documents required.

It is to be noted that Form MC 20C has at the top of it the following statement:

> "CONFIDENTIAL—This report should be returned within 30 days of its receipt. This report is required by Act of Congress (13 U. S. C. 131). Your report is confidential and only sworn Census employees will have access to it. It cannot be used for purposes of taxation, investigation or regulation."

[FTC Powers]

The subpoena duces tecum has been issued in connection with a proceeding now pending before the Federal Trade Commission in which the Federal Trade Commission alleges that The Borden Company and other companies have violated the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act and § 7 of the Clayton Act. This subpoena was issued in connection with this investigation by the Federal Trade Commission by virtue of the regulatory authority of the Federal Trade Commission.

The Federal Trade Commission has broad powers to secure information or data from companies subject to its regulatory authority. See 15 U. S. C. § 49. It cannot, however, require that the respondent produce the schedules submitted by it for the 1954 Census of Manufactures.

[Governmental Assurances of Secrecy]

The census was taken pursuant to the provisions of Title 13, U. S. C. § 131, providing for preparation by the Secretary of Commerce, in each fifth year, of a census of manufactures.

Section 9 of Title 13, U. S. C., provides that neither the Secretary of Commerce, nor any other officer or employee of the Department of Commerce or bureau or agency thereof, may use the information furnished under the provisions of this title for any purpose other than the statistical purposes for which it is supplied, or "make any publication whereby the data furnished by any particular establishment or individual under this title can be identified."

Where information is given under such a statute, the information so furnished is privileged. See 8 Wigmore, Evidence, § 2377 (3d ed. 1940):

> "The policy underlying the principle of § 2374 ante, is that where the Government needs information for the conduct of its functions, and the persons possessing the information need the encouragement of privacy in order to be induced freely to make full disclosure, the protection of a privilege should be accorded.
>
> "In that well-settled common-law application of this policy, the privilege concerned information relating to the conduct of third persons. But many situations exist where the information can best be obtained only from the person himself whose affairs are desired to be known by the Government. An attempt to do so by mere compulsion might be tedious and ineffective. And where the ultimate purpose to be served is administrative, and not penal, it may well be that the Government can afford to promise secrecy in respect to purposes penal or litigious, as the price of readily achieving its administrative purpose when it demands a report of the truth.
>
> * * *
>
> "(3) The most apt instance of this principle is the privilege, established in most jurisdictions, for reports of commercial and industrial facts, required by law to be "made by employers of various sorts, or by commercial houses, or by public utilities, to the appropriate administrative official, as well as for reports of accidents in carriage by rail, by motor, or by aircraft. Here the main object is to investigate conditions and causes with a view to future administrative action; hence the State can afford to abdicate the use of such reports for purposes of punishment or of private litigation, in case the facts reported reveal a legal liability or a commercial secret on the part of the person reporting." 8 Wigmore, Evidence § 2377 (3d ed. 1940).

One example of such reports cited by Wigmore is census data. Id. nn. 3 & 5.

That the information furnished to the Bureau of the Census in the Census of Manufactures was to be privileged and confidential was announced by the President of the United States on November 22, 1929, when he stated in a proclamation that > "The sole purpose of the census is to secure general statistical information regarding the population and resources of the country, and replies are required from individuals only to permit the compilation of such general statistics. No person can be harmed in any way by furnishing the information required. The census has nothing to do with taxation, with military or jury service, with the compulsion of school attendance, with the regulation of immigration or with the enforcement of any national, state or local law or ordinance. There need be no fear that any disclosure will be made regarding any individual person or his affairs. . . ." See 36 Ops. Att'y Gen. 366 (1930).

In the present situation the petitioner seeks to invoke the processes of this Court to compel respondent to reveal data filed with the Government which the Government at the time stated would be confidential and not used for regulatory purposes, and which the President of the United States had indicated, in a proclamation, would never be used in connection with "the enforcement of any national, state or local law or ordinance." The information required by the Government in connection with the census had to be prepared in a particular manner and was not necessarily information which a business would furnish if it had an opportunity to check with its accounting records or its counsel.* The information was furnished for statistical purposes of the Government and was not furnished with any reservations which might have been placed upon it if it were known that the information would be used for regulatory purposes.

* The Director of the Bureau of the Census, in refusing to comply with a demand for copies of Forms MC 20C containing information submitted by one of the parties involved in the present investigation, pointed out that the 1954 Census of Manufactures was designed to secure confidential census reports and that the sections of Title 13, U. S. C., dealing with the confidentiality of those reports were enacted to protect companies against any harm which might result from their complying with a census reporting requirement. He then pointed out that this privileged relationship enabled the Census Bureau to require response to inquiries which were necessarily formulated on a uniform basis for all companies in a particular activity regardless of whether or not their books of record directly yield the requested information. He further pointed out that the rules governing the reporting permit the companies to authorize subordinate officials to furnish information directly, before formal clearance with comptrollers, auditors or company counsel, and that this information frequently is furnished before final figures have been developed in the company record system.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

The petitioner is seeking the data not in order to get the facts which underlie the statistics, but rather to get the compiled statistical data in the particular manner in which it was prepared by the respondent when the information was given upon the assurance of the Government that it would always remain confidential and could not be used for purposes of "taxation, investigation or regulation."

[Relevance]

Respondent contends that not alone is the information privileged but also that it is irrelevant. It is unnecessary for the Court to pass upon this contention. When one branch of the Government seeks to invoke the aid of the Court to compel the release of information which the Government itself has publicly announced will be confidential and not used for purposes of regulation, it is asking this Court to do something which offends its sense of justice. When the Government, the Congress and the President all stated that the information would be given on a confidential basis, and would never be released for the purposes of investigation or regulation, for another branch of this Government to come in and demand that this Court order the production of such information for the purposes of investigation, such action can only be characterized by the words which Mr. Justice Holmes so aptly used in referring to wire-tapping: "dirty business." Olmstead v. United States, 277 U. S. 438. The Court's assistance will not be given to any such attempt.

[Petition Denied]

The petition is denied. So ordered.

[¶ 69,405] Harry Brandt, d. b. a. University City House of Liquors, et al. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., et al.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit. No. 16,157. Dated July 15, 1959.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri.

Sherman, Clayton, and Robinson-Patman Acts

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Appeal and Error—Judgment Dismissing Action as to Some But Not All Defendants—Appealability.—A trial court's dismissal of a treble damage action as to three of fourteen defendants (for want of jurisdiction) was not an appealable final judgment under Rule 54(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, because no more than a single claim for relief was presented in the action. Except where otherwise provided by statute, an action is not appealable in fragments. Rule 54(b) provides that "When more than one claim for relief is presented in an action . . . the court may direct the entry of a final judgment upon one or more but less than all of the claims . . ." Thus, the Rule authorizing appeal is, on its face, limited to actions involving multiple claims. Here, there was no claim against any single defendant; instead, all of the fourteen defendants were charged, as joint tort-feasors, with conspiring together to violate the antitrust laws. For that alleged violation, the plaintiffs sought a single judgment as damages. Thus, there might have been multiple parties plaintiff or multiple parties defendant, but there was involved only a single claim for damages. The trial court's certification that multiple claims were involved could not transform a "multiple parties" action into a "multiple claims" action.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9015.12.

For the appellants: J. L. London (Mortimer A. Rosecan and Irving M. Malnik were on the brief).

For the appellees: Richmond C. Coburn (Coburn & Croft were on the brief) for Renfield Importers, Ltd.; R. Walston Chubb (Lewis, Rice, Tucker, Allen & Chubb, Earl E. Pollock, Julius Lewis, Sonnenschein, Lautmann, Levinson, Rieser, Carlin & Nath were on the brief) for James B. Beam Distilling Co.; Lewis C. Green and Donald J. Meyer (Green, Hennings, Henry & Evans, and Walter D. Wile were on the brief) for Julius Wile Sons & Co., Inc.; and Earl E. Pollock for all appellees on motions to dismiss.

For a prior opinion of the U. S. Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit, see 1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,881.

Before GARDNER, Chief Judge, and JOHNSEN and VOGEL, Circuit Judges.

[Treble Damage Action]

GARDNER, Chief Judge [In full text]: This was an action brought by eighteen retail liquor dealers doing business in St. Louis, Missouri, and vicinity against fourteen distillers, distributors, wholesalers or retailers for certain alleged violations of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, the Clayton Act, and the Robinson-Patman Act. The complaint alleged that the defendants created a monopoly in the retail liquor business in violation of the anti-trust laws; that they had conspired to monopolize and have monopolized the trade and commerce in said liquors and the retail distribution thereof in St. Louis, Missouri and vicinity. The complaint also contained allegations as to damages claimed by the individual plaintiffs, for which they prayed judgment, including treble damages in the amount of $1,329,300.00 and costs, including reasonable attorney's fees, and for an injunction restraining the defendants and enjoining them from continuing said alleged violations of the anti-trust laws.

[Dismissal as to Three Defendants]

Three of the defendants, to-wit: Renfield Importers, Ltd., James B. Beam Distilling Co., and Julius Wile Sons & Co., Inc., each filed a motion to quash the service of process and to dismiss on the grounds of improper venue and lack of jurisdiction over the person. In resisting these motions plaintiffs contended that the court acquired jurisdiction because these three defendants (now appellees) were "transacting business" in the State of Missouri. The court heard these motions and on the proofs adduced sustained them and entered orders of dismissal as to the three defendants. Each of these orders of dismissal contains recital that:

> "The Court further directs the entry of a final judgment on the claim as to said defendant, which is only one of several claims, and enters this order upon an express determination that there is no just reason for delay and enters this order upon an express direction for the entry of judgment in accordance with Rule 54 (b) of the Rules of Civil Procedure."

From the orders so entered plaintiffs have appealed, seeking reversal on substantially the following grounds. The court erred in holding that the three appellees were not "transacting business" in the Eastern Judicial District of Missouri within the meaning of Sec. 22, Title 15, U. S. C. (Sec. 12 of the Clayton Act) because under the anti-trust laws a corporation is engaged in transacting business for the purpose of venue, although it is not present by agent carrying on the business, if in fact in the ordinary and usual sense it transacts business therein of any substantial character.

[Appealability of Dismissals]

Simultaneously with the filing of their briefs, each appellee filed a motion to dismiss the appeal, with supporting brief, on substantially the following grounds. The order appealed from is not an appealable order in that, (1) the complaint in this case sets forth a single claim and does not set forth multiple claims, (2) the order appealed from does not dispose of the entire matter and is, therefore, not a final judgment, and (3) the order appealed from is not appealable under Rule 54(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure because no more than a single claim for relief was presented in this action. These motions to dismiss the appeal were presented and argued by counsel for the respective parties in connection with the issues raised by appellants by their appeal.

Manifestly, if the motions to dismiss the appeal are well-founded, it should not be necessary to consider the merits of appellants' appeal and for that reason we shall first consider these motions.

[Appeals "in Fragments"]

The complaint charged the fourteen named defendants with combining and conspiring together in restraint of trade and commerce, which alleged restraint, it is charged, resulted in a monopoly. Plaintiffs demanded money judgment for treble damages in the amount of $1,329,300.00, for an injunction against the defendants, restraining and enjoining them from continuing the alleged violations of the Acts, and for costs and attorney's fees. By this complaint all of the fourteen defendants were charged as joint tort-feasors. There was no claim against any single defendants but they were charged with combining and conspiring together to commit the acts alleged to be violative of the anti-trust laws. The complaint was dismissed as to the appellees, not on the ground that they had not combined and conspired with the other defendants, but because the court had not acquired jurisdiction over them, and the dismissal of the complaint on that ground confessedly would constitute no bar to an action against them on the same cause of action in a court which might acquire jurisdiction by proper service of process. The dismissal of the action as to appellees left undetermined the issues in the case, either as against them or the other defendants. It is a salutary rule, long adhered to by Federal courts, that, except where otherwise provided by statute, a cause of action must be treated as a unit, not triable piecemeal, nor appealable in fragments. Arnold v. United States for Use of W. B. Guimarin & Co., 263 U. S. 427; Hohorst v. Packet Co., 148 U. S. 262; Standley v. Roberts, 8 Cir., 59 Fed. 836; Moss v. Kansas City Life Ins. Co., 8 Cir., 96 F. 2d 108; Minnesota Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Technical Tape Corp., 7 Cir., 208 F. 2d 159; Hunter v. Federal Life Ins. Co., 8 Cir., 103 F. 2d 192; Brandt v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., 8 Cir. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,881], 216 F. 2d 206.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

As early as 1894, in Standley v. Roberts, supra, the late Judge Walter H. Sanborn, speaking for this Court, said:

> "An order, judgment, or decree which leaves the rights of the parties to the suit affected by it undetermined—one which does not substantially and completely determine the rights of the parties affected by it in that suit—is not reviewable here until a final decision is rendered, nor is an order retaining or dismissing parties defendant, who are charged to be jointly liable to the complainant in the suit, appealable."

This rule has been consistently adhered to by this Court. Thus, in Moss v. Kansas City Life Ins. Co., supra, it is said:

> "Considering the rules announced in the above cases, it would seem that the application of the above rule announced in the Rosenberg, Pesaro and Goldey Cases should be limited to cases in which the void service of process attaches to all of the defendants. So construed, the rule is harmonious with the broad general rule that for an order, decree, or judgment to be final for appeal purposes such must completely dispose of the action."

The decisions of this Court are clearly in harmony with the views of the Supreme Court expressed in Arnold v. United States for Use of W. B. Guimarin & Co., supra, where it is said:

> "It is well settled that a case may not be brought here by writ of error or appeal in fragments; that to be reviewable a judgment or decree must be not only final, but complete, that is, final not only as to all the parties, but as to the whole subject matter and as to all the causes of action involved; and that if the judgment or decree be not thus final and complete, the writ of error or appeal must be dismissed for want of jurisdiction."

[Rule 54—Trial Court's Certification]

It is, however, contended by appellants that the orders dismissing the action as to the appellees for want of jurisdiction are appealable because the trial court, pursuant to Rule 54(b), Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, directed the entry of a final judgment, "* * * upon an express determination that there is no just reason for delay and enters this order upon an express direction for the entry of judgment in accordance with Rule 54(b) of the Rules of Civil Procedure." It is therefore necessary to consider the provisions of Rule 54(b), Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. This Rule reads as follows:

> "Judgment Upon Multiple Claims. When more than one claim for relief is presented in an action, whether as a claim, counterclaim, cross-claim, or third party claim, the court may direct the entry of a final judgment upon one or more but less than all of the claims only upon an express determination that there is no just reason for delay and upon an express direction for the entry of judgment. In the absence of such determination and direction any order or other form of decision, however designated, which adjudicates less than all of the claims shall not terminate the action as to any of the claims, and the order or other form of decision is subject to revision at any time before the entry of judgment adjudicating all the claims."

[Single Claim Involved]

As has been observed, all of the fourteen defendants named in the action including the appellees were charged with a combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of the anti-trust laws of the United States. For this alleged violation of the law, plaintiffs sought a single judgment as damages. The rule authorizing appeals is, on its face, limited to one involving multiple claims. There may be said to be multiple parties plaintiff or multiple parties defendant, but there is involved only a single claim for damages alleged to have been suffered by reason of the combined action of the defendants constituting a conspiracy. We are of the view that this action did not involve multiple claims but rather a single claim as disclosed by the complaint. Sears Roebuck & Co. v. Mackey [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,370], 351 U. S. 427; Cold Metal Process Co. v. United Engineering & Foundry Co., 351 U. S. 445; Steiner v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., 9 Cir. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,971], 220 F. 2d 105; Carr v. City of Anchorage, 9 Cir., 235 F. 2d 780; Luria Bros. & Co. v. Rosenfeld, 9 Cir., 244 F. 2d 192; Reagan v. Traders & General Insurance Co., 5 Cir., 255 F. 2d 845; Lee v. Porcelain Patch & Glaze Corp., 5 Cir., 240 F. 2d 763; Meadows v. Greyhound Corp., 5 Cir., 235 F. 2d 233; Nettles v. General Accident Fire & Life Assurance Corp., 5 Cir., 234 F. 2d 243; Hardy v. Bankers Life & Casualty Co., 7 Cir., 222 F. 2d 827; District 65 v. McKague, 3 Cir., 216 F. 2d 153; Youpe v. Moses, D. C. Cir., 213 F. 2d 613. In Steiner v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., supra, plaintiff sought to recover judgment against seven defendants for alleged violations of the anti-trust laws. The action was dismissed as to six of the defendants and plaintiff sought to appeal as the trial court had certified under Rule 54 (b) that there was no just cause to delay an appeal by plaintiff from the judgments of dismissal. In the course of the opinion as to the appealability of the order of dismissal it is said, inter alia:

> "This judgment is not final. The appeal must therefore be dismissed without a consideration of the merits. Rule 54(b) applies only to a case in which multiple claims are asserted by or against one or more parties. In the absence of multiple claims no final judgment can be entered under the Rule."

Construing Rule 54(b), the Supreme Court in Sears Roebuck & Co. v. Mackey, supra, said in part:

> "The amended rule does not apply to a single claim action nor to a multiple claims action in which all of the claims have been finally decided. It is limited expressly to multiple claims actions in which 'one or more but less than all' of the multiple claims have been finally decided and are found otherwise to be ready for appeal."

The inherent nature of the cause of action cannot be changed by a trial court's certification that multiple claims are involved. The mere signing of the formula prescribed by Rule 54(b) cannot, we think, have the magical effect of transforming a multiple parties action into a multiple claims action. As said in Gold Seal Co. v. Weeks, D. C. Cir., 209 F. 2d 802:

> "The fact that the motions judge, in the order sought to be reviewed, characterized the same as a final judgment upon a separate claim can not make the order such a judgment or the claim such a claim, if the claim fails to meet the standard of separateness or distinctness required by the law and the judgment fails to meet the standards of finality so required."

[Appeal Dismissed]

The appeal is therefore dismissed without consideration of the merits of appellants' contentions and the cause is remanded to the trial court for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

[¶ 69,406] Elizabeth Hospital, Inc. v. Fount Richardson; Friedman Sisco; Ruth Ellis Lesh; Stanley Applegate, Individually and as President of Washington County Medical Society; and Washington County Medical Society.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit. No. 16,187. Dated July 10, 1959.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Arkansas. JOHN E. MILLER, District Judge.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Necessary Averments to State Cause of Action—Interstate Commerce—Operation of Hospital.—A trial court properly dismissed an Arkansas hospital's complaint alleging that a local medical society and various individuals violated the Sherman Antitrust Act by conspiring to exclude the hospital's chief physician from membership in the society, thereby diminishing his professional standing and causing a reduction in the number of the hospital's out-of-state patients. The complaint was lacking in a jurisdictional essential in that it failed to show that the conspiracy had any restraining effect on interstate commerce within the meaning of the Sherman Act. The operation of the hospital, including the rendition of hospital services to some persons who came from outside the state, was no more "engaging in interstate commerce" than was the rendition of medical services to such persons by the hospital's chief physician. The fact that some of the hospital's patients might have travelled in interstate commerce did not alter the local character of the hospital. Interference with intrastate activity cannot constitute a violation of the Sherman Act unless its effect on interstate commerce is both substantial and direct. Here, the transportation of patients in interstate commerce was incidental. It was unnecessary to consider the hospital's further allegation that it purchased medical equipment and supplies from outside the state, since it was not asserted that the conspiracy interfered with those purchases.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2035.213; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9008.210, 9008.350, 9009.475, 9009.600.

Arkansas Antitrust Laws

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Antitrust Laws—Procedure—Pleadings—Necessary Averments to State Cause of Action—Monopolies—Combinations—Price Fixing.—A trial court properly held that a hospital's complaint alleging that a local medical society and various individuals conspired to exclude the hospital's chief physician from membership in the society stated no cause of action under Arkansas statutes dealing with monopolies, combinations, and attempts to regulate or fix prices. The reviewing court affirmed the dismissal of the action on the basis of the trial court's opinion, 1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,182.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2425.04.

For the appellant: James R. Hale, Fayetteville, Ark.

For the appellees: Eugene R. Warren (Warren and Bullion were on the brief), Little Rock, Ark.

Affirming a judgment of the U. S. District Court, Western District of Arkansas, Fayetteville Division, 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,182.

Before SANBORN, VOGEL and VAN OOSTERHOUT, Circuit Judges.

[Parties]

VOGEL, Circuit Judge [In full text]: Elizabeth Hospital, Inc., plaintiff, (appellant here) is a Delaware corporation authorized to do business in Arkansas, where it maintains and operates a hospital at Prairie Grove, Washington County. Its stockholders are Frank Riggall, Eva E. Riggall, Cecil Riggall and Robert Douglas Manning, each of whom owns 25% of the capital stock. The defendants are Fount Richardson; Friedman Sisco; Ruth Ellis Lesh; Stanley Applegate, individually and as president of Washington County Medical Society; Washington County Medical Society; and American Medical Association. The individual defendants are all physicians and surgeons and all defendants excepting the American Medical Association are citizens and residents of the State of Arkansas. The Washington County Medical Society is an unincorporated organization with at least 36 dues-paying or active members. The defendant Stanley Applegate is a member and president of such society and the other individual defendants are members thereof. A motion for dismissal as to the American Medical Association, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, was granted by this court and it is accordingly not involved herein. For convenience, the parties will be designated as they were in the court below.

[Treble Damage Action]

Plaintiff brought this action to recover treble damages in the total amount of $300,000.00 for alleged violations of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U. S. C. A., §§ 1, 2, 12 and 15, and to obtain an injunction requiring the Society and Association to admit Dr. Frank Riggall to membership therein. Plaintiff also alleged a violation of the constitution, statutes and common law of Arkansas, attempting thereby to create two grounds for federal court jurisdiction: First, under the Sherman Act; and, second, because of diversity of citizenship and amount involved.

In brief summary, plaintiff's complaint alleged that it was authorized to and did engage in the operation and maintenance of a hospital of which Dr. Frank Riggall was Chief of Staff; that it purchased medical equipment and supplies, etc., for its use in operating its hospital from outside the State of Arkansas. It alleged a conspiracy on the part of the defendants which interfered with the referral of patients to the plaintiff hospital from outside the State of Arkansas. The conspiracy was based upon the refusal of the Washington County Medical Society to admit Dr. Frank Riggall to membership therein, resulting in denial to him of membership in the Arkansas Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

[Prior Proceedings]

Excepting for the fact that Elizabeth Hospital, Inc., is the named plaintiff in the instant case and here alleged violations of the law of Arkansas as well as violations of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, the complaint is virtually the same as that contained in a recent case wherein the plaintiff was Dr. Frank Riggall and wherein the defendants included all those named as defendants herein and in which this court, in Riggall v. Washington County Medical Society, et al., 8 Cir., 1957 [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,854], 249 F. 2d 266, certiorari denied 355 U. S. 954, sustained the District Court's dismissal of the complaint. The same District Court granted motions to dismiss here—Elizabeth Hospital, Inc. v. Richardson, et al., D. C. W. D. Ark., 1958 [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,182], 167 F. Supp. 155.

[Arkansas Antitrust Laws]

To sustain jurisdiction in the federal court it must be found that the allegations of the complaint, which for present purposes we must assume to be true, establish a claim under the law of Arkansas or that the complaint states a claim under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. It has already been noted that the allegations of the instant complaint are, for all practical purposes, the same as the allegations contained in the complaint filed by Dr. Riggall in what might be termed the earlier case [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,854], 249 F. 2d 266. Therein, Dr. Riggall was the sole plaintiff. He sought to recover treble damages in the same amount as is sought by Elizabeth Hospital, Inc., in the present case. There, Dr. Riggall sought recovery because of alleged wrongful refusal of the Washington County Medical Society to admit him to membership. The alleged damage to the plaintiff here is likewise based on the Society's refusal of membership to plaintiff's Chief of Staff—the same Dr. Frank Riggall. In addition to the allegation of a conspiracy or combination in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, it was alleged that there was a conspiracy under the law of Arkansas to injure or damage the plaintiff by refusing Dr. Riggall and certain members of his staff membership in the Washington County Medical Society. Dr. Riggall's application for membership in the Society was rejected by the membership by a secret vote of 34 to 2. The by-laws of the Society are set forth in plaintiff's complaint. Among other things, they provide that the Society shall be the judge of the qualifications of its members. They also provide that the members shall vote upon all applications and that the elections shall be by secret ballot and that three-fourths of the votes of the membership present and voting shall be necessary to elect. The opinion of the District Court ably demonstrates that under neither the common nor statutory law of Arkansas was there a right of action spelled out in plaintiff's complaint [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,182], 167 F. Supp. 155. Citing Arkansas statutes dealing with monopolies, combinations and attempts to regulate or fix prices, it concluded, at page 162:

> "Since no monopoly or attempt at monopoly is alleged or shown by the facts in the complaint, and since it is likewise apparent that the plaintiff is not being driven from competition, these statutes have no application."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

And at page 163:

"The action of the medical society and its individual members, whatever their motive may have been, was not action to attain an unlawful purpose or to use unlawful means in attaining a lawful purpose, absent some specific statutory requirement that all persons be admitted to membership.

"It is true that the plaintiff alleges that the refusal of the defendants to admit Dr. Riggall to membership has resulted in a number of other conditions unfavorable to the plaintiff hospital as well as to Dr. Riggall. It may be seriously doubted whether any of the numerous conditions alleged to have been caused by the denial of membership are proximate results of that action by the medical society. Compare Robinson v. Lull, D. C. Ill. 1956, 145 F. Supp. 134, at page 137, where the court considered a series of facts similar to those presented here, and found no proximate connection between the acts of the defendants and the alleged injury.

"Assuming, however, that the conditions and injuries allegedly resulting from the medical society's denial of membership to Dr. Riggall were all proximate results of that action of the medical society, there is nevertheless no showing of any violation of state law in that action or any conspiracy to violate any state law. Most of the injuries said to result to the plaintiff and to Dr. Riggall from his inability to obtain membership in the medical society relate to the alleged loss of patients of the hospital. These assertions are in essence specifications of the allegation that the defendants, 'imposed a professional boycott upon the plaintiff, and thereby prevented the plaintiff from receiving great numbers of patients from outside the State of Arkansas and elsewhere.' These allegations, however, fall short of establishing a claim under Arkansas law."

Plaintiff here has utterly failed to demonstrate anything to the contrary and on this point cites but one case, Southwestern Publishing Co. v. Ney, 1957, 227 Ark. 852, 302 S. W. 2d 538. Such case is no support for plaintiff's contention. It is this court's well established rule to accept the considered judgment of the trial judge on any matter of doubtful or disputed local law. Guyer v. Elger, 8 Cir., 1954, 216 F. 2d 537, 540, certiorari denied 348 U. S. 929; Barnard v. Wabash R. Co., 8 Cir., 1953, 208 F. 2d 489, 493; Buder v. Becker, 8 Cir., 1950, 185 F. 2d 311, 315-316; Northern Liquid Gas Co. v. Hildreth, 8 Cir., 1950, 180 F. 2d 330, 336. We concur in the trial judge's opinion that the complaint spelled out no right of action under the law of Arkansas.

[Sherman Antitrust Act—Jurisdiction]

Next for consideration is whether a claim under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act has been alleged. Essential to jurisdiction is that the conspiracy complained of be "in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states * * *." To establish this fact, plaintiff alleged that the wrongful exclusion of its Chief of Staff from the Washington County Medical Society so diminished his professional standing as to reduce the number of patients, both from within and without Arkansas, seeking treatment at plaintiff's hospital. Plaintiff also alleged that it purchases from outside the State of Arkansas medical equipment and supplies, etc., for its use in operating its hospital. However, this fact need not be considered here as plaintiff has failed to assert that the conspiracy complained of interfered with these purchases.

[Interstate Commerce—Operation of Hospital]

We think that the plaintiff's operation of a hospital, to include rendition of hospital services to some persons who came from outside the state, is no more engaging in interstate commerce than was Dr. Riggall in rendering medical services to persons who likewise came from other states. The fact that some of plaintiff's patients might travel in interstate commerce does not alter the local character of plaintiff's hospital. If the converse were true, every country store that obtains its goods from or serves customers residing outside the state would be selling in interstate commerce. Uniformly, the courts have held to the contrary. A. L. A. Schechter Poultry Corp. v. United States, 1935 [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,072], 295 U. S. 495; Lawson v. Woodmere, 4 Cir., 1954 [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,904], 217 F. 2d 148, 150; Jewel Tea Co. v. Williams, 10 Cir., 1941, 118 F. 2d 202, 207; Lipson v. Socony-Vacuum Corp., 1 Cir., 1937 [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,146], 87 F. 2d 265, 267, certiorari granted, 300 U. S. 651, certiorari dismissed, 310 U. S. 701.

[Effect on Interstate Commerce]

Interference with intrastate activity cannot constitute a violation of the Sherman

Act unless its effect on interstate commerce is both substantial and direct. A. L. A. Schechter Poultry Corp. v. United States, supra; Mandeville Farms v. Sugar Co., 1947 [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,251], 334 U. S. 219; Local 167 v. United States, 1933 [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,043], 291 U. S. 293. We observed in the earlier case at page 268:

"There is no allegation in the complaint remotely suggesting that the acts of defendants cast any burden upon interstate commerce. The mere fact that plaintiff at his location in Arkansas may be treating patients from other states who must travel interstate does not result in practicing his profession in interstate commerce, as the transportation of such patients is incidental. The practice of his profession as disclosed by the allegations of his complaint is neither trade nor commerce within Section 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, nor are there any allegations in the complaint indicating that the actions of defendants here complained of resulted in a monopoly within the provisions of Section 2 of the Act. Plaintiff has not been prevented from practicing his profession, but in the final analysis his complaint is that he could practice it more profitably but for the acts of the defendants." (Italics supplied.)

The case of Spears Free Clinic and Hospital for Poor Children v. Cleere, et al., 10 Cir. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,276], 1952, 197 F. 2d 125, is on almost all fours with the instant case. Therein the court stated, at page 126:

"The practice of the healing arts in Colorado, including chiropractic, is wholly local in character. The alleged conspiracy and the acts alleged to have been done in furtherance thereof had for their purpose and object the monopolization and restraint of purely local activities. No price fixing or price maintenance for professional or other services was involved. There was no intent to injure, obstruct or restrain interstate or foreign commerce. The mere fact that a fortuitous and incidental effect of such conspiracy and acts may be to reduce the number of persons who will come from other states and countries to the Spears Hospital for chiropractic treatments does not create such a relation between interstate and foreign commerce and such local activities as to make them a part of such commerce.

To come within the purview of the Sherman Act the restrain of commerce or the obstruction of commerce must be direct and substantial and not merely incidental or remote." (Italics supplied.)

[Dismissal Affirmed]

We think the complaint here is wholly lacking in a jurisdictional essential in that it fails to show that the conspiracy complained of had any restraining effect on interstate commerce within the meaning of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

Affirmed.

[¶ 69,407] Texaco, Inc. v. William J. O'Connell, individually and d.b.a. Bill O'Connell's Texaco Service Station, and Joan E. O'Connell.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. Civil Action No. 26601. Dated July 14, 1959.

Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act

Fair Trade—Fair Trade Pricing of Gasoline Under Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act—Enforcement—Temporary Injunction—Requirements—Irreparable Damage.—An oil refiner, in a fair trade enforcement action against a dealer which sold the refiner's branded gasoline at less than minimum fair trade prices established pursuant to the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act, was refused a temporary injunction on the ground that there was no showing of irreparable damage to the refiner. Evidence was produced as to the amount of money spent by the refiner in advertising its trademarks, and there was testimony that a lowering of prices would have a serious effect on the refiner's business and would seriously hurt the good will it had built up over a long period of years. However, there was no attempt to place a dollar figure on the past and prospective damage which the refiner claimed. It might be able to establish the minimum jurisdictional amount and other essential elements at trial, but it had not, on the record before the court, shown enough to subject the dealer to the harsh remedy of a restrictive injunction.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3362.40.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Fair Trade—Fair Trade Pricing Under Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act—Enforcement—Federal Court Action—Effect of State Court's Prior Finding on Same Point.—A Federal district court, in refusing an oil refiner a temporary injunction because it had failed to show that it was irreparably damaged by a dealer's sales below fair trade prices established under the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act, noted that there was another facet of the case which, although not vital to the decision, merited comment. It appeared that the refiner had started an identical suit in a Pennsylvania court and that a judge of that court, in refusing a temporary injunction, had found that there was no showing of irreparable damage. That action was dropped and subsequently lodged in this court. Litigants in a Federal court because of diversity of citizenship should have no greater advantage than when in a state court. Thus, the finding of the Pennsylvania court might not have been res adjudicata, but it was entitled to a great deal of weight. Concluding, the court noted that there had been no showing of a dire emergency which would warrant interference with the State court's finding on the precise point.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3410.40.

For the plaintiff: Butler, Beatty, Greer & Johnson, Media, Pa.

For the defendant: Thomas A. Curran and Edward Kassab, Chester, Pa.

Opinion

[Fair Trade Action]

CLARY, District Judge [In full text]: This matter is presently before the Court on plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction to restrain the defendants from selling its trademarked products "Texaco" and two grades of gasoline "Fire Chief" and "Sky Chief" at less than the minimum prices fixed by it under the provisions of the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act of 1935 as amended, 73 Purdon Statutes, Section 8.

[Parties]

Plaintiff corporation is incorporated under the laws of the State of Delaware, having its principal office in the City and State of New York, and is duly authorized to do business in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. It is engaged in the business of producing, refining and selling petroleum and petroleum products, including the two "brand" gasolines referred to above. Plaintiff does not sell its products at retail in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Defendants William J. O'Connell and Joan E. O'Connell are operators of a gasoline station at Baltimore Pike, Route U. S. #1, Borough of Chester Heights, Delaware County, Pennsylvania, at which station they have been selling, and have continued to sell, "Fire Chief" and "Sky Chief" gasoline, purchased by them from the plaintiff for resale to the public under the trade names and under a supply contract entered into between the plaintiff and the defendants.

[Sales Below Fair Trade Prices]

Early in January of 1959 plaintiff entered into a contract in the State of Pennsylvania with a retailer of its products, William F. Zuschnitt at Lancaster Pike and Greenwood Avenue, Paoli, Pennsylvania. This agreement entered into under the applicable provisions of the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act of 1935 as amended (73 P. S. Sections 7 and 8) provided that said Zuschnitt would not resell plaintiff's products except at the stipulated minimum retail prices fixed by the plaintiff. On or about January 14, 1959, plaintiff notified all Pennsylvania retailers of its products that effective January 16, 1959 the plaintiff had stipulated minimum retail prices for its motor fuels in defendants' area, fixing the retail prices including State and Federal taxes at $.279 per gallon for Texaco Fire Chief and $.319 per gallon for Texaco Sky Chief. Receipt of this notice has been stipulated between the parties, together with notice from plaintiff to defendants on both February 3, 1959 and February 11, 1959, to cease and desist selling its gasoline products at less than minimum prices. It has been further stipulated that the defendants have continued subsequently to the notice and to the cease and desist warnings to sell the two brands of gasoline at less than the minimum prices provided in the Fair Trade Agreement above referred to.

[Prior Proceedings]

This action was filed on July 2, 1959, and on that date, without notice, a temporary restraining order was entered restraining the defendants from selling plaintiff's two products at less than the stated minimum retail prices. Hearing on plaintiff's motion for a temporary injunction was fixed for July 8, 1959, on which date a hearing was held and testimony presented. At that time plaintiff established its ownership of the trade-marks in question and produced evidence that it had spent over twelve million dollars in the year 1958 advertising its trade-marks nationally. It attributes a substantial portion of this advertising to promotion in Pennsylvania. Plaintiff also produced testimony of its Division Manager covering this area that the lowering of prices below the minimum stated in the Fair Trade Agreement would have a serious effect upon its business and would seriously hurt the good will of the company built up over a long period of years. However, there was no attempt to place a dollar figure on the past and prospective damage which plaintiff claimed.

[Companion Cases]

This case and its three companion cases, viz., Texaco, Inc. v. Ernest Harrison, Civil Action No. 26602; Texaco Inc. v. Michael Grassano, Civil Action No. 26603, and Texaco, Inc. v. Romeo Sangillo, et al., Civil Action No. 26604, are in this Court by reason of diversity of citizenship; the plaintiff, as aforesaid, being a resident of Delaware and all defendants being residents of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

[Suits in State Court—Discontinuance]

On the basis of statements made by counsel for the defendants at the hearing, not contraverted by counsel for the plaintiff, it appears that the plaintiff here started identical suits in the Court of Common Pleas of Delaware County, Pennsylvania, In Equity, on April 21, 1959, titled as of March Term, 1959, Nos. 1504-1507 inclusive. These actions insofar as pleadings are concerned are essentially identical with the pleadings filed in this Court. A rule to show cause was issued out of that court against the several defendants, said rule requiring the defendants to show cause why a preliminary injunction should not issue against each of them. After a hearing before Honorable William R. Toal, Judge of that Court, the rules to show cause were denied and an order to that effect was entered on April 27, 1959. It was stated at the hearing in this Court by attorneys for the plaintiff that all of these actions had been discontinued as of July 7, 1959 for the reason that Texaco, doing business in each of the 10 counties of this district, had determined to centralize its Fair Trade enforcemnet actions in this Court rather than proceeding in the various courts of Common Pleas of the said 10 counties. Whatever its reason, it has in the instant cases dropped the actions in the Delaware County Court and the cases are now lodged in this Court.

[Irreparable Damage]

The primary question to be decided in this and the companion cases is whether the plaintiff has on the record presently before the Court made a showing of irreparable damage. The conclusion of the Court is that on the record presented, it has not. There is a pleading allegation that the damages in each case do exceed $10,000 which at this junction of the case is sufficient to vest apparent jurisdiction in this Court. It may well be that at trial on final hearing, plaintiff may be able to establish the minimum jurisdictional amount, and it may be that plaintiff upon proper showing will be entitled to a permanent injunction and possibly money damages. On these two points the Court expresses no opinion since the matter has not progressed sufficiently to establish these vital and essential elements. However, it is the feeling of the Court that more than has been shown here is required before a defendant should be subjected to the harsh remedy of a restrictive injunction, See, Joseph Bancroft & Sons Co. v. Shelley Knitting Mills, Inc., — F. 2d —, and Yakus v. United States, 321 U. S. 414, 440.

[Finding in State Court]

There is another facet of this case which merits comment, although not vital to the Court's decision which is based on the record in this Court. The plaintiff here had its choice of forums originally. It chose the Court of Common Pleas of Delaware County. The right here involved is a state-created right and certainly a state court is primarily the proper place to secure an interpretation of state law, even though this Court in diversity cases may and does sit for all practical purposes as a State Court in determining state rights. A judge of a competent Pennsylvania Court which had jurisdiction of the parties and jurisdiction of the cause of action in refusing the temporary injunction made a determination that there had been no showing of irreparable damage. While this finding may not have the effect of res adjudicata as between the parties, it certainly is entitled to a great deal of weight when the identical issue is shortly thereafter presented to a Federal court. Litigants in a Federal court, because of diversity, should have no greater advantage because of the fact that the action is in a Federal court rather than a State court, and this is particularly true where a state-created right is involved. See the discussion of this problem in Guarantee Trust Co. v. York, 326 U. S. 99 (1945).

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Temporary Injunction Refused]

No showing of dire emergency has been made in this case which would warrant interference with a finding of a State court on the precise point. The temporary injunction, therefore, will be refused in this case as well as the three above-mentioned companion cases, and the cases will proceed to trial on the merits. The foregoing shall be deemed to be the Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law of the Court.

[¶ 69,408] Texaco, Inc. v. Russell Haney.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. Civil Action No. 26,557. Filed July 7, 1959.

Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act

Fair Trade—Fair Trade Pricing of Gasoline Under Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act—Federal Court Action—Temporary Injunction—Requirements—Irreparable Injury—Jurisdictional Amount—Meritorious Claim.—In a Federal court action, an oil refiner was denied a temporary injunction to enjoin a dealer from selling gasoline below established fair trade prices because (1) it was not established that the refiner was threatened with irreparable injury, (2) it was not established that the matter in controversy exceeded $10,000, the jurisdictional amount, and (3) there were legal questions respecting the interpretation of the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act which raised serious doubt as to the merits of the refiner's ultimate claim for relief. On the question of irreparable injury, it was relevant that the refiner had not proceeded with alacrity to prevent four of the dealer's competitors from selling below fair trade prices, but had delayed at least four months before taking any action. Also, there was the same lack of essential witnesses as there had been in a prior case where a court said: "The only witness for the plaintiff who testified to the extent . . . of harm done to plaintiff's good will . . . was neither an officer nor director of the plaintiff nor one who was in a position to have or who did have personal knowledge of the facts. . . ."

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3362.40, 3410.40, 3440.40.

For the plaintiff: Duane, Morris & Heckscher, Philadelphia, Pa. (by John B. Martin and John M. Ross).

For the defendant: Schnader, Harrison, Segal & Lewis, Philadelphia, Pa. (by Jerome J. Shestack and James M. Richardson).

(Sur Motion for Preliminary Injunction)
Memorandum Opinion and Order

[Fair Trade Action]

EGAN, District Judge [In full text]: This is a diversity case in which plaintiff, a Delaware corporation, having its principal office without Pennsylvania, is seeking to enjoin defendant, a citizen of Pennsylvania, from violating the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Law.[1]

It came on for hearing in open Court after a temporary restraining order had issued on plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction and on defendant's motion to lift the temporary restraining order and to deny the preliminary injunction.

From the evidence and the admissions of the parties, the Court makes the following [1] Act of June 5, 1935, P. L. 266, as amended by Act No. 859, May 25, 1956, 73 P. S., sections 7-11.

FINDINGS OF FACT

[Plaintiff]

1. Plaintiff is a Delaware corporation whose principal office and place of business is beyond the geographical limits of Pennsylvania.

2. At all times pertinent hereto, plaintiff was registered to do and was doing business in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Effective May 1, 1959, plaintiff's corporate name was changed from "The Texas Company" to "Texaco, Inc." and its certificate of authority to do business in Pennsylvania was amended accordingly.

3. Plaintiff is engaged in the business of selling gasoline in Pennsylvania under valid, registered trade-marks covering the names Texaco "Fire Chief" and "Sky Chief."

4. Plaintiff has sold and now sells gasoline in Pennsylvania to dealers for resale to the public at retail.

[Fair Trade Agreement]

5. On January 12, 1959 plaintiff entered into a written agreement with one of its Pennsylvania dealers who sells its trade-named gasolines (Ex. P-1). Among other things, this agreement provided that said dealer would sell Texaco "Fire Chief" gasoline at 19.9¢ per gallon and Texaco "Sky Chief" at 23.9¢ per gallon, exclusive of all taxes imposed by federal, state and municipal governments, unless otherwise notified by plaintiff; and that said dealer would not sell such gasolines except at prices fixed by plaintiff.

["Non-Signer" Dealer]

6. Defendant is a dealer who owns and operates his own station at McDade Boulevard and Springfield Avenue, Folsom, Delaware County, Pennsylvania, and who at all times pertinent hereto purchased from plaintiff and distributed at retail to the public the brand named gasolines referred to above.

7. There is no agreement, written or oral, between plaintiff and defendant.

8. On or about January 14, 1959, plaintiff notified all of its Pennsylvania dealers, including defendant, that effective January 16, 1959 plaintiff had established minimum prices for the resale of its products as aforesaid, within the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, under the provisions of the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act, together with a copy of the Fair Trade agreement. This notice was ultimately received and accepted by defendant who at first refused to accept it in the form of registered mail.

[Violation]

9. Defendant does not deny that from January 16, 1959 until the present he has at various times sold plaintiff's trade-named gasolines referred to above at less than the fair trade prices and that on two occasions he received written notice that if he failed to comply with the Fair Trade agreement, legal action would be taken.

10. Plaintiff seeks to prevent sales of its trade-named products by defendant at prices less than the minimum prices fixed by plaintiff from time to time, in accordance with the aforesaid agreement.

[Irreparable Injury]

11. There is no sufficient credible evidence on the present record before the Court from which a finding could be made that plaintiff is threatened with irreparable injury.

[Jurisdiction]

12. There is no sufficient credible evidence on the present record before the Court from which a finding could be made that the matter in controversy exceeds $10,000.00.

[Merits of Action]

13. There are a number of important questions existing in this litigation which raise serious doubt as to the extent of plaintiff's ultimate rights against the defendant.

DISCUSSION

[Lack of Essential Witnesses]

This case is somewhat similar to that of The California Oil Company v. Travaline, et al. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,672, "California Oil Co. v. Fitzgerald"], 147 F. Supp. 832 (1957) where Judge Kraft denied motions for a preliminary injunction against four separate vendors of plaintiff's gasoline at retail. The essential difference is that there the defendants had no direct dealings with the plaintiff. They bought plaintiff's trade-named gasolines from middlemen or distributors.

Since we have here the same lack of essential witnesses, what Judge Kraft said there is pertinent (p. 834):

> "The only witness for the plaintiff who testified to the extent of plaintiff's investment in promoting good will for its trademark, or to the extent of harm done to plaintiff's good will by the defendant's sales, was neither an officer nor director of the plaintiff nor one who was in a position to have or who did have personal knowledge of the facts to which he testified. Most of his testimony in this area was based on knowledge gleaned from reports by or conversations with others. While the testimony was admitted over objection, its probative value was for the court."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Delay in Enforcement]

At the hearing it was not denied that plaintiff had not proceeded with alacrity to prevent four of its retail dealers who competed with defendant in the area defendant serves from selling its trade-named gasolines at less than the established minimum prices. A delay of at least four months was permitted before any action was taken. This certainly becomes relevant on the question of irreparable injury.

[Discretion]

Only recently our Court of Appeals for this Circuit, in Joseph Bancroft & Sons Co. v. Shelley Knitting Mills, Inc., — Fed. 2d —, reversed the granting of an interlocutory injunction as an abuse of discretion because no irreparable injury could be foreseen. The case is important because it states the principles applicable to the granting or denying of a preliminary injunction in this Circuit. Judge Kalodner, who wrote the opinion for the Court, quotes from the opinion in Yakus v. United States, 321 U. S. 414, 440, the following:

"The award of an interlocutory injunction by courts of equity has never been regarded as strictly a matter of right, even though irreparable injury may otherwise result to the plaintiff . . . Even in suits in which only private interests are involved the award is a matter of sound judicial discretion, in the exercise of which the court balances the conveniences of the parties and possible injuries to them according as they may be affected by the granting or withholding of the injunction . . ." (Emphasis supplied)

[Legal Questions Raised]

Finally it may be said that this case, like that of The California Oil Company v. Travaline, et al., supra, raises legal questions respecting the interpretation of the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Law of such a nature as to raise serious doubt as to the extent of plaintiff's ultimate rights against defendant. See Henis v. Compania Agricola de Guatemala, (D. C. Del. 1953), 116 F. Supp. 223, affirmed 210 F. 2d (C. A. 3), p. 950.

Conclusions of Law

1. Jurisdiction of this action on this record is debatable.

2. Plaintiff has not established on this record that it is threatened with irreparable injury.

3. Doubt exists on the present record as to the merits of plaintiff's ultimate claim for relief.

Order

And Now, July 7, 1959, plaintiff's motion for preliminary injunction is Denied, the temporary restraining order is lifted and dissolved, and the defendant's motion to dismiss plaintiff's application for a preliminary injunction is Granted.

[¶ 69,409] In the Matter of the Grand Jury Investigation (General Motors Corporation).

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. M 11-188. Filed July 17, 1959.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Grand Jury Proceedings—Subpoena Duces Tecum—Scope—"Unlimited Exploratory Investigation"—Time Period of 30 Years.—A subpoena duces tecum commanding a manufacturer to appear before a grand jury (investigating "an alleged violation of the federal antitrust law") and produce "a vast volume of records covering in minute detail practically every internal and external aspect of the corporation's widespread activities except labor relations, for varying periods of which the shortest is 11 years and the longest is 30 years," in an "unlimited exploratory investigation," was quashed on the ground that it was unreasonable. The schedule of items demanded covered 13 legal size pages and consisted of 16 numbered paragraphs, most of which were subdivided into subparagraphs ranging in number from 2 to 18. Among the papers called for were "policy documents" which included every piece of paper, however informal, relating to any activity covered by the subpoena, which ever came to the attention of any member of the manufacturer's boards or committees. A search by responsible personnel of 30,000 file drawers would have been required to secure such documents from only one of the manufacturer's 44 divisions. The court noted that a subpoena duces tecum of such scope was unprecedented in its experience. Although it did not prescribe limits for the proposed investigation, the court questioned the necessity for producing proof of conduct 30 years ago and noted that whatever subpoenas were issued had to conform to constitutional standards.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8021.625.

For the United States: Willis L. Hotchkiss, George D. Reycraft, Larry L. Williams, E. Winslow Turner, William C. McPike, Robert A. Hammond, and Alan S. Ward, Attorneys, Department of Justice.

For the movant: Cravath, Swaine & Moore, New York, N. Y., for General Motors Corp. (Henry M. Hogan, Bruce Bromley, and George B. Turner, of counsel).

[Subpoena Duces Tecum—Scope]

McGohey, District Judge [In full text]: General Motors has moved to quash a subpoena duces tecum which was caused to be issued by Government attorneys commanding the corporation to appear before a grand jury in this district to testify and give evidence in regard to "an alleged violation of the federal antitrust law"; and to produce "documents and items" described in an attached schedule. The latter covers 13 legal size pages and consists of 16 numbered paragraphs most of which are subdivided into sub-paragraphs ranging in number from 2 to 18.

The motion is granted.

Whether, as counsel for the corporation asserts, a subpoena duces tecum of such scope as this is without precedent in antitrust litigation need not be decided. But certainly it is unprecedented in the experience of the writer. What is demanded is a vast volume of records covering in minute detail practically every internal and external aspect of the corporation's widespread activities except labor relations, for varying periods of which the shortest is 11 years and the longest is 30 years; and in addition extensive detailed data as to the production, financial standing and "profitability and prospects" of unidentified "competitors in each product field."

["Policy Documents"]

Among the papers called for are what are designated as "policy documents," a term which is defined in the subpoena as follows:

"'Policy Documents' are all originals, copies, microfilms, tape recordings, and reproductions of any kind of:

1. Minutes and records of the Board of Directors and all committees and subcommittees thereof and all reports, minutes, recommendations, surveys, studies, financial records and communications and records of any kind going to, coming from or retained by such Board, or by any of its committees or subcommittees, or by any members thereof.

2. All reports, minutes, memoranda, recommendations, surveys, studies, financial records and communications of any kind received by, prepared by, for, or on behalf of, or transmitted by or on behalf of the general manager or president, as the case may be, of any division or subsidiary of the Corporation, the committees and subcommittees of each such division or subsidiary and the members thereof.

3. All reports, memoranda, recommendations, surveys, studies, financial records and communications and records of any kind received by, prepared by, for, or on behalf of, or transmitted by or on behalf of any officer of the Corporation who functions on behalf of the Corporation as a whole or who is a group executive."[1]

[1] Only one of unmarked multiple identical copies need be produced. But any such copies bearing notations relevant to the subject matter must be produced. Moreover, if any such documents have heretofore been produced in any of four named suits by the Government against General Motors beginning in 1941, they need not be produced. However, the corporation is left to discover what documents the Government has already received.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

On Argument, the Government's attorney consented to modify the foregoing by eliminating "members thereof" from paragraphs 1 and 2. It developed on argument that a "policy document" is every piece of paper, however informal, relating to any activity covered by the subpoena, which ever came to the attention of any member of the boards or committees or any of the officials named in the definition, without regard to whether the contents of the paper were approved or rejected. The corporation has 44 operating divisions and subsidiaries. Each of these has its own hierarchy of managing officials who from time to time serve on various standing or special committees formed to study matters of business policy and practice in their own or other divisions. The corporation's board of directors likewise work largely through several committees made up of board members and numerous corporate officers who are not directors.

[Magnitude of Search Required]

The subpoena itself must be read and studied to appreciate the extraordinary breadth of the demand for "policy documents." It includes, for example, those relating to "products" produced by the corporation or purchased by it from others. The corporation's "products" range from small mechanical parts such as screws, bolts and nuts through a wide range of machine tools to the following "products" and each of their multitudinous parts; engines, passenger cars, trucks, railroad locomotives, earth moving machinery, refrigerators and other electrical household appliances. The corporation's general counsel asserts under oath that, to secure the "policy documents" demanded for the specified period from its Pontiac Motor Division alone would require a search by responsible personnel of 30,000 file drawers. This assertion is not denied by Government counsel. They merely argue that they "hardly believe" top management officials would concern themselves with any but "major" products, a term they do not define. This argument, however, is contradicted by the subpoena which these same counsel have caused to be issued. That is not limited to "major" products. It includes all. I accept the sworn statement of the corporation's general counsel and find accordingly. It is a fair inference that searches of proportionate magnitude would be required in the other numerous divisions of the corporation, and I so find.

As appears from the subpoena, copies of many of the demanded documents have heretofore been produced in prior and even presently pending litigations. The Government, however, does not specify which of these are now excluded from the demand but puts on the corporation the burden of determining that.

["Unlimited Exploratory Investigation"]

It is settled law that a demand for production of documents by subpoena must be reasonable.[2] I hold that this subpoena which requires production of practically every paper outside of routine correspondence relating to every phase of the corporation's affairs, in an unlimited exploratory investigation such as is here frankly proposed, "whose purposes and limits can be determined only as it proceeds,"[3] is unreasonable. It will be quashed.[4]

[Misuse of Grand Jury Process]

In view of what has been said, it is unnecessary to pass now on the corporation's contention that in any event the Government is misusing the grand jury process to discover evidence to support a civil suit.

[Time Limits for Investigation]

Government counsel assert they have received recent complaints of possibly illegal practices by the corporation in certain specified areas of business. The grand jury, of course, may investigate these as well as any other possible criminal violations. But surely it is not inevitably necessary in such investigations or for the prosecution of any criminal charges that may result, that proof of conduct 30 years ago be produced. There is, after all, a statute of limitations for criminal offenses against the antitrust laws. Moreover it is never necessary in order to prove a course of conduct, to show each and every act in one's history. This, of course, is as true of an antitrust prosecution as of any other.

The court will not now undertake to prescribe limits for the proposed investigation.

[2] Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 616; Hale v. Henkle, 201 U. S. 43.
[3] See McMann v. Securities and Exchange Commission, 2 Cir., 87 F. 2d 377, 379.
[4] See In Re United Shoe Machinery Corporation, [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,535], 6 F. R. D. 347.

But whatever subpoenas are issued must conform to constitutional standards. Moreover Government counsel are advised to consider Judge Wyzanski's observations and decision in United States v. United Shoe Machinery Corporation[5] with respect to what he described as "the type of extravagant presentation that has come to plague the field of antitrust law."

[Subpoena Quashed]

The motion is granted and the instant subpoena is quashed.

So Ordered.

[¶ 69,410] Service Stages, Inc. v. The Greyhound Corporation, et al.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. No. 17612. Dated July 24, 1959.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia. FRANK A. HOOPER, District Judge.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—When Recovery May Be Barred—Statute of Limitations.—A trial court's judgment holding that a plaintiff's treble damage action was barred by a Georgia four-year statute of limitations was affirmed on the basis of the trial court's opinion, 1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,351.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.100, 9010.200.

For the appellant: Hal Lindsay, Ellis Arnall, H. Fred Gober, and Randolph Hayes, all of Atlanta, Ga.

For the appellee: E. Smythe Gambrell and Charles A. Moye, Jr., both of Atlanta, Ga.

Affirming a judgment of the U. S. District Court, Northern District of Georgia, 1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,351.

Before JONES and BROWN, Circuit Judges, and WRIGHT, District Judge.

PER CURIAM [In full text]: We find ourselves in agreement with the opinion of the District Court, Service Stages Inc. v. Greyhound Corporation [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,351], 170 F. Supp. 482. For the reasons which it has given its judgment is affirmed.

[¶ 69,411] United States v. Eli Lilly and Company; Allied Laboratories, Inc.; American Home Products Corporation; Merck & Co., Inc.; and Parke, Davis & Company.

In the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey. Criminal Action No. 173-58. July 8, 1959.

Case No. 1387 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Proof of Unlawful Price Fixing Conspiracy—Disparity Between Domestic and Foreign Prices—Disparate Costs But Uniform Prices in Domestic Sales—Production of "Costs" Documents—Subpoena Duces Tecum.—The Government, in a criminal action charging five pharmaceutical companies with conspiring to fix prices for the sale of Salk polio vaccine to public authorities in the United States, was granted a motion for the issuance of a subpoena duces tecum to compel the production of "documents that were prepared for the purpose of aiding in the pricing of the vaccine.

[5] [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,436], 110 F. Supp. 295, 299.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

. . ." It sought those documents in order to show that the companies' "costs" were "disparate" and that their uniform prices were, therefore, the result of an unlawful agreement rather than the result of uniform costs. The court found that the documents had a "liminal relevancy" to the charges. In addition, the court rejected the companies' contentions that, even assuming relevancy, the probative value of their "costs" was insufficient to justify the disclosure of their trade secrets, the resulting delay in the trial, the confusion of the jury, and the prejudice to the companies by virtue of their having made a profit on Salk vaccine.

Also, the Government's "proffer of proof" that the companies offered vaccine to those not alleged to have been objects of the conspiracy (foreign public authorities), at "disparate" prices, was both relevant and material. That evidence was capable of properly influencing the result in the case because the jury might infer that "disparate" bidding between the companies might have occurred domestically except for the existence of a conspiracy to agree on prices as charged.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.360, 2005.410.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Production of Records Under Rule 17(c), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure—Rule's Availability to Government.—The Government, in a criminal action charging five pharmaceutical companies with conspiring to fix prices for the sale of Salk polio vaccine, was granted a motion under Rule 17(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure for the issuance of a subpoena duces tecum to compel the companies to produce certain "costs" documents. Rule 17(c) permits the court to require the production of "the books, papers, documents, or other objects designated," reserving to the court the discretion to quash or modify the subpoena "if compliance would be unreasonable or oppressive." While research yielded no case in which the Government had utilized that Rule directly against a defendant, that fact did not mean that the Rule was not available to the Government. In a prior case, it had been found that no right of discovery existed in favor of the Government "since such discovery would probably be a violation of the defendant's constitutional rights." Corporations, however, enjoy no such privilege against self-incrimination. Therefore, there was no reason, in the instant case, to deny the Government the opportunity to employ the Rule.

The court found that the requirements of "good cause" for the production of the documents were met, in that (1) the documents had a "liminal relevancy," (2) the documents could not be procured elsewhere, (3) the Government could not properly prepare for trial without them, and (4) the Government was operating in "good faith" and was not embarking on a "fishing expedition."

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8029.500.

For the plaintiff: Lewis Bernstein, Bernard M. Hollander, William P. Cassedy, William H. Copenhaver, and Stephen R. Lang, Attorneys, Department of Justice, for the Motion and the Proffer.

For the defendants: Richard J. Hughes, for Eli Lilly and Company; and Dewey, Ballantine, Bushby, Palmer & Wood by Thomas E. Dewey, Everett I. Willis, Leonard Joseph, Robert Pitofsky, and James T. Harris, of Counsel. Minton, Dinsmore & Bohlinger, for Allied Laboratories, Inc., by H. Colin Minton, Jr., and John R. Heher; and Sullivan & Cromwell by William Piel, Jr., and Blackmar, Swanson, Midgley, Jones & Eager by Kenneth E. Midgley, of Counsel. Pitney, Hardin & Ward, for American Home Products Corporation, by Frank C. O'Brien; and Donovan, Leisure, Newton & Irvine by Ralstone R. Irvine, Roy W. McDonald, and Robert M. Loeffler, of Counsel. Katzenbach, Gildea & Rudner, for Merck & Co., Inc., by George Gildea, and Richard M. Kohn; and Drinker, Biddle & Reath by Charles J. Biddle, John G. Williams, and Patrick Ryan, of Counsel. Thorn Lord, for Parke, Davis & Company; and Covington & Burling by Gerhard A. Gesell, Stephen Pollak, and James E. Tobin, of Counsel, contra the Motion and the Proffer.

Opinion

On Motion under Rule 17(c) of Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure and

Ruling

On Government's Proffer of Proof as to Foreign Sales

[Price Fixing Charged—Salk Vaccine]

FORMAN, Chief Judge [In full text]: In this prosecution for violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1 (1952 ed.), Eli Lilly and Company, Allied Laboratories, Inc., American Home Products Corporation, Merck & Co., Inc., and Parke, Davis & Company, are charged with conspiring to fix the prices at which poliomyelitis vaccine, commonly known and referred to herein as Salk vaccine, was sold to public authorities within the United States. The Government now moves under Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 17(c)[1] for the issuance of subpoenae duces tecum to compel the defendants to produce before trial certain documents having to do with the pricing of Salk vaccine to public authorities in the United States from January 1, 1955 to December 31, 1957.

[Proffer of Proof]

There is also before the court a proffer of proof by the Government of foreign sales of Salk vaccine by the defendants. The motion under Rule 17(c) will be considered first.

[Rule 17(c)—Availability to Government]

Although raised by but one defendant,[2] Allied Laboratories, and only indirectly by it, attention must first be given to the question of whether or not the Government may employ Rule 17(c) against these defendants. As pointed out by Allied, "The history of judicial construction of the provisions of the last sentence of Rule 17(c), under which this motion is made, is mainly a history of applications by defendants to compel production of documents by the Government." Indeed research yields not a single case in which the Government utilized this rule directly against a defendant. But the lack of its employment by the Government does not mean that it is not available. In United States v. Carter, 15 F. R. D. 367 (D. D. C. 1954) Judge Holtzoff quoted the following excerpt from the "Committee Notes to the Second Preliminary Draft of the Rules":

> "The last sentence provides for a method by which the court may permit either side to inspect subpoenaed documents or objects under the supervision of the court. It is inserted in the interests of fairness and for the purpose of preventing delay during the trial, particularly in cases where numerous documents may have been subpoenaed."

Judge Holtzoff also found, however, that in the case of an individual defendant "no reciprocal right of discovery [exists] in favor of the Government, since such discovery would probably be a violation of defendant's constitutional rights." Corporations, however, enjoy no such privilege against self-incrimination and there is therefore, no reason to deny the Government the opportunity to employ the Rule in this case.

On its face the Rule permits the court to require production of "the books, papers, documents, or other objects designated [in the subpoena duces tecum]", reserving to the court discretion to quash or modify the subpoena "if compliance would be unreasonable or oppressive." As Judge Holtzoff held in Carter, supra, at page 371:

> "Rule 17(c) is applicable only to such documents or objects as would be admissible in evidence at the trial, or which may be used for impeachment purposes."

Considering both the plain language of the Rule itself and the Carter case, supra, I conclude that Rule 17(c) is available in a proper case to the Government as well as the defendant.

---

[1] "(c) For Production of Documentary Evidence and of Objects. A subpoena may also command the person to whom it is directed to produce the books, papers, documents or other objects designated therein. The court on motion made promptly may quash or modify the subpoena if compliance would be unreasonable or oppressive. The court may direct that books, papers, documents or objects designated in the subpoena be produced before the court at a time prior to the trial or prior to the time when they are to be offered in evidence and may upon their production permit the books, papers, documents or objects or portions thereof to be inspected by the parties and their attorneys." Fed. Rules Cr. Proc. Rule 17(c), 18 U. S. C. A.

[2] Any argument urged by an individual defendant which has application to all defendants has been considered as if made by all defendants.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Good Cause]

In Bowman Dairy Co. v. United States [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,818], 341 U. S. 214 (1950), the Court held, at page 220:

"It was not intended by Rule 16 to give a limited right of discovery, and then by Rule 17 to give a right of discovery in the broadest terms. Rule 17 provided for the usual subpoena ad testificandum and duces tecum, which may be issued by the clerk, with the provision that the court may direct the materials designated in the subpoena duces tecum to be produced at a specified time and place for inspection by the defendant. . . ."

Having quoted this very language, Judge Weinfield, in United States v. Iozia, 13 F. R. D. 335 (S. D. N. Y. 1952), at page 338, said:

"Good cause, in my opinion, requires a showing by the defendant,

(1) That the documents are evidentiary and relevant;

(2) That they are not otherwise procurable by the defendant reasonably in advance of trial by exercise of due diligence;

(3) That the defendant cannot properly prepare for trial without such production and inspection in advance of trial and the failure to obtain such inspection may tend unreasonably to delay the trial;

(4) That the application is made in good faith and is not intended as a general fishing expedition."

["Pricing" Documents Sought]

Originally the Government's motion was very broad and sweeping.[3] However, at oral argument the Government agreed that it was seeking only those "documents that were prepared for the purpose of aiding in the pricing of the vaccine * * * whether or not [they were] used." The affidavit filed in support of the motion reads in part, "Accordingly, the materials sought by the subpoena are for the purpose of evidencing (1) that costs were disparate, and (2) that profit margins for poliomyelitis vaccine were higher than such margins for other similar products marketed by the defendants." At oral argument the Government disavowed the second of these purposes. (See post, page 14.)

[3] "With reference to poliomyelitis vaccine:

"1. All books, papers or documents maintained by your company during the period January 1, 1954 through December 31, 1957, which contain entries in accounts which set forth net sales, costs of goods sold, research and development expenses, selling expenses, general and administrative expenses, and other income and expenses.

"2. All reports and memoranda prepared during the period January 1, 1955 through December 31, 1957, by your company's accounting personnel for the use of management officials or other corporate personnel showing your company's receipts and disbursement.

"3. All profit and loss statements prepared during the period January 1, 1954 through December 31, 1957, concerning poliomyelitis vaccine or any class of products within which poliomyelitis vaccine was included, when such statements were not specifically prepared for poliomyelitis vaccine.

"4. All books, papers or documents (e.g., chart of accounts or index of accounts, etc.) used by your company to index the names and numbers of the accounts regularly maintained by your company which during the period January 1, 1954 through December 31, 1957, contained entries relating to net sales, cost of goods sold, research and development expenses, selling expenses, general and administrative expenses, and other income and expenses.

"With reference to poliomyelitis vaccine and such other product which might be included therewith to form a class of products:

"5. All manuals or other designated books, papers or records maintained by your company during the period January 1, 1954 through December 31, 1957 which contained instructions to officers or employees concerning the manner in which receipts and disbursements for poliomyelitis vaccine or class of products within which poliomyelitis vaccine was included, were to be determined by allocation, whenever such receipts and disbursements were not specifically maintained for poliomyelitis vaccine.

"6. All schedules or work papers containing entries which indicate the sources from which were obtained the items and amounts set forth in tabular summaries which were prepared in behalf of your company in connection with the grand jury proceedings which resulted in the indictment filed in this action.

In its reply memorandum the Government conceded "that if all defendants agree to execute an appropriate stipulation the subpoenaed material is not needed to evidence disparate costs. Accordingly there would be no need for the Government to subpoena the books, manuals, and work sheets in items 1, 4, 5 and 6 of the proposed subpoena. The following is all that would be required:

"All papers or documents which contain reports, memoranda, financial statements, studies and analyses of sales and costs (including unit costs) for the development, manufacture, distribution and sale of poliomyelitis vaccine and which were prepared during the period January 1, 1955 through December 31, 1957, for use by:

"(a) officials who participated in the pricing of poliomyelitis vaccine;

"(b) other corporate personnel who, in the regular course of their employment, participated in the pricing of the company's products whether or not, in fact, they participated to the same extent, or at all, in the pricing of poliomyelitis vaccine;

"(c) the controller or treasurer and/or accounting personnel."

[Relevancy]

Applying the Iozia test, the Government's first hurdle is relevancy. To meet it the Government contends that "when disparate costs are evidenced in addition to numerous other circumstances, especially if those costs were accompanied by unusually high profit margins it may be inferred that the uniformity of price was the result of an illegal agreement and nothing else." And further that "if it should turn out that the cost levels of all defendants for the manufacture, sale and distribution of polio vaccine were well below the uniform prices set by defendants, a jury might well conclude that this, coupled with the Government's other evidence, indicates the existence of an illegal agreement to tamper with the price structure."

Lastly, the Government avers that since its case will be one of circumstantial evidence it must show disparate costs in order to eliminate the reasonable hypothesis of innocence that uniform prices were the result of uniform costs.

["Cost" as Determinant in Setting Prices]

In reply the defendants contend that cost is not the determinant in establishing price and to that extent the Government's argument rests on a false premise; and that profit margins are irrelevant and immaterial to the issue of this case.

To support the economic theory that cost is not the determinant in the setting of a price the defendants have submitted the affidavits of corporate officers and economists who depose that such factors as homogeneity of product, estimated period of obsolescence, knowledge of competitors' prices, number of producers, desired rate of return on capital investment and the law of supply and demand all play important roles in the pricing of any product. Moreover, say the deponents, in the case of Salk vaccine other considerations in addition to the foregoing were present, e.g., the danger of corporate disaster, unprecedented governmental regulation, unequalled public interest and the probability of enormous demand followed by a rapid decline in the market.

Applying all of these influences to the pricing of Salk vaccine the defendants contend that the vaccine is necessarily homogeneous by virtue of governmental regulation and inspection and that in any series of inoculations an individual might be properly treated with the vaccine of different manufacturers.

At page 5 of its brief Eli Lilly and Company states:

> ". . . Sellers of homogeneous products must meet the price of competitors or risk injury to their competitive position in the market and to their reputation among customers. If a producer's costs are relatively high it is faced with the choice of meeting competitive prices and taking a smaller profit or abandoning the market."

The validity of this argument is seen say the defendants in the fact that an informed buyer will not pay more to one producer than to another for a homogeneous product, e.g., clothespins, soda ash, and therefore the fact that costs are disparate has no probative value and is as consistent with innocence as with guilt.

Defendants contend that normally the estimated period of obsolescence for drug products is five years, but that in the case of Salk vaccine it was estimated at three years, due in some measure to the fact that even at the time of initial production of the vaccine, drug houses other than defendants' had already embarked on a program leading to the marketing of a live virus vaccine designed to replace the Salk vaccine. This shortened estimated period of obsolescence necessitated a more rapid return of investment, and inferentially, at least, would appear to have resulted in a price somewhat higher than would have otherwise obtained, contend the defendants.

Defendants claim that there was complete access to the prices set by any one of them by reason of the limited number of producers and necessary disclosures to distributors, retailers and governmental agencies; that each knew the prices of the others almost immediately, but that responsibility to the public and shareholders alike precluded charging a price higher than that asked by any other producer-defendant; and that business acumen indicated no reason to set a price below that of a competitor. Admittedly, however, certain changes did occur and these according to the defendants were always a reduction in price because any other course of conduct would have incurred unanimous public disapproval.

In terms of the law of supply and demand it appears that a seller's market existed for Salk vaccine during the first years of production. This condition would seem to have resulted in high prices. But the defendants contend that this approach is invalid because it does not take into account that while a buyer may be forced to pay a high price in such a market he will retaliate by not buying a particular manufacturer's goods when the opportunity for choice arises. According to the defendants, price tampering would have incurred vigorous public criticism with a consequent loss of reputation, and would have been a breach of public responsibility.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

The defendants further contend that the seller's market which obtained during the first two years of production of the vaccine was destined to diminish rapidly once mass immunization of the population was achieved and the public demand lessened; and that the danger of corporate disaster lurked in every batch of vaccine produced and distributed, for an impure shipment could result in great injury to the users, and liability to the defendants.

Undoubtedly the public exhibited a great interest in the production of the Salk vaccine. Indeed this interest resulted in its complete regulation by the federal government of the manufacture and distribution during the period of government control. The Government became the largest single customer for Salk vaccine. And in addition there existed between the Government and the defendants a most favored customer clause by virtue of which the Government became immediately entitled to any price reduction given to any public authority within the United States.

Based on these considerations the defendants assert that costs are irrelevant. That all of these factors bear on price need not be denied. But the Government does not contend that cost is the only yardstick by which the issue of this case is to be decided. Rather, says the Government, cost is one item which, when taken with other evidence, will justify the jury in finding the existence of an agreement to fix the price of Salk vaccine to public authorities within the United States. The other evidence proposed by the Government is:

"(a) three of the five defendants knew the original list price to be set for poliomyelitis vaccine prior to any public announcement thereof;

"(b) extremely rigid vertical price maintenance was undertaken by each defendant, in order to insure uniform prices to public authority;

"(c) different prices for polio vaccine prevailed among defendants in their sales to classes of customers other than public authority;

"(d) each defendant refused to sell polio vaccine to public authority on anything other than a delivered price basis;

"(e) each defendant refused to sell polio vaccine to public authority at prices which included quantity discounts;

"(f) each defendant refused to sell short-dated polio vaccine to public authority at reduced prices".

[Liminal Relevancy]

The defendants, however, contend that these varied factors militate conclusively against any finding that a price-fixing agreement existed among them. But that is the very issue in this case and cannot, therefore be resolved at this time. This is not to say that ultimately the defendants' contentions in this regard may not be found by the jury to be meritorious, if urged at trial, but only that at this stage of the proceedings they do not serve to disprove or overcome what I find on this motion to be the liminal relevancy of the documents.

[Profits—Comparable Products]

Having demonstrated the defendants' costs the Government would endeavor to establish that the profits realized on vaccine were unusually high and that this evidences an intent to set a uniform price. Defendants contend that if the Government is to be permitted to make this argument it must first produce proof of comparable products and the profits realized therefrom, but that there are no products comparable to the Salk vaccine and therefore no standard exists by which to measure those profits.

In support of their position the defendants cite United States v. E. I. duPont de Nemours and Co. [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,369], 351 U. S. 377 (1956) for the proposition that profit evidence is admissible only after a showing of profits on comparable products. However, in duPont which was a monopoly case, the Court said, at page 404:

". . . Nor can we say that du Pont's profits, while liberal . . . demonstrate the existence of a monopoly without proof of lack of comparable profits during those years in other prosperous industries. . . ." (Emphasis supplied.)

Thus the Court was requiring not proof of profits derived from comparable products, but proof of a lack of comparable profits from other profitable industries, in a monopoly case.

The Government has also stated that since this will be a case of circumstantial evidence it must demonstrate that uniform prices did not evolve from uniform costs, in order to negate a reasonable hypothesis of innocence. Defendants have agreed to stipulate that their costs were disparate and urge that this obviates any Government need for the documents themselves. While the stipulation supplies the fact of difference, the documents serve to delineate that difference among the defendants in the light of which the jury may be better able to evaluate the evidence.

[Other Reasons]

Defendants have advanced additional reasons for not granting this motion, even assuming relevancy. They contend that the probative value of their costs is insufficient to justify (1) the necessary disclosure of their highly valued and closely guarded trade secrets, traditionally confidential even within the corporation itself, (2) the delay in trial occasioned by the Government's presentation of the material and lengthened, necessarily, by their defense thereto, (3) confusing the jury and prejudicing the defendants by virtue of their having made a profit on the sale of Salk vaccine.

[Delay]

With regard to prolonging the proceedings the defendants contend that the introduction of this evidence by the Government will necessitate such extensive rebuttal as to outweigh the probative value of the documents sought by the Government, granting their relevance and admissibility. Specifically, Allied Laboratories, in its Supplemental Memorandum contemplates the necessary submission of "extensive factual proof as to the history of the development, production, promotion, merchandising, pricing and market conditions of many other products, in order to put management decisions as to polio vaccine in appropriate factual context for comparison, contrast and explanation", in order to meet the Government's evidence as to whether or not the cost levels of all defendants were well below the prices set.

Allied further represents in an accompanying offer of proof that this would entail an analysis of 72 new items and their 68 respective shelf costs to price ratios, which analysis would demonstrate first, that Allied's products are not susceptible of being categorized in terms of shelf costs to price, and second, that "polio vaccine has been well within [Allied's] normal range of such ratios."

Even the prospect of such complex and lengthy proof upon the part of the defense does not weigh sufficiently to deprive the Government of the opportunity it seeks to avail itself of what it deems crucial evidence in support of its case. On the other hand, no matter how time taking the defendants' counter proofs may be they must have full and ample opportunity to advance them. It can only be hoped that continued cooperation upon the part of counsel in appropriate pretrial stipulations may reduce the prolongation of the trial to a minimum.

[Trade Secrets]

As to the first of these contentions it should be noted that the material sought was designed for use during the period of January 1, 1955 to December 31, 1957, already a year and a half to four and a half years past. In view of this circumstance it seems unlikely that the defendants will sustain any appreciable loss of their trade secrets by virtue of the disclosure of this material. The law is clear "that a party has no absolute right to refuse to divulge information in the course of litigation upon the sole ground that the giving of the information will necessarily involve the disclosure of trade secrets. The privilege is conditioned upon the circumstances of the particular case, and the extent to which the disclosure of secrets will be compelled is a matter largely resting upon the court's discretion." Cities Service Oil Co. v. Celanese Corp. of America, 10 F. R. D. 458 (D. Del. 1950), cited in International Nickel Co. v. Ford Motor Co., 15 F. R. D. 392 (S. D. N. Y. 1954). Cf. Zenith Radio Corp. v. Radio Corp. of America [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,401], 106 F. Supp. 561 (D. Del. 1952), where the court observed in a footnote that > "in the absence of a strong showing of relevance a party will not be required to disclose confidential information."

but also noted at page 576 that

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

"There are differences between a government antitrust suit, a private one, and a misuse defense as to the holder of a patent. These differences are not merely doctrinal. They depend upon the facts of each case."

In the light of these cases, the potential probative value of the cost documents sought by the Government, and the fact that injury to the defendants by requiring the disclosure of this material appears to be slight, I find no merit in this objection.

[Confusing Jury]

The possibility of confusing the jury and prejudicing the defendants by admitting this evidence at trial presents a somewhat different problem. Essentially the defendants contend that the introduction of the cost documents by the Government will necessitate extensive rebuttal in that the methods of price determination will have to be put before the jury if that body is to properly pass upon the matter in issue. Undoubtedly this will be a time consuming process as presently contemplated by the defendants and one in which the possibility of confusing the jury cannot be lightly dismissed. But this consideration is outweighed by the potential probative value of that which is sought. Furthermore counsel on both sides and the court will be required to minimize the possibility of confusion.

[Prejudice—Profits on Vaccine]

The possibility of prejudicing the defendants in the minds of the jury is bottomed on the contention that the Government desires to place the profits realized on the vaccine before the jury in the hope that this evidence alone will inflame the panel to return an adverse finding. In its Supplemental Brief, American Home Products alleges that the Government's sole purpose in seeking the cost documents is "[to authorize] the jury to convict if in its opinion the prices set yielded an unreasonable profit."

But the Government has said that its purpose is to put to the jury the reasonableness of the pricing official's explanation as to how the price of Salk vaccine to public authorities within the United States was set, and not profit itself. Furthermore, the irrelevance of profits alone in this case will be a matter for instruction by the court.

The Government has further represented that it does not intend to compare the profit anticipated on Salk vaccine with the profit anticipated on other products. Indeed the Government explicitly denied any intention to introduce such evidence at oral argument on this motion.

[Knowledge of Total Cost]

Defendants contend further that they do not know, nor are they able to ascertain the total cost of the vaccine, and that partial cost is inadmissible.

It would seem that no pricing official would come to a determination as to price without knowledge within reason as to costs, lest a price disastrously under cost be arrived at and offered. The Government now seeks such documents as may have been prepared to aid each pricing official in fixing the price of his vaccine to public authorities in the United States, whether or not he used such documents. With this evidence the Government may seek to examine the pricing officials as to whether or not their determinations were based upon these documents. This now appears to be a relevant and material inquiry but of course would be subject to rulings upon objections which might be interposed.

I have not overlooked the contention of Allied that in the light of the unprecedented circumstances attending the initial marketing of the vaccine even if one or more defendants employed "normal" or "regular" mark-ups and even if the pricing of Salk vaccine departed therefrom, "this would only fairly tend to show that it was a special case for some reason" and that any departure from normal price setting therefore "is readily consistent with a non-collusive opportunity and motivation." But while this material may properly be for the jury it does not derogate from the potential probative value of the Government's present proffer.

[Necessity for Documents]

The next requirements which the Government must meet are that the material sought cannot be otherwise procured; that the Government cannot otherwise adequately prepare for trial and that production at trial will cause undue delay. It is obvious that there is no other source from which these documents may be obtained, and that production at trial will in fact result in undue delay.

Having accepted the Government's theory as to relevancy of these documents I am constrained to conclude that it cannot adequately prepare for trial without them.

["Fishing Expedition"]

The last consideration is whether the Government is operating in good faith or embarking on a fishing expedition in seeking these documents. It cannot be gainsaid that "Rule 17(c) was not intended to provide an additional method of discovery. Its chief innovation was to expedite the trial by providing a time and place before trial for the inspection of the subpoenaed materials." Bowman Dairy Co. v. United States, supra, page 220. Whether the movant in a particular case is attempting to obtain discovery under the guise of this rule is a question the answer to which depends on the facts of each case. Thus, "Rule 17(c) . . . has only the limited function of procuring the production of papers for use in evidence at trial." United States v. O'Connor, 118 F. Supp. 248 (D. Mass. 1953).

In the instant case the Government has represented that it fully expects to submit the cost documents in evidence at trial. The fact that the Government has not seen these particular documents might lead to the conclusion that it is engaged in a fishing expedition except that it has seen summaries apparently prepared from the documents now sought. Furthermore, there seems to be every probability that such documents exist. That fact together with the Government's announced intention to put this material before the jury operates to remove the element of a fishing expedition.

Based on the foregoing I am constrained to grant the Government's motion for the issuance of subpoenae duces tecum requiring the production by each defendant before trial of those documents relating to the cost of the vaccine, which were prepared for the purpose of aiding in the pricing of the vaccine, whether or not they were used. An order should be submitted on notice providing for the issuance and form of the subpoenae.

PROFFER OF PROOF

[Deviations in Foreign Sales]

The Government has made a proffer of proof that the defendants treated sales to foreign public authorities differently than they treated sales to domestic public authorities during the period August 1, 1956 to December 31, 1957. It contends that the contrasting treatment of foreign and domestic sales constitutes a circumstance which, when considered with other evidence in the case, furnishes the basis for a valid inference by the jury that the defendants conspired to agree to the prices at which the vaccine would be sold in the United States, as charged in the indictment.

The proffer is two pronged. First, the "Government proposes to prove that when the defendants offered poliomyelitis vaccine for sale to public authorities not alleged to be objects of the conspiracy, their prices were disparate;" and second "that three of the five defendants authorized the submission of quotations in their behalf below their established prices, to public authorities not alleged to be objects of the conspiracy, while at the same time they never deviated from their established prices in making quotations to the public authorities" in the United States.

The actual proffers are as follow:

CITED INSTANCES OF DISPARATE BIDDING

"August, 1956

"1. Venezuela

Lilly	$5.70	F. O. B. Indianapolis
Sharp & Dohme (Merck & Co.)	5.43	F. O. B. New York
Wyeth (American Home Products)	5.43	(Freight terms unknown)

"2. Costa Rica[4]

Parke, Davis	$5.73	(less 2%) C. I. F.
Lilly	5.63	(less 2%) C. I. F.
Sharp & Dohme	5.75	(discount unknown, if any) C. I. F.
Pitman-Moore (Allied)	5.46	(discount unknown, if any) C. I. F.
Wyeth	5.76	(discount unknown, if any) C. I. F.

[4] It appears that the first Costa Rican bid was not acted upon and that rebids were invited. These appear as group 3 under the heading Costa Rica.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

"3. Costa Rica

Sharp & Dohme	$5.45	C. I. F. (discount unknown, if any)
Pitman-Moore	5.61	C. I. F. (discount unknown, if any)
Wyeth	5.75	(discount unknown, if any) C. I. F.
Parke, Davis	5.73	(less 2%) C. I. F.
Lilly	5.63	(discount unknown, if any) C. I. F.

"December, 1956

"4. Uruguay

Pitman-Moore	$5.37	C. I. F. (discount unknown, if any)
Parke, Davis	5.71	C. I. F. (discount unknown, if any)
Sharp & Dohme	5.845	C. I. F. (discount unknown, if any)
Wyeth	5.71	C. I. F. (discount unknown, if any)
Lilly	5.77	C. I. F. (discount unknown, if any)

"August, 1957

"5. Uruguay

Sharp & Dohme	$5.0274	(discount unknown, if any) (freight terms unknown)
Lilly	5.13	(less 2%) (freight terms unknown)
Pitman-Moore	4.7274	(discount unknown, if any) (freight terms unknown)
Parke, Davis	4.79	(less 2%) (freight terms unknown)"

CITED INSTANCES OF BIDDING BELOW ESTABLISHED PRICES

"Established Price: $5.70 (less 2%), or $5.586 net.

Approximate Date	Public Authority	Price Per 9—cc Vial
(1) Parke, Davis
8-25-56	Argentina	$4.50 *
10-5-56	Argentina	5.13 *

"Established Price: $5.13 (less 2%), or $5.0274 net.

(2) Parke, Davis
7-26-57	Uruguay	$5.02 net
8-20-57	Brazil	5.025 net
11-5-57	Chile	4.62 *
(3) Pitman-Moore
6-7-57	Brazil	$5.027 net
6-18-57	Brazil	5.027 net
6-18-57	Korea	5.027 net
8-22-57	Brazil	5.027 net
9-30-57	Brazil	5.027 net
11-8-57	Hungary and Bulgaria	4.50 (2%)
11-20-57	Austria	4.50 (2%)
11-22-57	South Africa	4.50 (2%)
11-27-57	Formosa	4.50 (2%)
11-27-57	Lebanon	4.50 (2%)
12-6-57	Germany	4.50 *
12-6-57	South Korea	4.50 (2%)
12-9-57	Netherlands Antilles	4.50 *

* Discount unknown, if any.

CITED INSTANCES OF BIDDING BELOW ESTABLISHED PRICES—(continued)

"Established Price: $5.13 (less 2%), or $5.0274 net.—(continued)

(3) Pitman-Moore—(continued) Approximate Date	Public Authority	Price Per 9—cc Vial
12-10-57	Germany	4.50 *
12-12-57	Egypt	4.50 (2%)
12-20-57	Okinawa	4.50 (2%)
12-26-57	South Korea	4.50 (2%)
12-26-57	Germany	4.50 (2%)
12-28-57	Brazil	4.50 (2%)
12-30-57	Brazil	4.50 (2%)
12-31-57	Italy	3.90 *
(4) Sharp & Dohme
7-11-57	Brazil	$5.027 *
10-22-57	Finland	4.85 (2%)

"Established Price: $2.33 (less 2%), or $2.2834.

(5) Pitman-Moore
9-12-56	Argentina	$1.31 *

* Discount unknown, if any.

The Government contends that the sales to foreign and domestic public authorities are comparable based on the following factors, which it asserts obtained in both markets during the period August 1, 1956, to December 31, 1957: (1) Homogeniety of product, (2) Enormous demand and short supply, (3) All pertinent sales were to public authorities, (4) Great public interest, (5) Immediate knowledge of competitors' prices, (6) Identity of manufacturing costs, (7) Equal applicability of most favored customer clause, (8) Absence of foreign producers until after summer of 1957, and (9) Absence of Government allocation program.

The defendants concede the application of factors (1) through (6), but deny that the markets are comparable because of other circumstances. As to (7), the applicability of the most favored customer clause, Allied Laboratories states in its brief[5] that until the expiration of its Government contract, June 30, 1957, it submitted its foreign bids on the assumption that this clause obtained as to those sales. Merck & Co., on the other hand, denies the application of that clause without indicating whether or not its foreign bidding was in any way affected thereby. As to (8), Allied maintains that foreign producers were active in the foreign market during the summer of 1957, although it does seem to agree that manufacturers were not in full production until after that time. The defendants state that a different number of producers were active in the foreign market than in the domestic, i.e., "the vaccine either was being produced or was in process of development for production in laboratories in Belgium, Canada, Denmark, England, Germany, Mexico, and the Union of South Africa," and "foreign-made vaccine was already being offered in the export markets prior to the partial lifting of United States export restrictions in August 1956."

Defendants maintain with regard to (9), that the Government's allocation program precluded exporting Salk vaccine except to those nations which had set up a form of distribution through public authorities as in the United States, although admittedly as among such countries there was no limit placed on the quantity exported.

In its brief Allied alleges that it was using Salk vaccine "as an entering wedge for the penetration of certain export markets.";

[5] All the defendants, except Parke, Davis & Company, have expressly joined in concurring with the contentions, opinions and conclusions expressed by Allied Laboratories in its brief. Eli Lilly and Company and Merck & Co., in addition have filed their own briefs, supplementing that of Allied.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

that it reduced its export price in November 1957 to meet competition abroad, as it allegedly did domestically on April 18, 1957, in order to meet a reduction by Merck & Co., and that this factor together with living standards and price levels abroad would necessarily have to receive consideration before any comparison of markets could be found or inferences permitted the jury.

[Prejudice]

The defendants next contend that this evidence of foreign sales will "arouse chauvinistic prejudice in the jury box or . . . suggest to the jury that the particular defendant in question 'could have afforded' to charge less in the domestic market."

Indeed it cannot be gainsaid that this is a real possibility. Nevertheless if otherwise admissible I would not exclude this evidence on this ground. Furthermore, if this material is admitted in evidence the defendants will be afforded ample opportunity to counteract any such effects and the jury will be instructed by the court on the irrelevance of profits.

[Explanations for Disparity]

At page 15 of its brief, Allied asserts that:

> "From the lifting of the export embargo in August 1956 until the expiration of [its] last contract with the Federal Government on June 30, 1957, [its] Export Department never deviated intentionally from a practice of quoting and selling to governmental agencies in foreign countries at a price equal to or above the price currently charged by [it] to governmental agencies in the United States."

According to Allied this practice in part resulted from a concern as to the applicability of the most favored customer clause in sales to foreign public authorities as noted heretofore. Thus argues Allied, while its Domestic Sales Department would not quote a price higher than that of a competitor for fear of adverse criticism its Export Department was under no such disability, but was only required to maintain its prices at the same or higher level than those at home. Allied contends that it was after the expiration of its contract with the Government on June 30, 1957, that its Export Department reduced its prices to meet competition as did the Domestic Department.

Three of the defendants, Eli Lilly and Company, Allied Laboratories, Inc. and Merck & Co., Inc., have submitted what each represents to be the basis upon which it made the foreign bids cited by the Government. American Home Products Corporation and Parke, Davis & Company, have not made any such submissions.

Lilly, which is cited by the Government only in those instances pertaining to disparate bidding, represents that in each cited instance it bid the then established domestic price with an adjustment for shipping terms and delivery costs. In the case of the December 1956 bid to Uruguay there was also a 1% statutory discount of which that government elected to avail itself rather than the usual 2% prompt payment discount, alternately available. On its face the Government's proffer supports these assertions.

The Government, however, contends that Lilly presented a choice of shipping terms to the foreign public authorities whereas it and the other defendants refused to quote non-delivered prices although requested to do so by domestic authorities.

Allied states in regard to the disparate bids that the first Costa Rican bid and both Uruguayan bids were unauthorized; and that the second Costa Rican bid was the domestic price plus an allowance for shipping. It further represents that although it refused to ship on the first Uruguayan bid, it nevertheless received a part of the order which it filled and for which it charged and was paid at its authorized price of $5.57 net C. I. F., i.e., the domestic price of $5.70 less 2% discount ($5.586) plus shipping adjustment.

The Government disputes Allied's assertion that it refused to ship on the allegedly unauthorized bids.

With regard to bidding below the established price to domestic public authorities, Allied contends that its bids of $5.027, as opposed to $5.0274 ($5.13 less 2%), while made when the Government contract was in effect were not to be delivered until after the expiration of that contract, and were made in order to meet "a particular local competitive situation."

Its bids of $4.50, beginning in November 1957 constituted a reduction made necessary by foreign competition according to Allied. The quotation of $3.90 in Italy it represents as "a special price extended to a commercial concern in Italy with which Pitman-Moore had made financial plans and arrangements for the promotion of its general business, culminating in the acquisition of a majority stock interest."

The bid of $1.31 per 3 cc vial to Argentina in September 1956 involved, says Allied, short-dated vaccine, i.e., vaccine near its expiration date. Allied notes that it had made a similar sale to the State of Montana in August of 1956, for less than the established price. According to the Bill of Particulars the price to Montana was $1.91.

Merck & Co. submits that its Venezuelan bid was made to meet that of American Home Products; that its first Costa Rican bid was $5.70 F. O. B. or $5.75 C. I. F. less 2% discount; that its second Costa Rican bid of $5.45 was made in an effort to meet Allied's first Costa Rican bid of $5.46 which it apparently thought would be rebid; that its first Uruguayan bid was at the then established domestic price of $5.70 plus .145 cents for shipping (Merck & Co. makes no mention here of either the customary 2% discount or the 1% statutory discount referred to by Lilly); and that its second Uruguayan bid was at the domestic price of $5.13 less 2% ($5.0274).

With reference to the instances of foreign bidding below the then established price to domestic public authorities Merck & Co. contends that its bid in Brazil was submitted by Merck, Sharp & Dohme S. A., a Brazilian corporation with principal offices in Rio de Janeiro and Campinas, which originally quoted $5.0274 (the domestic price of $5.13 less 2%) but reduced that to $5.027 upon learning that another company had quoted the latter figure. Its Finland bid was made according to Merck & Co. by its International Division which quoted a price of $5.0274 C. I. F. net to Lejos Oy, "an independent distributor in Helsinki for sale to the Medicinal Board of Finland" but when the distributor learned of a competitor's bid of $4.85 less 2% he met it in order to gain distribution of the Merck product throughout Finland.

While these explanations may reveal the basis upon which each of three of the defendants acted in quoting the bids cited by the Government they do not deny or disprove either disparity bidding or bidding beneath the then established price to domestic public authorities, as the Government alleges. The fact of disparity and underbidding, for whatever reason, remains.

[Materiality of Proffer]

As to the materiality of the proffer Allied Laboratories represents that of a total of 4,500,000 cc of Salk vaccine exported by it during August 1956 to December 1957, only 30,000 cc, or ⅔ or 1% are involved in the four instances of price disparity in which it is cited by the Government. In view of its allegations that these bids are but four out of literally hundreds, Allied urges that they are immaterial.

Eli Lilly and Company also urges immateriality and states that only 145,760 cc or 1½% of its total vaccine exports are involved in the instances of disparity cited by the Government.

Furthermore, contend the defendants, the Government has admitted that instances of domestic price disparity did exist. Thus in Allied's brief it is alleged that the "Government's bill of particulars reveals several dozen instances of domestic public authority bidding situations in which there was disparity of bids by manufacturers and local bidders (who in many instances, as was also the case in export markets, were bidding as agents for manufacturers). In some 40 of these instances at least one of the bids was below what the Government in its Proffer of Proof has called 'the established price', . . ."

The full effect of the Government's proposal in the light of the foregoing says Allied, results in a conclusion that "If 'certain exceptions' to parity of price quotations at home do not confound a claim of conspiracy, then 'certain exceptions' abroad surely do not provide any meaningful contrast of conduct at home and conduct abroad." Eli Lilly phrases this same thought as follows: "Viewed fairly, the situation is not one of price disparity abroad and price uniformity at home, but rather one of a degree of price disparity both at home and abroad. It is therefore difficult to understand how instances of disparity abroad can evidence conspiracy at home. The Government could with equal validity assert that the instances of disparity at home evidence conspiracy abroad."

[Quantity of Proof]

To support these contentions Allied has cited certain instances of domestic bidding at prices below those then established, only one of which appears to have occurred during the period August 1, 1956 to December 31, 1957, covered by the proffer. I cannot agree that one instance of bidding below the then established price in Maryland on December 19, 1957, operates to defeat the Government's proffer. I therefore conclude that this proof is both relevant and material and in so doing I am not unmindful that the proffer extends to only a relatively small portion of the foreign market. But quantity of proof is not necessarily the criterion here. It is bromidic to dilate upon the proposition that conspiracies are rarely proven except upon circumstantial evidence. The smallness of the circumstances with which we are dealing here does not detract from its materiality or relevance. Whether it is so material as to justify lengthening the trial is another and more difficult question.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Defendants rely on United States v. National City Lines [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,757], 186 F. 2d 562 (7 Cir. 1951), a criminal prosecution for conspiring to monopolize certain portions of interstate commerce in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 2 (1952 ed.), in which the court excluded evidence which the defendants sought to introduce. In affirming the district court, Judge Lindley said, at page 573:

> "From an examination of the record, it seems apparent to us that the court, endowed with discretion as to the amount of collateral evidence proper, did not abuse its discretion. This is in line with what the Supreme Court said in United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150 at 230, 60 S. Ct. 811 at page 847, 84 L. Ed. 1129: 'While the offer was not wholly irrelevant to the issues, it was clearly collateral. The trial court has a wide range for discretion in the exclusion of such evidence. See Golden Reward Mining Co. v. Buxton Mining Co., 8 Cir., 97 F. 413, 416, 417; Chesterfield Mfg. Co. v. Leota Cotton Mills, 8 Cir., 194 F. 358, 359. Admission of testimony showing the market conditions late in 1934 would have opened an inquiry into casual factors as involved and interrelated as those present during the indictment period. That might have confused rather than enlightened the jury. In any event it would not have eliminated the buying programs as contributory causes to the market rise and stability in 1935 and 1936. And it would have prolonged the inquiry and protracted the trial. As once stated by Mr. Justice Holmes, one objection to the introduction of collateral issues is a "purely practical one—a concession to the shortness of life." Reeve v. Dennett, 145 Mass. 23, 28, 11 N. E. 938, 944. * * *' The jury's inquiry was not one as to customs or practices or as to what others had done on other times and occasions. The question before the jury was whether what defendants had done amounted to violation of law as charged. The mere fact, if it be a fact, that other suppliers had followed a similar course of conduct by doing what defendants are charged with doing, would in no wise excuse defendants for their acts if those acts were illegal."

The distinction between the proof proffered there and here is at once apparent. In National City Lines the defendants were trying to put before the court evidence of what others had done, as to which, the court said, at page 572:

> "We had thought it well established that evidence of customs and practices in an industry is irrevelant in determining whether there has been an attempted monopolization. This court, in United States v. New York Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company, 7 Cir., 173 F. 2d 79, 89, said: 'That others engaged in the same practices as the defendants certainly would not exonerate the defendants or tend to disprove their guilt. Certainly trade customs and practices not shown to have been practiced in the same manner as the defendants were shown to have practiced them would not be competent to show that the defendants' practices were not illegal.' . . ."

But in the case at bar the Government desires to show what the defendants themselves did under allegedly comparable circumstances. I do not see the application of National City Lines to this case.

[Prettyman Report]

Defendants point to the fact that with regard to disparity of bids only three countries are cited and that even within these there are three instances of uniformity. They note with regard to bidding beneath the then established domestic price, that only three of the five defendants are cited and these in 19 countries and that six of the instances are lower than the established price by only one twenty-fifth of a cent. Furthermore, say the defendants rebuttal will be extensive as evidenced by the fact that it may well be necessary for them to introduce their price determinations all over the globe in order to properly refute the Government's proffered proof. In this connection the defendants also cite and rely on the Prettyman Report, 13 F. R. D. 62, 76, which states:

> "To hold evidence inadmissible because not necessary to a decision of the issues is somewhat of an expansion of the rule as to materiality, but is not a deviation from the principle of that rule. Whether or not the rule be logically a part of the law of evidence (See Wigmore, Evidence, § 2), it is an established rule in the conduct of trials. 'Materiality' is defined by Bouvier as 'The property of substantial importance or influence, especially as distinguished from formal requirement. Capability of properly influencing the result of the trial.' To exclude that which is of no substantial importance in reaching a decision is well within established principles. Where the quantity of substantially important evidence is great, all proffered evidence not shown to be of that nature should be rejected."

The Prettyman Report, widely recognized for its authoritative suggestions of techniques to increase the efficiency of trial procedure in antitrust and other protracted cases, properly prescribes that the court make a prospective appraisal not of the proof itself standing alone, but of its impact on the jury—a difficult determination and one which in reality can only be approximated. To determine whether or not the proof proffered herein is capable "of properly influencing the result of the trial" attention must be given to the facts it tends to establish and to the potential materiality of those facts. As noted earlier the defendants do not deny the occurrence of the bids cited by the Government although they have characterized certain of them as unauthorized. The question then turns to a consideration of the defendants' replies in opposition to the proffer. These have been set out at length heretofore and are mainly contentions that the foreign and domestic markets are not comparable and therefore activities in the former do not give rise to any inference as to the activities in the latter; that the evidence will prejudice the jury against the defendants; that the evidence is immaterial because of its limited extent quantitatively, and because in both markets there were instances of disparity and uniformity; and that this lack of materiality or probative force does not justify a protraction of the trial which would involve receiving not only the proffered evidence but the defendants' extensive rebuttal thereto. My view of all these contentions has already been set out, except as to the last. As to it I am persuaded at this early stage that the Government's evidence is capable of properly influencing the result in this case, because, if, after hearing it and the other evidence of the Government, as well as the defendants' proofs, the jury should determine that the foreign and domestic markets were comparable it may infer therefrom that bidding such as that cited by the Government in foreign countries would have occurred domestically except for the existence of a conspiracy to agree as charged. And I am driven to this conclusion despite the hazards implicit in what the defendants now contemplate as necessary, lengthy rebuttal presentations.

[¶ 69,412] Miles Laboratories, Inc. v. Family Bargain Center, Inc. Miles Laboratories, Inc. v. State Street Mill Bargain Center, Inc.

In the New York Supreme Court, County of Onondaga, Special Term. Argued December 15, 1958. Decided February 13, 1959.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Fair Trade Pricing Under New York Fair Trade Act—Selling Below Fair Trade Prices—Noncontracting Dealer—Necessity for Signing Fair Trade Agreement.—A manufacturer's application for a temporary injunction restraining two retailers from selling its products below the minimum prices fixed in fair trade contracts was not defeated by the retailers' allegation that they had never executed any fair trade contract. It was not necessary that they sign fair trade agreements with the manufacturer in order to be bound thereby.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3258.34.

Fair Trade—Enforcement—Notice of Fair Trade Agreements—Absence of Notice as Affirmative Defense.—A manufacturer's application for a temporary injunction restraining retailers from selling its products below fair trade prices was not defeated by a bare allegation, in an affidavit submitted by the retailers' president, that they had no knowledge of the fair trade prices at the time they purchased the merchandise. While such knowledge at the time of purchase, and not merely at the time of resale, is necessary before a fair trader can compel a retailer to abide by fair trade prices, the lack of actual knowledge is a matter of affirmative defense and need not be alleged or proven by the fair trader. Here, the manufacturer had submitted affidavits to the effect that on numerous occasions it had sent letters to the retailers advising them of its fair trade program and enclosing fair trade price lists. Those affidavits were supported by documentary evidence, including United States Post Office receipts for certified letters. Also, envelopes bearing the United States Post Office stamp "REFUSED" supported the statement that other warning letters had been sent.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3268.34, 3358.34.

Fair Trade—Defenses to Enforcement Action—Enforcement Activity or Policy—Alleged Abandonment of Fair Trade Program as Defense.—A manufacturer was entitled to a preliminary injunction restraining retailers from selling its products below fair trade prices where the retailers, while contending that the manufacturer's fair trade prices had been generally disregarded and violated by all persons selling its commodities in the area, failed to point out even a single instance of sales below fair trade prices which the manufacturer had not sought to prohibit. The manufacturer, on the other hand, furnished an affidavit naming four violators and describing the steps taken against each. The court was satisfied that the manufacturer had shown sufficient evidence of enforcement, uncontradicted by evidence from the retailers, to justify granting a temporary injunction.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3440.34.

Fair Trade—Fair Trade Pricing Under New York Fair Trade Act—Commodities Which May Be Fair Traded—Trade-mark, Brand, or Name—Registration of Trade-mark—Free and Open Competition.—A manufacturer's application for a temporary injunction restraining retailers from selling its products below fair trade prices was not defeated by the retailers' unsupported allegations that the products in question did not bear the trade-mark of the manufacturer and were not in fair and open competition with commodities of the same general class. The manufacturer set forth in detail facts regarding the long continued manufacture and sale of the products, as well as the registration of the appropriate trade-marks pursuant to the statutes of the United States. Included in the manufacturer's exhibits were cartons, all of them bearing registered trade-marks, in which some of the items in question were packaged.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3150, 3154, 3200.

Fair Trade—Enforcement—Scope of Temporary Injunction—Applicability to "All" of Fair Trader's Products.—A manufacturer's application for a temporary injunction restraining two retailers from selling "all" of its products below fair trade prices did not constitute "inequitable and unconscionable" action since it was apparent from the body of the complaints and the papers submitted on the application that the actions were concerned with only three items, all of which had been shown by substantial evidence to come within the New York Fair Trade Act.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3366.34.

For the plaintiff: MacKenzie, Smith, Lewis, Michell & Hughes, Syracuse, N. Y.

For the defendants: Rudd, Penberthy & Nelson, Utica, N. Y.

Motions for Injunctions Pendente Lite

Decision

[Fair Trade Action]

DEL VECCHIO, Justice [In full text]: These are motions for preliminary injunctions heard at the same time in two separate actions by which plaintiff seeks orders permanently enjoining defendants from advertising or selling any of plaintiff's products at less than the minimum price fixed in fair trade contracts alleged to have been entered into between plaintiff and many retailers within the state.

The complaints in these actions are substantially similar to that held legally sufficient as stating a cause of action for violation of fair trade restrictions in Bourjois Sales Corp. v. Dorfman [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,155], 273 N. Y. 167.

[Answer]

The answers deny that such contracts exist or that defendants have committed any violation thereof and plead as affirmative defenses (1) that defendants never executed any fair trade contract and had no knowledge of such contracts by which plaintiff sought to regulate or control the price of its commodities, and, further, that at the time they purchased plaintiff's products defendants had no notice of a fair trade program covering the articles; (2) that the prices fixed by the contracts have long been disregarded and violated by other sellers of plaintiff's products to the knowledge of plaintiff and without any steps toward enforcement being taken by plaintiff, such that there has been a waiver of plaintiff's rights under the contracts; (3) that the products in question do not bear the trademark of the plaintiff and are not in fair and open competition with commodities of the same general class produced by others; and (4) that plaintiff's conduct in seeking to enjoin the sales in question is inequitable and unconscionable.

[Non-Signers]

It is not necessary that defendants shall have signed fair trade agreements with plaintiff to be bound thereby. (General Business Law, § 369-b; Ampex Corporation v. Goody Audio Center, Inc. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,710], 5 Misc. 2d 1072, 1077.)

[Temporary Injunction]

The only question now before the Court is whether plaintiff has shown circumstances such as warrant the issuance of the temporary injunctions pending trial of the actions for permanent injunctions. "Preliminary injunction is a drastic remedy and is ordinarily not granted, except to maintain the status quo, and even then, only upon a very substantial and convincing showing that there has been unfair competition." (Litwin v. Maddux, 7 Misc. 2d 750, 759.) What was said in the Litwin case with regard to unfair competition in the field of literary publications applies also to unfair competition in the form of fair trade violations.

It is the view of the Court that plaintiff has met this burden and has furnished evidence of the facts set forth in its complaints sufficient to justify the granting of injunctions pendente lite with regard to defendants' sales of plaintiff's fair traded products.

[Fair Trade Agreements]

In support of the present motions, plaintiff has submitted (1) the original summonses and complaints with attached exhibits, (2) affidavits by its Associate Counsel Edward D. Downing, by its sales representatives Robert J. Morgan and Thomas L. McEvoy and by Raymond W. Hackbarth, Esq., a member of the law firm representing plaintiff in this litigation, and (3) a file of exhibits referred to in the affidavits.

The affidavits of Downing state that there are now in full force in excess of 6000 fair trade agreements executed between plaintiff and drug retailers within the state of New York. In support of this statement there is included in the file of exhibits and also attached to the complaints a copy of an executed form "Retailers Fair Trade Agreement". As evidence that plaintiff's products "Alka-Seltzer", "Bactine" and "One-A-Day (Brand) Multiple Vitamins" are the subject of fair trade prices, plaintiff has offered printed lists dated January 1, 1957 and March 15, 1958 indicating the package units of such products together with the manufacturer's price to dealers, the full retail price and the fair trade price.

[Violations]

The affidavits of the sales representatives Morgan and McEvoy set forth by date specific occasions on which they made purchases of "Alka-Seltzer", "Bactine" and "One-A-Day (Brand) Multiple Vitamins" from defendants' stores at less than the fair trade prices. As evidence of these purchases plaintiff has submitted outer cartons of the articles bought bearing sales prices below those fixed by plaintiff together with dated cash register slips of the transactions.

["Wisdom" of Fair Trade]

The answering affidavits submitted by the president of defendant corporations (who is one and the same person) dwell

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

at length on the claimed unfairness of a fair trade program and public disadvantage resulting from price fixing. These arguments however are inappropriate in this forum. As the courts have frequently pointed out, the wisdom and desirability of the system of fair trade is within the exclusive province of the Legislature which has seen fit to enact General Business Law §§ 369-a to 369-e in protection of prices of certain qualifying commodities. The only function of the courts is to enforce these sections when the requirements of the statute have been met. (Nebbia v. New York, 291 U. S. 502; Calvert Distillers Corp. v. Nussbaum Liquor Store, Inc., 166 Misc. 342; Fogel v. Bolet [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,389], 194 Misc. 1019.)

[Notice of Fair Trade Agreements]

Defendants' president also states that "there is no proof or evidence whatsoever of notice to the defendant prior to its purchase of these products", and cites Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc. v. J. W. Mays, Inc. [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 68,922], 5 App. Div. 2d 140, as authority that plaintiff is therefore barred from injunctive relief.

There is no question that the Cluett, Peabody decision makes it necessary for a defendant-retailer to have notice of fair trade prices at the time merchandise is purchased by him, and not merely at the time of resale, in order to entitle the manufacturer to compel the retailer to abide by such prices. A careful reading of the opinion however makes it clear that lack of knowledge of resale restrictions at the time of purchase is a matter of affirmative defense and that plaintiff is not bound to allege or prove defendants' actual notice of fair trade prices at the time of purchase. (5 App. Div. 2d 140, 149; see also Special Term opinion [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,711], 6 Misc. 2d 145, 147, rev'd on other grounds.)

[Evidence of Notice]

In this connection, defendants have failed to offer any proof in support of their claim that they did not know of plaintiff's fixed prices at the time they purchased plaintiff's products, other than the bare statement to that effect contained in the affidavits of defendants' president. Plaintiff, on the other hand, has submitted affidavits by its Associate Counsel to the effect that on numerous occasions the deponent sent letters to defendants advising them of plaintiff's fair trade program and enclosing current fair trade price lists, which affidavits are supported by documentary evidence. In the case of the defendant Family Bargain Center, Inc. receipt of such a letter dated October 31, 1957 and sent by certified mail is established by a U. S. Post Office receipt signed "Family Bargain Cntr—J. Lavine". In the case of the defendant State Street Mill Bargain Center Inc. a U. S. Post Office receipt for plaintiff's certified letter dated December 9, 1957 was signed "State St. Mill—Graziano". Both these receipts were presented to the court. Defendant's papers in the State Street Mill Bargain Center action include an affidavit by its employee and manager James Graziano which however makes no reference to the above postal receipt and does not deny delivery of the letter of December 9, 1957.

The affidavits of plaintiff's Associate Counsel state that five warning letters, in addition to the one dated October 31, 1957, were sent to defendant Family Bargain Center, Inc. by certified mail but that delivery of each was refused by the addressee. This statement is supported by three envelopes directed to Family Bargain, bearing the U. S. Post Office stamp "REFUSED", which are included in plaintiff's exhibits. It also appears that some of these same letters, together with others of like content, were forwarded to defendants by regular mail in envelopes bearing return addresses, none of which however were returned.

In spite of all this evidence of notice of plaintiff's fair trade program having been extended to them, defendants have offered nothing but their bare allegations that they had no knowledge of fixed prices at the time they purchased plaintiff's products. They have not explained the signed receipts for the warning letters of October 31, 1957 and December 9, 1957 nor have they made any attempt to show that plaintiff's products being sold by them were acquired on dates prior to the receipt of these letters.

On this state of the evidence, defendants have failed to make any showing to support a defense of lack of knowledge of plaintiff's fair trade program and are not entitled under the Cluett, Peabody case to defeat the present application for temporary injunctions on that ground.

[Enforcement Policy]

The evidence is also insufficient to sustain defendants' claim that plaintiff has waived or abandoned its fair trade program through failure to enforce the same.

Although defendants made a broad statement that "the alleged prices fixed by the contract set forth in plaintiff's complaint herein have for a long period of time prior to commencement of this action, been generally disregarded and violated by all persons selling these commodities in Utica and surrounding areas in the State of New York", they have failed to point out even a single instance of sales below fair trade prices which plaintiff has not sought to prohibit. Plaintiff, on the other hand, has furnished an affidavit by a member of the law firm representing it, naming four violators of plaintiff's fair trade program and describing the steps which it has taken against each (including lawsuits against the defendants herein and one other violator) to enforce compliance.

The questions of waiver and abandonment of fair trade programs have been discussed at length in General Electric Co. v. Macy & Co. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,764], 199 Misc. 87, appeal dismissed 278 App. Div. 940. Concerning the requirement of reasonable and diligent enforcement of fixed prices, Justice Greenberg said at page 93:

> "In establishing this requirement the courts have held that it is not necessary that there be simultaneous enforcement against all violators nor that the price structure be perfect."

Further, in speaking of the principles of fair trade price enforcement, it was said:

> "These principles are not absolute nor are they applied mechanically by the courts. They are, rather, applied in the light of the facts of each case and in order to attain the objectives of the statute and an equitable result between the parties." (p. 93)

See also, Calvert Distillers Corp. v. Nussbaum Liquor Store, 166 Misc. 342.

In the cases at bar, this Court is satisfied that plaintiff has shown sufficient evidence of enforcement, uncontradicted by evidence from defendants, to justify granting a temporary injunction against violation of its fair trade program pending trial of the actions.

[Trademarks]

The third defense pleaded in the answers—that the products in question do not bear the trademark of the plaintiff and are not in fair and open competition with commodities of the same general class—is entirely without support in defendants' papers. Plaintiff, however, sets forth in detail facts regarding long continued manufacture and sale of the products as well as the registration of the appropriate trademarks pursuant to statutes of the United States. Included in the exhibits are cartons in which some of the items in question are packaged, all of which bear registered trademarks.

[Items Involved]

Finally, defendants assert that plaintiff is acting inequitably and unconscionably in seeking the present injunction for the reason that it seeks to enjoin the sale of "all" of its commodities. True it is that the "Wherefore clause" of the complaints ask for such relief. It is apparent, however, from the body of the complaints and from the papers submitted on this application that plaintiff's present action is concerned only with the items "Alka-Seltzer", "Bactine" and "One-A-Day (Brand) Multiple Vitamins", which have been shown by substantial evidence to come within the provisions of General Business Law §§ 369-a et seq.

[Injunction Granted]

Plaintiff is entitled to an injunction pendente lite as prayed for in the notice of motion with regard to its products "Alka-Seltzer", "Bactine" and "One-A-Day (Brand) Multiple Vitamins". The amount of the bond to be furnished will be fixed in the order.

Prepare order accordingly.

[¶ 69,413] Dave Fleischer, individually and as trustee in dissolution of Fleischer Studios, Incorporated, a Florida corporation v. A. A. P., Inc.; Associated Artists Productions, Inc.; U. M. & M. T. V. Corp.; W. P. I. X., Inc.; Paramount Pictures, Inc.; Paramount Pictures Corporation; Dumont Broadcasting Corporation; Flamingo Films, Inc.; King Features Syndicate, Inc.; Fleischer Studios, Incorporated, a New York corporation;

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

and Max Fleischer, individually and as co-trustee with plaintiff of Fleischer Studios, Incorporated, a Florida corporation.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil 125-309. Filed July 15, 1959.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Who May Bring Suit —Parties Plaintiff—Individual Shareholder—Trustees of Dissolved Corporation.—An individual shareholder, suing on behalf of himself and a dissolved Florida corporation which produced animated motion picture cartoons, in a treble damage action charging motion picture distributors with failing to release certain of the corporation's cartoons for television distribution, stated no cause of action under the antitrust laws because a shareholder is not entitled to recover, by individual suit, his share of the loss his corporation might have suffered because of a conspiracy to violate the antitrust laws. Also, whatever claim the trustees of the Florida corporation might have had, on its behalf, had abated under Florida law, because the corporation had been dissolved more than three years before the suit was commenced. No authority was cited for the proposition that the shareholder, or the dissolved corporation, would be deprived of property in violation of the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution by the application of that rule.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9005.85, 9005.95.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Necessary Averments to State Cause of Action—Injury to Plaintiff—Corporate Loss as Injury to Individual Shareholder.—A shareholder, suing on behalf of himself and a dissolved Florida corporation which produced animated motion picture cartoons, in a treble damage action charging motion picture distributors with failing to release certain of the corporation's cartoons for television distribution, stated no cause of action under the antitrust laws because he alleged no facts tending to show any direct injury to his commerce as an individual.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.275.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—When Recovery May Be Barred—Statute of Limitations—Accrual of Action—"Continuing" Conspiracy.—A treble damage action charging motion picture distributors with suppressing the distribution of animated motion picture cartoons over which they had acquired distribution rights by a 1941 agreement was barred, on its face, by the Federal four-year statute of limitations, Section 4B of the Clayton Act. The only injury alleged to have occurred within four years of the filing of the complaint in 1957 was occasioned by an alleged failure of the distributors to release certain cartoons for television distribution between 1949 and 1956. However, that failure was not the infliction of an injury, but the accrual of damages resulting from an earlier alleged invasion of the plaintiff's rights, namely, the 1941 agreement under which the distributors allegedly received the right to deal, in their discretion, with the distribution rights to the cartoons. While the plaintiff seemed to argue that his cause of action did not accrue until the defendants disposed of the cartoons for a sum of money in 1956, the injury under the antitrust laws, if any, was inflicted when the contract was made. The period of limitations was not extended by the fact that damages from that injury might have continued to accrue. Also, there was no merit in the contention that the statute of limitations had not run because the conspiracy was a continuing one.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.200.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Statute of Limitations —Tolling of Four-Year Period During Pendency of Government Action.—A plaintiff whose treble damage action was filed in 1957 would not have benefited from the suspension of the statute of limitations, under Section 5(b) of the Clayton Act, during the pendency, and for one year after the conclusion, of a Government action against one of the defendants, even assuming he was seeking damages for acts which were the subject of the Government suit. Section 5(b) provides for the suspension of the running of the four-year period as to private rights of action, during the pendency of Government actions and for one year thereafter, and that "such cause of action shall be forever barred unless commenced within the period of suspension or within four years after the cause of action accrued." The plaintiff apparently construed the suspension provision to mean that the four-year period did not commence to run until one year after the conclusion of the Government's suit. Such a construction, however, is contrary to the plain wording of the statute. The Government's suit was pending until April 12, 1949. Thus, any cause of action which arose during the pendency of that suit was barred by April 12, 1950, or by the passage of four years from the date of the injury, whichever was later. Here, the injuries under the anti-trust laws, if any, were inflicted in 1941.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.275.

For the plaintiff: Gustave B. Garfield, New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Mendes & Mount, New York, N. Y., for W. P. I. X, Inc. (Daniel Huttenbrauck, of counsel); Phillips, Nizer, Benjamin, Krim & Ballon, New York, N. Y., for Paramount Pictures, Inc., Paramount Pictures Corp., and Flamingo Films, Inc. (Seymour Shainswit, of counsel); and McCauley, Henry & Brennan, New York, N. Y., for King Features Syndicate, Inc.

[Motion to Strike]

PALMIERI, District Judge [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]:

* * *

The amended complaint is a thirty page document. It is hardly a model of the form of pleadings which should be utilized under the Federal Rules. It is neither "a short and plain statement of the claim", Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a) (2), nor is it "simple, concise, and direct." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(e) (1). It has been met by a notice of motion which requires more than twenty-two pages to set forth, in the main, the portions of the amended complaint which are sought to be stricken under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). Such a motion is not favored, for "we are not conducting exercises in pleading. . . ." Nagler v. Admiral Corp. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,839], 248 F. 2d 319, 325 (2d Cir. 1957).

[Materiality]

The motion to strike may be conveniently divided into three categories. Portions of the amended complaint are sought to be stricken on the ground that they are verbose, conclusory, immaterial, or evidentiary. Before it may be determined that a portion of a complaint is immaterial it must clearly appear that the matter alleged can have no possible bearing on the issues of the trial, a question which is most difficult to determine from the face of the amended complaint.[7] Even if that determination is made, immaterial allegations, and likewise verbose, conclusory, or evidentiary allegations, need not be stricken unless their presence in the complaint prejudices the defendant. It would not be fruitful nor would it, in the long run, advance the interests of any of the parties to this litigation, for the Court to try to narrow and delimit the issues of this litigation at this point in the proceedings, see Nagler v. Admiral Corp., supra, nor is any prejudice shown because of the inclusion in the amended complaint of the verbose, immaterial, conclusory, or evidentiary matter. See, generally, 2 Moore, Federal Practice par. 12.21[2] (2d ed. 1948) and cases there cited.

["Falsity" of Matter]

A second group of portions of the amended complaint is sought to be stricken on the ground that these portions are contradicted by documentary evidence. The defendants have confused the grounds for a motion to strike, however, which do not include falsity of the matter alleged, Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f); cf. United States v. Arnhold and S. Bleichroeder, Inc., 96 F. Supp. 240, 243 (S. D. N. Y. 1951), with a motion for summary judgment, which defendants insist their present motions are not.[8]

* * *

[7] Defendants buttress their claims of immateriality by references to the opinion in Fleischer v. A. A. P., Inc., supra, note 1. On a motion to strike, however, material outside the pleading may not be considered, e. g., United States v. Arnhold and S. Bleichroeder, Inc., 96 F. Supp. 240, 243 (S. D. N. Y. 1951). And the opinion of Judge Herlands, on the motion to disqualify, to which defendants refer, examined the complaint for purposes which are not the same as those here relevant. See, e. g., 163 F. Supp. at 559, 560, and 561.

[8] Defendants have moved to dismiss the second and third claims for "failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). Such a motion may be treated as one for summary judgment, Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b), but the defendants disavow any

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

["Scandalous" Matter]

Finally, portions of the amended complaint are sought to be stricken on the ground that they are scandalous. These portions refer to the alleged actions of counsel for some of the defendants and are relevant only to the motion to disqualify certain of the defendants' counsel previously mentioned. If such allegations were properly to be placed in a complaint I would hesitate to strike them, for the decision not to disqualify is "not of final character, and [is] subject to reconsideration or change as new facts may develop."[9] The disqualification of counsel is collateral to the issues to be litigated and allegations which deal with counsel's actions in the past have no place in the amended complaint. Accordingly, I have set forth in the margin[10] those portions of the amended complaint which are to be stricken. The motion to strike is in all other respects denied.

[Motion to Dismiss]

Defendants also move for dismissal on the ground that the amended complaint does not comply with the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 8. We have been taught that such dismissals are not proper; and I can conceive of no distinction between a dismissal on the ground that too little is pleaded and a dismissal on the ground that too much is pleaded. Cf. Nagler v. Admiral Corp., supra. To the extent that the motion to dismiss is based on the presence in the amended complaint of scandalous and vituperative matter, the decision on the motion to strike cures that defect.

[Antitrust Conspiracy—Injury to Plaintiff]

I turn now to a discussion of the motions to dismiss on the merits, motions which are limited to the second and third causes of action set forth in the amended complaint. The second cause of action seeks damages arising from an alleged conspiracy to violate the antitrust laws. Clayton Act § 4, 38 Stat. 731 (1914), 15 U. S. C. § 15, (1952). Plaintiff seeks the recovery individually and on behalf of Fleischer Studios, Inc., a Florida corporation which was dissolved, as the complaint alleges, in 1946. The second cause of action does not contain however, any allegation of facts tending to show any direct injury to plaintiff's commerce as an individual, and it is well established that a shareholder is not entitled to recover, by individual suit, his share of the loss his corporation may have suffered because of a conspiracy to violate the antitrust laws. E.g., Bookout v. Schine Chain Theatres, Inc. [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,987], 253 F. 2d 292 (2d Cir. 1958). Whatever claim the trustees of the Florida corporation may have had, on behalf of the corporation, has abated, the corporation having been dissolved more than three years before this suit was commenced. Walder v. Paramount Publix Corp. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,097], 132 F. Supp. 912, 917-919 (S. D. N. Y. 1955).[11] Plaintiff's attempt to intention to have the Court so treat their motion. See Defendants Paramount and Flamingo's Memorandum of Law 3-4.

---

[9] Fleischer v. Phillips, supra, note 1, at 516.

[10] All of paragraph 7 except for the first sentence thereof. The following portions of paragraph 8: from the word "under" in line 6 thereof to the word "Esqs." in line 10 thereof; and from the word "by" in line 12 thereof to the word "individually" in line 14 thereof. That portion of paragraph 12 that begins with the word "which" in the eighth line from the bottom of page 8 and continuing to the end of paragraph 12. All of the second line of paragraph 23(a) beginning with the word "by;" line 5, from the word "or," to the word "individually" in line 8; line 11, from the word "said" to the word "and." In paragraph 23(b) the name of the law firm "Philips [sic], Nizer, Benjamin & Krim" should be stricken each time it appears. Paragraph 23(c) from the first word in line 5 to the last word of line 8. The name of the law firm "Philips [sic], Nizer, Benjamin & Krim" should be stricken from paragraph 23(d), and 23(e). If there are any other references, by name, to the firm of Phillips, Nizer, Benjamin & Krim, or to members or associates thereof, which have escaped the attention of the Court, such references should be stricken. On the oral argument plaintiff's counsel consented to strike all references to the attorneys, by name, from the amended complaint References to defendants' "attorneys," without mention of their names, may remain.

Grammatical emendations, required by the directed excisions, may be made. If plaintiff desires to re-allege any of the matter herein ordered to be stricken, the order to be entered herein should specify the material desired to be re-alleged, should state the relevance of the allegation to the issues of the suit, and should state the exact phraseology of the desired re-allegation. In no instance should the name of any attorney or firm of attorneys be contained in such desired re-allegations.

[11] See also, Walder v. Paramount Publix Corp. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,170], 135 F. Supp. 228 (S. D. N. Y. 1955).

The Florida statutes which were the subject of decision in the Walder case cited in the text were repealed and the present statutes were enacted, effective October 1, 1953, by Fla. Laws distinguish the Florida decisions on which the Walder holding was partially based, 132 F. Supp. at 919, n. 14, is without merit. Finally, plaintiff cites no authority, and I know of none, for the proposition he advances, that application of the Walder decision deprives him, or the dissolved corporation, of property in violation of U. S. Const. Amend. XIV.

[Statute of Limitations]

Furthermore, the second cause of action is, on its face, barred by the statute of limitations. 69 Stat. 283 (1955), 15 U. S. C. §§ 15b, 16(b) (Supp. V). Where the claim is for an injury inflicted by a civil conspiracy the statute begins to run at the time the injury is inflicted. Rutkin v. Reinfeld, 229 F. 2d 248, 252 (2d Cir.), cert. denied sub nom. Kaplow v. Reinfeld, 352 U. S. 844 (1956). The original complaint herein was filed October 14, 1957. The only injury alleged to have been inflicted since October 13, 1953 is that occasioned by the failure of the defendants to release certain cartoons for television distribution between 1949 and 1956. Aside from the fact that there is no allegation of facts tending to show that this failure injured the commerce of the plaintiff or of the Florida corporation, this failure, under the allegations of this complaint, was not the infliction of an injury but was the accrual of damages resulting from an earlier alleged invasion of plaintiff's rights. Cf. Muskin Shoe Co. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp. [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,179], 167 F. Supp. 106, 111-112 (D. Md. 1958); Farbenfabriken Bayer, A. G. v. Sterling Drug, Inc. [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 68,949], 153 F. Supp. 589, 593 (D. N. J. 1957); Pastor v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 76 F. Supp. 781, 784-785 (S. D. N. Y. 1940). It was the result of an agreement entered into between certain of the defendants and Fleischer Studios, Inc., in 1941. By that agreement, now immune from attack under the antitrust laws because of the statute of limitations, the defendants, as alleged in the amended complaint, received the right to deal with the distribution rights to the cartoons in their discretion. The injury under the antitrust laws, if any, was inflicted when the contract was made. The period of limitations is not extended by the fact that damages from that injury may have continued to accrue. Steiner v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,304], 232 F. 2d 190, 194-195 (9th Cir. 1956). Under plaintiff's theory, the statute of limitations would not run so long as the films were not returned to his possession. I suppose that it would be possible to allege a claim under the antitrust laws based on the manner in which defendants dealt with the cartoons and that it would not matter in such a case, when or how defendants came into possession of the cartoons. But, as I have said, there are no facts alleged tending to show that the manner in which defendants dealt with the cartoons injured plaintiff's, or the dissolved corporation's, commerce. The 1941 contract, and the possession thereunder of the cartoons may be presumed, for present purposes, to have been a wrong for which plaintiff might have recovered in a timely suit. But the time for bringing that suit is not enlarged by the fact that the cartoons have not been returned to plantiff's possession. Restatement, Torts § 899, Comment c., p. 526 (1939). Plaintiff seems to argue that his cause of action did not accrue until 1956 because it was then that defendants disposed of the cartoons, receiving in return, it is alleged, a sum of money to part of which plaintiff lays claim. That, of course, has no bearing, in this complaint, on any claim under the antitrust laws. It does bear on plaintiff's rights, if any, growing out of the sale of the cartoons and the alleged tortious failure, to plaintiff's damage, to realize profits from the cartoons while they were in the defendants' possession. These matters are cognizable under the first cause of action.

["Tolling" Statute of Limitations]

Plaintiff's contention that the statute of limitations has not run because the conspiracy is a continuing one, is without merit. Momand v. Universal Film Exchanges, Inc. [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,360], 172 F. 2d 37, 49 (1st Cir. 1948), cert. denied, 336 U. S. 967 (1949). Nor can I conceive of any benefit to the plaintiff from the fact that the statute of limitations was suspended during the pendency of the Government's suit against Paramount and for one year thereafter, even 1953, c. 28170. The statutes as they now exist are found in Fla. Stat. § 608.30 (1957). To the extent, if any, that the 1953 enactment might have extended the time within which trustees of a dissolved Florida corporation may institute suits, there is no indication that the 1953 law was meant to revive actions which had by then abated under the law as it previously existed. Cf. Gerstel v. William Curry's Sons Co., 157 Fla. 216, 220-221, 25 So. 2d 560, 562 (1946).

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

assuming that plaintiff is seeking damages for the actions which were the subject of the Government's suit. Steiner v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., supra, at 195-196. The Government's suit was pending until April 12, 1949.[12] Plaintiff apparently construes the suspension provision of 69 Stat. 283 (1955), 15 U. S. C. § 16(b) (Supp. V) to mean that the four-year period does not commence to run until one year after the conclusion of the Government's suit. This is contrary to the plain wording of the statute. Any cause of action which arose during the pendency of the Government's suit was barred by April 12, 1950 or by the passage of four years from the date of the injury, whichever was later. Accordingly, the second cause of action is dismissed.

* * *

[¶ 69,414] United States v. Long Island Fence Association, Inc.; Ned P. Romano; Frank S. Bon Giorno; and George Hald.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York. Criminal Action No. 45835. Dated June 29, 1959.

Case No. 1445 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Conspiracy Charged—Bill of Particulars—Identity of All Members—Time and Place.—An association composed of manufacturers and retailers of "wood fencing" and three individuals, in a criminal action charging them with conspiring to fix prices, were granted a motion for a bill of particulars to inform them of (1) the persons or corporations asserted to have been members of the alleged conspiracy, and (2) the time when, and the place where, the conspiracy was allegedly entered into. The defendants were entitled to know the identity of all who allegedly had the legal capacity to incur the legal responsibility which the indictment sought to visit upon them. Also, if the Government was sufficiently informed on the general subject to initiate the prosecution, it must have been sufficiently in possession of what it believed to be the facts to make a more specific statement of the time when the conspiracy was alleged to have been entered into than "about 1957." Further, if the agreement was entered into, it must have been entered into at one or more places. However, the Government was not required to disclose the evidence it would rely on at the trial, unless the identities of the alleged conspirators and the time and place of the alleged conspiracy could not otherwise be given.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8025.800.

For the plaintiff: Richard B. O'Donnell, Special Assistant to the Attorney General; and Walter W. K. Bennett and Agnes T. Leen, Attorneys, Department of Justice.

For the defendants: Mervin C. Pollak.

[Bill of Particulars]

BYERS, Chief Judge [In full text]: This is a defendants' motion for a bill of particulars addressed to the indictment filed May 8, 1959 alleging a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 U. S. C. § 1) as to wood fencing shipped interstate into certain counties lying within this district.

It is common ground that the disposition of the motion lies within the discretion of the court, which is to be exercised according to the court's understanding of the issues apparently tendered, and the requirements of fairness to enable the defendants to prepare for trial. Other cases which have been cited are helpful, without being dispositive of the problem here presented.

[Members of Conspiracy]

In passing upon the motion the court is of the view that the defendants are entitled to be informed with precision concerning the alleged conspiracy with which they are charged, namely:

---

[12] See Leonia Amusement Corp. v. Loew's, Inc. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,649], 117 F. Supp. 747, 763-764 (S. D. N. Y. 1953).

(a) The persons or corporations who are said to have been members. Since the Government argues that all who were roughly partners in the alleged conspiracy had the authority to bind all other members, it must be manifest that the defendants are entitled to know the name and identity of each and every individual or business entity who is or are asserted to have been clothed with the legal capacity to incur the legal responsibility that it is the object of this indictment to visit upon these defendants.

That would seem to be so clear, that discussion of the subject is unnecessary.

[Time and Place]

(b) The time when and the place where the conspiracy as alleged was entered into. The language in paragraph 11 "Beginning about 1957 and continuing to the date" of indictment is indefinite as to the time period involved. If the Government is sufficiently informed on the general subject to initiate the prosecution, it must be sufficiently in possession of what it believes to be facts, to require a more specific statement than "about 1957."

If the agreement was entered into, it must have been at one or more places. In order to prepare to meet the issue, the defendants are entitled to know what the Government asserts to be the fact in this connection.

The memoranda in opposition to the motion make frequent references to what the defendants must know of their own actions during whatever period the Government has in mind, as the basis for this prosecution. That argument is not persuasive to this court, although it may be true in a general sense. The defendants are entitled to know what it is that the Government asserts that they did, constituting a violation of law. In preparing for trial the defendants are required to examine their own conduct with respect to distinct averments of asserted fact, rather than strive in a general way to review their several activities for the past three years or so as to matters with which this case may not be concerned.

[Evidence]

(c) Speaking generally, the Government in furnishing a bill of particulars is not to be required to disclose the evidence that it will rely upon at the trial, unless the matters referred to under (a) and (b) cannot be otherwise exposed to the defendants' view for adequate preparation.

[Specific Demands]

Within the foregoing, the demands of the defendants will now be dealt with, but without comment except as may be necessary to reveal the court's reasoning:

1. (a) denied in the form stated, but the membership of the alleged conspiracy is to be stated. (b) and (c) and (d) are covered by the foregoing.

2. Denied as stated. However the Government should give the names of the several States in the Union from which wood fencing is alleged to have been shipped into the counties in Long Island which the Government asserts to have been the subject-matter of the alleged conspiracy.

3. Not understood. If the request is intended to ask whether the wood fencing referred to in the foregoing paragraph was shipped F. O. B. the place of origin, the information should be provided by the Government. If not, that fact should be stated.

4. This is addressed to paragraph 11 and probably 12 of the indictment which describe the nature and purpose of the conspiracy. The demand is for the "manner in and means by which Plaintiff claims Defendants and their alleged co-conspirators were to effectuate their alleged agreement." If the "manner and means" were components of the conspiracy charged, the defendants cannot prepare their defense without knowing just what conspiracy as to all of its characteristics, they are charged with having entered into.

This demand therefore is granted.

5. Calls for the types or items of wood fencing said to be the subject matter of the conspiracy. The demand is proper and is granted.

6. Calls for a statement as to whether the alleged conspiracy was successful in its asserted purpose. For obvious legal reasons, it is denied.

7. Calls for items and names; it is unnecessary in view of what has been written above.

8. Calls for names of those who impeded, etc. and probably refers to paragraph 12 of the indictment. Overt acts are not necessary to be shown in this type of case which involves the alleged agreement to do, rather than the doing. Denied.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

9. Is repetitious of 8, and in more diffuse form. Denied.

10. (a) and (b) Is a repetition of 4, and other requests, and seemingly calls for evidence. Denied.

11. Calls for a statement as to whether each defendant is charged as an individual or as a member of the trade-association named. Granted.

12. Calls for a list and clear identity of all writings constituting a part of the conspiracy. By this is understood the writings upon which the Government will rely to demonstrate the existence of the conspiracy as alleged. Granted, with reasonable opportunity to inspect and make copies.

13. This demand asks (a) the total annual sales volume of "the co-conspirator and Defendant wood fence retailers." This is clearly information known best to the defendants. Denied.

(b) "The number of wood fence retailers doing business in the Long Island area." It is not apparent how that information is germane to, or required for the purpose of defending against the matters alleged in paragraphs 11 and 12 of the indictment. Denied.

14. This demands that the Government "state the particular acts it is claimed each of the individual defendants did pursuant to the alleged conspiracy" etc. As to the acts which the Government asserts that each defendant did by way of entering into the alleged conspiracy, namely the individual conduct of each alleged conspirator as to which the Government expects to offer testimony, the demand is proper to enable the defendants to prepare for trial, and to that extent is granted. As to alleged acts which were not part of the conspiracy itself but which conceivably could have been committed after the alleged conspiracy was entered into, if it was, a different view is taken, because overt acts are not required to be shown in this type of case. The demand is denied as to its second supposed aspect.

15. This seems to be covered by the ruling number 12 above.

[Ruling]

Motion granted in part, and denied in part. Settle order in accordance with the foregoing.

[¶ 69,415] George S. Haas v. James C. Hodge.

In the California District Court of Appeal for the Second District, Division Two. Civ. No. 23577. Dated June 24, 1959.

Appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County. Joseph W. Vickers, Judge. Affirmed.

Action for an injunction, for damages and other relief. Judgment for defendant affirmed.

California Contracts in Restraint of Trade Statute

Combinations and Conspiracies—Contracts in Restraint of Trade Under State Law—Contract Not to Compete—Territorial Restriction on Practice of Medicine.—A California trial court properly ruled that a restrictive covenant whereby a physician agreed that he would not "maintain an office for the practice of his profession at any place within a radius of 25 miles" from the office of a physician with whom he had been associated was invalid under a California statute prohibiting contracts in restraint of trade. That statute provides that contracts "by which anyone is restrained from engaging in a lawful profession, trade, or business of any kind is to that extent void." The plaintiff, seeking to enjoin the defendant from practicing medicine in an office some five miles from the plaintiff's office, contended that the defendant had sold "all the interest he had acquired in the good will of the medical practice involved," and that the restriction was therefore valid under the statute's further provision that "any person who sells the good will of a business . . . may agree with the buyer to refrain from carrying on a similar business within a specified county or counties, city or cities, or a part thereof. . . ." An analysis of the writing, however, disclosed that the defendant was an employee of the plaintiff, or at least occupied a status akin to that of an employee, and therefore had no good will to sell. Whatever might have been his technical status, the contract contained a paragraph in which he disclaimed irrevocably any right to the professional practice and the good will thereof, which operated as a renouncement. Hence, the defendant could not have sold the present or future good will of the business, for it belonged to the plaintiff.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2319.05.

For the appellant: Robert M. Bushnell and Ralph R. Sleeper.

For the respondent: Alpern & Vallier and Robert Vallier.

[Contract Action]

ASHBURN, Justice [In full text]: This case arises from a contract for the association of two doctors in the practice of medicine. The relationship having terminated, plaintiff Dr. George S. Haas brought suit against defendant Dr. James C. Hodge to obtain an injunction against his practicing within 25 miles of plaintiff's offices, for damages and other relief. Judgment went for defendant and plaintiff appeals therefrom.

[Territorial Restriction on Practice of Medicine]

The contract (received in evidence as Exhibit 3) provides:

> "It is hereby stipulated and agreed by the parties that in the event this agreement is terminated for any reason whatsoever, that from and after the said termination, Dr. Hodge shall not maintain an office for the practice of his profession at any place within a radius of 25 miles from the said office of Dr. Haas." Also: "That Dr. Hodge expressly hereby disclaims, absolutely and irrevocably, any right or claim of right to any of the professional practice herein mentioned and referred to and to the good-will thereof."

Plaintiff's office is at 1200 West 80th Street in Los Angeles, and defendant, after the contract was terminated, opened an office for the practice of his profession in Inglewood, Los Angeles County, at a distance considerably less than 25 miles from plaintiff's location, some 5 miles therefrom.

[Validity]

Appellant's counsel has limited the appeal to the question whether defendant sold to plaintiff his interest in the good will of the business, thus falling within the validating effect of section 16601, Business and Professions Code, quoted infra. The trial court found: "That at no time during or after the association of plaintiff and defendant in their practice of medicine was there a sale of goodwill of the practice by either of the parties to the other." Appellant's brief says:

> "Plaintiff appeals and hereby limits the appeal to the question of the validity of the contract, Exhibit 3 introduced in evidence, that is to say, Appellant contends that the restrictive covenant in Exhibit 3 is valid and that the conclusion of the trial court to the contrary is erroneous as a matter of law. . . . This appeal is limited to a consideration of that point alone, i. e., that Respondent Hodge by the terms of the contract, Exhibit 3, did lawfully transfer and sell to Appellant Haas all the interest he had acquired in the goodwill of the medical practice involved herein; that consequently, under the statutes, the restrictive covenant of Exhibit 3 [Par. 10] against opening an office near their West 80th Street office was valid and binding on both parties; that the ruling and finding of the trial court to the contrary is erroneous as a matter of law."

Respondent's counsel joins in this restricted submission.

The question whether defendant sold or had any good will to sell to plaintiff must be determined from the written contract, there being no parol evidence thereon. The parties undertook to define their relationship in these words:

> "IT IS EXPRESSLY AGREED AND STIPULATED by the parties that this association of these two practicing physicians and surgeons in the manner herein provided for is somewhat unique and unusual, and further, that it does not, as between the parties, in anywise constitute, nor shall it be deemed to constitute, a partnership, joint venture or contract of employment."

[No "Good Will" to Sell]

An analysis of the writing discloses the defendant became an employee of plaintiff, or at least occupied a status akin to that of employee, and hence had no good will to sell. The fact that the parties have undertaken to define the legal result of the contract and have applied a mistaken legal conclusion to it cannot prevail over the correct legal result which flows from the acts they have undertaken to perform. It is held in respect to partnerships that a mistaken appellation in a contract cannot control the result. (San Joaquin L. & P. Corp. v. Costaloupes, 96 Cal. App. 322, 332; Constans v. Ross, 106 Cal. App. 2d 381, 386; Martyn v. Leslie, 137 Cal. App. 2d 41, 61; Singleton v. Fuller, 118 Cal. App. 2d 733, 740. In the San Joaquin case it is said, at page 330:

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

> "The question thus presented hinges upon the construction of a written contract before us. . . . It may be stated that both parties concede that the determination of whether or not a partnership existed must result from a construction of the contract itself and the recitals therein contained." At page 332: "We may concede that a relationship of debtor and creditor is shown and also that the contract expressly declares that the parties thereto are not partners. However, this does not establish the fact that the parties did not intend to create a partnership between themselves or as to a third person. The parties did intend to create exactly the relationship as shown by the contract, but did not intend that relationship to be called that of partners. Their intention in this respect is immaterial. Appellant and respondent here concede that if the contract by its terms establishes a partnership between the parties, the expressed intent that it should not be so classed would be of no avail. It is the intent to do these things which constitute a partnership that usually determines whether or not that relation exists between the parties."

The same principle is applicable here. (See 32 Cal. Jur. 2d, § 8, p. 402.)

The subject agreement made on September 13, 1955, recites that plaintiff, Dr. Haas, is practicing at 1200 West 80th Street, Los Angeles, that Dr. Hodge is also practicing at an unspecified address and the parties desire to associate in the practice. It is agreed that Dr. Hodge will devote his entire time and attention to such practice during the term of the agreement; the parties shall cooperate but in any case of disagreement the opinion or instructions of Dr. Haas shall be conclusive. The practice shall be conducted at Dr. Haas' offices and all expenses shall be borne by him. Dr. Hodge shall furnish his own automobile and shall receive $60 a month to defray the cost of its operation. All employees shall be paid by Dr. Haas and they shall be solely under his supervision and direction. All compensation paid by patients shall go to Dr. Haas and Dr. Hodge shall not participate in any division of same; nor shall Dr. Haas be required to make any accounting with respect to any monies received. All fees shall be fixed and adjustments made by Dr. Haas solely. Paragraph 4 says: "That it is not the intention of either of these parties to interfere with or dictate to the other how, any particular case shall be handled; nor to dictate the proper technique to pursue, nor to interfere in the diagnoses of cases, but nevertheless these parties may consult, one with the other, from time to time, as to all such matters." Dr. Hodge shall keep such records and make such reports as may be agreed upon but in case of any disagreement the discretion and instruction of Dr. Haas shall prevail. Dr. Hodge shall receive from Dr. Haas, until termination of agreement, "compensation for his services rendered hereunder" at the rate of $800 a month; unless the agreement is sooner terminated the compensation shall be increased on December 1, 1955, to $850 a month and gradually thereafter to and including the month of November, 1956, until the sum of $1,400 is reached; thereafter Dr. Hodge shall receive that monthly compensation until termination of the agreement whatsoever shall be paid him. Here follows paragraph 10 above quoted, which says that after the termination of such agreement Dr. Hodge shall not maintain an office within a radius of 25 miles from Dr. Haas' office. The contract is terminable by death or incapacity of either party or upon 30 days written notice given by either party. Then follows the provision to the effect that the contract shall not be deemed to constitute a partnership, joint venture or contract of employment, but that Dr. Haas may nevertheless procure Workmen's Compensation Insurance "against other liabilities or hazards which may arise by reason of these parties associating together in the manner herein provided," the matter of procuring such insurance being a matter of Dr. Haas' sole discretion. Finally, there is the paragraph to the effect that Dr. Hodge disclaims absolutely and irrevocably any right or claim to "any [of] the professional practice herein mentioned and referred to and to the good-will thereof."

This document bears most of the indicia of an employment agreement (cf. Hamilton v. Salopek, 71 Cal. App. 2d 104, 106; the only element lacking seems to be the right of immediate discharge without cause (see 32 Cal. Jur. 2d, § 8, p. 405; § 9, p. 406). Of course, any contract can be terminated for substantial breach by one of the parties and this is true of an employment contract (Lab. Code, § 2924). If this is an employment contract defendant would acquire no part of the good will of the business. But it is not necessary to decide the specific question.

[Renouncement]

Whatever may be the technical status flowing from the contract it remains true that the last paragraph operates as a present renouncement of any interest in the "professional practice" of Dr. Haas or the good will thereof. This left Dr. Hodge with no inchoate right to future accruing good will, for the practice belonged to Dr. Haas and the good will belonged to him as an incident to ownership of the practice, present and future.

[California Statute]

Section 16600, Business and Professions Code, provides:

"Except as provided in this chapter, every contract by which anyone is restrained from engaging in a lawful profession, trade, or business of any kind is to that extent void." Section 16601: "Any person who sells the good will of a business . . . may agree with the buyer to refrain from carrying on a similar business within a specified county or counties, city or cities, or a part thereof, in which the business so sold . . . has been carried on, so long as the buyer, or any person deriving title to the good will or shares from him, carries on a like business therein."

Defendant could not sell the present or future good will of the business in this instance, for the business and its good will belonged to plaintiff Haas. (See Russell v. Russell, 39 Cal. App. 174, 176-177.)

This does not imply that defendant could not have required a good will adhering to his own person and skill, one which would follow him to a new location; if in fact he did have such a personal good will he did not sell or undertake to sell it to plaintiff, and as matter of law could not do so.

[Judgment Affirmed]

The judgment is affirmed.

Fox, P. J. and, Herndon, J., concurred.

[¶ 69,416] McElhenney Co., Inc., W. F. Snipes, George Toole, Mac Toole, R. P. Swofford, Charles L. Gasque, and Harry Clinkscales v. Western Auto Supply Company.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. No. 7813. Argued March 18, 1959. Decided July 16, 1959.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of South Carolina, at Spartanburg. Ashton H. Williams, District Judge.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Exclusive Dealing—Manufacturer's Cancellation of Dealers' Franchises for Dealing in Competitors' Products—Refusal to Deal with Retailer Who Will Not Enter Into Unlawful Agreement—Legality.—A trial court properly dismissed a complaint alleging that a manufacturer of home and automobile supplies violated Section 3 of the Clayton Act by an "implied understanding or course of dealing" in which it cancelled the franchises of dealers who handled competing products. The dealers incorrectly interpreted the ruling of the trial court as limiting the reach of section 3 to those instances where exclusive dealing was brought about by a contract expressly imposing a "legal" obligation on the part of the buyer not to handle the goods of others. The trial judge fully understood that the franchise agreements, although not unlawful on their face (they admittedly contained no provision requiring the franchisees to deal only in goods supplied by the manufacturer), could have been supplemented by an extrinsic course of conduct from which the illegal condition or understanding might have been found. The gravamen of section 3 is the forbidden "condition, agreement or understanding" of "exclusivity." It makes no difference whether this is voluntary or imposed by coercion, but without it there can be no statutory infraction. Here, the manufacturer threatened with cancellation, and actually cancelled, the franchise agreements of dealers who patronized its competitors to an undesired degree. But so far as the complaint showed, it "exacted no agreement" against the handling of competing merchandise. The complaint itself made it clear that the dealers actually handled competitive articles and did not handle the manufacturer's full line, thus tending to negate the existence of any such agreement.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

The statute does not prohibit a unilateral refusal to sell. Absent a conspiracy or monopoly, a seller may normally refuse to deal with a buyer for any reason or no reason whatever. Thus, the courts have not held a seller liable for refusing to deal with one who was unwilling to enter into an unlawful exclusive dealing arrangement. Clothed with this privilege of customer selection, the manufacturer not only may, but ordinary fairness would require that he should, announce in advance the circumstances under which he would do business with others. While customer selection and "independent announcement of policy" might ripen into an implied agreement, the existence of such an agreement is always a question of fact to be determined when the case, on a properly pleaded complaint, is brought to trial. In accordance with the trend of the courts not to dispose finally of antitrust litigation on the pleadings, without giving the plaintiff a full opportunity to formulate his charges, the case was remanded to permit an application to the trial court for permission to amend the complaint.

See Exclusive Dealing, Vol. 1, ¶ 4005.175, 4007.275, 4007.300, 4009.050, 4009.100, 4009.420.

Monopolies—Monopolization—Attempt to Monopolize—Cancellation of Dealers' Franchises for Dealing in Competitors' Products—Monopoly Power—Intent.—A trial court properly dismissed a complaint alleging that a manufacturer of home and automobile supplies violated Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act by cancelling the franchises of dealers who handled competing products. The dealers' argument was not that the manufacturer attempted to monopolize commerce in any particular product, but rather that it attempted to monopolize what they denominated "a method of doing business" by having its goods sold exclusively in the only stores in certain towns carrying a complete line of automobile and home supplies. It was not charged that those items were unavailable in other stores in each of the named towns, but simply that all of them could not be purchased in any other single store. Thus, the section 2 count of the complaint was bereft of any averment of (1) monopoly power in any defined market, (2) an intent to monopolize coupled with a dangerous possibility that a monopoly could be effectuated, and (3) the improper employment of the manufacturer's position to attain ends forbidden by law. While the court doubted that the dealers could replead effectively so as to allege a monopolization or attempt to monopolize under section 2, it nevertheless remanded the case to permit an application to the trial court for permission to amend the complaint.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2510, 2510.400, 2515.40, 2530.40, 2580, 2610.300, 2610.720.

For the appellants: Chester D. Ward, Jr.

For the appellee: James C. Wilson and Alfred F. Burgess (Carl E. Enggas; Colvin A. Peterson, Jr.; Wyche, Burgess & Wyche, and Watson, Ess, Marshall & Enggas, on the brief).

Affirming and remanding a judgment of the U. S. District Court, Western District of South Carolina, 1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,243.

Before SOBELOFF, Chief Judge, and SOPER and HAYNSWORTH, Circuit Judges.

[Treble Damage Action]

SOBELOFF, Chief Judge [In full text]: A suit claiming various sums aggregating $2,241,000 as treble damages was brought against the Western Auto Supply Company charging it with having violated Section 3 of the Clayton Act,[1] 15 U. S. C. A. 14, and Section 2 of the Sherman Act,[2] 15 U. S. C. A. 2.

[Parties]

The five individual plaintiffs are the owners of five stores in South Carolina and one in Georgia which in the past served as retail outlets for Western Auto merchandise, and the sixth plaintiff, McElhenny Co., Inc., is the former South Carolina distributor for Sylvania television sets who from time to time had made sales to the plaintiff-retailers. Western Auto is a nationwide distributor of products for automobile and home. Among the items which it sells are sporting goods, toys, electrical appliances, power and hand tools, lawn and garden equipment, radio and television sets, and, as its name suggests, automobile supplies.

[Exclusive Dealing Charged]

The amended complaint is quite long, containing over one hundred numbered paragraphs, dealing with defendant's actions in regard to each of the six plaintiffs. In essence, they allege that during varying periods prior to 1956 Western Auto threatened to stop selling to the plaintiff-retailers if they would continue to handle goods in competition with Western Auto lines, and that ultimately Western Auto carried out this threat and discontinued doing business with the plaintiff-retailers who did not abide by the defendant's wishes.

[Dismissed in Lower Court]

The District Court entered an order sustaining Western Auto's motion to dismiss on the ground that the amended complaint failed to state a claim for which relief could be granted. This is an appeal from that order.[3]

[Distribution Agreements]

Instead of making its merchandise available through a larger number of its own retail stores, or in hardware stores generally, Western Auto has in practice restricted its outlets to a network of some 350 company-owned stores and approximately 3600 independently owned and operated "associate" stores. The company-owned stores are generally located in the larger cities, while the "associate" stores are found in smaller communities. As of December 31, 1956, Western Auto had seven company-owned and ninety-one associate stores in South Carolina.

The contracts which Western Auto enters into with its associated stores authorize them to use the name "Western Auto Associate Store." This is considered a valuable right because of the good will which the Western Auto Supply Company has developed. The contracts are cancellable at will by either party upon sixty days written notice. Each contract requires only that the associate shall purchase a stipulated amount of merchandise for an opening stock. Nothing in the contract itself prohibits the purchase and sale of items from other sources, and there is no provision for minimum purchases from Western Auto after the opening order.

[Coercion]

Beginning in 1950, however, Western Auto's representatives, it is alleged, began to coerce certain of the associate stores in South Carolina and Georgia, including the plaintiff-retailers, to discontinue the sale of

---

[1] Section 3 of the Clayton Act.
"It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to lease or make a sale or contract for sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities, whether patented or unpatented, for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, or fix a price charged therefor, or discount from, or rebate upon, such price, on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale or such condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce." Oct. 15, 1914, c. 323, § 3, 38 Stat. 731.

[2] Section 2 of the Sherman Act.
"Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding fifty thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court." July 2, 1890, c. 647 § 2, 26 Stat. 209. As amended July 7, 1955, c. 28, 69 Stat. 282.

[3] Since we are reviewing an order sustaining the defendant's motion to dismiss, the recitals of the complaint which were well pleaded are treated as facts.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

merchandise supplied by competitors. The announcement was made that associate stores should not sell "outside" seat covers, television sets and certain other products. From 1950 to 1956 Western Auto's representatives continually threatened to cancel the franchises of dealers who did not handle Western Auto's "Wizard" seat covers and its "Truetone" television sets. The principal controversy appears to have been over television sets; pressure was applied to some of the plaintiff-retailers to give up selling all competing television sets, while others were told to restrict their handling of outside sets.

[Cancellation]

The plaintiff-retailers refused to accede fully to Western Auto's demands because they had found that outside television sets, particularly Sylvania sets, sold better than Western Auto's Truetone models. They did, however, limit their outside purchases to a degree in order to retain their franchises which were considered valuable because of Western Auto's other lines. As a result, the plaintiff-retailers purchased some Western Auto merchandise they did not want and otherwise would not have purchased. Notwithstanding these additional purchases from the defendant, the franchises of these associates were eventually cancelled because of their refusal to respect Western Auto's distribution policies.

[Damages]

In their complaint, the plaintiff-retailers claimed damages for losses said to have resulted from pressure applied by representatives of Western Auto during the period prior to the cancellation of their franchises. In particular they charged that they (1) lost profits because of their inability to sell outside merchandise unfettered by defendant's pressures, (2) lost profits as a result of being forced to stock and sell defendant's inferior products, and (3) lost cash discounts and freight allowances which would have been available from outside wholesalers.[4] The retailers also sought damages for (4) the ultimate cancellation of their contracts which was said to have resulted in (a) loss of good will and value attaching to their Western Auto franchises, and (b) loss of anticipated profits in the reasonable future. The plaintiff McElhenney Co., Inc., the former Sylvania distributor, claimed to have been damaged by the restrictions Western imposed upon its customers, as a result of which McElhenney's market among such customers for television sets, and replacement parts which it also handled, was materially reduced.

[Refusal to Deal]

Generally speaking, the right of customer selection is sanctioned by both statute and case law. Absent conspiracy or monopolization, a seller engaged in a private business may normally refuse to deal with a buyer for any reason or with no reason whatever. Thus, the courts have until now not held a seller liable in damages for refusing to deal with one who is unwilling to enter into an unawful vertical price agreement or an exclusive dealing arrangement. Clothed with this privilege, the seller not only may, but ordinary fairness would require that he should announce in advance the circumstances under which he will do business with others.

This is not to say however that the course of dealing between seller and buyer may not go beyond mere customer selection and the independent announcement of policy and ripen into an implied or informal agreement or understanding. But whether there is such agreement is always a question of fact to be determined in light of all the circumstances when the case on a properly pleaded complaint is brought to trial (Cf. United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U. S. 300 (1919); United States v. A. Schrader's Son, Inc., 252 U. S. 85 (1920); Frey & Son Inc. v. Cudahy Packing Co., 256 U. S. 208 (1921)). To support a right of action for treble damages, the challenged agreement must be violative of one of the provisions of the several antitrust laws. Here the claim is that the defendant infringed Section 3 of the Clayton Act and Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

Section 3 of the Clayton Act

In essence Section 3 of the Clayton Act prohibits leases, sales or contracts for the sale of goods and commodities made on the condition, agreement or understanding that the purchaser shall not use or deal in the goods and commodities of the seller's competitors where the effect may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. This section, like others of the Clayton Act, was intended to reach specific conduct which had been held by the courts to be outside the ambit of the Sherman Act and which the Congress felt must be proscribed in order to promote competition. The Congressional history, 51 Cong. Rec. 9161, indicates that while Congress was aware of other business practices which might also be harmful to the economy, it was attempting to outlaw only those with which the section expressly dealt.

[4] Certain of the plaintiff-retailers also claimed damages resulting from the closing of their stores which they attributed to the defendant's restrictive policies. All of the plaintiff-retailers are still in business. All those who closed their stores have opened new ones. Snipes who owned two stores has closed one of them, but continues to operate the other. Two of the plaintiff-retailers are now affiliated with Firestone.

Neither in terms nor inferentially does the statute prohibit a unilateral refusal to sell. Its condemnations are directed against executed transactions of lease, sale or contract containing the forbidden condition, agreement or understanding. Quite correctly the District Court pointed out that a mere refusal by a manufacturer to deal with a retailer who will not confine his dealings to the goods of the manufacturer does not run afoul of the section. The cases are unanimous in this: Nelson Radio and Supply Co. v. Motorola, Inc. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,386], 200 F. 2d 911 (5 cir., 1952), cert. den., 345 U. S. 925 (1953); Leo J. Meyberg v. Eureka Williams Corp. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,834], 215 F. 2d 100 (9 cir., 1954), cert. den., 348 U. S. 875 (1954); Brosious v. Pepsi-Cola Co. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,343], 59 F. Supp. 429 (M. D. Pa., 1945), affirmed [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,459], 155 F. 2d 99 (3 cir., 1946); Allied Equipment Co. v. Weber Engineered Products [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,502], 237 F. 2d 879 (4 cir., 1956).

[No "Agreement"]

Appellants incorrectly interpret the ruling of the court below as limiting the reach of Section 3 to those instances where exclusive dealing is brought about by contract expressly imposing a "legal" obligation on the part of the buyer not to handle the goods of others. The District Court's opinion will not sustain this reading. The court was differentiating between an agreement of exclusivity on the one hand, and a naked refusal to deal on the other. It did not suggest that the illegal condition, agreement or understanding may not be implied from a course of dealing between the parties. Probably nothing is more firmly settled in our antitrust jurisprudence than that an illegal contract may be inferred from all of the circumstances. Admittedly, the written agreement between the parties contains no provision requiring the franchisees to deal only in goods supplied by Western Auto. This, of course, merely means that the contract is not unlawful on its face. The writing could be supplemented by an extrinsic course of conduct from which the illegal condition or understanding might be found. This the trial judge fully understood.

We have carefully examined the facts and circumstances upon which the plaintiffs predicate their claim of contravention of Section 3 through an implied understanding or course of dealing. There is no dispute about the fact that it was Western Auto's policy to have its associated retail stores push its own products and that it frowned upon their handling of competing goods. Plainly enough Western Auto wanted its dealers to advance sales of its merchandise, and threatened with cancellation and actually cancelled dealers who patronized its competitors to an extent which it felt jeopardized the value to it of the franchises issued to associated stores. But so far as the complaint shows it exacted no agreement against the handling of competing merchandise. The complaint itself makes clear that the plaintiffs during the period when the asserted understanding was in effect actually handled competitive articles. While the plaintiffs in their brief and in oral argument earnestly contended that Western Auto compelled franchised retailers to handle its full line of products, we find no clear cut allegation in the complaint that this was pursuant to a condition, agreement or understanding violative of the Clayton Act. This omission is sharply pointed up by the paragraphs relating to the individual plaintiffs, which disclose that they did not buy the defendant's full line and, indeed, supplemented Western's products with goods obtained from other sources. In short, plaintiffs' own statement of claim not only fails directly to allege but actually tends to negate any condition, agreement or understanding that plaintiffs shall not use or deal in the goods, wares or merchandise of a competitor of Western Auto.

The gravamen of a Section 3 violation is the forbidden condition, agreement or understanding of exclusivity, and a proper pleading should assert this ultimate fact. It makes no difference whether this is voluntary or is imposed by coercion, but without such agreement, condition or understanding, there can be no statutory infraction. It is only in the presence of this essential element that consideration must be given as to whether competition may be substantially lessened or whether there is any tendency toward monopoly. Cf. Standard Oil Company v. United States [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,432], 337 U. S. 293 (1949); Dictograph Products v. Federal Trade Commission [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 67,932], 217 F. 2d 821 (2 cir., 1954). A wide latitude would be afforded plaintiffs at a trial to prove their claim through direct or circumstantial proof. Whether the proof would support a finding of implied agreement or understanding is a question which we do not reach in the present posture of the case.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Permission to Amend]

We agree with the District Court that an obligation devolves upon the pleader to set out clearly and unambiguously the operative facts upon which he relies. Repeatedly the plaintiffs' brief asserts that their complaint contains express and "implied allegations" sufficient to meet the requirements of the statute. It is not too much even under the liberal rules of pleading to require that the allegations be expressed in plain language, without such complete reliance as we have here upon mere implication. The complaint has been once amended, and apparently there was no application for further amendment. Under the circumstances, we might appropriately affirm without affording the plaintiffs any additional opportunity to plead over. However, in view of their strong insistence that they can establish from the course of dealing of the parties the condition, agreement or understanding which is the heart of the violation, we deem it just to remand the case to permit an application, to be addressed to the sound discretion of the District Judge, for permission to amend the complaint to state a violation of Section 3. The proposed pleading should accompany the application. This accords with the trend of the courts not to dispose finally of antitrust litigation upon the pleadings, without giving the plaintiff full opportunity to formulate his charges. Radovich v. Nat. Football League [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,628], 352 U. S. 445 (1957). Should there be a reformulation of the complaint the customary pretrial procedures may still be availed of by the defendant to lay bare any deficiency in the plaintiffs' case.

Section 2 of the Sherman Act

[Monopolizing "Method of Doing Business"]

We agree with the District Court that the pleading is equally deficient in framing a violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. As we have seen, the plaintiffs have failed to meet the less exacting requirements of the Clayton Act; nevertheless they would have the Court accept the same essential facts as a statement of a case under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Their argument on this count is not that the defendant attempted to monopolize commerce in any particular product, but rather that it attempted to monopolize what they denominated "a method of doing business" by having its goods sold exclusively in the only stores in certain towns carrying a complete line of automobile and home supplies. It is not charged that these items were unavailable in other stores in each of the named towns, but simply that all of them could not be purchased in any other single store. Such charges do not amount to a requisite allegation of monopolization or attempt to monopolize which Section 2 of the Sherman Act condemns.

[Monopoly Power—"Intent"]

This count of the complaint thus is bereft of any averment of monopoly power in any defined market, or an intent to monopolize coupled with a dangerous possibility that a monopoly could be effectuated, or the improper employment of the defendant's position to attain ends forbidden by law. Lorain Journal v. United States [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,957], 342 U. S. 143, 153 (1951); Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375, 396 (1905). All that the plaintiffs have done is to apply the Sherman law label to the same facts which they charge constitute a Clayton Act transgression. While we doubt that they could replead effectively, nevertheless should the District Court see fit to permit a further amendment of the first count of the complaint, it may be disposed to allow a like opportunity in respect of the Sherman Act count as well.

[Affirmed and Remanded]

While the rulings of the District Court are affirmed, the case is nevertheless remanded to it to permit further application to be made by the plaintiffs in conformity with this opinion.

Affirmed and remanded.

[¶ 69,417] Loew's, Inc. v. Radio Hawaii, Inc.

In the New York Supreme Court, New York County, Special Term, Part I. 142 N. Y. L. J., No. 12, page 3. Dated July 16, 1959.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Antitrust Law Violations as Defense—Action for Money Due Under Alleged "Block Booking" Contract.—A motion picture distributor, in an action for money due under a contract by which it licensed a television station to show 752 of its films over a period of years, was granted a motion to strike an affirmative defense alleging that the contract was inherently illegal under the Federal antitrust laws. It was contended that the contract, by requiring the television station to take all or none of the 752 films ("block booking"), created an illegal restraint on trade in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act. The court, in granting summary judgment for the distributor, relied on the United States Supreme Court decision in Kelly v. Kosuga, 1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,283, in which a dealer in onions was permitted to recover the purchase price of onions sold under an agreement wherein the parties allegedly agreed not to sell on the futures market (in order to fix the selling price and limit the market supply). In that case, the Court pointed out that the avoidance of private contracts could not be added to the Sherman Act's express remedies, that the allowance of the illegality defense as a collateral means of enforcing the antitrust laws would create "a very strange class of private attorneys general," and that it was not inappropriate or violative of the intent of the parties to give effect to the agreement "even though it furnished the occasion for a restrictive agreement. . . ."

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9042.475.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Antitrust Law Violations as Defenses—Jurisdiction of State Court—Motion to Stay Proceedings in State Court Where Related Matters Pending in Federal Court.—A New York court, in a motion picture distributor's action to recover money due on a contract wherein it licensed a television station to show its films, denied a request to stay its proceedings until the determination of a subsequently filed Federal court action in which the television station sought a rescission of the contract on the grounds that it was illegal under the Federal antitrust laws. The court noted that the present action did not depend on the propriety of Federal priority in antitrust actions and was therefore quite distinct from the action in General Aniline & Film Corp. v. Bayer Co., 1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,552, where a state court permitted an application to stay its proceedings while the legality of the agreement sued upon was decided by a Federal court which had previously entered a consent decree enjoining one of the parties from enforcing the agreement. In American News Co., Inc. v. Avon Publishing Co., Inc., 1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,320, a state court refused to stay its proceedings where there was "doubt as to whether the defense is maintainable as a bar to plaintiff's claim. . . ." Here, under a recent United States Supreme Court decision, Kelly v. Kosuga, 1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,283, the distributor's claim would not be barred even if the agreement was illegal under the antitrust laws.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9047.

New York Antitrust (Donnelly) Act

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Law—Procedure—Antitrust Violations as Defense to Contract Action—Applicability of Federal Rule to State Antitrust Statute.—A motion picture distributor, in an action for money due under a contract by which it licensed a Colorado television station to show its films, was granted a motion to strike an affirmative defense contending that the contract was an unenforceable "block booking" contract which violated the New York Antitrust (Donnelly) Act. The court, having relied on Kelly v. Kosuga, 1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,283, a recent United States Supreme Court decision, in granting a motion to strike the defense that the contract was illegal under the Sherman Antitrust Act, noted that the rule of the Kelly case (permitting recovery for goods sold although the agreement contained a provision assumed to be illegal) was equally applicable to the state statute. Thus, defenses which fail under that decision must also fail under the New York statute.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2407.34.

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Law—Conflicts in State and Federal Laws—Application of New York Antitrust Statute to "Wholly Interstate" Matter—Federal Pre-Emption.—A New York court, in rejecting the alleged illegality of a motion picture film licensing agreement under the New York antitrust statute as a defense to an action to recover money due on the agreement, noted that the case dealt with the licensing of pictures for television transmission over state lines from a Colorado station, that the State of New York had no overriding concern which would warrant the application of its statutes to a factual situation that was wholly interstate in character, and that Federal authority had understandably pre-empted the field of television regulation as "interstate commerce."

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2401.34.

[Contract Action—Antitrust Violations as Defense]

EPSTEIN, Justice [In full text]: Plaintiff moves in this action to strike the affirmative defenses set up in the answers and for summary judgment in the sum of $813,570.32, with interest. Plaintiff entered into a written agreement with KTVR, Inc., a Colorado corporation, thereby licensing a number of motion pictures for television showing by said KTVR. Defendants were the sole stockholders of said television station, and as such unconditionally guaranteed full performance by KTVR. The number of films from plaintiff's library (752) were contracted for by said station for television showing over a period of years. Plaintiff performed its obligations under the contract, but KTVR defaulted in its payments. Plaintiff seeks herein recovery from defendants as guarantors of the agreement by KTVR. Defendants admit the agreement and admit their unconditional guaranty of KTVR's performance, which, having failed, now brings this claim for the money due under defendants' guaranty.

[Block Booking]

In the separate answers filed by defendants (Gotham Broadcasting filed one and Radio Hawaii and Founders Corporation filed another) there are set up two affirmative defenses. On the validity of these defenses in this action on the guaranty depends the conclusion to be reached by this court. The first defense is based upon what is known as "block booking," an imposition of a condition on KTVR of the necessity to take all 752 films or get none—constituting what is said to be an illegal restraint of interstate commerce. There are variations of this defense in the factual allegations of the combined answer of Radio Hawaii and Founders Corporation. The substance is, however, the same—violation of the Sherman Act by creating an illegal restraint on interstate commerce. The second defense in each answer is based on the claimed anti-trust violation as constituting a violation of the New York State anti-restraint statute, section 340 of the New York General Business Law. Plaintiff herein moves to strike these defenses as inadequate at law under Rule 109 of the Rules of Civil Practice and for summary judgment under Rule 113 of the Rules of Civil Practice. The pleadings, affidavits and relevant documents set forth the essential facts, and on them there rests the basis for a legal conclusion decisive of the instant motions.

[Jurisdiction of State Court—Kelly Case]

There are certain facts set forth in the opposing papers which are considered and which this court does not believe warrant the withholding of action hereon asked for by defendants. In March, 1957, the United States instituted an action against Loew's in the Southern District of New York based on the claimed "block booking" licensing agreements as being in violation of the federal anti-trust laws. In January, 1959, the instant action was begun against these defendants on their guaranty of the now claimed illegal contract of KTVR and Loew's. It was after this action had been on its way that KTVR (the wholly owned tool of defendants herein) commenced an action in the Federal Court in the Southern District of New York in May, 1959, seeking rescission of and escape from its contract and agreement, and thereby to escape its obligation in the sum of $813,570.32, for which Loew's therein set up its counterclaim. The action of KTVR in the federal court is identical with the substance and legal effect of the defenses herein interposed—an inherently illegal contract under the federal anti-trust laws. Defendants herein ask this court to stay its action and withhold its decision until the federal action shall have been determined. This action, however, is quite distinct from that in General Aniline & Film Corporation v. Bayer Company [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,552], (305 N. Y. 479), in which Judge Fuld for our Court of Appeals wrote the opinion of the court. This action does not depend on the propriety of federal priority in antitrust actions as in the Aniline case. So, too, in American News Company v. Avon Publishing Company [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,320], (152 N. Y. S. 2d 575, aff'd at 153 N. Y. S. 2d at 579). The leading original "Block Booking" case is United States v. Paramount Pictures [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244] (334 U. S. 131), which followed a number of compromise agreements by the film distributors and the United States in the matter of bulk film contracts for original showings in theatres of the country. The present controversy in this litigation and on the facts here undisputed will turn on the effect of the recent United States Supreme Court decision in Kelly v. Kosuga [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,283], (358 U. S. 516, 3 L. Ed. 2d 475), decided February 24, 1959. Both sides in this case seem to recognize the impact of the Kelly v. Kosuga case on the instant action against defendants. Plaintiff feels it is in effect conclusive, while defendants, with some admitted difficulty, seek to restrict it to the facts there and not as setting forth any guide in law. We must therefore look with care at Kelly v. Kosuga.

["Illegality" Defense Rejected]

A dealer in onions sought recovery of the balance of purchase price of onions sold to defendant. Defendant and other dealers purchased onions and agreed not to sell on futures—in order to fix the selling price and limit the market supply. The defense was that the agreement violated the Sherman Act and the sale was an indivisible part of the illegal contract. Summary judgment was granted in the Northern District of Illinois, and the Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit (affirmed [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,062] 257 Fed. 2d 48). The United States Supreme Court affirmed the summary judgments granted below. Justice Brennan wrote in part as follows:

> "As a defense to an action based on contract, the plea of illegality based on violation of the Sherman Act has not met with much favor in this Court * * *. The Court observed that the Sherman Act's express remedies could not be added to judicially by including the avoidance of private contracts as a sanction * * * (cases cited). * * * If the defense of illegality is to be allowed as a collateral method of enforcement of the anti-trust laws, as the breadth of the petitioner's argument suggests, it must be said that his theory creates a very strange class of private attorneys general * * * we do not think it inappropriate or violative of the intent of the parties to give it effect even though it furnished the occasion for a restrictive agreement of the sort here in question" (358 U. S. 518-521).

In the instant case defendants are further removed than the defendant in the Kelly v. Kosuga case. The contention of defendants herein under their guaranty agreement is even less effective than that held ineffective as a defense in the Kelly case.

[New York Antitrust Statute]

There is no reason why the New York State statute (sec. 340, General Business Law) should receive more rigid application than that given by the Supreme Court of the United States. The rule of the Kelly v. Kosuga case is equally applicable to the New York statute, and the defenses which fail under the former must also fail under the state statute. In a recent state court decision the same reasoning resulted in summary judgment for the plaintiff (Fleischman Distilling Corp'n v. Frontier Liquor Corp'n, New York County, decision of Levey, J., reported page 13, New York Law Journal April 6, 1959, C. C. H. [1959] TRADE CASES, par. 69,324). Illegal restraint of trade was there pleaded as a defense (five separate defenses) under section 340 of the state's General Business Law. Sherman Act violation was also pleaded. A collateral attack on the alleged illegality was not recognized. Said Justice Levey:

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

"Finally, it is well settled that where a provision of a contract of sale, even though it may be in violation of anti-trust laws, is not an inherent part of the contract and is separable from the promise or obligation to pay for the goods sold, such illegal provision does not bar the right to recover the price (Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U. S. 540; D. R. Wilder Mfg. Co. v. Corn Products Refining Co., 236 U. S. 165; General Aniline & Film Corp'n v. Bayer, 305 N. Y. 479; Jamaica Sash & Door, Inc., v. Prudential Imp. Service, Inc., 137 N. Y. S. 2d 593). Accordingly, the motion for summary judgment is granted."

[Interstate Commerce]

The cases cited by Justice Levey are those discussed by Justice Brennan, although the Kelly v. Kosuga case was not relied upon by Justice Levey. We are here dealing with licensing pictures for television transmission in Colorado over state lines from the Colorado station. New York State has no overriding concern in such a situation to warrant application of its General Business Law to a factual situation wholly interstate in character. Federal authority has understandably pre-empted the field of television regulation as "interstate commerce" (Allen B. Dumont Laboratories v. Carroll, 3d Circuit, 184 Fed. 2d 153, 154, cert. den. 340 U. S. 929). So, too, in the Kelly v. Kosuga case the state antitrust defense was stricken by the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals (257 Fed. 2d 55).

[Summary Judgment Granted]

In this case all the pertinent facts and evidence are before this court. There is no factual issue left. This court on these pleadings and papers before it, and considering the rationale of recent state and federal cases hereinabove referred to, feels impelled to strike down the affirmative defenses pleaded in defendants' answers and to grant summary judgment as prayed for in the moving papers. Submit order and judgment.

[¶ 69,418] The Upjohn Company v. Peoples Service Drug Stores, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the District of Maryland. Civil Action No. 10092. Filed May 26, 1959.

Maryland Fair Trade Act

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Federal Court Actions—Motion to Refer Issues to State Court—Constitutionality of Fair Trade Act Under State Constitution.—A Federal District Court, in a drug manufacturer's fair trade action against a retailer who allegedly violated the Maryland Fair Trade Act by granting a "concession" (trading stamps) in connection with the retail sale of the manufacturer's products at the minimum retail prices, held the case in abeyance to permit the manufacturer to file a state court action for a determination of questions which arose under the Constitution and laws of Maryland. By way of separate defenses, the retailer had raised questions concerning the interpretation of the Maryland Fair Trade Act which had not been passed upon by the Maryland Court of Appeals, and questions arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States. The undesirability of a Federal court attempting to forecast the decision of a state court upon a point requiring the interpretation of state law or the state constitution, and the further undesirability of a Federal court passing upon questions involving the constitutionality of state laws under the Constitution of the United States, has often been recognized. The court allowed the manufacturer thirty days in which to commence an action in an appropriate state court. The action taken by the manufacturer, if any, would be reported to the Federal court on or before the expiration of the thirty day period.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3085.22, 3410.

Fair Trade—Defense to Enforcement Actions—Enforcement Activity or Policy.—A drug manufacturer, in successfully seeking to have a Federal court hold in abeyance a fair trade action to permit it to file a state court action for a determination of questions arising under the Maryland Constitution and Maryland Fair Trade Act, alleged that a state court, in another fair trade action brought by it, had stated that an interlocutory injunction granted in that action might be dissolved unless the manufacturer proceeded forthwith, in that state court, against the defendant in the instant Federal court action.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3440.22.

For the plaintiff: J. Nicholas Shriver, Jr., J. Paul Bright, Jr., and Murray D. Welch.

For the defendant: F. Fulton Bramble and Harrison L. Winter.

[Fair Trade Action—Trading Stamps]

R. Dorsey Watkins, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff has sued defendant seeking an injunction and damages for alleged violation by defendant of the Maryland Fair Trade Act (Maryland Code of Public General Laws, 1957 Edition, Article 83, sections 102-110). The complaint, after proper jurisdictional allegations as to diversity of citizenship and statutory amount, contains the typical allegations found in similar complaints against non-signing retailers, including the ownership and use by plaintiff of various registered trademarks on drugs, medicines, toilet articles and other products sold and distributed by plaintiff; wide distribution and advertising of the goods and trademarks, resulting in the acquisition by plaintiff of a valuable goodwill therein; that such products are in "fair[1] and open competition with products[2] of the same general class produced by others"; that plaintiff has entered into fair trade contracts complying with and under the Maryland Act, with retailers in the State of Maryland whereby it was agreed that said retailers would not advertise, offer for sale or sell any of plaintiff's trademarked products at prices less than the then prevailing minimum retail price, and that in connection with any sale of plaintiff's products at such minimum resale prices the retailer would not offer or make "any concession of any kind whatsoever (either by the giving of coupons, trading stamps or otherwise)"; that notice of such contracts and of the minimum retail sales prices was given by plaintiff to the trade and to defendant; but that thereafter defendant, with knowledge of the provisions of such fair trade contracts including the provision against giving trading stamps, wilfully and knowingly instituted the practice of giving a concession, i. e., trading stamps, in connection with the retail sale of plaintiff's fair-traded products at the minimum retail prices, in violation of such fair trade contracts and the Maryland law; that plaintiff has "importuned" defendant to cease such alleged violations but defendant has continued such practices; that serious damage has been done to plaintiff and its goodwill by such practices and will continue unless defendant is restrained; and that plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law.

[Answer]

The court refused to sign a temporary restraining order, but did issue an order requiring cause to be shown why a preliminary injunction should not issue. Defendant filed a combined answer to the complaint, and to the show cause order. Defendant admits[3] notice that plaintiff had entered into a fair trade contract with a retailer in the State of Maryland and of the minimum retail prices from time to time established by plaintiff, but denied notice of the terms and conditions of such contract, including the purported prohibition against the giving of trading stamps. Defendant admitted the resumption of its former practice of giving to purchasers of all products[4] sold by it for cash, including plaintiff's fair-traded products when sold at minimum fair trade prices, trading stamps redeemable in merchandise, but denies that such stamps are "coupons" or that the giving of such stamps constitutes the giving of a "concession", or that its conduct is in violation of plaintiff's purported fair trade contract and the Maryland Fair Trade Act. Defendant also admitted plaintiff's "importunings" to cease the giving of trading stamps and that it declined to discontinue this practice.

[Defenses Under Maryland Fair Trade Act]

The answer then by way of separate defenses raises questions concerning the

[1] and [2] Section 103 of Article 83 of the Maryland Code uses the terms "free" and "commodities" in place of "fair" and "products". While the terms may not be synonymous, they are sufficiently similar to bring the claim within the Maryland Act.

[3] Defendant states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of some of the allegations of the complaint, and denies others. This is not important with respect to the pending motion.

[4] Except cigarettes, fountain sales and certain drug items.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

interpretation of the Maryland Fair Trade Act which have not heretofore been passed upon by the Maryland Court of Appeals, and questions under the Constitution and laws of the United States. The contentions as to Maryland law are as follows:

(1) Defendant's use of trading stamps is in effect only a "uniform store-wide discount for the immediate or prompt payment of cash", or 2.50% if stamps are redeemed in merchandise or 1.67% if stamps are redeemed in cash; and that this practice is not a violation of section 104 of Article 83 of the Maryland Code.

(2) Even if the use of stamps effects a reduction of the price of commodities sold, it is de minimis, and should not be considered by a court.

(3) The use of stamps by defendant does not constitute "an injurious and uneconomic practice in the distribution of" plaintiff's products.

(4) If the use of stamps by defendant constitutes a reduction in the price of commodities sold, such reduction was not "willfully and knowingly made" by defendant within the meaning of section 107 of Article 83 of the Maryland Code.

[Constitutional Defenses]

The defenses allegedly arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States are:

(1) To prohibit the allowance of a cash discount on the sale of plaintiff's products would violate the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (15 U. S. C. A. 1); and the Maryland Fair Trade Act, insofar as it purports to authorize the fixing of terms of sale, violates the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

(2) If applied to compel defendant to cease issuing trading stamps with merchandise sold at prices fixed by plaintiff, the Maryland Fair Trade Act would be unconstitutional in that it would deprive defendant of its liberty and property without due process of law in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

(3) The McGuire Act of July 14, 1952, constitutes an unconstitutional delegation to private persons of powers vested in the Congress of the United States by Article I, sections 1 and 8 of the Constitution of the United States; and the Maryland Fair Trade Act, insofar as it depends upon the McGuire Act, is likewise unconstitutional.

(4) If applied to compel defendant to cease issuing trading stamps with merchandise sold at prices fixed by plaintiff, the McGuire Act of July 14, 1952 would be unconstitutional in that it would deprive defendant of its liberty and property without due process of law in violation of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

(5) If applied to compel defendant to cease issuing trading stamps with merchandise sold at prices fixed by plaintiff, the Maryland Fair Trade Act would be unconstitutional in that it would constitute an unreasonable burden on interstate commerce in violation of Article I, section 8 of the Constitution of the United States.

(6) The McGuire Act is void for uncertainty, in that subsection (a)(3) (15 U. S. C. A. 45(a)(3)), which imposes on non-signers of price maintenance contracts the obligation to observe the terms of such contracts, authorizes horizontal price-fixing, thus conflicting with subsection (a)(5) (15 U. S. C. A. 45(a)(5)) which forbids horizontal agreements to effect such a result.

(7) The provision of section 104(b) of Article 83 of the Maryland Code of Public General Laws, prohibiting the "offering or the making of any concessions of any kind whatsoever (whether by the giving of coupons or otherwise)" in connection with the sale of fair-traded commodities, if applied so as to compel defendant to cease issuing trading stamps with plaintiff's fair-traded merchandise, but not applied to prohibit the extension of credit on sales thereof, would be an unconstitutional denial to defendant of the equal protection of the laws.

[Stay of Proceedings]

Thereafter a petition was filed by defendant [5] alleging that there had been raised by its answer divers questions of the validity and interpretation of the Maryland Fair Trade Act upon which there had been no adjudication by the trial courts or the [5] A joint petition was filed by defendant in this and two other cases brought against it by drug manufacturers, and by another pharmacy sued by another drug manufacturer, all involving alleged fair trade violations in the issuance of trading stamps.

Court of Appeals of Maryland; that subsequent to the filing of the complaint herein, there had been filed and was pending in the Circuit Court of Baltimore City an action[6] brought by a drug manufacturer against this defendant, the purpose of which is to restrain and enjoin defendant from issuing trading stamps in connection with plaintiff's fair-traded products; and that the same questions of the validity and interpretation of the Maryland Fair Trade Act are raised in that case as are raised herein. The motion requested a stay of proceedings in this case pending an adjudication by the Circuit Court of Baltimore City of the above questions of the validity and interpretation of the Maryland Fair Trade Act.

[Motion to "Remit" Action to State Court]

No objection was made by plaintiff's counsel to the stay, which was granted for ninety days, with leave to plaintiff and defendant to move for any extension of the stay or, before the expiration of the stay, to apply for a lifting thereof. One extension was granted. Defendant applied for a further extension, which was opposed by plaintiff. At a conference attended by counsel in this and other related cases[7] held on May 11, 1959, it was stated that it was almost certain that because of discovery proceedings and pending motions, the Circuit Court case could not be decided for at least six months, and probably not for a year. Plaintiff then filed a motion,[8] with supporting memorandum, requesting this court not to grant a further extension of the stay, but to retain this case without final disposition and allow the plaintiff a reasonable time to commence action in the state courts for a determination therein of questions of state law. As reason for the institution of a new suit in the state courts, rather than awaiting the outcome of the pending litigation in the Circuit Court of Baltimore City, plaintiff's motion alleges that in a proceeding by plaintiff against another pharmacy in the Circuit Court for Montgomery County,[9] the court, in granting interlocutory injunction restraining the defendant therein from violating the fair trade laws of Maryland, including a prohibition against the use of "any allowance, gift, rebate or concession", stated that it might well dissolve the injunction unless plaintiff "proceeded against the defendant herein, Peoples Service Drug Stores, Inc., in the Circuit Court for Montgomery County forthwith with respect to the use by this defendant of trading stamps in the trading area . . ." Plaintiff's counsel also advised this court that the judge of the Circuit Court for Montgomery County had indicated that disposition of such a suit could be had in the matter of a few weeks.

The undesirability of a Federal court attempting to forecast the decision of a state court upon a point requiring the interpretation of state law or the state constitution, and the further undesirability of a Federal court passing upon questions involving the constitutionality, under the provision of the Constitution of the United States and the amendments thereto, of state laws, has often been recognized. Railroad Commission of Texas v. Pullman Company, 1941, 312 U. S. 496, 499-501, 61 S. Ct. 643, 85 L. Ed. 971; Albertson v. Millard, 1953, 345 U. S. 242, 244, 73 S. Ct. 600, 97 L. Ed. 983; Leiter Minerals, Inc. v. United States, 1957, 352 U. S. 220, 229, 77 S. Ct. 287, 1 L. Ed. 2d 267; The Tungas v. Skovgaard, 1959, 358 U. S. 588, 596, 79 S. Ct. 503, 3 L. Ed. 2d —.

In two instances, United States District Courts in cases involving state fair trade laws have held cases in abeyance to permit the institution of proceedings in the state courts. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp. v. White River Distributors, Inc. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,711], D. C. Ark. 1954, 118 F. Supp. 541; Sterling Drug v. Anderson [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,991], D. C. Tenn. 1954, 127 F. Supp. 511.

[Case Retained Pending State Court Action]

The court will sign an order retaining this case on the docket without final dis-

[6] Parke, Davis & Company v. People's Service Drug Stores, Inc., Case No. A-37886, Docket 1958A, folio 269.

[7] See footnote 5.

[8] The motion is entitled as one "For Remission of this Cause to the Maryland State Courts for Determination of Questions of State Law" and in the body of the motion it is requested that this court "remit" the cause, but retain jurisdiction and hold proceedings in abeyance for a reasonable time pending determination of questions of state law by the state courts. There can be no doubt, however, from the balance of the motion, and the cases cited in the memorandum, that plaintiff was really seeking the procedure summarized in the text of this opinion to which this footnote is appended.

[9] The Upjohn Company v. Save-Mor Drugs, Bethesda, Inc., in the Circuit Court for Montgomery County, Equity No. 21790.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

position, and allow the plaintiff thirty days within which to commence appropriate action in the Circuit Court for Montgomery County for a determination therein of the questions arising under the Constitution and Laws of the State of Maryland which have been raised by the defendant herein in its answer, the plaintiff to report to the court at or before the expiration of said thirty-day period the action, if any, which it has taken with respect thereto.

[¶ 69,419] Baldwin-Lima-Hamilton Corporation and Edward E. Simmons, Jr. v. Tatnall Measuring Systems Company and The Budd Company.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. No. 12,846. Filed August 5, 1959.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. STEEL, District Judge.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Exclusive Dealing—Clayton Act, Section 3—Patent Misuse as Bar to Infringement Action—"Tying" Other Apparatus to Sale of Patented Device.—An exclusive licensee of a "strain gage," a patented device for measuring "strain" in materials, was denied a petition for a rehearing on a ruling that it had "misused" the patent and was, therefore, barred from enforcing it against an infringer. The petition for rehearing, if anything, made it clearer than ever that (1) a product which was "tied" to the sale of the patented device was not an element thereof (and was not, therefore, within the monopoly of the patent), and (2) the licensee illegally limited the use of the patented device by refusing to sell it, by itself, to prospective customers who wished to use it with a strain sensitive apparatus of a type manufactured by the licensee and its "licensees."

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2013.500; Exclusive Dealing, Vol. 1, ¶ 4007.275, 4007.550, 4007.725, 4009.100, 4009.475, 4009.600; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9040.05.

For the appellants: Walter J. Blenko, Pittsburgh, Pa.

For the appellees: Joseph W. Swain, Jr., Philadelphia, Pa.

Denying a petition for rehearing on a decision of the U. S. Court of Appeals, Third Circuit, 1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,359.

Present: BIGGS, Chief Judge, and MCLAUGHLIN, KALODNER, STALEY and HASTIE, Circuit Judges.

SUR PETITION FOR REHEARING

Opinion of the Court

[Patent Misuse—"Tying" Arrdngements]

PER CURIAM [In full text]: The petition for rehearing, if anything, makes it clearer than ever that 1. the test body is not an element of the patent which is for a gage per se, and 2. that appellant Baldwin-Lima-Hamilton Corporation illegally limited the use of the Simmons gage by refusing to sell it by itself to prospective customers who wished to use it with strain sensitive apparatus of a type manufactured by appellant Baldwin-Lima-Hamilton Corporation and its licensees.

[Petition Denied]

The petition for rehearing will be denied.

[Dissenting Opinion]

BIGGS, Chief Judge, dissenting [In full text]: The court has extended greatly the patent misuse principle. This extension, applied full force, could prohibit a patentee from employing his invention as a component even in an apparatus of his own manufacture.

I conclude that the test body is a material element in the claimed invention, as the court below first held, and that Section 271, Title 35, U. S. C., may be applicable.

The issues involved are of such far-reaching importance as to render desirable rehearing before the court en banc.

For these reasons I must dissent from the order denying rehearing.

[¶ 69,420] Ordnance Gauge Company v. Jacquard Knitting Machine Co., Inc.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. No. 12,577. Argued November 17, 1958. Filed February 18, 1959. Opinion on Petition for Rehearing filed April 9, 1959.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. KIRKPATRICK, Chief Judge.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Dismissal of Action for Failure to Prosecute—Five Year Delay.—A trial court's dismissal, without prejudice, of a private action which had been permitted to lay dormant for more than five years was affirmed. Under Rule 41(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a case may be dismissed for failure of the plaintiff to prosecute. Whether such a failure justified dismissal was within the discretion of the trial court. The plaintiff's contention that Rule 41(b) was not applicable at the pleading stage of the proceedings, but only at the trial stage, was rejected. Thus, the action stood dismissed under Rule 41(b), but the dismissal would not operate as a dismissal on the merits. In view of the plaintiff's failure to state when or where the acts complained of occurred and its failure to set out the applicable statute of limitations, it could not be stated with positiveness whether or not its action was now barred.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.440.

For the appellant: Leonard L. Kalish, Philadelphia, Pa.

For the appellee: H. Francis DeLone, Philadelphia, Pa.

Affirming a judgment of the U. S. District Court, Eastern District of Pennsylvania, 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 68,933.

Before BIGGS, Chief Judge, and MCLAUGHLIN and KALODNER, Circuit Judges.

Opinion of the Court

[Dismissal—Failure to Prosecute]

By BIGGS, Chief Judge [In full text]: The court below dismissed without prejudice a suit filed by the appellant, Ordnance Gauge Company, against Jacquard Knitting Machine Company. Ordnance has appealed.

[Patent Infringement Action]

Extensive litigation between the parties commenced on April 19, 1950 when Jacquard, defendant-appellee in the instant case, filed a complaint against Ordnance, at Civil Action No. 10,850 in the court below, alleging infringement of the United States Patent No. 2,397,456. The patent discloses a method of transferring stitches from one needle to another in knitting machines or in a loop-receiving device. Ordnance filed an answer and a counterclaim denying infringement and sought to have the patent declared invalid and also prayed for an injunction restraining Jacquard from instituting or threatening suit against its, Ordnance's, customers alleging that they had infringed Jacquard's patent.

[Antitrust Action]

After the filing of the answer and counterclaim in Civil Action No. 10,850, but before the trial of that action, Ordnance on May 3, 1951, filed the suit at bar, Civil Action No. 12,206 in the court below. Ordnance's complaint alleges violation by Jacquard of the antitrust laws in connection with United States Patent No. 2,397,456, makes reference to the suit at Civil Action No. 10,850, alleges that Patent No. 2,397,456 is invalid and was not infringed, asserts that Jacquard was guilty of unfair competition, trade libel and slander, and seeks damages and other relief. An answer was filed by Jacquard on June 29, 1951, but no further action of any kind, insofar as the record shows, was taken in the suit for a period of more than five years, indeed not until November 8, 1956. The trial of Civil Action No. 10,850 was commenced on July 19, 1951 and was concluded April 16, 1952. The court below filed an opinion[1] and entered judgment on November 14, 1952, holding the patent invalid and denying relief to Ordnance on its counterclaim. Jacquard and Ordnance cross-

[1] Jacquard Knitting Mach. Co. v. Ordnance Gauge Co. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,340], 108 F. Supp. 59 (E. D. Pa. 1952).

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

appealed to this court. We affirmed the judgment of the court below.[2]

[Want of Prosecution]

On November 8, 1956 the Clerk of the court below mailed to the attorneys for both Jacquard and Ordnance a notice[3] that Civil Action No. 12,206 would be dismissed under the local "Two-Year Rule",[4] unless application was made to the district court. Ordnance responded on November 21, 1956 by filing a praecipe directing the Clerk of the District Court to place the case on the jury trial calendar. The Clerk prepared a "calendar card"[5] and gave the case a number for the preparation of the list for preliminary call. Two days later, on November 23, 1956, Ordnance filed an application to the court that the action should not be "deemed [to be] abandoned nor dismissed."[6] Ordnance's application was listed for argument on December 16, 1956. There was a continuance, however, at Jacquard's request and on March 17, 1957 Jacquard filed a motion pursuant to Rule 41(b), Fed. R. Civ. Proc., 28 U. S. C., to dismiss the suit at bar for want of prosecution with due diligence. Affidavits were filed.[7] [2] [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,871], 213 F. 2d 503 (1954).

---

[3] The notice was as follows: "The record in the above case indicates that no proceedings have been taken by the parties for a period of two consecutive years. Unless application is made to the Court within two weeks from the date of this letter, the case will be deemed abandoned and stand dismissed in accordance with a local rule of Court. Such dismissal shall be without prejudice and with costs against the plaintiff.

"If this case has been settled, a stipulation or order to dismiss filed by the parties in accordance with Rule 41 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure will preclude the necessity of entering a cost judgment on the judgment indexes."

[4] The "Two-Year Rule" under which the Clerk of Court acted was promulgated November 24, 1952, and is as follows:

"In every civil action, not answered 'Ready for Trial' upon a preliminary call, in which no proceeding has been taken for a period of two consecutive years, the Clerk shall, immediately upon the expiration of such two year period, send notice to counsel of record or, if none, to the parties that, unless the Court upon application made within two weeks after such notice shall otherwise order, the case will be deemed to be abandoned and stand dismissed and, in the absence of such application to or order by the Court the Clerk shall without special order enter upon the record 'Dismissed under the rule' and tax the costs against the plaintiff. Dismissal under this rule shall be without prejudice.

"This rule shall on and after December 1, 1952, be in full force in cases then pending or thereafter brought."

The rule of the court below which was effective until December 1, 1952, provided:

"Every Civil Action in which no proceeding has been taken for a period of two consecutive years shall, immedaitely upon the expiration of such two year period, be deemed to have been abandoned and stand dismissed, and the Clerk shall thereupon, without special order, enter upon the record 'Dismissed under the rule' and tax the costs against the plaintiff. Dismissals under this rule shall be without prejudice.

"This rule shall on and after the 2nd day of January, 1940, be in full force in all actions then pending or thereafter brought."

[5] A calendar card is an abbreviated record of the case in the district court, and is used principally to facilitate the preparation of trial lists.

[6] Ordnance's application of November 23, 1956 was as follows: "Plaintiff requests that this Action be not deemed abandoned nor dismissed, for lack of prosecution, because it is not plaintiff's intention to abandon this Action, and plaintiff has filed a Praecipe requesting that this Action be placed on the trial calendar."

[7] Two affidavits were filed by the defendant June 19, 1957. One affiant, Mr. Jerome G. Lee, was employed by the firm of J. Stanley Preston, counsel for Jacquard in Civil Action No. 10.850. See p. 1, supra. Lee stated, through his affidavit that it was his observation and belief that "all conferences, discussions, and correspondence" relating to Civil Action No. 10,850 and decisions leading up to the suit were conducted by and between Mr. Preston and Mr. Harry Albertman, the general manager of Jacquard: and that J. Stanley Preston died in October 1954.

The other affiant was Mr. Charles F. Miller, who, at the time of trial of Civil Action No. 10,850, was Chief Engineer of Jacquard. At the time of making the affidavit, Mr. Miller was Vice-President of Wildman-Jacquard Co., a successor company. In his affidavit Mr. Miller stated that Mr. Albertman was unable to testify in Civil Action No. 10,850 because of "serious physical and mental disabilities," and that "At the present time [June 18, 1957], Mr. Albertman is even more seriously disabled, both physically and mentally"; that on June 29, 1956, Jacquard merged with Wildman Mfg. Co. to form the Wildman-Jacquard Co. and that Jacquard's factory in Philadelphia was closed; that no one in the Wildman-Jacquard organization could testify that the files of J. Stanley Preston relating to litigation between Jacquard and Ordnance, transferred to Jacquard after Preston's death, are complete or that no documents had been lost.

A third affidavit was filed by defendant Jacquard on March 5, 1958. It was sworn to on June 20, 1957 by Mr. Robert D. Donley, the Secretary of Jacquard. Apparently it was before the court on June 24, 1957 but was not marked "filed" until March 5, 1958. The affiant stated in substance that defendant's assets and corporate affiliations had undergone a series of changes since June of 1954.

No affidavits were filed by plaintiff, Ordnance Gauge Co.

Ordnance's application that the suit should not be deemed to be abandoned or dismissed and Jacquard's motion to dismiss were argued together on June 24, 1957. On August 19, 1957 the court below granted Jacquard's motion to dismiss the suit at bar for failure to prosecute it diligently pursuant to Rule 41(b) and without opinion ordered the action at bar dismissed. Ordnance filed a petition for rehearing.[8] A hearing was had on this petition and on January 21, 1958, the court below filed an opinion,[9] ruling against Jacquard, vacated its judgment of August 19, 1957, but ordered Ordnance's action dismissed without prejudice under the Two-Year Rule. Ordnance now appeals from this judgment.

[Statute of Limitations]

Ordnance contends that the court below erred in dismissing its suit under the Two-Year Rule on January 21, 1958, as it had erred previously in dismissing the suit under Rule 41(b) on August 19, 1957. Ordnance asserts that the court below misconstrued the Two-Year Rule and applied it prejudicially contending that the court itself failed in its duty through the inaction of its Clerk's office in failing for more than three years to give notice to Ordnance that it would apply the Two-Year Rule when the rule itself required the Clerk to give notice "immediately" upon expiration of the prescribed two year period and that Ordnance's suit is now barred by the applicable statutes of limitations.[10] Quite aside from any of the foregoing, Ordnance asserts that the rule is inapplicable by its own terms to the case at bar and that the court has misconstrued it. There is no doubt that the court below dismissed the instant case by application of the Two-Year Rule for the final line of the opinion stated: "The case will . . . be dismissed without prejudice, under the local rule." 21 FRD at p. 577. We therefore must determine whether the court erred in applying this rule under the circumstances at bar.[11]

[Interpretation of "Two-Year Rule"]

The assertion that the court below misconstrued or misapplied the Two-Year Rule requires an examination of its provisions. Ordnance insists that the phrase "In every civil action not answered 'Ready for Trial' upon a preliminary call . . . shall . . ." be subject to the Rule's provisions, must be construed as if it read "In every civil action which shall have been on preliminary call and not answered 'Ready for Trial' . . . shall . . ." be subject to the Rule's provisions. This interpretation would exclude from the operation of the rule any case "not answered 'Ready for Trial' upon a preliminary call," such as the case at bar. We cannot accept this construction. The rule may not be as clear as it should be but its purpose as a successor to the former "Two-Year Dismissal Rule"[12] was to wipe dead cases from the court's civil docket. This interpretation sought by Ordnance would emasculate the rule and render it largely nugatory for it would not affect cases unless they had been on preliminary call. It cannot be supported. Under the local practice a case does not come up for preliminary call unless counsel "issues" a "trial order". If counsel for the defendant does not do so, and the burden of prosecuting an action is not on the defendant, the [8] Ordnance's reasons in seeking a vacation of the judgment of dismissal were set out in its petition for rehearing. These reasons are that Civil Action No. 10,850 was not concluded until August 19, 1954, when the time for filing a petition for certiorari to the Supreme Court expired; that that suit by Jacquard, constituting a substantial drain on Ordnance's resources, made prosecution of the present suit impractical; that the incapacitating illness of Ordnance's president added to the difficulties of diligent prosecution; that the attorney for Ordnance had to curtail his activities during the period 1952-56 because of serious illnesses and death in his immediate family.

[9] See [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,933], 21 F. R. D. 575 (E. D. Pa. 1958).

[10] It is not clear from the complaint when or where the acts complained of, alleged to be a conspiracy to monopolize trade, occurred. Other acts seem to be charged against Jacquard alone. Three causes of action are set out in the complaint, and none too clearly. Some of the events complained of are alleged to have occurred at or about the time of the Knitting & Allied Crafts Exposition in New York State on April 24, 1950, subsequent to the filing of the complaint at Civil Action No. 10,850 on April 19, 1950. Ordnance has not stated in its pleadings, in its brief, or in oral argument the applicable statutes of limitations which may have been those of States; some of the acts complained of certainly occurred prior to the Act of July 7, 1955, 69 Stat. 283, effective January 7, 1956, 15 U. S. C. A. § 15b. In view of the lack of more thorough explication by Ordnance as to the applicable statute or statutes of limitations we cannot state with positiveness whether or not Ordnance's actions are now barred.

[11] We cannot say that the Two-Year Rule has not been vigorously applied. In the two years immediately following its effective date 115 cases were dismissed under it.

[12] See note 4, supra.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

plaintiff could forever avoid a calendar call and thus avoid the impact of the Two-Year Rule by simply not issuing the "trial order" referred to.

Stated in its simplest terms the Two-Year Rule provides that if no action be taken in a suit for two consecutive years the Clerk shall "immediately" send notices to the counsel for the parties that unless the court, acting upon an application made within two weeks [13] orders the case restored, it shall stand dismissed. The latter part of the rule simply provides that if the court does not make an order restoring the case, the Clerk shall, acting for the court, enter an order upon the record phrased "Dismissed under the rule" and tax the costs against the plaintiff. Such a dismissal is without prejudice. The making of an application by the plaintiff, such as filing a praecipe or a petition that the action be deemed not dismissed, does not automatically save the suit from dismissal. If no application is made the Clerk, performing a ministerial duty, enters judgment against the plaintiff in the form just referred to. If an application is made to the court within the two weeks period, it then rests within the sound legal discretion of the court to grant the application and restore the case to the docket or to reject the application and refuse restoration.

[Five Year Delay in Prosecuting Action]

The case lay dormant for nearly five and a half years. No action of any kind was taken by Ordnance until after the Clerk's notices were sent on November 8, 1956. The petition for rehearing filed on behalf of Ordnance does not state any sound legally cognizable reason for delay in the prosecution. What is stated appeals to mercy rather than to reason. Jacquard by its affidavits sets out reasons why it believes it would be prejudiced if the case was to be tried. We find these reasons none too convincing. The issue is one which lies within the sound legal discretion of the court below. Cf. Wholesale Supply Co. v. South Chester Tube Co., 20 FRD 310, 313 (E. D. Pa. 1957).

[Delay in Giving Notice]

But there is another issue. Ordnance insists that it was prejudiced because the Clerk did not give notice to its counsel "immediately" upon the expiration of the two year period, as the Two-Year Rule requires, viz., on June 29, 1953, but waited over three years before doing so. This cannot be deemed to be compliance with the rule. We are not unmindful of the fact that the dismissal is without prejudice and we cannot say that Ordnance's claims are now barred by statutes of limitations. But where a suit is stricken from the docket of a court fairness would seem to require adherence to the strict terms of its own rule by the dismissing court. The sending of the notice three years after the expiration of the two year period does not meet the test of immediacy. The rule should be amended and should specify a period in which the notice must be sent.[14] We are of the opinion that it was properly applicable but improperly executed under the circumstances at bar.

[Dismissal—Federal Rule]

We must now discuss the application of Rule 41(b), Fed. R. Civ. Proc., 28 U. S. C. The Court below in its opinion [1958 TRADE CASES ¶68,933], 21 FRD 575 (E. D. Pa. 1958), disagreed with the ruling of Russo v. Sofia Bros., 2 FRD 80 (S. D. N. Y. 1941), and held that Rule 41(b) authorized the dismissal of the suit. In the Russo case Judge Rifkind concluded that Rule 41(b) did not authorize the dismissal of a suit by a preliminary motion addressed to the pleading. In the Russo case a motion to dismiss a suit because the complaint had not stated a cause of action had been granted. When the suit was dismissed permission to amend the complaint had not been requested or granted. When the plaintiff later sought to file an amended complaint which did state a cause of action, Rule 41(b) was raised as a barrier. As we have said the court was of the view that Rule 41(b) was not applicable at the pleading stage. We think that the court in the Russo case was in error, at least insofar as it [13] We assume that the two weeks period commences upon the dispatch of the Clerk's notice. This portion of the rule requires clarification. The date from which the two weeks period commences to run is not pertinent here for Ordnance's praecipe to restore the case was made within 13 days of the dispatch of the notices by the Clerk.

[14] Our statements are not intended to reflect on an overburdened and efficient court or its overburdened and efficient Clerk's office.

held that Rule 41(b) was inapplicable to dismissals for want of prosecution at the pleading stage. Field v. American-West African Line, Inc., 154 F. 2d 652 (2 Cir. 1946); 2 Barron & Holtzoff, Federal Practice § 918 (1950). Rule 41(b) provides that a case may be dismissed "For failure of the plaintiff to prosecute. . . ." There certainly was failure to prosecute here. That failure had lasted for a period of over five years. Whether such failure justified dismissal was within the discretion of the trial court. See, e. g., Russell v. Cunningham, 233 F. 2d 806 (9 Cir. 1956), n. 3. A dismissal under Rule 41 (b) operates as a dismissal on the merits unless the court shall specify otherwise. See the last sentence of the rule. This provision apparently was overlooked by the court below. We hold that the suit at bar must stand dismissed under Rule 41(b) but that the dismissal should not operate as a dismissal on the merits.

We have ruled on the applicability of Rule 41(b) because of the well established doctrine that a judgment appealed from may be affirmed on a valid ground, even if the basis asserted by the court below as the basis of its decision is insufficient or invalid. Parkway Baking Co. v. Freihofer Baking Co., 255 F. 2d 641, 647 (3 Cir. 1958); Lanova Corp. v. National Supply Co., 116 F. 2d 235, 239 (3 Cir. 1941). The court below was correct in its first order dismissing the case at bar for want of prosecution under Rule 41(b). Since the court below was of the view that the case should be dismissed without prejudice and thought that it could not do so under Rule 41(b), and the provision of Rule 41(b) as to adjudication upon the merits can be treated, under the circumstances of the case at bar as the equivalent of a dismissal without prejudice, we can perceive no reason why the judgment of the court below should not be affirmed.

In view of our ruling we see no reason for passing upon the contentions of Jacquard that the issues presented by the case at bar were adjudicated by the judgment of the court below at Civil Action No. 10,850.

[Judgment Affirmed]

Accordingly, the judgment of the court below will be affirmed.

ON PETITION FOR REHEARING

Opinion of the Court

[Pre-Trial Dismissal—Federal Rule]

PER CURIAM [In full text]: Ordnance has filed a petition for rehearing based in part on the application of the so-called "Two Year" Rules of the court below and has filed also an extensive tabulation of cases dismissed by the court below under these rules. We did not affirm the dismissal of Ordnance's action under these rules and it follows that this portion of the petition for rehearing is irrelevant.

The real thrust of the petition for rehearing is directed to language in the opinion in Societe Internationale v. Rogers, 357 U. S. 197, 206-208 (1958). We had this decision before us at the time our opinion was handed down but we considered that it was not relevant to the issues presented. However, since Ordnance has laid so much emphasis upon this decision in its petition for rehearing we think it desirable to discuss the decision in this opinion.

In our prior opinion, as appears, we expressed our disagreement with the ruling in Russo v. Sofia Bros., 2 F. R. D. 80 (S. D. N. Y. 1941), which concluded that Rule 41(b), Fed. R. Civ. Proc., 28 U. S. C., did not authorize the dismissal of a suit by a preliminary motion addressed to the sufficiency of the pleading.

[Trials]

In Societe Internationale v. Rogers, the Supreme Court held that Rule 41(b) could not serve as the basis for dismissal of an action when documents sought by the plaintiff had not been produced, and that the power of a court to dismiss a complaint because of non-compliance with a production order depended exclusively upon Rule 37. The Supreme Court, by Mr. Justice Harlan, after quoting the first sentence of Rule 41 (b), said inter alia,

> "There is no need to resort to Rule 41(b) which appears in that part of the Rules concerned with trials and which lacks . . . specific references to discovery."

Ordnance lays much emphasis on the use of the word "trials" italicized by the Supreme Court, and in effect contends that the provisions of Rule 41(b) authorize dismissal only at trial. We cannot agree. The substance of the Supreme Court's ruling in © 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Societe Internationale was that Rule 41(b) was not available to dismiss an action when documents were not produced pursuant to a demand made under Rule 34.

We are of the view that Chapter VI of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, relating to "Trials", is an appropriate and natural heading for a rule authorizing a motion by a defendant designed to bring a case to trial or cause its dismissal for want of prosecution, and if a plaintiff fails to prosecute, the defendant is entitled to move under the first sentence of Rule 41(b) to dismiss the action "For failure of the plaintiff to prosecute . . .", as Jacquard did here. See Burns Mortgage Co. v. Stoudt, 2 F. R. D. 219, 220 (E. D. Pa. 1942).

We know of no other provision of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure which authorizes dismissal for failure to prosecute. If the provisions of Rule 41(b) quoted above are not applicable, the only remedy available to a defendant to cause the dismissal of an action for want of prosecution would be the local rules of the respective United States district courts, such as the "Two Year" Rule of 1952 of the court below. We cannot believe that this was the result intended by the framers of the Civil Rules.

[Rehearing Denied]

For these reasons as well as for those stated in our principal opinion we conclude that we have applied correctly the provisions of Rule 41(b) in the case at bar. Accordingly the petition for rehearing will be denied.

[¶ 69,421] United States v. The Gemex Corporation.

In the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey. Civil Action No. 1350-58. Filed July 31, 1959.

Case No. 1426 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Price Fixing—Fixing Prices for Sale of Watchbands.—A manufacturer of watchbands was prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any agreement with any wholesaler to fix prices for the sale of watchbands to third persons. The decree also enjoined the manufacturer from requiring any wholesaler to sell watchbands at list price or at any other specific price level.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2011.181, 2011.218.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Price Fixing—Investigations and Penalties—Policing Adherence to Price Fixing Agreements.—A manufacturer of watchbands was prohibited from collecting, publishing, or disseminating information regarding price cutting or price deviation by wholesalers or retailers. The decree also enjoined the manufacturer from requiring any wholesaler to report to it regarding any such price deviation by retailers or other wholesalers.

See Price Fixing, Vol. 1, ¶ 2011.237.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Exclusive Dealing.—A manufacturer of watchbands was prohibited by a consent decree from selling to its wholesalers on the condition that they refrain from dealing in competitors' products.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.690, 2005.825; Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8421.

For the plaintiff: Robert A. Bicks, W. D. Kilgore, Jr., Raymond M. Carlson, Charles L. Beckler, Charles F. B. McAleer, Charles H. McEnerney, Jr., and John L. Wilson, Department of Justice.

For the defendant: Manning, Hollinger & Shea, New York, N. Y., by Bruce A. Hecker; and Platoff, Platoff & Heftler, Union City, N. J., by Robert G. Platoff.

Final Judgment

[Consent Decree]

REYNIER J. WORTENDYKE, JR., District Judge [In full text]: The plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on December 16, 1958; the defendant, the Gemex Corporation, having appeared and filed its answer to the complaint denying the substantive allegations thereof; and the plaintiff and the defendant, by their attorneys, having severally consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and without admission by either of them in respect to any such issue;

Now, Therefore, before any testimony or evidence has been taken herein, and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon consent of the parties hereto, it is hereby

Ordered, adjudged and decreed as follows:

I

[Jurisdiction]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter hereof and of the parties hereto. The complaint states a claim against the defendant, under which relief may be granted under Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies" commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Watchbands" means attachments, whether of precious or non-precious metals, cord, fabric, leather or other materials, or combinations thereof, which are used to hold watches to the wrist;

(B) "Wholesaler" means a person who purchases watchbands from a manufacturer for resale to retailers;

(C) "Retailer" means a person who purchases watchbands from a wholesaler for resale to ultimate consumers;

(D) "Person" means any individual, partnership, firm, association, corporation or other business or legal entity;

(E) "Subsidiary" means any existing or future corporation whose stock is, directly or indirectly, wholly owned by defendant.

III

[Applicability]

The provisions of this Final Judgment shall apply to the defendant and to each of its subsidiaries, successors, assigns, officers, directors, employees and agents, and to those persons in active concert or participation with the defendant who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

IV

[Price Fixing—Exclusive Dealing]

Defendant is enjoined and restrained from directly or indirectly:

(A) Entering into, adhering to, maintaining, enforcing or claiming any rights under any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program, with any wholesaler to fix, establish, maintain, stabilize or adhere to prices for the sale of watch bands to third persons;

(B) Collecting, publishing or disseminating information regarding, or suggesting, soliciting or requiring that any wholesaler report to defendant, any price cutting or price deviation by any wholesaler or retailer;

(C) Requiring any wholesaler to sell any watchbands at list price or at any other specific price level;

(D) Selling or offering, or attempting to sell, any watchbands on the condition, agreement or understanding that any wholesaler shall not deal in watchbands manufactured by any person other than the defendant.

V

[Enforcement and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to the defendant made to its principal office, be permitted, subject to any legally recognized privilege:

(A) Access, during the office hours of the defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of the defendant which relate to any matters contained in this Final Judgment;

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

(B) Subject to the reasonable convenience of the defendant and without restraint or interference from the defendant, to interview officers or employees of the defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters.

Upon written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, the defendant shall submit such reports in writing with respect to the matters contained in this Final Judgment as may from time to time be necessary to the enforcement of this Final Judgment.

No information obtained by the means permitted in this Section V shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Executive Branch of the plaintiff except in the course of legal proceedings in which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

VI

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained by this Court for the purpose of enabling either of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the amendment or modification of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof.

[¶ 69,422] G. E. M. Sundries Company, Inc. v. Johnson & Johnson, Inc.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. No. 16,396. Dated July 31, 1959.

Appeal from the Hawaii Supreme Court. STAINBACK, Justice.

Hawaii Fair Trade Act

Fair Trade—Constitutionality of Hawaii Fair Trade Act—Finality of Territorial Supreme Court's Decision—Impending Statehood—Prospective Mootness of Appeal.—A ruling of the Hawaii Supreme Court sustaining the constitutionality of the Hawaii Fair Trade Act constituted a final decision which was appealable to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit under 28 United States Code Section 1293. A fair trader, seeking a dismissal of the appeal, contended that (1) the judgment was not final because local procedure permitted the retailer, on remand, to file an answer and interpose defenses other than the invalidity of the Act, and (2) the appeal, as to contentions based upon Hawaii's status as a territory, would become moot upon Hawaii's admission as a state. As to the finality of the judgment, the retailer conceded that it had no defense other than the Act's invalidity. Thus, under the test that a decision is final if the rights of the parties have been so determined that nothing remains for the trial court to do but perform mechanical acts, the judgment was final. As to the second contention, there is no rule permitting dismissal for prospective mootness. Also, it was at least arguable that the validity of the territorial laws would not be automatically changed by statehood, inasmuch as Section 15 of the Hawaiian Statehood Act provides that "All Territorial laws in force in the Territory of Hawaii at the time of its admission into the Union shall continue in force. . . ."

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3035, 3040, 3080.13, 3085.13, 3130, 3258, 3420.

For the appellant: Heen, Kai & Dodge, and R. G. Dodge, Honolulu, Hawaii, and Marvin G. Burns, Beverly Hills, Cal.

For the appellee: Robertson, Castle & Anthony, and Frank D. Padgett, Honolulu, Hawaii.

ON MOTION TO DISMISS APPEAL

[Hawaii Fair Trade Act—Constitutionality]

POPE, Circuit Judge [In full text]: Appellee brought this action in the Circuit Court of the First Circuit, Territory of Hawaii, to enjoin the appellant from selling products produced by appellee and bearing the registered trade name of Johnson & Johnson at less than appellee's specified minimum fair trade price as authorized by the Hawaii Fair Trade Act (Revised Laws of Hawaii, 1955, c. 205).[1] All the facts alleged in the complaint were stipulated or found by the court to be true.

The only defense interposed by the appellant was its contention that the Hawaiian Fair Trade Act was invalid.[1a] Sustaining this defense of invalidity the trial court allowed a motion to dismiss and dismissed the complaint.

Upon appeal to the Supreme Court of Hawaii that court reversed the judgment of the Circuit Court, rejecting in toto all of the appellant's contentions, and holding the Fair Trade Act in question fully valid, saying in its opinion that "the Territory has just as much right and power to enact a Fair Trade Act as Illinois or New York or any of the other States whose Fair Trade Acts have been sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States."[2] Appellant has appealed to this court from that Supreme Court reversal.

[Jurisdiction]

Any jurisdiction of this court is necessarily based upon § 1293 of Title 28 U. S. C. which provides:

> "§ 1293. Final decisions of Puerto Rico and Hawaii Supreme Courts—The courts of appeals for the First and Ninth Circuits shall have jurisdiction of appeals from all final decisions of the supreme courts of Puerto Rico and Hawaii, respectively in all cases involving the Constitution, laws or treaties of the United States or any authority exercised thereunder, in all habeas corpus proceedings, and in all other civil cases where the value in controversy exceeds $5,000, exclusive of interest and costs."

[Finality of Judgment]

Appellee has moved to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the judgment of the Supreme Court of Hawaii was not final. Says appellee:

> "Appellant had not even filed an answer and no trial of the case had been held. Thus, the order of the Supreme Court of Hawaii was neither in form nor in fact a final disposition of the case. Accordingly, the order appealed from does not fall within the scope of 28 U. S. C. § 1293 and the appeal must be dismissed. (cases cited) This rule is applicable whether the order of reversal expressly commands further proceedings or whether the necessity for further proceedings merely appears from the record in the case."

---

[1] The Act contains the following provisions: "Unfair competition may be actionable. Wilfully and knowingly advertising, offering for sale or selling any commodity at less than the price stipulated in any contract entered into pursuant to the provisions of this chapter, whether the person so advertising, offering for sale or selling is or is not a party to such contract, is unfair competition and is actionable at the suit of any person damaged thereby."

[1a] The contentions made in this respect were summarized by the Supreme Court of Hawaii as follows: "(2) the Hawaii Fair Trade Act was illegal at the time of its enactment for the reason that it was in violation of Sections 1 and 3 of the Sherman Act; (3) assuming the power of the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to enact such a fair-trade act, following the amendment to § 1 of the Sherman Act by the Miller-Tydings Act no such reenactment has been accomplished; (4) the Hawaii Fair Trade Act, and more particularly the so-called 'nonsigner' provision thereof, is unconstitutional for the reason that the same is a price-fixing statute and the legislature is without power to fix prices at which commodities may be sold unless the business or property involved is affected with a public interest; (5) assuming the power of the legislature to fix prices and its authority to delegate that power, any such delegation to be valid must provide a primary standard or general rule to be followed in discharging the delegated power, and the Hawaii Fair Trade Act provides no such standard or rule; (6) the Hawaii Fair Trade Act is unconstitutional because it interferes with the right of the seller and the purchaser to freely contract and agree upon a price of their choice, and that this right to contract is a property right protected by the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States; (7) the Hawaii Fair Trade Act is void as an invalid exercise of a police power, being an attempt to use that power for a private and not a public purpose; (8) the Hawaii Fair Trade Act is invalid and inoperative in so far as it purports to authorize the enforcement of minimum fair-trade resale prices against any person who is not a party to the contract by which the minimum resale prices were established."

[2] Also from the opinion: "We deem it unnecessary to review at length the many decisions upholding the constitutionality of Fair Trade Acts as to nonsigners and those holding to the contrary."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Test of Finality]

It is true that the judgment of the Hawaii Supreme Court did not, on its face, end the litigation. Local procedure would permit appellant, on remand, to file an answer and interpose some other defense. But appellant has no other defense to interpose. It expressly so concedes here, and appellee does not assert otherwise. Under these circumstances this court has held that the test of whether such a decision is final is whether by it the rights of the parties have been so determined that nothing remains for the trial court but to perform mechanical acts. The question is, whether any further proceedings could be had "pertaining to the merits of the controversy", Hawaiian Pineapple Co. v. Saito, 9 cir., 270 F. 749, 750, or whether there remained any occasion for "exercise of any judicial function", De Fries v. Scott, 9 cir., 268 F. 952, 953.

The test of finality to be applied here is the same as that employed by the Supreme Court of the United States in determining when judgments of state supreme courts are final and hence reviewable there. In Pope v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 345 U. S. 379, that court dealt with a situation similar to the one before us. Said the court (p. 382):

> "The finality problem arises in this case because the judgment of the Georgia Supreme Court did not, on its face, end the litigation. Both parties agree that Georgia procedure would permit petitioner to return to the Superior Court of Ben Hill County and interpose some other defense to respondent's suit for an injunction. But petitioner has no other defense to interpose. He has been both explicit and free with his concession that his case rests upon his federal claim and nothing more. If the court below decided that claim correctly, then nothing remains to be done but the mechanical entry of judgment by the trial court. Thus, as the case comes to us, the federal question is the the controlling question; 'there is nothing more to be decided.' Under these particular circumstances, we have jurisdiction over the cause. Richfield Oil Corp. v. State Board, 329 U. S. 69 (1946). . . ."

[Judgment Final]

Here, as in the case of Clark v. Williard, 292 U. S. 112, 118, there is "nothing more to be decided." The judgment was "an effective determination of the litigation" and "the final word of a final court." Market Street R. Co. v. Comm'n, 324 U. S. 548, 551. We hold that the judgment of the Supreme Court of Hawaii was final.

[Mootness]

Some, though not all, of the appellant's contentions as to invalidity of the Hawaii Fair Trade Act are based upon Hawaii's status as a territory. With respect to these, appellee argues that the appeal is bound to become moot on admission of Hawaii as a state. Hence, it argues, the appeal should be dismissed.

We must reject this contention for three reasons: First, it does not affect all contentions made by appellant, (see, e. g., items (5), (6), (7) and (8) in footnote 1a, supra); second, we know of no rule permitting dismissal for prospective mootness, and third, it is at least arguable that the status of territorial laws would not automatically be changed as to their validity, by statehood.[3]

[Motion Denied]

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

[¶ 69,423] World Publishing Co. v. E. J. Korvette, Inc.

In the New York Supreme Court, New York County, Special Term, Part 1. 141 N. Y. L. J., No. 93, page 13. Dated May 14, 1959.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Sales Which May Be Excepted from Price Restriction—Exemptions as Bar to Enforcement Action—Absence of Discrimination.—A fair trader did not remove itself from the protection of the New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act by virtue of the fact that his fair trade agreements exempted retailers' (1) sales to certain organizations,

[3] See § 15 of the Hawaiian Statehood Act, Public Law 86-3, 86th Congress, March 18, 1959: "All Territorial laws in force in the Territory of Hawaii at the time of its admission into the Union shall continue in force in the State of Hawaii. . . ." (Italics added)

(2) single copy sales for promotional purposes to certain officials, (3) single sales, to a consumer, of fifty or more copies, (4) sales to his employees, or (5) sales to recognized retailers for resale. It was contended that the exemption provision violated the statute, and that the fair trade agreement was therefore invalid. Those exemptions, however, applied to all retailers equally and did not create or sanction any discrimination between them.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3220, 3226, 3230.34, 3232.34, 3420.

[Exemptions in Fair Trade Agreement]

GOLD, Justice [In full text]: Defendant moves for a dismissal of the complaint for insufficiency. The action is brought in enforcement of the Feld-Crawford Act. Plaintiff's fair trade agreement contains the following provision:

"2. Nothing in this agreement is intended to apply to the Retailer in making: (a) sales to governmental agencies, educational charitable or religious institutions or organizations, or school, college, church, public or institutional libraries; or (b) single copy sales for promotional purposes only to teachers or administrative officials attached to any accredited public or private educational institution; or (c) the single sale to a consumer of fifty or more copies; or (d) sales for personal use to his employees; or (e) sales to recognized retailers for resale."

Defendant contends that the quoted provision is in violation of section 369a of the General Business Law and the fair trade agreement is therefore invalid. The exemptions contained therein apply to all retailers equally and the minimum retail prices fixed by the plaintiff therefore apply equally to all retailers. The plaintiff does not remove itself from the protection of the statute by virtue of such exemptions since they do not create or sanction any discrimination as between retailers. The motion is denied.

[¶ 69,424] Lythe v. Thrifttown, U. S. A.

In the New York Supreme Court, Bronx County, Special Term, Part 1. 142 N. Y. L. J., No. 22, page 6. Dated July 30, 1959.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Preliminary Injunction—Mutual Charges of Fair Trade Violations—Absence of Irreparable Injury.—A seller of drugs and pharmaceuticals was denied a preliminary injunction to restrain another seller of those products from selling below manufacturers' fair trade prices where each of the parties alleged that the other had made sales in violation of the New York Fair Trade Act. In the absence of any showing of irreparable injury, such as a loss of sales and customers, issuance of a temporary restraining order would be equivalent to condemning the acts of the defendant while condoning those same acts committed by the plaintiff.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3362.34, 3452.34.

[Fair Trade Action]

CARNEY, Justice [In full text]: This is a motion for an injunction pendente lite to restrain the defendants from directly or indirectly selling or offering to sell or advertise for sale any commodities produced or distributed by manufacturers who have entered into fair trade agreements. Unless the plaintiffs show a clear-cut right to such relief which would be tantamount to a final judgment, a temporary injunction should not issue. Both parties are engaged in selling various drugs and pharmaceuticals. Each of the parties hereto alleges sales made by the other in violation of the Fair Trade Laws. In the absence of any showing of irreparable injury such as loss of sales and customers, to issue a temporary restraining order under the circumstances presented herein would be equivalent to condemning the acts of the defendants while condoning those same acts committed by the plaintiffs. The motion is denied in all respects.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[¶ 69,425] Olin Mathieson Chemical Corporation v. Lindemann Pharmacy, Inc.

In the New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division, First Judicial Department. 141 N. Y. L. J., No. 121, page 8. Dated June 24, 1959.

Appeal from the New York Supreme Court, New York County, Special Term, Part I. KLEIN, Justice.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Enforcement—Contempt—Willful Disobedience of Injunctive Order—Fine—Attorney's Fee.—A defendant who permitted its employees to make four separate sales of a plaintiff's fair traded products below fair trade prices, within a few days after a trial court had warned it against "flouting" the court's injunctive order prohibiting such sales, was found guilty of contempt and fined $250. A further sum of $250 was assessed against the defendant as a reasonable attorney's fee in connection with the appeal from the trial court's order denying the plaintiff's application to hold the defendant in contempt. The reviewing court, disagreeing with the trial court's ruling and reversing on the law and the facts, held that the series of incidents described in the moving papers indicated a willful and deliberate flouting of the trial court's order, after the earlier warning.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3380.34.

For the plaintiff: Cravath, Swaine & Moore, New York, N. Y.

For the defendant: Nathan Finkelstein, New York, N. Y.

Reversing an Order of the New York Supreme Court, New York County, Special Term, Part I, 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,202.

[Fair Trade Action—Contempt]

BREITEL, Justice [In full text]: Order of December 18, 1958, unanimously reversed, on the law and on the facts, with $20 costs and disbursements to plaintiff-appellant, and the motion to punish defendant-respondent for contempt is granted, and the defendant-respondent is found guilty of contempt and fined the sum of $250. A further sum of $250 is assessed against defendant-respondent as a reasonable attorneys' fee in connection with the appeal from the order of December 18, 1958. We have two appeals from the denial of two separate motions to punish defendant-respondent for contempt for failure to obey an injunction order issued pursuant to section 369-a of the General Business Law. The order of August 14, 1958, denied the first application to hold defendant-respondent in contempt. In so doing, Special Term said

> "* * * defendant is warned that it must not flout the order of this Court * * *."

We have held that the decision of Special Term with respect to the order of August 14, 1958, was an appropriate exercise of discretion in the circumstances of this case and it will not be disturbed. Despite this admonition and within a few days after the publication of the order aforesaid, defendant-respondent permitted its employees to make four separate sales of the plaintiff-appellant's products at prices less than the minimum fair trade price. Defendant-respondent admits one sale but ascribes it to an "honest mistake" on the part of its clerk. Special Term in its memorandum decision [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,202] on which the order of December 18, 1958, was based said

> "* * * [t]here is no proof * * * that the defendant willfully disobeyed the injunctive order * * *."

With this disposition we do not agree. The series of incidents described in the moving papers in support of the second application indicate a willful and deliberate flouting of the court's order after the previous warning contained in the order of August 14, 1958. Settle order on notice.

[¶ 69,426] Barclay Pharmacy, Inc. v. Par Specialties, Inc.

In the New York Supreme Court, New York County, Special Term, Part I. 141 N. Y. L. J., No. 108, page 13. Dated June 4, 1959.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices by Retailer—Temporary Injunction—Defenses—Price Violation by Enforcing Party.—A retailer which denied selling below fair trade prices was granted a temporary injunction against another retailer which did not deny making such offending sales. In granting the injunction, the court cited Librandi v. Berner's Pharmacy, Inc., 1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,966, a case in which it was held that a defendant could not attempt to justify its illegal acts by alleging that the plaintiffs were committing the same acts. In the instant case, the court also noted that a retailer's right to maintain a fair trade enforcement action against another retailer was well established.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3330.34, 3452.34.

[Fair Trade Action]

SPECTOR, Justice [In full text]: Plaintiff moves for temporary injunction in enforcement of the Feld-Crawford Act. The offending sales by the defendant are not denied. It is well established that suits may be maintained in enforcement of the act by retailer against retailer and no good reason appears or is sufficiently established to deny relief in the circumstances here. Plaintiff denies any claimed offending sales by it (see Librandi v. Berner's Pharmacy, Inc., [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,966], N. Y. L. J., January 25, 1955, Dineen, J., Special Term, Part III). The motion is granted. Bond is fixed in the sum of $250. Settle order.

[¶ 69,427] Crown Village Chemists, Inc. v. Dobin.

In the New York Supreme Court, Nassau County. 142 N. Y. L. J., No. 21, page 8. Dated July 29, 1959.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Defenses—Enforcement Activity or Policy—Failure to Notice Case for Trial as Basis for Vacating Temporary Injunction.—A plaintiff's failure to "notice" a fair trade action for trial for more than a year after the issuance of a temporary injunction restraining a defendant from selling below fair trade prices was insufficient to warrant a dismissal of the complaint for lack of prosecution or a vacatur of the injunction. It was established, on the motion for the temporary injunction, that there was merit to the action. Also, the court was satisfied that the defendant had acquiesced in the plaintiff's dilatory conduct and had not been injured by the delay. However, the plaintiff was directed to notice the case for trial at the next term of court.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3366.34, 3440.34.

For a prior opinion of the New York Supreme Court, Nassau County, see 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 68,947.

[Fair Trade Action—Delay]

PITTONI, Justice [In full text]: Motion (1) to dismiss the complaint for lack of prosecution, and (2) for a vacatur of the order (March 3, 1958) restraining the defendants from selling at retail certain products below the minimum price fixed by the producers, owners, and distributors of those products pursuant to the provisions of the Fair Trade Law. It appears that this cause has not been noticed for trial, and no legal step in the prosecution of the action has taken place since the joinder of issue on March 26, 1958. The movant defendants contend that they have been prejudiced in the delay in the trial because other stores have been selling the products below the established price. In support of that contention affidavits are submitted to show purchases at Farmers' Markets located in Amityville. Farmingdale and Bay Shore. The court is satisfied that the defendants not only acquiesced in the plaintiff's dilatory conduct, but they have not suffered any injury by the delay. Merit to the action was established on the motion for a temporary injunction. Accordingly, the motion is denied in its entirety. The plaintiff is directed however to serve and file a note of issue for the October, 1959, term. Settle order on notice.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[¶ 69,428] Dickinson, Inc., and Dickinson Operating Company, Inc. v. The Kansas City Star Company and Emil A. Sees.

In the United States District Court for the Western District of Missouri, Western Division. No. 12134. Filed June 3, 1959.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Government Judgment as Prima Facie Evidence in Private Action—"Evidentiary" and "Tolling" Provisions of Clayton Act, Sections 5(a) and (b), Complementary to Each Other.—Plaintiffs who commenced a treble damage action approximately one year and five months after the termination of a criminal antitrust action against the defendants, but less than one year after the termination of a civil action which the Government had brought simultaneously with the bringing of the criminal action, were permitted, under Section 5(a) of the Clayton Act, to use the judgment entered in the criminal action as prima facie evidence of their monopolization charges against the defendants. It was not contended that the plaintiffs' action was barred by the statute of limitations, inasmuch as the running of the limitations period, under Section 5(b), had been tolled or suspended; instead, the defendants contended only that the plaintiffs' action had been brought too late to rely upon the judgment entered in the criminal action because more than one year had passed since the termination of that action. The court held, however, that the plaintiffs were not required to bring their action within one year after the termination of the Government's criminal action in order to take advantage of the evidentiary provision of Section 5(a).

When both of the Government actions were commenced, the statute of limitations applicable to the plaintiffs' right to bring the action was concurrently "suspended during the pendency" of both such actions "and for one year thereafter." It is a rule in the law of the limitations of actions that when there are two or more "coexisting disabilities" in the same person when his right of action accrues, he is not obliged to act until the last is removed. Though that rule speaks of disabilities, the court considered it logical to rationalize it to the "privileges" granted by Section 5(b). Section 5(a), the evidentiary provision, is complementary to the application of the tolling provision of Section 5(b). The court noted that the defendants' argument would have been logical only if the Government's actions had been successively brought.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.275, 9012.

For the plaintiffs: Dietrich, Tyler, Davis, Burrell & Dicus, Kansas City, Mo.

For the defendants: Watson, Ess, Marshall & Enggas, Kansas City, Mo.

Memorandum and Order on Motion to Strike

[Treble Damage Action]

RIDGE, District Judge [In full text]: The United States, on January 7, 1950, simultaneously commenced a criminal and a civil action against defendants for violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. (15 U. S. C. A. 2.) The former resulted in verdicts of guilty against both defendants [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,601] and remained "pending" on the docket of this Court until June 17, 1957. The civil action was terminated by a consent decree [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,857] and was "pending" until November 15, 1957. The instant private action, seeking treble damages from defendants because of impact on their businesses of the monopoly adjudicated in the above Government actions, was commenced November 13, 1958; i.e. approximately one (1) year and five (5) months after the termination of the criminal action, supra, and within one (1) year after termination of the above-mentioned civil action.

[Government Decree as Prima Facie Evidence]

In their complaint, plaintiffs plead that the judgment in the Government criminal suit against defendants constitutes prima facie evidence of the charges made against defendants in the instant complaint. Defendants have filed motion to strike such allegations from the complaint, contending that plaintiffs have filed the instant action too late to rely upon the Government criminal suit as prima facie evidence under the provisions of Section 5 of the Clayton Act, as amended (15 U. S. C. A. § 16), and that plaintiffs must rely solely upon the pendency of the civil suit filed by the Government against defendants, if plaintiffs are to maintain this action; hence defendants assert that the civil suit being terminated by a consent decree, the same is not available to plaintiffs as prima facie evidence under Section 5(a), supra, and the above mentioned allegation should be stricken from the complaint.

["Concurrent Disabilities"]

The parties have extensively briefed the above proposition. It does not seem necessary for the Court to follow them in their labyrinthine arguments, nor sound the legislative history of Section 5, supra, as they have done, so as to be able to rule the instant motion. The rule of "concurrent disabilities" applicable to statutes of limitation generally, when rationalized with the Congressional objective stated in Section 5 of the Clayton Act, supra, seemingly provides an answer to that matter.

> "§ 5 reflect(s) a purpose to minimize the burdens of litigation for injured private suitors by making available to them all matters previously established by the Government in antitrust actions. * * * The intended application and extent of such evidentiary benefits is not revealed by legislative materials, except that they should follow equally from prior criminal prosecutions and equity proceedings by the Government." Emich Motors Corp., et al. v. General Motors Corp., et al. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,778], 340 U. S. 558, 568 (1951).

That being so, then the instant matter seemingly should be ruled by resort to recognized principles ancient in law of limitation of actions.

[Tolling Statute of Limitations]

As above stated, the instant action was commenced November 13, 1958. But for the tolling provisions of Section 5(b) of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A. 16(b)) the 4-year limitation for the bringing of this action, as contained in Section 4(b) of such Act, would be applicable thereto. (15 U. S. C. A. 15(b).) Because of the tolling provision, supra, plaintiffs' right to bring this action remained in repose until November 15, 1958, i.e. until one (1) year after the termination of Civil Action No. 7989, (W. D. Mo.) [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,857], instituted by the Government against these defendants.

Notwithstanding the fact that Criminal Action No. 18444, (W. D. Mo.) commenced against defendants was terminated on June 17, 1957, the plaintiffs were not required to bring this action within one (1) year thereafter so as to position themselves to take advantage of the "salutary legislation" enacted by the Congress in Section 5(a) of the Clayton Act. (15 U. S. C. A. 16(a)).

When both the above Government actions were commenced, the statute of limitations applicable to plaintiffs' right to bring this action was concurrently "suspended during the pendency" of both such actions "and for one year thereafter." (15 U. S. C. A. 16(a)).

> "It is an acknowledged rule that when there are two or more coexisting disabilities in the same person when his right of action accrues, he is not obliged to act until the last is removed. This is the rule under the Statute of Limitation." Sims v. Everhardt, 102 U. S. 300, 310 (1880).

Though such rule speaks of "disabilities" we think it logical to rationalize it to the "privilege", such as granted by the Congress to ptivate plaintiffs by Section 5(b) of the Clayton Act. Section 5(a) of said Act is complementary to the application of Section 5(b) thereof. Sun Theatre Corp. v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,722], 213 F. (2d) 284 (7 Cir. 1954).

At the time of the original enactment of Section 5 of the Clayton Act, supra, and the amendment made thereto on July 7, 1955, the aforesaid rule of coexisting disabilities was well grounded in the law. 54 C. J. S., p. 255, § 219; 34 Am. Jur., p. 157, § 195. When Congress enacted the evidentiary and tolling provisions of Section 5, supra, it is manifest that they made the provisions thereof applicable to both criminal and civil actions brought by the Government. The only assumption to be made therefrom is that the Congress knew that in some instances both such types of action would be commenced simultaneously by the Government—one to punish for past violations of the Anti-Trust Laws and the other to prevent future violations in respect to an identical plan or scheme of violation. There is no legislative history of Section 4 or 5 of the Clayton Act from which it may be inferred that the Congress intended the evidentiary or tolling provisions in question to be made applicable only to the first action terminated, where they were concurrently so brought.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

["Successive Disabilities"]

In the law of Limitation of Action, and seemingly within the ambit of Section 5, supra, defendants' reasoning that plaintiffs may not take advantage of the "prima facie" effect of the judgment in the criminal case, because it was terminated first, would only be logical if the two actions commenced by the Government were successively brought. The rule is, that "successive disabilities may not be tacked to one another so as to bring a party within an exception to the statute of limitations." 54 C. J. S. § 219, p. 254. It is the "tacking" of one limitation to another that would create the intolerable condition that defendants argue in the instant case. No such condition here exists, because the beneficent provisions of Section 5 of the Clayton Act concurrently accrued to plaintiffs. Such must be the premise of the admission of defendants when they assert, we "do not contend that plaintiffs' cause or causes of action, if any, are barred by the statute of limitations and accordingly have not moved to dismiss the complaint." (P. 2, suggestions in support of motion to strike.) If the tolling provisions of Section 5, supra, prevented the statute of limitations from running against plaintiffs' claim, then the evidentiary provisions of said statute must be held to be complementary thereto during the effective period of said section. Manifestly, that is the only intent of the Congress expressed in said section.

[Motion Overruled]

For the reasons aforesaid, defendants' motion to strike should be overruled.

It Is So Ordered.

[¶ 69,429] State of Kansas, ex rel. J. John Marshall, County Attorney of Crawford County v. Consumers Warehouse Market, Inc.

In the Kansas Supreme Court. No. 41,494. Opinion filed August 3, 1959.

Appeal from the Crawford District Court. L. M. Resler, Judge. Reversed.

Kansas Unfair Practices Act

Sales Below Cost—Constitutionality of Kansas Unfair Practices Act—Exemption of Grain and Feed Dealers from Operation of Statute—Severability of Invalid Provision—Entire Statute Unconstitutional.—The Kansas Unfair Practices Act, which prohibited, with certain exceptions, the sale of any merchandise at less than cost, with a specified intent and result, was held unconstitutional and void in its entirety. The statute, by its definition of "sales," defined the class to be regulated as all sellers, both retailers and wholesalers, of "tangible personal property." However, the Act contained a further provision that "The provisions of this act shall not apply to grain and feed dealers." The statute purported to regulate all sellers falling within a broad classification and then arbitrarily exempted grain and feed dealers. Since it did not operate uniformly on all members of the classification created, the Act did not have a "uniform operation throughout the state" as required by Section 17 of Article 2 of the Kansas Constitution. In addition, the statutory exemption of grain and feed dealers from the operation of the Act, thus singling them out as a closed class receiving special privileges, amounted to an arbitrary and unreasonable statutory discrimination having no relation to the expressed purpose of the Act. That discrimination deprived the defendant, a seller of groceries, of the "equal protection of the laws" as guaranteed by Section 1 of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Further, that exemption provision invalidated the entire Act. Although the Act contained a "severability" provision, the invalid portion of the statute was not a separate and independent provision, but was such an integral and inseparable part of the whole scheme and purpose of the law that it could not be severed. Elimination of that objectionable exemption would have changed the scope of the Act by making it applicable to grain and feed dealers, whereas the legislature had expressly declared that they were not to be included.

See Sales Below Cost, Vol. 2, ¶ 7111.18.

For the appellant: H. Gorden Angwin, Pittsburg, Kan., argued the cause (Ben W. Weir, Pittsburg, Kan., was with him on the briefs).

For the appellee: Charles H. Henson, Jr., Assistant Attorney General, argued the cause (John Anderson, Jr., Attorney General, and J. John Marshall, County Attorney, were with him on the briefs).

Syllabus by The Court

[Kansas Unfair Practices Act—Constitutionality]

1. In the exercise of its powers of regulation, a state possesses broad discretion in the matter of classification, but discrimination in a regulatory statute must be based on differences and distinctions that have a reasonable and substantial relation to the purposes of the statute and the subject matter thereof.

2. Where parts of a statute or section thereof can readily be separated, that part which is constitutional may stand, while that which is unconstitutional will be rejected as being without legal efficacy. Where, however, the valid and void parts are not separate and independent of each other, but are so connected in the general scheme and purpose of the statute that they cannot be separated without violence to the evident intent of the legislature, the entire statute must fall.

3. The state brought an action to enjoin defendant business firm from violating the provisions of G. S. 1949, 50-401 to 408, known as the Unfair Practices Act. Defendant demurred to the petition on the ground it failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action for the reason that certain provisions of the Act discriminate against defendant and violate the "equal protection" clause of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and Sec. 17 of Art. 2 of the Constitution of the State of Kansas. The demurrer was overruled and defendant appealed, specifying such ruling as error. The record and statutes in question are examined and considered, and, as fully set forth in the opinion, it is held:

(A) That portion of G. S. 1949, 50-405, which exempts "grain and feed dealers" from the scope and operation of the Act constitutes an unreasonable, arbitrary and fictitious classification having no reasonable and substantial relation to the purposes of the Act and the subject matter thereof, is discriminatory as to defendant, and violates the "equal protection of the laws" clause of Sec. 1 of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and also violates Sec. 17 of Art. 2 of the Constitution of the State of Kansas which requires that "all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation throughout the state."

(B) That portion of G. S. 1949, 50-405, above referred to, is not severable from the remainder of the Act under the provisions of G. S. 1949, 50-407, the result being that the entire Act is unconstitutional and void.

4. A typographical error appearing in the opinion in State v. Consumers Warehouse Market [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,133], 183 Kan. 502, 329 P. 2d 638, is noted and is hereby corrected.

[Opinion]

The opinion of the court was delivered by Price, Justice [In full text]: This case is an action by the State, on the relation of the county attorney of Crawford county, to enjoin defendant business firm, Consumers Warehouse Market, Inc., from violating the provisions of G. S. 1949, 50-401 to 408, known as the Unfair Practices Act.

Defendant appeals from an order overruling its demurrer to the State's petition.

The questions involved are such that the constitutionality of the entire Act is in issue.

[Sales Below Cost Charged]

The action was commenced on April 6, 1956, by the filing of a verified petition which, omitting formal parts and description of real estate, reads:

"Comes now the State of Kansas, on relation of J. John Marshall, County Attorney of Crawford County, Kansas, and for its cause of action against the defendant above named, alleges and states:

"That the said J. John Marshall is the duly elected, qualified and acting County Attorney in and for the County of Crawford, State of Kansas, and as such County Attorney is authorized and empowered to prosecute this action for and on behalf of the people of the State of Kansas; that defendant is a corporation for profit deriving its origin and existence under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Kansas, and as such is authorized to engage in and transact business in said State; that defendant corporation's resident agent for service of process is A. W. Mc Nulty and his correct post office address is 502 East 20th Street, Pittsburg, Crawford County, Kansas.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

"That defendant corporation is engaged in the field of commerce, more particularly a retail outlet operated for the purpose of selling groceries and other food and household commodities to the general public; that the defendant corporation is the owner or lessee of and in fact is in possession of the following described real estate and building located at 2506 North Broadway, R. R. No. 1, Pittsburg, Kansas, being more particularly described as follows, to-wit:

* * *

"That on or about the 25th day of March, 1956, in the County of Crawford, and State of Kansas, defendant corporation above named, by and through its various agents or employees, caused to be published a paid advertisement in the Pittsburg Sun, a daily newspaper published in Pittsburg, Kansas, wherein certain goods and merchandise were advertised and offered for sale at a price less than the minimum charge as provided by G. S. 1949, 50-401; that said advertisement and offering to sell at less than cost as defined in said act was so advertised and offered for sale with the intent of said defendant corporation to unfairly divert trade from competitors in the same general business and was for a purpose of impairing and preventing fair competition and for the purpose of injuring public welfare and as such is unfair competition and contrary to public policy, resulting in an unreasonable restraint of trade and further resulting in substantially lessening competition with a tendency to create a monopoly in its own particular line of commerce; that said advertisement and offer to sell was not such as to be an exemption as defined in G. S. 1949, 50-405.

"Plaintiff further alleges that said advertising, offering for sale or selling of said merchandise is contrary to the form of the statutes made and provided and as such constitutes a common nuisance to the people of the State of Kansas and that said nuisance is now in existence and should be abated.

"That the plaintiff should be allowed a reasonable attorney's fee for the prosecution of this action and the sum of Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00) is a reasonable attorney's fee.

"WHEREFORE, plaintiff prays that an injunction be granted forthwith against the defendant corporation, its agents, servants, employees, successors or assigns, restraining and enjoining them, and each of them from keeping and maintaining a common nuisance as herein alleged in or upon said premises and that said defendant corporation be specifically and perpetually enjoined and restrained from advertising, offering to sell or selling at retail any commodity or item of merchandise at less than cost as defined by G. S. 1949, 50-401, and that the premises above described and the buildings located thereon be adjudged a common nuisance.

"Plaintiff further prays that a temporary injunction be granted at the commencement of this action, without notice, to be in effect until the final determination of this matter or until further order of this Court, and that upon the final adjudication of this matter, the temporary injunction heretofore referred to be made permanent and that the costs of this action, together with a reasonable attorney's fee be allowed the plaintiff and that the same be adjudged a lien upon said real estate and that said real estate be ordered sold to satisfy all such costs and attorney's fees, and such other and further relief as to the Court may seem equitable and just."

We are told that a temporary injunction in accordance with the prayer of the petition was granted on the same day and that it is still in effect.

[Demurrer—Constitutionality of Statute]

For reasons not shown by the record, defendant filed no pleading in response to the petition until January 8, 1959, on which date it filed a demurrer as follows:

"Comes now the Defendant and demurs to the Petition of Plaintiff on the ground that said Petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action for the reason, among others, that the Statutes, G. S. 1949, 50-401 to 50-405, inclusive, on which the action is predicated, are discriminatory to this Defendant and are in conflict with and violate the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and Section 17 of Article 2 of the Constitution of Kansas."

[Demurrer Overruled—Appeal]

This demurrer was overruled on the date it was filed, and defendant has appealed, specifying such ruling as error. The appeal was heard at the regular June session of this court.

Portions of the Act in question, pertinent by virtue of the questions raised, will either be quoted or referred to, and all references are to G. S. 1949.

[Purpose of Statute]

The purpose of the Act—to safeguard the public against the creation of monopolies and to foster and encourage competition by prohibition of unfair practices—is found in 50-402, which reads:

"It is hereby declared that any advertising, offer to sell, or sale of any merchandise, either by retailers or wholesalers, at less than cost as defined in this act, with the intent, of unfairly diverting trade from a competitor or otherwise injuring a competitor, impair and prevent fair competition, injure public welfare, are unfair competition and contrary to public policy and the policy of this act, where the result of such advertising, offer or sale is to tend to deceive any purchaser or prospective purchaser, or to substantially lessen competition or to unreasonably restrain trade, or to tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce."

["Cost"]

50-401 contains definitions of numerous terms and provisions in the Act. "Cost" is generally defined to mean invoice or replacement cost, whichever is lower, less all trade discounts except discounts for cash, plus freight charges, excise taxes, cartage, and an allowance for markup to cover a proportionate part of the cost of doing business fixed at six per cent for retailers and two per cent for wholesalers, absent proof of a lesser cost.

Subsections (f), (g), (h) and (i) of 50-401, read in part:

"(f) The term 'sell at retail,' 'sales at retail,' and 'retail sale' shall mean and include any transfer for a valuable consideration, made in the ordinary course of trade or in the usual prosecution of the seller's business of title to tangible personal property to the purchaser for consumption or use other than resale or further processing or manufacturing. . . .

"(g) The terms 'sell at wholesale,' 'sales at wholesale,' and 'wholesale sales' shall mean and include any transfer for a valuable consideration made in ordinary course of trade or the usual conduct of the seller's business, of title to tangible personal property to the purchaser for purposes of resale or further processing or manufacturing. . . .

"(h) The term 'retailer' shall mean and include every person, partnership, corporation or association engaged in the business of making sales at retail within this state: . . .

"(i) The term 'wholesaler' shall mean and include every person, partnership, corporation, or association engaged in the business of making sales at wholesale within this state: . . ."

[Remedies]

50-403 makes violation of the Act by either a retailer or wholesaler a misdemeanor and provides a penalty for such a violation.

50-404 authorizes proceedings in equity to prevent or restrain violations of the Act.

["Crux" of Lawsuit—Exemption]

50-405 states that the provisions of the Act shall not apply to sales at retail or sales at wholesale in a number of instances such as where merchandise is sold in good-faith clearance sales if advertised, marked and sold as such, or where perishable merchandise must be sold promptly in order to forestall loss, and in other instances not here material. This section contains a further provision which is the real crux of this lawsuit:

"Provided further, The provisions of this act shall not apply to grain and feed dealers."

[Severability Provision]

50-407 reads:

"If any section, sentence, clause or provisions of this act shall for any reason be held invalid or unconstitutional, the validity of the remaining parts hereof shall not be affected thereby."

[Contentions]

Defendant contends the exemption of grain and feed dealers from the provisions of the Act is an unreasonable and arbitrary statutory discrimination and is in violation of the "equal protection of the laws" clause of Sec. 1 of the 14th amendment to the Constitution of the United States; that such exemption of grain and feed dealers violates Sec. 17 of Art. 2 of our own constitution, pertinent portions of which read:

"All laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation throughout the state; and in all cases where a general law can be made applicable, no special law shall be enacted; and whether or not a law enacted is repugnant to this provision of the constitution shall be construed and determined by the courts of the state. . . ."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

and that the exemption in question is not severable under 50-407, above, and therefore the entire Act is unconstitutional and void.

The State, on the other hand, contends the exemption of grain and feed dealers is a reasonable classification; that the Act is a general law operating uniformly on all within the classification created by its terms, and that even though the exemption provision in question is held to be unconstitutional, as contended by defendant, it nevertheless is severable under 50-407, above, and does not affect the validity of the remainder of the Act.

[Prior Cases]

Since its enactment in 1941 only three cases involving the Act have reached this court. In the first two of them (State, ex rel., v. Fleming Co., [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,239], 164 Kan. 723, 192 P. 2d 207, and State, ex rel., v. Commercial Candy Co., [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,358], 166 Kan. 432, 201 P. 2d 1034) it was unnecessary that we determine questions relating to its constitutionality.

State v. Consumers Warehouse Market [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,133], 183 Kan. 502, 329 P. 2d 638, hereafter referred to as the Consumers case, was a criminal prosecution against this defendant firm for alleged violations of the provisions of the Act. The information under which that prosecution was commenced is set out in the opinion of this court. A motion to quash the information on the ground it failed to allege an offense because sections 50-401, 402, 403, 404 and 405 of the Act violated both the federal and state constitutions and amendments thereto, was sustained. The State appealed. In support of the lower court's ruling the defendant's principal contention was that the Act is a price-fixing statute and therefore violates the due process guarantee of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and Sec. 18 of our Bill of Rights. This court held such contention to be without merit and upheld the Act insofar as the due process feature was concerned. Several other challenges to the constitutionality of various provisions of the Act were made, all of which, with one exception, were held to be without merit. That exception was this: It was held that the particular portion of 50-401(e) which reads:

> ". . .; and purchases made by retailers and wholesalers at prices which cannot be justified by prevailing market conditions within this state shall not be used in determining cost to the retailer and cost to the wholesaler."

is so indefinite and uncertain that it is unreasonable and arbitrary, and therefore unconstitutional (see syl. 7 of the opinion). It was further held, however, that such invalid provision was severable and did not affect the remainder of the Act.

(In passing, it should be noted that at the end of line three in the next to the last paragraph of the opinion in the Consumers case, the reference to "50-405(e)" is a typographical error. The reference should have been to 50-401(e), and the same is hereby corrected.)

At this point attention should be called to the fact that in the Consumers case the question of unconstitutionality of the Act because of the exemption of grain and feed dealers from its provisions—was not before this court for decision, and was neither considered nor decided. (State, ex rel., v. Fadely, 180 Kan. 652, syl. 3, 308 P. 2d 537.) In other words, the extent of our holding in that case was that the Act, with the exception of the one provision above noted, was not unconstitutional on any of the grounds urged. Therefore, our decision in that case is not controlling on the question now before us.

["Equal Protection" of the Laws]

The questions in this appeal are whether the exemption of grain and feed dealers from the scope and operation of the Act violates the "equal protection" clause of Sec. 1 of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and violates Sec. 17 of Art. 2 of our own constitution, above, and, if so, is such provision severable from the remainder of the Act.

For reasons hereafter stated, we hold the exemption provision in question violates both of the mentioned constitutional provisions; that it is not severable, and therefore the entire Act is unconstitutional and void.

Under Sec. 1 of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States a state is forbidden to make or enforce any law which shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

[Class to be Regulated]

The purpose of the Act in question, as previously stated, is to prevent the sale—with certain specified exceptions—of merchandise at below cost, either by a retailer or a wholesaler, where such sale or offer to sell is made with the intent and with the result stated in 50-402, above. Also, as previously noted in the quotations from 50-401, above, defining "sales at retail," "sales at wholesale," "retailer" and "wholesaler," the class to be regulated constitutes all sellers at retail and wholesale of tangible personal property. Concededly, this is a broad classification, but, nevertheless, it is that fixed by statute. Grain and feed dealers who sell grain and feed at retail and wholesale of course would be under the Act were it not for the fact they are specifically exempted. This, the defendant contends, amounts to an arbitrary, fictitious and unreasonable statutory discrimination.

We agree.

[Justifying Distinctions]

Concededly, a state has a broad discretion in classification in the exercise of its power of regulation, and the Constitution of the United States does not require that things which are different in fact are to be treated in law as though they were the same, but discrimination in a state regulatory statute must be based on differences that are reasonably related to the purpose of the statute, and the constitutional guaranty of equal protection of the laws is interposed against discriminations that are entirely arbitrary. Distinctions cannot be justified if the discrimination has no reasonable relation to the differences. (The State v. Haun, 61 Kan. 146, 59 Pac. 340, 47 L. R. A. 369; McCulley v. City of Wichita, 151 Kan. 214, 222, 223, syl. 2, 98 P. 2d 192, 127 A. L. R. 312; Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co., 183 U. S. 79, 46 L. ed. 92, 22 S. Ct. 30; Smith v. Cahoon, 283 U. S. 553, 75 L. ed. 1264, 51 S. Ct. 582; Morey v. Doud, 354 U. S. 457, 1 L. ed. 2d 1485, 77 S. Ct. 1344 [1957].) In the last-mentioned case the Supreme Court of the United States had before it an Illinois statute which excepted money orders of the American Express Company from the requirement that any firm selling or issuing money orders in the state must secure a license and submit to state regulation. A competing firm attacked the law on the ground the exception stated in the statute worked a denial of the "equal protection of the laws" clause in the 14th Amendment. In upholding this contention the court said:

> "Taking all of these factors in conjunction—the remote relationship of the statutory classification to the Act's purpose or to business characteristics, and the creation of a closed class by the singling out of the money orders of a named company, with accompanying economic advantages—we hold that the application of the Act to appellees deprives them of equal protection of the laws." (p. 469.)

[Special Privileges]

The Act before us purports to be in part for the protection of the public. None has been pointed out, and we know of no reason why that segment of the public buying grain and feed should not be protected against a monopoly in that line of products. By the same token, should not grain and feed dealers be protected from unfair competition —the same as the retailer or wholesaler of groceries, for example? Insofar as this defendant—a retail firm engaged in selling groceries and other food and household commodities to the general public—is concerned, the Act regulates it, but permits the grain and feed dealer across the street to carry on his business in any manner he sees fit—even to the extent of bringing about the results denounced by the Act.

Taking all factors into consideration, we are of the opinion the statutory exemption of grain and feed dealers from the operation of the Act, thus singling them out as a closed class to receive special privileges, amounts to an arbitrary and unreasonable statutory discrimination having no relation to the expressed purpose of the Act—the practical effect of which deprives defendant of the equal protection of the laws as guaranteed by Sec. 1 of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

[Kansas Constitution]

Does the Act—which we think must be conceded to be a law of a "general nature" —have a "uniform operation throughout the state" as required by Sec. 17 of Art. 2 of our own constitution?

[Classification Created]

Much of what has been said may well apply to this question. The Act defines a class—all retailers and wholesalers of tangible personal property within the state—and purports to regulate all falling within this broad classification. It then, by the proviso in question, arbitrarily exempts "grain and feed dealers." The Act, therefore, does not operate uniformly on all members of the broad classification so created—that is, its operation is not uniform as to the class defined—and therefore may not be said to have a uniform operation throughout the state. In Gustafson v. McPherson County, 88 Kan. 335, 128 Pac. 186, this court considered a statute which authorized the allowance of a sum for hire of an undersheriff in counties having a population of between 18,000 and 25,000, except McPherson county. In declaring the statute bad, it was held:

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

> "Where the subject of an act of the legislature is one of common interest to all members of a group of counties and no difference in situation or circumstance exists justifying difference in treatment and preventing the framing of an applicable general law of uniform operation upon all the members of the group alike, the exclusion of one of the counties from the benefit of the act renders it void." (syl. 1.)

and said:

> "Interpreted by its title, the law is one of a general nature covering all counties of a specified class. It does not, however, have uniform operation upon all the counties of the class throughout the state. McPherson county is excluded, and the exclusion of McPherson county renders the act invalid." (pp. 336, 337.)
>
> ". . . No difference in circumstance or other valid reason existed for difference in regulation. No obstacle existed to the framing of an applicable general law of uniform operation upon all the members of the group alike. Instead of enacting such a law the legislature undertook to dispense special privileges to some of them. In so doing it stepped outside its constitutional province as a lawmaking body and the product of its action lacks the force and quality of a statute." (p. 337.)

(See also Rambo v. Larrabee, 67 Kan. 634, syl. 1, 2 and 5, 73 Pac. 915.)

[Kansas Constitution Violated]

The foregoing is applicable to the matter before us and the statutory exemption in question is held to violate the mentioned provision of our own constitution.

[Severability]

Does the fact the provision exempting grain and feed dealers is held to be bad, invalidate the entire Act, or is such provision severable under 50-407, above, thus leaving the remainder of the Act in full force and effect?

The rule is stated very clearly in the early case of Central Branch U. P. R. Co. v. Atchison, T & S. F. R. Co., 28 Kan. 453, in which it was held:

> "While it is undoubtedly true that a statute may be constitutional in one part, and unconstitutional in another, yet this rule obtains only where the two parts are separate and independent; and where they are so related that the latter is a condition of, a compensation for, or an inducement to, the former, or where it is obvious that the legislature, having respect to opposing rights and interests, would not have enacted one but for the other, then the unconstitutionality of the latter avoids the entire statute." (syl. 1.)

In The State v. Smiley, 65 Kan. 340, 69 Pac. 199, 67 L. R. A. 903, it was said:

> "The general doctrine is that only the invalid parts of a statute are without legal efficacy. This is qualified by the further rule that if the void and valid parts of the statute are so connected with each other in the general scheme of the act that they cannot be separated without violence to the evident intent of the legislature, the whole must fall. These rules are of every-day enforcement in the courts." (p. 247.)

In Voran v. Wright, 129 Kan. 601, 284 Pac. 807, it was held:

> "Where parts of a statute or section thereof can be readily separated, that part which is constitutional may stand while that which is unconstitutional will be rejected." (syl. 6.)

(See also Felten Truck Line v. State Board of Tax Appeals, 183 Kan. 287, at pp. 300, 301, 327 P. 2d 836.)

Tested by the foregoing statements of the rule, the answer to the question is obvious. The invalid portion of the statute is not a separate and independent provision of the Act, but rather is such an integral and inseparable part of the whole scheme and purpose of the law that it may not be severed therefrom and thus leave the remainder in full force and effect. In other words, to eliminate the objectionable exemption would change the scope of the Act and make it applicable to grain and feed dealers, whereas the legislature expressly declared they are not to be included. The question of severability here is readily distinguishable from that in the Consumers case, heretofore referred to. There it was held that a portion of 50-401(e), which was merely one of a series of tests as to what is less than cost, was invalid, but, being severable, its invalidity did not affect the remainder of the Act.

Not so here, and we refer again to the Gustafson case in which, on the question of severability, it was held:

> "The exception of McPherson county is not a separate and independent provision which may be disregarded and leave the remainder of the act effective, since to eliminate the exception would change the scope of the law and make it applicable in territory where the legislature expressly declared it should not operate." (syl. 3.)

and said:

> "The declared purpose of the legislature is that the undersheriffs of McPherson county shall not receive the benefit of the law. This purpose informs the entire act, and the portion concerning McPherson county can not be eliminated without changing the whole scheme of the statute, even to the extent of making it applicable in territory where the legislature expressly said it should not operate." (p. 336.)

[Entire Statute Unconstitutional]

For the reasons stated, we therefore hold that the provision of 50-405, exempting grain and feed dealers from the scope and operation of the Unfair Practices Act, violates the "equal protection of the laws" clause of Sec. 1 of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States; that it violates Sec. 17 of Art. 2 of our own constitution, and, such provision not being severable, the entire Act is unconstitutional and void.

[Judgment Reversed]

The judgment is reversed with directions to sustain the demurrer to the petition.

[¶ 69,430] Blake v. Frick.

In the New York Supreme Court, New York County, Special Term, Part 1. 142 N. Y. L. J., No. 31, page 3. Dated August 12, 1959.

New York Antitrust (Donnelly) Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—New York Antitrust Law—Restraint on Baseball Players—Legality of Uniform Player's Contract—Representative Suit.—A complaint in which two professional baseball players charged that they and all other players in a league were required, as a condition of employment as professional baseball players, to execute a "uniform player contract" that unlawfully restrained and monopolized trade in violation of the New York antitrust laws could not be treated as one stating a representative or "class" action. The existence of a similarity of contract relationships does not, in itself, permit a representative action. Here, the common interest of all the players was found only in the uniform contract and, once it was declared void, their common interest would end. Also, all players of the league would be bound by the remedy selected and the result reached in the case, although they were not before the court. Thus, the two players were not entitled to an injunction restraining the alleged violations as to all players in the league. Such relief could only be granted at the behest of the attorney general and could not be the subject of a separate suit by individual plaintiffs on behalf of others not parties thereto. If the two players seek to have the contracts declared illegal, they should separately state the causes to be pleaded in their own behalf.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2339.34, 2425.34.

[Restraint of Trade—Baseball]

LORETO, Justice [In full text]: Defendants move for an order requiring the plaintiffs to separately, state and number causes of action to eliminate from the complaint references to the plaintiffs, that they are acting in a representative capacity, and for a dismissal of the complaint pursuant to Rules 106, 107 and 212 of the Rules of Civil Practice.

The plaintiffs are two professional baseball players in the International League, suing both on "behalf of themselves and of all members of the International League Baseball Players' Association."

The moving defendants (the only ones served) are Ford C. Frick, individually and as commissioner of baseball, Buffalo Bisons Baseball Club, Inc., and Rochester Community Baseball, Inc. Neither of the plaintiffs is employed by a defendant served in the action.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Declaratory Judgment Sought]

This action is for declaratory judgment decreeing that the uniform player's contract in the international league be adjudged void and unlawful, that the defendants be enjoined in New York from monopolizing the baseball business enforcing salary limitations and taking disciplinary action against the plaintiffs for alleged violations of provisions of the uniform contract described as "reserve clause," "termination clause" and "involuntary assignment clause."

[Class Action]

This complaint, based on contract asserted to be similar for both plaintiffs as well as all baseball players in the international league, cannot be treated as one stating a representative or class action. The common interest of all the players is found only in the uniform contract. Once declared void, their common interest would end. And all players of the international league not before the court would be bound by the remedy selected and the result reached in this action (Brenner v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 276 N. Y. 230, 236). The mere fact that there exists a similarity of contract relationship on the part of numerous parties with other parties in itself does not permit a representative action (Society Milion Athena v. National Bank of Greece, 281 N. Y. 282; Noel Holding Corp'n v. Carvel Dari Freeze Stores, 140 N. Y. S. 2d 640, aff'd without opinion, 286 App. Div. 1066). Therefore, all reference to the representative character of the suing plaintiffs should be deleted from the complaint.

The complaint alleges that the plaintiffs are professional baseball players, rendering services in the international league, that the defendants (baseball clubs) present for profit public exhibitions of professional baseball in New York and the individual defendants are engaged in the supervision and administration of such exhibitions and that the international league is a member of the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues and is governed by certain agreements called "The Professional Baseball Agreement and Rules," "The National Association Agreement" and "The Constitution, By-Laws, and Laws of International League of Professional Baseball Clubs."

[New York Antitrust Laws]

It is further alleged that the plaintiffs are among 90 per cent of all professional baseball players, trainers and coaches employed by one of the member clubs of the International League, and were and are members of the International League Baseball Players, an association, that as a condition of employment as professional baseball players, plaintiffs and all other international league baseball players are required to execute a uniform player contract, a copy of which is annexed to the complaint. Plaintiffs also allege that the question which is the subject of this action is one of common and general interest to all such baseball members. Extracts of the documents are set forth indicating the control exercised over the baseball player by virtue of the agreements, which are asserted to constitute unlawful practices. It is charged that such practices and restrictions imposed upon the plaintiffs a form of involuntary servitude, in violation of the State and National Constitutions. In paragraph 17 of the complaint it is alleged that the aforesaid documents are violations of section 340 of the General Business Law of the State of New York and of the common law of the State of New York, in that they unlawfully restrict and monopolize trade and business activities of the plaintiffs and all members of the International League, and unlawfully restrain competition and the free exercise by plaintiffs as such baseball players in the conduct of their business and in the furnishing of their services.

[Labor Dispute]

Particular consideration must be given to paragraph 32 of the complaint, which reads as follows:

> "32. That the plaintiffs and other players of the International League are unable to bargain with the defendants for matters such as pension plans, welfare benefits and improved conditions by reason of the fact that the defendants have refused to so bargain, and, in fact, have stated that they will 'trade' the players out of the International League to lower classifications or will eliminate them from organized baseball if the players persist in such requests."

It might be well to consider this first, as defendants argue that in this paragraph plaintiffs really set forth the gravamen of their complaint which constitutes a labor dispute over which the State Labor Relations Board, and not this Court, has exclusive and initial jurisdiction. Plaintiffs' attorneys argue that the State Labor Relations Board has no jurisdiction over the subject matter alleged in paragraph 32 of the complaint because it relates to interstate commerce, and that the National Labor Relations Board has declined to exercise jurisdiction over professional sports. In Guss v. Utah Labor Relations Board (353 U. S. 1), the Supreme Court held that where the National Labor Relations Board declines to exercise jurisdiction which it has, states may not exercise jurisdiction. Therefore, the grievances set forth in paragraph 32 of the complaint do not present a controversy over which the Court may exercise jurisdiction and absent contract controlling these subjects, they are not justiciable. In this regard the remedy of the professional baseball players lies in remedial legislation. The fact of the matter is that professional baseball regulation is under study by Congress.

[Attorney General]

Taking next the charge that the uniform professional baseball contracts constitute violation of section 340 of the General Business Law of the State of New York in unlawfully restricting and monopolizing the trade and business activities of the baseball players, and the prayer that the defendants should be restrained because of such violation as to all baseball players in the International League, it must be held that such relief may be granted only at the behest of the attorney-general, and may not be the subject of separate suit by individual plaintiffs on behalf of others not parties thereto (Payne Lumber Co. v. Neal, 212 Fed. 259, 266, 267).

What remains of the complaint for consideration are allegations which tend to support the conclusion that these contracts are illegal. There has been in the past strong judicial denunciation of the system of organized baseball under which the players are required to pursue their profession. In American League Club of Chicago v. Chase (86 Misc. 441, 465) the Court stated:

> "The quasi peonage of baseball players under the operations of this plan and agreement is contrary to the spirit of American institutions, and is contrary to the spirit of the Constitution of the United States . . . . The system created by 'organized baseball' in recent years presents the question of the establishment of a scheme by which the personal freedom, the right to contract for their labor wherever they will, of 10,000 skilled laborers, is placed under the dominion of a benevolent despotism through the operation of the monopoly established by the national agreement . . . The court will not assist in enforcing an agreement which is a part of a general plan having for its object the maintenance of a monopoly, interference with the personal liberty of a citizen and the control of his free right to labor wherever and for whom he pleases; and will not extend its aid to further the purposes and practices of an unlawful combination, by restraining the defendant from working for any one but the plaintiff."

[Restrictions May Be Illegal]

As alleged the restrictive provisions of these contracts and the system under which the players are required to render their services are oppressive and deprive them of rights and freedom usually granted to and enjoyed by employees. It may well be held that the contracts should be declared illegal and void.

[Pleading]

The causes intended to be pleaded in behalf of the two plaintiffs should be separately stated if they seek such relief in this case.

[Disciplinary Action]

The Court's attention has been called to the fact that since the submission of this motion and because of the prosecution of this suit, disciplinary action has been taken against one of the plaintiffs by this baseball club. The Court expresses its regret that this has happened and unfortunately can do nothing about it.

[Ruling]

The motion is granted to the extent herein indicated and otherwise denied, with leave to plaintiffs to replead if so advised.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[¶ 69,431] Duchen v. Milliken Woolens, Inc.

In the New York Supreme Court, New York County, Special Term, Part I. 141 N. Y. L. J., No. 103, page 12.

New York Antitrust (Donnelly) Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—New York Antitrust Law—Practices—Refusal to Sell—Legality.—A garment manufacturer's allegation, in an amended complaint, that its supplier conspired with the manufacturer's competitors to refuse to sell it a certain yarn was dismissed for failure to state a cause of action under the New York antitrust law. The alleged refusal to sell involved a single product rather than the supplier's entire line, and there was no showing of any resultant destruction of business or prevention of competition.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2337.34.

For a prior opinion of the N. Y. Supreme Court, see 1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,292.

[Refusal to Sell]

Gold, Justice [In full text]: Defendants move for dismissal of the first and third causes as stated in the amended complaint pursuant to Rule 106(4). The first cause in prima facie tort as contained in the original complaint was dismissed for the reason that it appeared on the face thereof that the conduct complained of arose from self interest. The added allegations in the present pleading do not remove but rather relate to the same self interest and, accordingly, the refusal to sell does not constitute prima facie tort. The third cause rests upon the Donnelly Act. It is alleged that other manufacturers of garments have conspired with the defendants that the latter will not manufacture and sell a certain yarn to plaintiff to enable it to manufacture the yarn into garments in competition with the defendants' co-conspirators. Plaintiffs rely on Alexander's Dept. Store v. Ohrbach's [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,285], (266 App. Div. 535) appeal dismissed 291 N. Y. 707). There,

> "Ohrbach's, using its superior economic buying power finally prevailed upon other manufacturers to refuse to sell to Alexander's not merely one line or fabric, but any merchandise whatever, and that the object and effect of such arrangement was to destroy Alexander's as a competitor of Ohrbach's and in defendant's products which Alexander's had been selling for years."

Here, the alleged conspiracy is by persons in competition with plaintiffs and who, together with defendants, conspired to refuse to sell to plaintiffs a single product which defendants had the right to do and not its entire line and without any showing of resultant destruction of business or prevention of competition. Actually, the statement of the third cause is an attempt to expand upon the first cause and it has failed. The motion is granted dismissing the first and third causes of action.

[¶ 69,432] Independent Theatres, Inc. v. American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, Inc., et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil 142-278. Filed June 23, 1959.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Where Suit May Be Brought—Transfer of Venue—"Balance of Convenience."—New York and Delaware corporations engaged in various phases of the motion picture industry were denied a motion to transfer a Tennessee exhibitor's treble damage action from the Southern District of New York to the Northern District of Georgia, Atlanta Division, or, in the alternative, to the Eastern District of Tennessee. The transfer depended upon the defendants' showing that a "balance of convenience" was strongly in favor of the transfer, a burden they failed to carry. Their inconvenience in having to bring their possible employee witnesses and records to New York from Georgia or Tennessee was not sufficient to overcome the venue privilege of the plaintiff under Section 4 of the Clayton Act, especially where it was apparent that the plaintiff had not abused that privilege (the plaintiff's averment that New York was the only district in which it could obtain jurisdiction over all of the defendants negatived any claim of such abuse). Also, the plaintiff's contention that the transfer would cause it to lose the power to subpoena, as witnesses, certain of the defendants' officials in New York deserved particular consideration, especially since the plaintiff also claimed that New York was the situs of the alleged conspiracy's origination, that New York was the principal base of its operations, and that the proposed witnesses were the principal actors.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9008.600.

For the plaintiff: William Gold, New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Leonard Kaufman; White & Case. New York, N. Y.

Memorandum

[Conspiracy in Motion Picture Industry]

MURPHY, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, a Tennessee corporation, alleges a conspiracy on the part of defendants violative of the Federal Anti-Trust Laws involving the exhibition of first-run motion pictures. It owns some five theatres in Chattanooga, Tennessee, and an equal number of drive-in theatres around its perimeter. Defendants are all New York or Delaware corporations, and with the exception of one of them, all do business in New York City (the other is a wholly owned subsidiary of one of the New York corporate defendants). For the most part they are distributors and exhibitors of motion pictures, and one is a producer. Two defendants have not as yet been served.

[Motion to Transfer]

Defendants have moved to transfer this cause pursuant to 28 U. S. C. § 1404(a) to the Northern District of Georgia, Atlanta Division (three defendants seek in the alternative a transfer to the Eastern District of Tennessee). All proceedings have been stayed pending determination of this motion. Defendants also move to take the deposition of plaintiff's vice president in aid of its motion to transfer. Plaintiff moves to vacate the stay to the extent that it may proceed with the taking of depositions in accordance with its prior notice thereof.

[Convenience of Parties]

Defendants' argument in support of their motion to transfer is as follows:

Plaintiff's injury as alleged is that it was deprived of the opportunity to exhibit first-run pictures at its theatres in Tennessee at earlier dates than actually made available to it, and that defendants discriminated against plaintiff and in favor of defendant Wilby-Kincey Service Corp., a wholly owned subsidiary of defendant American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, Inc., which operates a number of theatres in the City of Chattanooga (plaintiff claims Wilby-Kincey is the only other theatre operator in that city); that these theatres are serviced by the distributor defendants through branch offices located in Atlanta, Georgia; that negotiations for the licensing of pictures to those theatres are conducted principally in Atlanta; that the persons most familiar with the matters here in issue live and work there; that, in the main, the documents relating to the transactions here in question are located in Atlanta; that it would be inconvenient for the witnesses to come to New York and for records to be shipped here, and that during the trial expert witnesses may be necessary to testify with relation to geographical, statistical and other local matters. Finally, defendant argues that plaintiff has no connection apparently with this forum.

In opposition to the motion plaintiff asserts that this is a national conspiracy and that the persons (officials and officers of defendants') who alone are responsible for the actions and conditions of which plaintiff complains, are all located in New York City; that the Georgia personnel referred to by defendants are but incidental and ministerial actors and representatives who are subject to the discretion and authority of managing personnel located in New York City; that all essential business records of defendants' are located and available at their New York home offices; and finally and most important, hostile witnesses essential to the establishment of plaintiff's case would become unavailable to plaintiff in the event of a transfer, by reason of plaintiff's loss of power to subpoena.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Jurisdiction—Abuse of Venue Privilege]

Plaintiff sued here in New York because, it avers, this is the only district in which it could obtain jurisdiction over all defendants. This fact finds support in the affidavits submitted on this motion, and while it may not be in itself an argument for the retention of the suit here, it does negative any claim of abuse by plaintiff of its venue privilege under 15 U. S. C. § 15, which privilege is entitled to respectable consideration on motions of this nature. Ford Motor Co. v. Ryan, 182 F. 2d 329 (2d Cir., 1950).

If plaintiff had brought this motion to transfer to Tennessee or Georgia it could not succeed against defendants' opposition (Foster-Milburn Co. v. Knight, 181 F. 2d 949, 952 (2d Cir., 1950), while defendants' motion may not be similarly stymied, for their consent waives any venue impediment that might originally have existed against their being sued in those districts. Anthony v. Kaufman, 193 F. 2d 85 (2d Cir., 1951).

[Balance of Convenience]

Nevertheless, defendants' success upon this motion depends upon their establishing that the balance of convenience is strongly in favor of transfer. Ford Motor Co. v. Ryan, supra. This burden we feel they have failed to carry. The inconvenience to defendants necessitated by having to bring their possible employee witnesses and records to New York from Georgia or Tennessee would not be considered, in the light of the Ford Motor Co. case, as sufficient to overcome the venue privilege of plaintiff, especially where it is apparent that it has not been abused. Moreover, there is some truth to plaintiff's rebuttal that by the time this case is reached for trial defendants' records will be long since considered "current" and necessary to the day-to-day operations of defendants' business.

On the whole we cannot say that the balance of convenience is strongly in favor of transfer. Plaintiff's rights with regard to the availability of certain of defendants' officials as witnesses on the trial by means of compulsory process here in New York, which it would lose by transfer, deserves particular consideration, especially where as here the plaintiff claims New York to be the situs of the alleged conspiracy's origination, and its principal base of operations with the proposed witnesses as the principal actors.

[Motion Denied]

The motion to transfer must be denied. This renders moot defendants' companion motion to examine plaintiff's vice president and, since the stay of proceedings will necessarily be vacated herewith, plaintiff's relative motion need not be considered.

Settle order.

[¶ 69,433] Republic Productions, Inc.; Republic Pictures Corporation; and Hollywood Television Service, Inc. v. American Federation of Musicians of the United States and Canada; James C. Petrillo, Samuel R. Rosenbaum, as Trustee; C. L. Bagley; Leo Cluesmann; Harry J. Steeper; Herman D. Kenin; George V. Clancy; Stanley Ballard; William J. Harris; W. M. Murdoch; and Does 1 to 100, inclusive.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil 129-354. Filed June 25, 1959.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Service of Process—Exemption of Non-resident Witness—Motion to Vacate Service—Reargument.—A Federal District Court in New York denied a motion for reargument on its ruling that an individual had failed to sustain his claim that he was immune from service of process in New York by reason of the fact that, when he was served, his deposition as a witness was being taken there in connection with actions pending in a California court.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9008, 9008.450.

For the plaintiffs: Baer, Marks, Friedman, Berliner & Klein (W. Barnard Richland, of counsel), New York, N. Y.

Appearing specially for Leo Cluesmann: Emanuel L. Gordon (Louis Lauer, of counsel), New York, N. Y.

For a prior opinion of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,279.

Memorandum

[Service of Process—Motion to Vacate]

BRYAN, District Judge [In full text]: Defendant Cluesmann moves to reargue his motion to vacate service of process upon him which was denied, with an opinion [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,279], by my order of January 29, 1959.

[Reargument—Additional Facts]

Cluesmann's motion for reargument is grounded principally upon an affidavit which purports to present additional facts which were not before me on the original motion. All of these facts were fully available to Cluesmann when his original motion was made and he could have presented them then or during the rather lengthy consideration which I gave to his motion.

He was content to rest on the moving and reply affidavits which he elected to submit and made no request for a hearing. These affidavits, as I stated in my opinion, were "cryptic to a degree" on the vital question of the frequency regularity and extent of Cluesmann's business activities in New York and "seemed designed to conceal rather than reveal the extent" of his usual activities here.

A motion for reargument under Rule 9(h) of the General Rules of this Court must be predicated on matters which were before the court on the original motion or on controlling decisions which the court has overlooked.

As Judge Dimock said in Avon Publishing Co., Inc. v. The American News Company, Inc. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,168], D. C. S. D. N. Y., 137 F. Supp. 896, a motion for reargument "is not meant to be a device by which a party may add arguments or information which the party had available at the original hearing but which, for some reason, he did not offer."

As the moving party Cluesmann had the burden of showing that service upon him was invalid. He had ample opportunity both in his original moving papers and in his reply affidavits to present on the original motion the matters contained in the affidavit which he now submits. He did not do so. This affidavit comes too late to affect my decision on the original motion made on the facts presented to me.

[Trivial Mistake in Opinion]

The fact that in the opinion which I rendered I may have mistakenly referred to Cluesmann as Executive Secretary of the American Federation of Musicians instead of Secretary and member of the Executive Board, as the affidavit now submitted indicates, is a triviality and in no way affected the result reached.

Cluesmann has not pointed to any controlling decision which I overlooked in my decision of the original motion.

[Motion to Reargue Denied]

The motion to reargue is denied.

So ordered.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[¶ 69,434] John L. Lewis and Josephine Roche, as Trustees of the United Mine Workers of America Welfare and Retirement Fund v. James M. Pennington, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee, Northern Division. Civil Action No. 3431. Filed July 1, 1959.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies—Labor Unions Under Antitrust Laws—Activities Which Are Not Exempted—Conspiracy with Non-labor Groups.—An employer's charges that a labor union conspired with one or more businesses to raise the wages of employees to a point where he could not pay stated a prima facie cause of action under the antitrust laws, namely, Sections 1, 2, and 3 of the Sherman Act and Section 4 of the Clayton Act.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2101.063.

For the plaintiffs: R. R. Kramer, Knoxville, Tenn.; and Val J. Mitch, Harold H. Bacon, and Charles L. Widman, Washington, D. C.

For the defendants: Jerome G. Taylor, Jerome Templeton, Harley Fowler, and Fowler, Rowntree & Fowler, Knoxville, Tenn.

Memorandum

(Delivered from the bench)

[Labor Unions Under Antitrust Laws]

Robert L. Taylor, District Judge [In full text]: This case is before the Court on various motions of cross-defendant, United Mine Workers of America, which, for convenience, will be referred to as UMW, and motion to amend the answer, counter-claim and cross-claim by James M. Pennington, Ralph E. Phillips and Bruce Phillips, individually, and as Phillips Brothers Coal Company, a partnership, the original defendants. Reference will be made first to the motion of cross-defendant, UMW, found on page 41 of the record.

[Service of Process]

This motion states, in substance, that the process was served on the individual members of the unincorporated association in an effort to bring the association before the court through the class device. The Second Ground states that substituted service is inadequate under Section 20-223, Tennessee Code Annotated.

These questions were passed upon by this Court in the case of Love & Amos Coal Company v. United Mine Workers of America et al., in which case it was held that the service was proper. The Court is of the opinion, and holds, that the decision in the Love & Amos case is controlling of these questions in the present case.

[Conspiring With Non-Labor Groups]

It is further urged in this motion that Rule 13 is insufficient to bring the UMW before the Court by cross action. The cross complaint avers, among other things, that the UMW and the Trustees of the Union fund conspired to raise wages to such an extent that the defendants and cross-plaintiff could not pay such wages and that the alleged conspirators committed one or more overt acts towards that end; that UMW conspired with one or more businesses to raise the wages of employees to a point that cross-plaintiff could not pay and that these conspiracies were in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust laws.

It is the theory of cross-plantiff that UMW should be brought in the suit in order for all questions to be decided in one suit.

[Dismissal Denied]

The Court overrules the motion to dismiss the cross action as being improperly brought under Rule 13(h), without prejudice to the cross-defendants to renew the motion at the pre-trial.

[Jurisdiction]

Ground No. 4 of the motion asserts that the Court is without jurisdiction in that no substanial or colorable cause of action is stated under the Constitution, laws or treaties of the United States. The Court likewise overrules this ground with the right of cross-defendants to renew at the pre-trial hearing.

Ground No. 5 is sustained as cross-plaintiff concedes that this ground is well taken.

Ground No. 6 states that no colorable action is stated under Title 15, U. S. C., Sections 1, 2, 3 and 15 of the Sherman Act. The Court at this time is of the opinion that the charges that the Union conspired with one or more employers to violate the anti-trust laws, particularly, Title 15, U. S. C., Sections 1, 2, 3 and 15 of the Sherman Act, states a prima facie cause of action, and for that reason cross-defendants' motion is overruled without prejudice to its right to renew at the time of the pre-trial.

[Other Matters]

Ground No. 7 asserts that a cause of action is not stated under Title 29, U. S. C., Section 185, which is the breach of contract section. This motion is likewise overruled with the right of the cross-defendants to renew it at the pre-trial.

Ground No. 8 relates to the common law action. The Court is of the opinion that this ground must be overruled under the authority of United Mine Workers of America v. Meadow Creek Coal Co., Inc., 263 F. 2d 52, USCA 6 Cir., January 21, 1959.

Ground No. 9 must be overruled for the same reasons.

The ruling in the case of Love & Amos v. United Mine Workers of America et al., a case recently pending in this court, is controlling of the questions urged in support of Ground No. 10. For the reasons stated in the memorandum opinion in that case, Ground No. 10 is overruled.

Ground No. 11 is sustained as cross-plaintiff concedes that this ground is well taken.

We direct our attention at this time to the motion to vacate the order issued under Rule 13(h) and to dismiss the cross-claim as to cross-defendants' Trustees. This motion is to be found on pages 42 and 43 of the record. For the reasons heretofore indicated above, this motion is denied at the present time with the right to movants to renew at the pre-trial hearing.

[Amendments]

We now turn to the motion to amend counter-claim and cross-claim filed by the defendants which is found on pages 48-51 of the record. As is well known, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure are very liberal in permitting amendments. A party may amend his pleadings once as a matter of course before a responsive pleading is filed under Rule 15. After pleadings are made up, the party can only amend with the consent of the adverse party or on leave of the Court. Rule 15 states, that leave of the court shall be "freely given when justice so requires."

The Court is of the opinion that justice requires the allowance of the amendments in this case. The Court, in making this ruling, is not to be understood as agreeing that the contentions of cross-plaintiff as set forth in the amendments with respect to some of the highly technical questions of law are sound.

A motion to amend was also filed on June 26, 1959, which appears on pages 129-134 of the record. This motion is likewise sustained with the right of the Union and the Trustees to renew their opposition to the legal points contained in the amendments at the pre-trial hearing.

[Production of Documents]

This brings us to the motion of the defendants and cross-plaintiff for production of documents for inspection, copying and photographing, which is found on pages 127-128 of the record.

Mr. Combs, one of the attorneys for UMW, stated to the Court during the hearing that he had been in Judge Ford's court for several days and for that reason had not been to his office in Washington and was not prepared to argue the merits or demerits of said motion and would like argument or consideration of it to be passed until he has had an opportunity to discuss the problems involved in this motion with his clients, and after doing so that he and his colleagues will make every reasonable effort to stipulate with counsel for cross-plaintiff concerning the matters that are sought in the documents that cross-plaintiff seeks to have produced.

The Court grants this motion by Mr. Combs and gives him fifteen days in which to attempt to work out the matter by stipulation. If it is possible to do so he will try to stipulate with opposing counsel within ten days from date, or sooner.

[Interrogatories]

Counsel for both parties agree that there is nothing for the Court to pass on at the present time under the title "Objections to

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Interrogatories Propounded by Defendant to Plaintiff Trustees, etc.," which interrogatories are to be found on pages 86-98 of the record.

Let an order be presented in conformity with the above views.

[¶ 69,435] United States v. The Rubber Manufacturers Association, Incorporated, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Cr. 158-159. Filed August 7, 1959.

Case No. 1433 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Defendants' Plea of Nolo Contendere.—Manufacturers of rubber belting, charged with fixing prices in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, were permitted to substitute pleas of nolo contendere in place of their pleas of "not guilty." In permitting the substitution of pleas, the court followed the reasoning in U. S. v. Safeway Stores, 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,770, where it was held that Congress did not intend that a plea of nolo contendere should be refused in criminal antitrust cases for the purpose of aiding private litigants under Section 5(a) of the Clayton Act. In the instant case, the court also noted that, because of the Government's policy of opposing all attempts to enter pleas of nolo contendere, it was necessary "to determine whether or not the opposition is seriously offered or whether it is merely the carrying out of the aforementioned policy."

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8025.860.

For the plaintiff: S. Hazard Gillespie, Jr., United States Attorney.

For the defendants: Marion & Lowthorp, New York, N. Y.

Memorandum

[Nolo Contendere]

Noonan, District Judge [In full text]: The defendants have moved this court for an order permitting them to substitute pleas of nolo contendere in place of their previously entered pleas of not guilty.

[Government Opposition]

The Government has interposed strong opposition to this application.

In dealing with this motion addressed to the discretionary power of the court, I do not believe it is incumbent upon me to review at great length the myriad of decisions on this point. Suffice it to say that I follow the reasoning of Judge Estes in U. S. v. Safeway Stores [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,770], 20 F. R. D. 451.

Since the Government's opposition relies heavily on Judge Weinfeld's learned opinion in U. S. v. Standard Ultramarine & Color Co., [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,237], 137 Fed. Supp. 167, I believe it is necessary to point out that this represents a minority viewpoint.

[Government Policy]

In deciding this motion I have taken into account the Government's policy of opposing all attempts to enter a plea of nolo contendere. This policy makes it necessary for the court to determine whether or not the opposition is seriously offered or whether it is merely the carrying out of the aforementioned policy.

[Motion Granted]

Accordingly, the defendants' motion is granted in all respects and the pleas of nolo contendere shall be entered on September 28, 1959 at 10:15 A. M. in Room 506 at which time sentence will be imposed.

So ordered.

[¶ 69,436] Goldlawr, Incorporated v. Milton Shubert, William Klein, Sylvia W. Golde, Marcus Heiman, Select Operating Corporation, and United Booking Office, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil 144-244. Filed August 10, 1959.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Jurisdiction—Extra-territorial Service of Process on Corporations—Necessity for Proper Venue.—A Federal District Court in New York, in a treble damage action transferred there from a Federal District Court in Pennsylvania, did not, by reason of that transfer, acquire personal jurisdiction over two New York corporations which had been served, in New York, by extra-territorial service of process, because the court in Pennsylvania never had jurisdiction. The extra-territorial service of process was invalid because venue was improperly laid in Pennsylvania (the corporations were not inhabitants of, found in, or transacting business in Pennsylvania). In order to sustain jurisdiction in the court in Pennsylvania, the "process" clause of Section 12 of the Clayton Act would have to be read as wholly independent of the "venue" clause. That section provides that antitrust actions against corporations "may be brought not only in the judicial district of which it is an inhabitant, but also in any district wherein it may be found or transacts business; and all process in such cases may be served in the district of which it is an inhabitant, or wherever it may be found." By "the phrase 'all process in such cases' (italics supplied), the privilege of extra-territorial service is expressly confined to actions brought in a district in which the corporation is an inhabitant, found, or transacting business," that is, actions in which venue is properly laid.

In addition, the fact that the summons had been delivered in New York did not give the court in New York personal jurisdiction over the corporations. Section 12 could not be invoked to legitimatize the extra-territorial service, and service without statutory authority is of no effect, regardless of actual notice.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9008.350.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Service of Process on Individuals—Substitution of Executors for Deceased Defendant.—A Federal District Court in New York, in a treble damage action transferred there from a Federal District Court in Pennsylvania, dismissed the action as to a deceased New York resident who was never served personally in Pennsylvania, was not found there, and had no agents there. Since the court in Pennsylvania lacked personal jurisdiction over that individual, the court in New York acquired no jurisdiction by reason of the transfer. In addition, it was doubtful whether Rule 25(a)(1) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (providing that, where an action is not extinguished by a party's death, the proper parties may be substituted therefor) could be invoked to authorize a substitution of the executors for a defendant who had not appeared or had not been served with process. Substitution at this late date would have been particularly anomalous, since the motion to transfer from Pennsylvania was interposed for the first time after the individual's death. Therefore, the individual had not been amenable to service of process in the action at any time during his life.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9008.450.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Where Suit May Be Brought—Proper Judicial District—Transfer of Venue—Power of Transfer Where Court Lacks Jurisdiction.—A Federal District Court in New York, in a treble damage action transferred there from a Federal District Court in Pennsylvania, dismissed the action as to a deceased New York resident and two New York corporations, because the transfer, as to those parties, was unauthorized. If the court in Pennsylvania had had jurisdiction over them, then the court in New York would have acquired such jurisdiction by the transfer. However, the former court never acquired jurisdiction because those parties were never effectively served with process.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Although the present court (in New York) lacked jurisdiction, the plaintiff might have still been in a position to avoid dismissal, as to the corporations, by making proper service upon them without further delay, if the transfer had been authorized. Therefore, the court considered the question of whether a court, while lacking in jurisdiction over a defendant, can nevertheless transfer an action to a district where service can be effected. Interpreting the transfer provisions of the Judicial Code, Title 28, United States Code, § 1404(a) (authorizing a transfer when venue is proper but the forum in which the action is brought is inconvenient) and § 1406(a) (authorizing a transfer when venue is improperly laid), the court noted that § 1404(a) was not applicable and that "Section 1406(a), which by its terms speaks to defective venue only, cannot be made to do service when there is also a jurisdictional defect." Jurisdiction is the more basic requirement. It was unlikely that the drafters of the Judicial Code, since they made an express provision for a transfer in the event of improper venue but not in the event of a lack of jurisdiction, relied upon a venue section to carry along an implicit provision for a transfer to cure a jurisdictional defect.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9008.

For the plaintiff: Dilworth, Paxson, Kalish, Kohn & Dilks, Philadelphia, Pa. (Harold E. Kohn and Dolores Korman, of counsel), and Curtis, Mallet-Prevost, Colt & Mosle. New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Donovan, Leisure, Newton & Irvine, New York, N. Y. (Francis A. Brick, Jr., of counsel), for Milton Shubert; Hess, Mela, Segall, Popkin & Guterman, New York, N. Y. (Lionel S. Popkin, of counsel), for William Klein; Perkins, Daniels, McCormack & Collins, New York, N. Y. (Freeman J. Daniels, of counsel), for Sylvia W. Golde; Lipper, Shinn & Keeley, New York, N. Y. (Aaron Lipper, of counsel), for the Estate of Marcus Heiman; Montgomery, McCracken, Walker & Rhoads, Philadelphia, Pa. (C. Russell Phillips and Hugh Molter, of counsel), and Gerald Schoenfeld and Bernard B. Jacobs, New York, N. Y., for Select Operating Corporation and United Booking Office, Inc.

For a prior opinion of the U. S. District Court, Eastern District of Pennsylvania, see 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,227.

[Treble Damage Action—Jurisdiction]

PALMIERI, District Judge [In full text]: This is an antitrust action originally instituted on October 17, 1956 by plaintiff against various persons and corporations in the Federal District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. That Court retained the action as to defendants found to be properly before it and, on March 3, 1959, ordered the action transferred to this Court as to the above-named defendants for lack of proper venue in Pennsylvania. Motions filed here by defendants subsequent to transfer will be discussed seriatim.

I

Motion of Defendants Select Operating Corporation and United Booking Office, Inc., to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction

[Extra-territorial Service of Process]

Select Operating Corporation and United Booking Office, Inc. are incorporated and have their offices in New York. Plaintiff, claiming the right to extraterritorial process under Section 12 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 736 (1914), 15 U. S. C. § 22 (1958), served these defendants in New York, by alias summons, in February and March of 1957. Defendants immediately moved to quash the returns of service of the summons and to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction and improper venue. In an opinion dated December 22, 1958 [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,227], 169 F. Supp. 677, the Court in Pennsylvania held that venue was improper, finding that defendants were not inhabitants of or found in Pennsylvania, and did not transact business there as required by Section 12 of the Clayton Act. Transfer was ordered without ruling upon the motions to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction.

[Jurisdiction—Transfer of Action]

Service of the alias summons was the only service of process ever received by either defendant in this District. Therefore, the first question presented is whether, under Section 12 of the Clayton Act, the extra-territorial service of process while the action was pending in Pennsylvania had the effect of giving this Court, on transfer, personal jurisdiction over the defendants.

Section 12 provides:

> "Any suit, action, or proceeding under the antitrust laws against a corporation may be brought not only in the judicial district whereof it is an inhabitant, but also in any district wherein it may be found or transacts business; and all process in such cases may be served in the district of which it is an inhabitant, or wherever it may be found."

If the service purported to be made under this section was effective to give the Court in Pennsylvania personal jurisdiction, such jurisdiction would continue after transfer. See Sen. Rep. No. 303, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., U. S. Code Cong. Serv. 1253 (1949). In order to sustain jurisdiction in Pennsylvania, however, the clause of Section 12 dealing with process would have to be read as wholly independent of the clause dealing with venue. If so read, the extraterritorial service would give the Court in Pennsylvania jurisdiction; the only defect would be improper venue. Petroleum Financial Corp. v. Stone, 116 F. Supp. 426, 428 (S. D. N. Y. 1953) (dictum), Note, 38 Minn. L. Rev. 874 (1954).

The language of the section itself precludes the interpretation set forth above. By the phrase "all process in such cases" (italics supplied), the privilege of extraterritorial service is expressly confined to actions brought in a district in which the corporation is an inhabitant, found, or transacting business. Dazian's, Inc. v. Switzer Bros., 111 F. Supp. 648 (N. D. Ohio 1951); Midwest Fur Producers Ass'n v. Mutation Mink Breeders Ass'n [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,272], 102 F. Supp. 649 (D. Minn. 1951); Reid v. University of Minnesota [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,418], 107 F. Supp. 439 (N. D. Ohio 1952); cf. Greenberg v. Giannini, 140 F. 2d 550 (2d Cir. 1944); Lavin v. Lavin, 182 F. 2d 870, 873 (2d Cir. 1950) (dictum). That the Pennsylvania forum is not such a District is no longer in dispute. Therefore plaintiff cannot invoke Section 12 of the Clayton Act to legitimatize the extraterritorial service. The Court in Pennsylvania never acquired personal jurisdiction over the defendants, and this Court did not acquire personal jurisdiction as a result of the transfer.

Nor was personal jurisdiction obtained in this District by virtue of the fact that the alias summons was delivered in New York. Service made without statutory authority is of no effect regardless of actual notice to defendants. Cf. Wuchter v. Pizzuti, 276 U. S. 13 (1928).

[Authority for Transfer]

This Court now lacks personal jurisdiction over the defendants since effective service of process has never been accomplished. However, if the transfer to this District were authorized, plaintiff might still be in a position to avoid dismissal by making proper service upon defendants without further delay. See UNRRA v. The Mormacpine, 99 F. Supp. 552 (S. D. N. Y. 1951); 5 Moore, Federal Practice § 41.11 at p. 1039 (2d ed. 1951). Therefore, the second question to be determined on this motion is whether a Court, lacking jurisdiction over defendants, may nonetheless transfer the action to a District where service can be effected.

This issue, requiring interpretation of the transfer provisions of the Judicial Code, 28 U. S. C. §§ 1404(a), 1406(a) (1952), is one on which the Courts are in disagreement. Independent Productions Corp. v. Loew's, Inc., [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,615], 148 F. Supp. 460 (S. D. N. Y. 1957); McDaniel v. Drotman, 103 F. Supp. 643 (W. D. Ky. 1952); Wilson v. Kansas City So. Ry., 101 F. Supp. 56 (W. D. Mo. 1951): Fistel v. Beaver Trust Co., 94 F. Supp. 974 (S. D. N. Y. 1950) (transfer may be made only by a court which has personal jurisdiction). Internatio-Rotterdam, Inc. v. Thomsen, 218 F. 2d 514 (4th Cir.), 68 Harv. L. Rev. 1069 (1955) (admiralty); Orzulak v. Federal Commerce and Navigation Co., 168 F. Supp. 15 (E. D. Pa. 1958) (admiralty); United States v. Welch, 151 F. Supp. 899 (S. D. N. Y. 1957); Petroleum Financial Corp. v. Stone, 116 F. Supp. 426 (S. D. N. Y. 1953); Lumbermens Mut. Cas. Co v. Mohr, 87 F. Supp. 727 (S. D. Texas 1949) (transfer may be made by a court which lacks personal jurisdiction). Section 1406(a), authorizing transfer when venue is improperly laid, provides:

> "The district court of a district in which is filed a case laying venue in the wrong division or district shall dismiss, or if it be in the interest of justice, tranfer such case to any district or division in which it could have been brought."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Section 1404(a), since it applies when venue is proper but the forum in which the action is brought is inconvenient, is not directly involved in this action. It is appropriate to note, however, that the Courts have not drawn a distinction between the two sections in regard to the propriety of transfer by a Court which lacks jurisdiction. E. g., Petroleum Financial Corp. v. Stone, supra, 42 Geo. L. J. 315, 318 (1954).

This Court is of the view that Section 1406(a), which by its terms speaks to defective venue only, cannot be made to do service when there is also a jurisdictional defect. Proper jurisdiction is the more basic requirement. See Neirbo Co. v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp., 308 U. S. 165, 167-68 (1939). The drafters of the Judicial Code made an express provision for transfer in the event of improper venue. They made no express provision for transfer in the event of lack of jurisdiction. It is unlikely that the drafters relied upon a venue section to carry along an implicit provision for transfer to cure a jurisdictional defect. See Sen. Rep. No. 303, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., U. S. Code Cong. Serv. 1253 (1949); Notes 38 Minn. L. Rev. 874, 23 U. Cinn. L. Rev. 357, 359 (1954).

It should be noted that Schiller v. Mit-Clip Co. [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,585], 180 F. 2d 654 (2d Cir. 1950), which has been cited as authority for the propriety of transfer when jurisdiction in personam could not be had in the transferor forum, United States v. Welch, 151 F. Supp. 899 (S. D. N. Y. 1957); Petroleum Financial Corp. v. Stone, supra; 68 Harv. L. Rev. 1069, 1070 (1955), never reached the question. In that case plaintiff resisted and defendant argued in support of transfer. The Court of Appeals, in denying plaintiff's petition for a mandamus to compel the district judge to revoke the transfer order, stated:

> ". . . [T]he plaintiff cannot complain because he has not suffered the dismissal which he so richly deserved . . . Whether we should have any jurisdiction, either by appeal or by mandamus, to review such an order, we need not decide." 180 F. 2d at 655.

On the reasoning set forth above it is concluded that the Court in Pennsylvania improperly transferred the action as to defendants Select Operating Corporation and United Booking Office, Inc. to this Court. Since there is nothing to support the pendency of the action here, it must be dismissed. E. g., Wilson v. Kansas City So. Ry., 101 F. Supp. 56 (W. D. Mo. 1951). The alternative, remand to the transferor district, would serve no useful purpose because plaintiff's inability to proceed against these defendants in the Pennsylvania forum has already been established. See Goldlawr v. Shubert, [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,227], 169 F. Supp. 677, 686 (1958).

II

Motion to Substitute the Executors of the Estate of Defendant Heiman

Cross-Motion to Dismiss as to Heiman for Lack of Jurisdiction

[Lack of Personal Service]

Marcus Heiman, a New York resident, was named as an original defendant in the action instituted in Pennsylvania. Although he died in September of 1957, the order of March 1959 included Heiman among the defendants as to whom the action was transferred for lack of venue.

Heiman was not found in and had no agents in Pennsylvania. Goldlawr v. Shubert [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,227], 169 F. Supp. 677, 682 (1958). See Clayton Act § 7, 38 Stat. 731 (1914), 15 U. S. C. § 15 (1958). He was never served personally in Pennsylvania or any other place. The obvious lack of personal jurisdiction over Heiman and the resulting invalidity of the transfer under 28 U. S. C. § 1406(a) would alone impel this Court to grant the cross-motion to dismiss.

[Substitution of Executors for Deceased Defendant]

In addition, passing consideration of the cross-motion, it is doubtful whether Rule 25(a)(1), Fed. R. Civ. P., may be invoked to authorize substitution of the executors for a defendant who neither appeared nor was served with process. See United States v. Field, 25 Fed. Cas. 1067, No. 15,089 (C. C. S. D. N. Y. 1859), Note on Revivor, 14 Fed. 392 (1882); cf. Carnes v. Strait, 270 S. W. 2d 920 (Ark. 1954). Substitution at this late date would be particularly anomalous since the motion to transfer from Pennsylvania was interposed for the first time after Heiman's death. Therefore at no time during his life was he amenable to service of process in this action.

III

Motions to Dismiss for Pendency of Another Action

[Actions Consolidated]

The original complaint in this action was filed in October of 1956. In February of 1957 plaintiff, who was unable to obtain a prompt hearing on its motion to amend, filed a second complaint. This second complaint added certain defendants and extended the period for which damages were claimed but was otherwise identical with the first complaint. Therefore when the Court in Pennsylvania ordered severance and transfer, two actions, identical in all respects, were docketed in this District, the first of the Pennsylvania complaints having, in the meantime, been amended.

The three remaining defendants, William Klein, Milton Shubert, and Sylvia W. Golde have moved for a dismissal of one of these actions on the ground that there is a similar action pending. Plaintiff opposes the motion on the ground that its rights under the Statute of Limitations can best be protected by preserving both actions.

In order to protect plaintiff's interest and, at the same time, spare defendants the burden of duplicating their efforts in this cause, the two actions will be consolidated for the purpose of all further proceedings. See Rule 42(a), Fed. R. Civ. P.

[Orders]

Settle appropriate orders on notice for dismissal as to defendants Select Operating Corporation, United Booking Office, Inc., and Marcus Heiman and for consolidation of the actions against Milton Shubert, William Klein and Sylvia W. Golde.

[¶ 69,437] Federal Trade Commission v. Douglas T. Orton, Secretary, The Borden Company.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Misc. 18-304. Dated July 30, 1959.

Clayton and Federal Trade Commission Acts

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Access to Documentary Evidence Under FTC Act, Section 9—Subpoena Duces Tecum—Census Data—File Copies—Privilege.—A petition for a rehearing of an order denying a Federal Trade Commission motion to compel a company, by subpoena duces tecum, to produce its "schedules submitted to the Bureau of the Census on Form MC 20C" was denied. The petition urged that the court, in its opinion denying the motion, 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,404, did not decide the issue as to whether the company's "file copies" of Census Form 20C must be produced. In denying the petition for rehearing, the court pointed out that the Commission's subpoena had not called for "file copies," that the opinion noted that fact, and that a determination of that issue could not be reached until it was presented by properly drawn documents.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611, 8741.55.

Denying a petition for a rehearing of an order of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, 1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,404, denying a Federal Trade Commission petition to require production of documentary evidence in Dkt. 6652.

For the petitioner: Albert G. Seidman, Attorney in Charge, New York Office, Federal Trade Commission; Andrew C. Goodhope and F. P. Favarella, Attorneys, Federal Trade Commission.

For the respondent: Dewey, Ballantine, Bushby, Palmer & Wood, New York, N. Y. (John E. F. Wood, Charles E. Stewart, Jr., and C. Lamar Barnes, of counsel).

[Subpoena Duces Tecum—Census Reports]

Dawson, District Judge [In full text]: This petition for rehearing urges that the opinion of the Court [1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,404] "does not decide the issue as to whether respondent's file copies of Census Form MC 20C must be produced pursuant to petitioner's subpoena duces tecum." The subpoena duces tecum did not call for file copies. It called for "All schedules submitted to the Bureau of the Census on Form MC 20C by all plants. . . ." The Court in its opinion noted that the subpoena did not relate to file copies thereof.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

There is nothing in the opinion which needs clarification. Possibly the procedure of petitioner in drawing its subpoena needs clarification.

The Court passed upon the subpoena in the form issued by the petitioner; that was the only issue before the Court. In effect the petition for rehearing seeks to have the Court issue a declaratory judgment on a hypothetical set of facts. This is not consonant with good judicial procedure. When the issue is presented by properly drawn documents a determination can then be reached by the Court.

[Rehearing Denied]

The petition for rehearing is denied. So ordered.

[¶ 69,438] Minniola O. Miller v. Russell L. Gillette, Rose M. Gillette, et al.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. No. 316—October Term, 1958. Docket No. 25469. Argued June 2, 1959. Decided June 15, 1959.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Connecticut. J. Joseph Smith, Judge.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Dismissal—Dissolution of Attachment Pendente Lite Against Defendants' Property.—A Federal appellate court which had affirmed the dismissal of a plaintiff's "fantastic claims of fraud and conspiracy" in the "guise of a treble-damage antitrust suit" (it was alleged that a town, a bank, and certain individuals had conspired to deprive the plaintiff of her patrimony in certain farms), also affirmed the trial court's subsequent dissolution of an attachment pendente lite upon the defendants' property. The plaintiff, on appeal from the dissolution of that attachment, showed no reason why the order was not only within the power of the trial court, but also required upon the termination of her action.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.440.

For a prior opinion of the U. S. Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, see 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,835.

For the plaintiff: Minniola O. Miller, pro se.

For the defendants: Howard J. Maxwell of Steele, Collins & Maxwell, Hartford, Conn., and Bernard E. Francis, West Hartford, Conn.

Before: Clark, Chief Judge, and Lumbard and Waterman, Circuit Judges.

Minniola O. Miller appeals from an order dissolving an attachment against property of Russell L. Gillette and Rose M. Gillette in her antitrust action which has been finally dismissed.

[Dismissal—Dissolution of Attachment]

Per Curiam [In full text]: In Miller v. Town of Suffield [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,835], 2 Cir., 249 F. 2d 16, we affirmed Judge Smith's dismissal of plaintiff's antitrust action which we characterized as an attempt to revive certain "fantastic claims of fraud and conspiracy" rejected in earlier litigation. The Supreme Court denied certiorari, 356 U. S. 978, and then a motion for rehearing, 358 U. S. 859. After our affirmance Judge Smith, on motion of certain defendants, dissolved an attachment pendente lite upon their property and plaintiff has appealed. She has failed, however, to show any reason why the order was not only within the power of the district court, but also required upon the termination of her action. Affirmed.

[¶ 69,439] Jewel Tea Company v. Local Unions Nos. 189, 262, 320, 546, 547 and 638, Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America, AFL-CIO, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. No. 58 C 1415. Filed May 19, 1959.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies—Labor Unions Under Antitrust Laws—Combining with Non-Labor Groups—Interlocutory Appeal from Denial of Motion to Dismiss.— "Locals" of a meat-cutters' labor union, in an action charging that they conspired with an association of food retailers to suppress competition among retail meat markets, to prevent the sale of fresh meat before 9 A. M. or after 6 P. M. Mondays through Saturdays, and to monopolize, for members of the union, the retail trade in such meats, were permitted to file an interlocutory appeal from a trial court's denial of a motion to dismiss the action. In its memorandum opinion denying that motion, 1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,329, the trial court found that the complaint stated a valid cause of action under the antitrust laws, in that it alleged a joinder of purpose between the union and independent employers, and adverse effects on interstate commerce. Here, the court concluded that an interlocutory appeal under Title 28 of the United States Code, § 1292(b), should be granted because the matter involved controlling questions of law as to which there were substantial grounds for a difference of opinion, and an immediate appeal would materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2101.063, 2101.110, 2101.248, 2101.265, 2111.102; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9015, 9022.20, 9022.75, 9042.350.

For the plaintiff: George B. Christensen and Fred H. Daugherty of Winston, Strawn, Smith & Patterson, Chicago, Ill.

For the defendants: Asher, Gubbins & Segall; Libit, Lindauer & Henry; and Eardley & Ward, all of Chicago, Ill.

For a prior opinion of the U. S. District Court, Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division, see 1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,329.

[Motion to Vacate Order]

WALTER J. LA BUY, District Judge [In full text]: The Court has considered defendants' motion to vacate the order of March 31, 1959 overruling defendants' motion to dismiss the complaint in the above cause and is of the opinion said motion should be and hereby is denied.

[Opinion Corrected]

During the course of oral arguments on the motion to vacate, defendants' counsel called the attention of the Court to an erroneous statement contained in the Court's memorandum [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,329] regarding the allegations of the complaint. On page 5 in the first full paragraph, last sentence, the Court said:

> "The allegations of the complaint aver that customers purchase less meats due to the market hour restriction and that the interstate supply and shipment thereof is affected."

This appears in plaintiff's brief pages 23-24 and was mistakenly stated to be contained in the complaint. The sentence is hereby ordered deleted from the memorandum of the Court.

[Interlocutory Appeal]

The Court is further of the opinion that defendants' oral request for an order permitting an interlocutory appeal from the orders of this Court should be allowed. Accordingly, the Court has entered such an order, copy of which is attached hereto.

Order

This cause came on to be heard on the motion of defendants to vacate the order of this Court entered March 31, 1959, and for permission to file an interlocutory appeal therefrom;

The Court being of the opinion that the orders denying defendants' motion to dismiss and motion to vacate said order involve controlling questions of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion and that an immediate appeal from these orders will materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation concludes that an appeal should be permitted to be taken from the orders at this time pursuant to Sec. 1292(b), 28 U. S. C. A.;

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

It is therefore ordered that the defendants be granted leave to file their interlocutory appeal, and said order shall suspend and stay all further proceedings in this Court pending consideration of this matter by the Court of Appeals.

[¶ 69,440] Afran Transport Company; Calendar Navigation Corp.; California Transport Corporation; Carib Marine Company; Grand Bassa Tankers, Inc.; Hemisphere Transportation Corporation; Kupan Transport Company; Mobil Tankers Company; S. A. Norness Shipping Company, Inc.; Panama Transport Company; Seatankers, Inc.; Tanker Transport, Inc.; Theater Navigation Corp.; Trans-Atlantic Navigation Corporation; and Universe Tankships, Inc. v. National Maritime Union; Seafarers International Union of North America; Joseph Curran, individually and as an officer and member representative of all the members of the National Maritime Union; and Joseph Algina, individually and as an officer and member representative of all the members of the Seafarers International Union of North America.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil 140-156. Filed June 9, 1959.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Injunctive Relief from Violations of Antitrust Laws—Pretrial Procedures—Summary Judgment—Issues of Fact—Interlocutory Appeal —"Controlling Question of Law."—A Federal District Court, in an action by foreign shippers to enjoin two seamen's labor unions from picketing and boycotting their ships, granted the unions' motion for reargument but, on reargument, adhered to its earlier decision, 1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,323, denying the unions' motion for summary judgment. The court also denied the unions' application for the certification necessary to an interlocutory appeal under Title 28, United States Code, § 1292(b). The narrow question presented by the court's order denying summary judgment, namely, whether there were any material issues of fact to be tried in the case, did not present such a "controlling question of law" as the statute contemplates should be certified for interlocutory appeal.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9026, 9026.60.

For the plaintiffs: Mailay, Morgan & Williams, New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Seymour W. Miller, Brooklyn, N. Y., for Seafarers International Union of North America; Cooper, Ostrin & DeVarco, New York, N. Y., for National Maritime Union and Joseph Curran; and Bigham, Englar, Jones & Houston, New York, N. Y., for the Republic of Panama.

For prior opinions of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,323 and 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,220.

Memorandum

[Summary Judgment—Reargument]

BRYAN, District Judge [In full text]: Defendants' motion for reargument is granted.

On reargument I have considered the defendants' contentions that their motion for summary judgment, which I denied in my decision of February 20, 1959 [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,323], should have been granted. It is the burden of the party who moves for summary judgment to establish that there are no material issues of fact which require a trial. I am not persuaded that the defendants have met that burden.

[Interlocutory Appeal]

Nor am I persuaded that my order denying summary judgment "involved a controlling question of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion and that an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate determination of the litigation" within the meaning of 28 U. S. C. § 1292(b).

The view of the Court of Appeals of this circuit as to the proper basis on which motions for summary judgment should be determined (see Arnstein v. Porter, 2 Cir., 154 F. 2d 464; Doehler Metal Furniture Co. v. United States, 2 Cir., 149 F. 2d 130) makes it plain to me that the narrow question as to whether there are any material issues of fact to be tried in this case does not present such "a controlling question of law" as the statute contemplates should be certified for interlocutory appeal.

[Ruling]

On reargument I adhere to my decision of February 20, 1959 denying defendants' motion for summary judgment and deny defendants' application for an order pursuant to 28 U. S. C. § 1292(b).

It is so ordered.

[¶ 69,441] United States v. True Temper Corporation.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. Civil Action No. 58 C 1158. Dated August 20, 1959.

Case No. 1402 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Prohibited—Price Fixing—Golf Club "Shafts."—A manufacturer of steel shafts for golf clubs was prohibited by a consent decree from entering into or enforcing any agreement with any other person to fix prices, terms, or conditions for the sale of such steel shafts to or by any third person.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2011.181; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.600.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Prohibited—Allocation of Territories, Markets, or Customers.—A manufacturer of steel shafts for golf clubs was prohibited by a consent decree from entering into or enforcing any agreement with any other person to allocate or divide territories, markets, or customers for the manufacture, sale, or distribution of such steel shafts.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.468; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.240.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Prohibited—Export and Import Control.—A manufacturer of steel shafts for golf clubs was prohibited by a consent decree from entering into or enforcing any agreement with any other person to restrict or limit imports into, or exports from, the United States of such steel shafts. The manufacturer was also enjoined from limiting, restricting, or preventing any other person from (1) importing into the United States steel shafts manufactured outside the United States, or (2) exporting outside the United States steel shafts manufactured in the United States.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.718; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.340.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Interlocking Directorates.—A manufacturer of steel shafts for golf clubs was prohibited by a consent decree from permitting any of its officers, directors, or employees to serve, at the same time, as an officer, director, or employee of any other company or person engaged in the manufacture, sale, or distribution of such steel shafts.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.735; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.420.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Stock or Asset Holdings in Related or Competing Companies.—A manufacturer of steel shafts for golf clubs was prohibited by a consent decree from acquiring, by purchase, merger, or otherwise, any stock, financial, or managerial interest in certain British and Australian producers and distributors of steel shafts. The manufacturer was also prohibited from (1) disposing of any of the stock required to be divested by the decree to any of its subsidiaries, officers, principal stockholders, individuals affiliated with the manufacturer or related to any of its officers or directors, or companies in which any officer or director of the manufacturer is a principal stockholder, or (2) reacquiring any stock or financial interest required to be divested under the decree. After the expiration of the seven months' period within which the divestiture was to be accomplished, the manufacturer was enjoined from exercising the voting power of any stock or financial interest which it might have in any of those British and Australian companies.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.833; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.340.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decree—Specific Relief—Divestiture of Stock Holdings in Foreign Companies—Resignation of Employees from "Interlocking" Positions.—A manufacturer of steel shafts for golf clubs was ordered by a consent decree to divest itself of all stock or financial interest which it might have in certain British and Australian producers and distributors of steel shafts. If the divestiture was not accomplished within a designated period, the court would enter an order providing for (1) the transfer, by the manufacturer, of such stock or financial interest to a trustee to be appointed by the court, and (2) authority in such trustee to sell or otherwise dispose of such stock or financial interest upon such terms as may appear appropriate to the court after the parties have had an opportunity to be heard. In addition, the decree ordered the resignation of each of the manufacturer's officers, directors, or employees from any position held by them, at the time of the entry of the decree, with any of those British and Australian companies.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.10, 8301.60.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decree—Permissive Provisions—Patent and Trade-mark Rights.—A consent decree which prohibited a manufacturer of steel shafts for golf clubs from restricting or preventing the importation into, or exportation from, the United States of such steel shafts provided that the manufacturer was not prohibited from exercising such lawful rights as it might have under the Federal patent and trade-mark laws.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8321.33, 8321.40, 8321.48, 8421.

For the plaintiff: Robert A. Bicks, Acting Assistant Attorney General; and W. D. Kilgore, Jr., George H. Schueller, Earl A. Jinkinson, Harry N. Burgess, Willis L. Hotchkiss, Thomas J. Rooney, and Samuel J. Betar, Jr., Attorneys, Department of Justice.

For the defendant: John C. Butler, Robert H. Bork, and John H. Watson, Jr.

Final Judgment

[Consent Decree]

CAMPBELL, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on June 30, 1958, and the defendant herein, True Temper Corporation, having appeared by its attorneys, and said plaintiff and defendant having severally consented to the entry of this Final Judgment herein, without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and without admission by any party in respect to any such issue;

Now, Therefore, before any testimony has been taken and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon consent as aforesaid of the parties hereto, it is hereby,

Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed as follows:

I

[Jurisdiction]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter herein and of the parties hereto. The complaint states claims for relief under Sections 1 and 2 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890 (15 U. S. C. §§ 1 and 2), entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Defendant" shall mean True Temper Corporation, a corporation which is organized and existing under the laws of the State of Ohio (and which prior to 1949 operated under the name of The American Fork and Hoe Company), having its principal place of business at 1623 Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio;

(B) "Foreign Company" or "Foreign Companies" shall mean any, some, or all of the following:

1. Accles and Pollock Limited, a company organized under the laws of the United Kingdom, having an office in Oldbury, England;

2. Australian Steel Golf Shafts Proprietary Limited, a corporation organized under and pursuant to the Companies Act (South Australia) 1936, having an office in Adelaide, Australia;

3. British Steel Golf Shafts Limited, a company organized under the laws of the United Kingdom, having an office in Oldbury, England;

4. British Tube Mills (Australia) Proprietary Limited, a corporation organized under and pursuant to the Companies Act (South Australia) 1936, having an office in Adelaide, Australia;

5. Stewarts & Lloyds (Australia) Proprietary Limited, a company incorporated in Australia with offices in Adelaide, Australia.

6. Tube Investments Limited, a company organized under the laws of the United Kingdom;

(C) "Person" shall mean any individual, partnership, firm, association, corporation or other legal entity.

(D) "Principal Stockholder" of a corporation shall mean any person who owns of record or beneficially 5 per cent or more of the outstanding voting stock of such corporation.

(E) "Steel Shafts" shall mean tubular steel shafts produced for use as a component part of golf clubs.

(F) "Subsidiary" of Defendant shall mean any corporation 50% or more of the voting stock of which is owned or, directly or indirectly, controlled by Defendant.

III

[Applicability]

The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to Defendant shall apply to its officers, directors, agents, employees, subsidiaries, successors and assigns, and to those persons in active concert or participation with it who receive notice of this Final Judgement by personal service or otherwise. For the purposes of this Final Judgment Defendant and its directors, agents, employees, subsidiaries, or any of them, when acting in such capacity, shall be deemed to be one person.

IV

[Cancellation of Agreements]

Defendant is hereby:

(A) Ordered and directed to terminate and cancel, to the extent not heretofore cancelled, expired, terminated or suspended, the following agreements:

(1) Agreement, dated January 13, 1930, between Accles and Pollock Limited and The American Fork and Hoe Company;

(2) Agreement, dated July 16, 1930, between Accles and Pollock Limited and The American Fork and Hoe Company;

(3) Agreement, dated June 1, 1931, among The American Fork and Hoe Company, Accles and Pollock Limited, and British Steel Golf Shafts Limited;

(4) License Agreement, dated December 12, 1931, between The American Fork and Hoe Company and Accles and Pollock Limited;

(5) License Agreement, dated October 13, 1932, between The American Fork and Hoe Company and Accles and Pollock Limited;

(6) Agreement, dated November 5, 1948, among The American Fork and Hoe Company, Accles and Pollock Limited, and British Steel Golf Shafts Limited;

(7) Agreement, dated February 15, 1949, between Accles and Pollock Limited and The American Fork and Hoe Company;

(8) Agreement, dated September 4, 1956, among Defendant, Accles and Pollock Limited, and British Steel Golf Shafts Limited;

(B) Ordered and directed to terminate and cancel, within ninety (90) days from the date of entry of this Final Judgment, each of the following agreements which shall not theretofore have been terminated or cancelled:

(1) License Agreement, dated September 14, 1939, between The American Fork and Hoe Company and British Tube Mills (Australia) Proprietary Limited;

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

(2) Agreement, dated December 16, 1938, between The American Fork and Hoe Company and Accles and Pollock Limited;

(3) Agreement, dated September 14, 1939, among The American Fork and Hoe Company, Accles and Pollock Limited, British Steel Golf Shafts Limited, British Tube Mills (Australia) Proprietary Limited, and Australian Steel Golf Shafts Proprietary Limited;

(4) Agreement, dated September 14, 1939, between The American Fork and Hoe Company and British Tube Mills (Australia) Proprietary Limited; provided, however, that Defendant may receive payment of any amounts which shall have accrued for payment under any of said agreements prior to the date of the termination required by this subsection (B);

(C) Enjoined and restrained from adhering to, performing, reviving or enforcing any agreement cancelled pursuant to subsection (A) or (B) of this Section IV, and from entering into adhering to any other agreement, contract or understanding which contains any provision contrary to or inconsistent with any provision of this Final Judgment.

V.

[Notice of Judgment]

Defendant is ordered and directed to furnish within ninety (90) days after the entry of this Final Judgment a true copy thereof to each Foreign Company which is a party to any agreement the termination or cancellation of which is ordered by Section IV of this Final Judgment.

VI.

[Allocation of Markets—Price Fixing]

Defendant is enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining or enforcing any contract, agreement or understanding with any other person, the purpose or effect of which is, or may be, to:

(A) Allocate or divide territories, markets or customers for the manufacture, sale or distribution of Steel Shafts;

(B) Restrict or limit imports into or exports from the United States of Steel Shafts;

(C) Fix prices, terms or conditions for the sale of Steel Shafts to or by any third person.

VII.

[Import and Export Controls]

Defendant is enjoined and restrained from, directly or indirectly, limiting, restricting or preventing or attempting to limit, restrict or prevent any other person from importing into the United States Steel Shafts manufactured outside the United States or from exporting outside the United States Steel Shafts manufactured in the United States provided, however, that nothing in this Final Judgment shall be deemed to prohibit Defendant from exercising such lawful rights as it may have under the laws of the United States relating to patents and trade-marks to prevent the unauthorized use, by others, of any patent or trade-mark issued to Defendant.

VIII.

[Divestiture Ordered]

(A) Upon expiration of seven months after entry of this Final Judgment, Defendant is enjoined and restrained from exercising, directly or indirectly, voting power of any stock or financial interest which Defendant may then own in any Foreign Company.

(B) Defendant is ordered and directed within thirty (30) days after entry of this Final Judgment to initiate such steps as may be necessary to divest itself, within seven (7) months after entry of this Final Judgment, of all stock or financial interest which it may have in any Foreign Company, and shall thereafter divest itself of such stock or financial interest.

(C) Defendant is enjoined and restrained from:

(1) Disposing of any of the stock required to be divested under the provisions of this Section VIII to any subsidiary of Defendant, or any officer or principal stockholder of Defendant or of its subsidiaries, or any individual directly or indirectly affiliated with Defendant or related to any of its officers or directors, or any company in which any officer or director of Defendant is a principal stockholder.

(2) Reacquiring any stock or financial interest required to be divested under the provisions of this Section VIII;

(3) Hereafter acquiring, by purchase, merger or otherwise, any stock, financial or managerial interest in and to any Foreign Company;

(4) Permitting any of its officers, directors, or employees to serve, at the same time, as an officer, director, or employee of any Foreign Company, or any other person engaged in the manufacture, sale or distribution of Steel Shafts.

(D) Defendant is ordered and directed within ninety (90) days after the date of this Final Judgment to file with this Court and serve upon the plaintiff conformed copies of the resignation of each of its officers, directors, or employees from any position held by them at the time of entry of this Final Judgment with any Foreign Company.

(E) If within a period of seven months after the entry of this Final Judgment Defendant has sold or otherwise divested itself of such stock or financial interest in any Foreign Company, Defendant is ordered and directed to file with this Court and serve upon plaintiff a report showing the fact and manner of Defendant's compliance with this requirement.

(F) If, at the end of such period of seven months after entry of this Final Judgment, Defendant shall not have sold or divested itself of such stock or financial interest in each Foreign Company then, and in that event, Defendant is ordered and directed to file with this Court and serve upon plaintiff a report of such fact. This Court shall then, and in that event, enter a further order herein providing for (1) transfer by Defendant of such stock or financial interest in such Foreign Companies to a trustee to be appointed by this Court and (2) authority in such trustee to sell or otherwise dispose of such stock or financial interest of Defendant in such Foreign Companies upon such terms and conditions as to this Court may appear appropriate after notice and opportunity by the parties to be heard. Such trustee shall have power to hold such stock or financial interest of Defendant, to receive and pay to Defendant any dividends accruing thereon and shall be paid such compensation as may be directed by this Court and such trustee shall submit to this Court and to plaintiff such reports as may be directed by this Court regarding the performance of his trust.

IX.

[Enforcement and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, and for no other purpose, and subject to any legally recognized privilege, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall upon the written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to Defendant made to its principal office, be permitted:

(A) Access, during the office hours of Defendant, to the books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records or documents in the possession or under the control of Defendant relating to any matters contained in this Final Judgment; and

(B) Subject to the reasonable convenience of Defendant and without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers or employees of Defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters.

Upon such written request Defendant shall submit such reports in writing to the Department of Justice with respect to matters contained in this Final Judgment as may from time to time be necessary for the enforcement of said Judgment. No information obtained by means provided in this Section IX shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Executive Branch of plaintiff, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

X.

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained for the purpose of enabling either party to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the modification of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith and for the punishment of violations thereof.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[¶ 69,442] Pepper Motors, Inc. v. American Motors Sales Corp. and Lloyd C. Cota.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York. Civil No. 18742. Dated June 30, 1959.

Automobile Dealer Franchise Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suits for Civil Damages Under Automobile Dealer Franchise Act—Scope of Act—Franchises—Oral Franchise Agreement.—An automobile distributor, in an action brought under the Automobile Dealer Franchise Act by a dealer which claimed that it had been orally appointed as a franchised dealer by the distributor's district manager, was denied a motion for summary judgment. The case could not be disposed of by summary judgment because there were issues of fact to be tried, namely, the sharply disputed issue of the district manager's authority to bind the distributor to an oral franchise contract and the conflicting versions of the events which took place when the oral agreement was allegedly made.

The action was dismissed, however, as to the district manager. He was an agent for a disclosed principal at all times and never acted on his own behalf. If there was a valid oral contract, the distributor was liable. If there was no contract, the district manager could not be liable.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9070.20.

For the plaintiff: Edward G. Wolff, by Morris Hass, of counsel.

For the defendants: Sullivan & Cromwell, by William E. Willis, of counsel.

[Motions]

Rayfiel, District Judge [In full text]: There are two motions before me. The first, by the defendant American Motors Sales Corporation, hereinafter called American, is for judgment on the pleadings, pursuant to Rule 12(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, or, in the alternative, for summary judgment pursuant to Rule 56 (b) of the said Rules. The second, by the defendant Lloyd C. Cota, hereinafter called Cota, was made under Rule 12(b) of said Rules for an order dismissing the second amended complaint on the ground that the Court lacks jurisdiction over the subject matter, or, in the alternative, dismissing the said complaint as against him for failure of the complaint to state a claim on which relief can be granted.

[Automobile Dealer Franchise Act]

This action was brought by the plaintiff, an automobile dealer, against the defendant American, the distributor of Nash automobiles, and Cota, one of its District Managers, pursuant to the Automobile Dealer Franchise Act, Title 15 U. S. § 1221-1225.

[Agreements]

The second amended complaint alleges that the defendant American appointed plaintiff as its franchised dealer. The defendant American contends that plaintiff's said claim is controverted by the "Application for Dealer Franchise" signed by an officer of the plaintiff, which contains the following provisions:

> "I understand that this application in no way constitutes any liability on my part, or on the part of American Motor Sales Corporation and that any Dealer Franchise Agreement that I may sign is not binding on the part of American Motor Sales Corporation until it has been approved and signed by the Vice President in charge of Sales, General or Assistant General Sales Manager of the Manufacturer or an executive designated by any of them at the Manufacturer's central office, Detroit, Michigan."

It also points out that the Dealer Franchise Agreement, which was signed by the same official of the plaintiff, contained this provision:

> "7. This Dealer Franchise Agreement shall not be valid or in effect unless executed by a Zone Manager of American Motors Sales Corporation and approved by the Vice President in Charge of Sales, General, or Assistant General Sales Manager of the Manufacturer or an Executive designated by any of them."

[Alleged Oral Agreement]

The plaintiff argues, however, that it does not rely on the written documents, but rather, on an oral agreement entered into when, it claims, Cota, on behalf of the defendant, appointed it as a franchised dealer in the Village of Valley Stream. The affidavit submitted on behalf of the plaintiff alleges that Cota accepted from it a written order for 13 cars and received its check for $3,754.00, drawn to the order of American, as a deposit thereon, after telling the plaintiff's president that the written applications were mere formalities only.

[Summary Judgment Denied]

Since it is clear that there are issues of fact to be tried herein this case cannot be disposed of by summary judgment. We have the sharply disputed issue of Cota's authority to bind the defendant American to an oral franchise contract as well as the conflicting versions of the events which took place on April 10, 1958, when, according to the plaintiff, the oral agreement was made. American's motion is, therefore, denied.

[Dismissal as to Agent]

Cota's motion to dismiss is granted. He was at all times an agent for a disclosed principal. He never acted on his own behalf, nor does the complaint so allege. If there was a valid oral contract American is liable to plaintiff thereunder. If the trial Court should find, however, that there was no contract, then, of course, Cota cannot be liable. Cota's motion is granted.

Settle order on notice.

[¶ 69,443] Titial V. De Candido, d. b. a. Rex Pharmacy v. Harry Wagonfeld, Louis Wagonfeld, and Max Wagonfeld, d.b.a. World Merchandise Exchange and World Merchandise Exchange Trading Company, Inc.

In the New York Supreme Court, New York County, Special and Trial Term, Part V. 141 N. Y. L. J., No. 38, page 1. Decided August 11, 1959. Dated August 21, 1959.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Enforcement Action—Who May Maintain Suit—Retailer's Suit Sponsored by Trade Association—Retail and Wholesale Prices—Defenses—Lack of Enforcement Activity.—A retail pharmacist, in a fair trade action against defendants who were engaged in the wholesale as well as the retail business, was denied an injunction where, among other things, the evidence indicated that the suit was sponsored by an association of retail pharmacists, all of whom competed with each other. The plaintiff testified that he had never complained to the defendants, but had asked the association to bring the suit for him. A fair trade "booklet" and letters were not sent by any manufacturer, but by the association of retailers with a view to fixing prices at the retail level of competition. Also, the plaintiff never notified the defendants of any alleged damage to its business; the evidence indicated that the defendants were licensed drug wholesalers as well as licensed retail pharmacists, and although the plaintiff complained to the association about the "competitive" prices of other stores, apparently no action was taken against those others.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3186.34, 3330.34, 3362.34, 3440.34.

Fair Trade—Defenses to Enforcement Action—Price Violations by Enforcing Party—Size of Price Reduction—De Minimis Not Applicable.—In a fair trade enforcement action, a retail pharmacist who had himself resorted to practices that were "within the ambit of condemnation as unfair competition" was denied an injunction to restrain defendants from selling below fair trade prices. There was testimony that the plaintiff, on at least two occasions, gave discounts and failed to collect the applicable sales and excise taxes. The plaintiff was not permitted to urge that the sums were trifling and that the principle of de minimis applied, because the principal amounts in these transactions are not large frequently, and the diminution in price which gives rise to the claim of unfair practice is even more trifling.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3452.34.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Fair Trade—Person Who May Establish Fair Trade Prices—Suit by Retailer—Manufacturers Listed in Complaint—Authority of Manufacturers to Enforce Fair Trade Contracts.—A retail pharmacist who sought to enforce the fair trade contracts of manufacturers listed in his complaint was denied an injunction to restrain defendants from selling below fair trade prices where he failed to prove that those manufacturers were authorized or empowered to enforce fair trade contracts in the State of New York or that they fell within the category of those firms permitted to enforce fair trade contracts.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3172.34.

For the plaintiff: Walsh, Aarons, Salonger & Fleishaber.

For the defendants: W. Edward Woods.

[Fair Trade Action]

HOFSTADTER, Justice [In full text]: Plaintiff's complaint is by a pharmacist-retailer against defendants, likewise engaged in retail as well as wholesale business, under sections 369-a and 369-b of the General Business Law. It seeks to enforce the fair trade contract of the manufacturers listed in the complaint.

[Economic and Political Issues]

It would seem desirable to hold decision within narrow compass, to avoid judicial involvement in an underlying basic issue essentially economic, with overtones of a nature political in a broad sense. For there is a fundamental clash of interests between the producer and distributor of merchandise on the one hand, and the consumer on the other.

The latter is interested in purchasing goods at the lowest price possible; he is not concerned with whether the manufacturer or dealer makes a normal profit, or any. The manufacturer and middleman, however, are concerned that the production and distribution sequence should provide a margin of profit; and should as well afford scope for machinery replacement, research and experiment, as well as for retailing facilities. The contest has been transferred to the national stage at this session of Congress. A federal "fair trade" bill has been proposed as indeed favoring fair trade, and as an aid to small business. But it is opposed by executive and administrative agencies as a device to restrain trade and divide the market.

Those opposed to the fair trade principle and practice maintain that such laws are not salutary and that "fair trading" is in effect "unfair pricing," i. e., price fixing. Their opponents, however, insist that this is not price fixing by government; and that in free enterprise, manufacturer and retailer deserve the same protection enjoyed by labor and agriculture.

Doubtless, these sharp differences in attitudes have contributed to the variance in determining the constitutional competency of these enactments. Though invalidated in some jurisdictions they have been held constitutional in others, including our own state. The matter, then, is for application of our statutes. But it seems indicated that the statute be strictly applied and within the traditional framework of equitable principles when drastic injunctive relief is sought. Thus viewed, the record here will not justify intervention by the court.

[Sponsor of Suit]

The evidence indicated that the suit was sponsored by the New York State Pharmacy Association; an association comprised of retailers, all of whom compete with each other. The plaintiff testified that he never complained to the defendants, but he had asked the association to bring this suit for him. The fair trade booklet as well as the fair trade letters were sent not by any manufacturer, but by an association of retailers with a view to fixing prices at the retail level of competition.

[Enforcement Activity]

The evidence, too, reveals that defendants are licensed drug wholesalers as well as having a pharmacy license. Their place of business is located in a commerical area over one mile from plaintiff's place of business. Though plaintiff complained to the association of which he is a member about other stores located on Seventeenth Street —in closer proximity to defendant's place of business than that of plaintiff—with respect to their sales at competitive rather than alleged fair trade prices, apparently no action was taken. It is noteworthy that plaintiff never notified the defendants of any alleged damages to his business.

[Violations by Enforcing Party]

Among other issues raised, is that plaintiff himself sold the products of manufacturers listed in the complaint at prices less than the alleged fair trade prices mentioned therein, and that plaintiff was therefore barred from obtaining any relief under the General Business Law. This defense is a valid bar to relief.

Defendant's witness, Dwoskin testified that the plaintiff himself on at least two occasions gave discounts and failed to collect the applicable sales and excise taxes. It is reasonably inferable that this was all in the course of the day's work and not isolated transactions. Thus, it may be concluded that this particular (nominal) plaintiff himself resorted to practices that are within the ambit of condemnation as unfair competition. It will not lie in his mouth to urge that the sum or sums were trifling and of marginal measure—and that the principle of de minimis is operative. For, indeed, in these and similar transactions, the principal amounts themselves are not large frequently; and the diminution in price which gives rise to the claim of unfair practice is even more trifling.

In this view the plaintiff may not have the drastic equitable relief of injunction (Modin Chemists, Inc., v. Howard & Linder Drug Co., Inc., New York County, N. Y. L. J., April 6, 1959, Aurelio, J.; Mandell v. Lowerre's Pharmacy, Inc. [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,296], Kings County, N. Y. L. J., March 9, 1959, Rabin, J.; Anderson v. Senbec Sales Corp'n [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,287], Kings County, N. Y. L. J., February 10, 1959, Friedman, J.; Center Lane Pharmacy, Inc., v. Stein [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,288], Nassau County, N. Y. L. J., February 20, 1959, Meyer, J.; see also Fogel v. Bolet [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,389], 194 Misc. 1019; Wesinger v. Rae, Supreme Court, Queens County, N. Y. L. J., May 20, 1959, at p. 14, Pette, J.; Pordes v. Lythe [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,999], 2 Misc. 2d 323).

[Persons Authorized to Enforce Fair Trade Contracts]

Moreover, plaintiff failed to prove that the manufacturers listed in the complaint are authorized or empowered to enforce fair trade contracts in the State of New York or that they fall within the category of those firms permitted to enforce fair trade contracts (see Automotive Electric Service Corp'n v. Times Square Stores Corp'n, 175 Misc. 865; Faber Co. & Greg, Inc., v. Korvette, Inc. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,491], Supreme Court, New York County, Special Term, Part III, N. Y. L. J., September 28, 1956, Hecht, J.).

[Complaint Dismissed]

Complaint dismissed and judgment for the defendants accordingly. The foregoing constitutes the decision of the court under section 440 of the Civil Practice Act. Settle judgment.

[¶ 69,444] Bertha Building Corporation v. National Theatres Corporation.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. No. 288—October Term, 1958. Docket No. 25485. Argued May 12, 1959. Decided August 24, 1959.

Appeal from an order of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, HON. JOSEPH ZAVATT, Judge, which denied defendant's motion for summary judgment. Affirmed.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Appeal—Remand—Right to Raise Question of Law Not Raised on Appeal—"Law of the Case"—Waiver and Estoppel.—A defendant was not estopped from urging, on remand, the applicability of a New York three-year statute of limitations, although (1) the defendant, in earlier proceedings before a trial court, had conceded, and the trial court had concluded, that "the Statute of Limitations of New York . . . is six years," and (2) the defendant, on an earlier appeal, had not urged the applicability of the New York three-year statute. While the problem involved is sometimes described as governed by "the law of the case,"

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

the question was not one of overruling an earlier decision by another judge of the same court but, rather, whether the defendant was precluded by waiver and estoppel from contending that the action was barred by the three-year New York statute. Distinguishing a case in which a defendant had tardily presented a factual defense after the case had been tried on the merits, appealed, reversed, and remanded for a determination of the plaintiff's damages, the court noted that here the defendant's motion for summary judgment, based on the three-year New York statute of limitations, raised a question of law which, if sustained, would prevent any litigation on the merits of the plaintiff's cause. Under those particular circumstances, the defendant should not be estopped.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9015.45.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Statute of Limitations—Applicable Statute—Treble Damage Action Not One for "Penalty or Forfeiture."—In a treble damage action brought in a Federal District Court sitting in New York, the Federal four-year statute of limitations was not applicable because it was not enacted until several years after the action was commenced. In the absence of an applicable Federal statute of limitations, the Federal courts look to the statute of the forum. Therefore, the court was required to determine whether a New York six-year or three-year statute applied to the plaintiff's federally created cause of action. The six-year statute applies to actions "to recover upon a liability created by statute, except a penalty or forfeiture," while the three-year statute applies to actions "upon a statute for a penalty or forfeiture." The choice of the appropriate statute turned upon an interplay of Federal and state law. It was for the New York courts to determine what was meant by the word "penalty" in the New York three-year statute, but the purposes attributable to the Federal antitrust laws were governed by Federal law. The problem, as was stated in Leonia Amusement Corp. v. Loew's Inc., 1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,592, involved a determination, under Federal law, of the essential nature of a claim based on Section 4 of the Clayton Act, and a determination, under state law, of the statute of limitations which the New York courts would hold applicable to that type or class of claim. Applying those principles, the court concluded that the six-year New York statute was applicable, because (1) under Federal law, a suit for treble damages is one for civil damages that are exemplary in part only, and (2) the New York Court of Appeals does not regard an action of such character as one for a "penalty or forfeiture."

The court noted, however, that the issue as to the applicability of the New York statute would become moot if it were found that the action was barred in California (where the cause of action arose), and therefore barred in New York by virtue of a New York "borrowing" statute.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.100.

For the plaintiff: Corcoran, Kostelanetz, Gladstone & Lowell (Boris Kostelanetz and Nick C. Spanos, of counsel).

For the defendant: Royall, Koegel, Harris & Caskey (John F. Caskey, Frederick W. R. Pride, and Charles F. Young, of counsel).

Affirming an order of the U. S. District Court, Eastern District of New York, 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,166. For a prior decision of the U. S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, see 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,818; for prior opinions of the U. S. District Court, Eastern District of New York, see 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,308, 1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,897 and 67,793, and 1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,271.

Before: Swan, Hincks and Moore, Circuit Judges.

[Treble Damage Action—Statute of Limitations]

Swan, Circuit Judge [In full text]: National Theatres Corporation has appealed from an order which denied its motion for summary judgment in this action for treble damages under section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 15. The motion was based on the ground that the New York three year statute of limitations, prescribed by § 49(3) of the Civil Practice Act, barred the action. Without reaching the merits of the motion, Judge Zavatt denied it on the theory that defendant was precluded from relying on the three year statute by the doctrine of "the law of the case." His opinion is reported in [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,166] 166 F. Supp. 805. Leave to appeal was granted under the Interlocutory Appeals Act, 28 U. S. C. A. § 1292(b).

[Prior Proceedings]

For an understanding of the matters to be subsequently discussed, it is desirable to give a brief statement of what had occurred in the case prior to the making of defendant's motion for summary judgment.

[Accrual of Cause of Action]

The complaint was filed in the court below on September 5, 1951. It alleged that plaintiff is a California corporation which owned and operated a theatre in Los Angeles until forced to dispose of it by reason of violations by defendant of the anti-trust laws. Concededly plaintiff's alleged cause of action arose in California and accrued no later than July 4, 1935—more than 16 years before the present action was commenced. Defendant's answer, filed December 26, 1951, pleaded three statutes of limitations: (1) The California three year statute, made applicable by New York's "borrowing statute," § 13 of the Civil Practice Act; (2) the New York three year statute, applicable to "An action upon a statute for a penalty or forfeiture where the action is given to the person aggrieved * * *," § 49(3) of the Civil Practice Act; and (3) the New York six year statute, applicable to "An action to recover upon a liability created by statute, except a penalty or forfeiture," § 48(2) of the Civil Practice Act.

In December 1955 a separate trial of defendant's limitation defenses in this case and in the companion case of Gumbiner Theatrical Enterprises, Inc. v. National Theatres Corporation [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,308], was had before Judge Galston. In a brief submitted to him defendant stated:

> "If this court finds, as we believe it must, that the substantial and continuous business activities of National in California made it amenable to suit there, the three-year California statute is applicable by virtue of section 13 of the New York Civil Practice Act. Both claims would then be barred by the California statute without consideration of the questions whether the New York statute is six years or three years,* or whether the institution of United States v. Paramount on July 20, 1938, operated to toll the New York statute during some or all of the time it was pending."

It was in this setting that there was submitted to and adopted by Judge Galston the following conclusion of law:

> "Plaintiffs and defendant concede for the purposes of these cases, and the court concludes that the Statute of Limitations of New York, where these actions were instituted, is six years. Civil Practice Act of New York, Section 48."

[Remand—Contention Not Urged on Appeal]

However, his decision was that the California three year statute barred the actions. Accordingly he dismissed the complaints. His opinion is reported in [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,308], 140 F. Supp. 909. On appeal this court reversed and remanded in the case of Bertha Building Corporation on the ground that the plaintiff was entitled to a jury trial of the issue raised by defendant's plea of the California statute, namely, whether defendant was suable there. Bertha Building Corp. v. National Theatres Corp. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,818], 248 F. 2d 833, 836, 841, cert. den. 356 U. S. 936. On the appeal the defendant did not urge the applicability of the New York three year statute. It was after the remand that defendant moved for summary judgment.

["Law of the Case"]

We agree with appellant that the doctrine of "the law of the case" does not preclude consideration of the merits of the motion. That doctrine was discussed at length in Dictograph Products Company v. Sonotone Corporation, 2 Cir. 230 F. 2d 131, and the rigidity of the rule expressed in Commercial Union of America v. Anglo-South American Bank, 2 Cir. 10 F. 2d 937 was expressly overruled. As explained in the Dictograph case, even when an issue has been decided by a district judge, another judge of the same court may nevertheless come to a different conclusion. Since Judge Galston decided that the California statute was a bar, he had no need to consider whether the three year or six year New York statute was applicable in the case of Bertha Building Corporation, and appellant's concession before him that the six year statute applied should not be regarded as conclusive in the motion subsequently brought on before Judge Zavatt. However, the doctrine of the law of the case, in the sense discussed in the Dictograph opinion, does not really fit these circumstances. The question is not one of overruling an earlier decision by another judge of the same court.

* "We concede that the cases seem to hold that the New York statute is six years * * *"

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Waiver and Estoppel]

The question presented is really whether defendant is precluded by waiver and estoppel from contending that the action is barred by the three year New York statute of limitations. This question involves the public policy against piecemeal litigation and the timeliness of the motion. The problem is sometimes described as governed by "the law of the case." It was so described in Sorensen v. Pyrate Corporation, 9 Cir. 65 F. 2d 982, 984-5. Judge Zavatt cited that case in support of his conclusion that

> "The defendant should not now be permitted to ground a motion for summary judgment upon a contention which might have been presented, and which is contrary to its concession upon the trial and the appeal."

The Sorensen case is distinguishable. There, after trial on the merits and an appeal, in which the judgment was reversed and the cause remanded for determination of the plaintiff's damages, the defendant tried to plead that the contract was void because of the plaintiff's fraud—a defense which might have been raised when the case was tried on the merits. The court held that the law of the case precluded the tardy presentation of such factual defense. Here, defendant's motion raises a question of law only which, if sustained, would prevent the necessity of a jury trial on the suability of defendant in California as well as any litigation on the merits of plaintiff's cause. Under the particular circumstances of this case, we do not think that the defendant should be estopped. Cf. Emich v. General Motors Corp. [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,249], 7 Cir., 229 F. 2d 714, 718. Plaintiff has cited no authority for estopping a party from raising a question of law under such circumstances.

[Applicable State Statute]

We now pass to a consideration of the merits of the motion. The present federal statute of limitations, 15 U. S. C. A. § 15 (b), is not applicable because it was enacted several years after the present action was brought. In the absence of an applicable federal statute of limitations, federal courts look to the statute of the forum.[1] Hence we must ascertain whether, if it shall be found that the three year California statute has been tolled,* the six year or three year New York statute applies to plaintiff's federally created cause of action. The choice of the appropriate New York statute turns on an interplay of federal and state law. Whether the three year or six year statute is to be applied by the federal court, the latter must accept the statutes as construed and interpreted by the New York courts. It is for them to determine what is meant by the word "penalty" in the three year statute. But the purposes attributable to the federal anti-trust laws must be governed by federal law. Accordingly, to determine whether a suit for treble damages under section 4 of the Clayton Act has the characteristics of actions encompassed by the three year New York statute federal decisions must be examined. The problem was well stated by Judge Ryan in Leonia Amusement Corp. v. Loew's Inc. [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,592], (S. D. N. Y.), 117 F. Supp. 747 at 752.[2] See also Rawlings v. Ray, 312 U. S. 96, 98.

["Penalty"]

Considered in the light of these principles, the Supreme Court's decision in Chattanooga Foundry and Pipe Works v. Atlanta, 203 U. S. 390, is not decisive of this case. There the Supreme Court held that an action for [1] Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works v. Atlanta, 203 U. S. 390, 397; Cope v. Anderson, 331 U. S. 461, 463.

* Unless it shall be found that the California statute has been tolled, it will be applicable under the New York borrowing statute and whether the three year or six year New York statute would otherwise be applicable will become moot for purposes of this case.

[2] "The problem, therefore, is two-fold: (a) what in federal law is the essential nature of a claim arising under Section 4 of the Clayton Act as amended [15 U. S. C. A. § 15]; and (b) what New York statute of limitations would the New York courts hold applicable to this type or class of claim."

treble damages under the anti-trust laws was not an action for a penalty within the meaning of the federal statute of limitations for penal suits.[3] But the word "penalty" in a federal statute has a different meaning than the same word in the New York statute. The federal statute of limitations for penal actions applies only to actions on behalf of the United States and qui tam actions. Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 668, 673. The New York three year statute by its express terms applies to actions "by the person aggrieved" and thus, unlike the federal statute, applies to private actions. Huntington v. Attrill, 146, supra, 677-78.

[New York Decisions]

After an extensive review of New York decisions, Judge Ryan concluded that the New York three year statute did not apply to private suits for damages which are exemplary in part but not wholly unrelated to actual loss. Accordingly, he held on the basis of appropriate federal decisions, that the six year New York statute and not its three year statute was applicable to an action for treble damages under the anti-trust laws. Four years later in Banana Distributors v. United Fruit Company [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,881] (D. C. S. D. N. Y.), 158 F. Supp. 160, after a thorough review of authorities, Judge Levet concluded that the three year statute should be applied.[4]

Both this appeal and the appeal in Banana Distributors have been ably argued with extensive citation of authorities. We have examined these cases but do not find it necessary here to discuss them. Whatever doubt might have been entertained prior to the Court of Appeals decision in Sicolo v. Prudential Savings Bank of Brooklyn, 5 N. Y. 2d 254, decided subsequent to Judge Levet's decision, that decision makes it plain that Leonia correctly anticipated the trend of New York law. Sicolo, a member of the New York City Fire Department, was injured on December 23, 1951 while helping to put out a fire in a building owned by the Prudential Savings Bank of Brooklyn. More than four years after the accident he filed an amended complaint based on § 205a of the General Municipal Law. That statute provides in substance that the injured fireman was entitled to recover his actual damages, but in no event less than $1,000, regardless of actual loss.[5] The defendant moved to dismiss the action because it was not begun within three years from the accrual of the action. The Court of Appeals said that the question for decision was whether the three year limitation of § 49(3) of the Civil Practice Act or the six year limitation of § 48(2) was applicable. After reviewing numerous authorities, both state and federal, it held that the action was not one for a "penalty or forfeiture" and that the six year statute applied. The views expressed therein and the treatment of the cases cited make it plain that the New York Court of Appeals does not regard actions for civil damages which are made exemplary in part only, as falling within § 49(3). A suit for treble damages under the anti-trust laws is plainly of this character.

[Three Year Statute Applicable]

Accordingly, the six year and not the three year New York statute is applicable to anti-trust actions brought in a federal court sitting in New York, at least unless under New York's "borrowing statute" a shorter period of limitations is applicable under the law of the State where the cause of action arose. The denial of the motion for summary judgment was correct and the order is affirmed on this ground.

---

[3] At the time of the Chattanooga decision section 1047 of the Rev. Stat. provided a five year limitation on any "suit for a penalty or forfeiture * * * accruing under the law of the United States." That limitation is now embodied in 28 U. S. C. A. § 2462 which applies to "an action * * * for the enforcement of any civil fine, penalty or forfeiture, pecuniary or otherwise."

[4] This case is pending on appeal and the decision therein will be handed down herewith [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,445].

[5] So far as material this section provided: "* * * in the event any accident, causing injury * * *, occurs directly or indirectly as a result of any neglect, omission, wilful or culpable negligence of any person or persons in failing to comply with the requirements of any of the statutes, ordinances, rules, orders and requirements of the federal, state, county, village, town or city governments * * *, the person or persons guilty of said neglect * * * shall be liable to pay any officer, member, agent or employee of a fire department injured * * * while in the discharge or performance of any duty imposed by the * * * superior officer of the fire department * * * not less than one thousand dollars * * * such liability to be determined and such sums recovered in an action by any person injured * * * as aforesaid."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[¶ 69,445] Banana Distributors, Inc. v. United Fruit Company and Fruit Dispatch Company.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. No. 289—October Term, 1958. Docket No. 25457. Argued May 12, 1959. Decided August 24, 1959.

Cross-appeals from an interlocutory order of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, Hon. Richard H. Levet, Judge, involving rulings as to the applicable statute of limitations in an action for treble damages under section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 15. Reversed and Remanded.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Defenses—Statute of Limitations—Applicable Statute—Test as to Whether Defendant "Without the State" Under State Tolling Provision.—In a treble damage action brought in a Federal District Court in New York, on a cause of action that arose in Connecticut, the Connecticut statutes of limitation were applicable by virtue of a New York "borrowing statute." The Connecticut statutes were not "tolled," under a Connecticut statute excluding periods in which defendants are "without the state," because the defendant was "transacting business" in Connecticut and was, therefore, subject to suit there under Section 12 of the Clayton Act. The purpose of that tolling statute is "to preserve the right of action during the absence of the defendant when it was impossible to serve him with process." Here, under Section 12 of the Clayton Act, the action could have been filed in a Federal court in Connecticut and process could have been served on the defendants in another district. Thus, it was consonant with the purpose of the Connecticut tolling statute to hold that, as a matter of Connecticut law, the state's statute of limitations was not suspended where the defendant was subject to suit in Connecticut under Section 12 of the Clayton Act.

Regardless of how the Connecticut courts would decide the question, the present court would hold, as a matter of Federal law, that in a suit to enforce a Federal claim, the existence of a Federal statute rendering the defendant subject to suit in Connecticut precluded the adoption of "state service of process rules" to determine whether the defendant was "without the state" within the meaning of a state tolling statute. State law may not be adopted where it supplants or conflicts with existing Federal law.

The court refused to grant a directed verdict in favor of another defendant, the corporation's "parent," since the evidence was conflicting as to whether its subsidiary was "transacting business" in Connecticut as its agent or as an independent contractor.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9008.150, 9010.100, 9010.200.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Defenses—Statute of Limitations—Applicable State Statute.—For reasons set out in Bertha Building Corp. v. National Theatres Corp., 1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,444, a Federal appellate court reversed a trial court's ruling that a New York three-year statute of limitations, covering any action upon a statute for a penalty or forfeiture, rather than a New York six-year statute of limitations, covering any action to recover upon a liability created by statute (except a penalty or forfeiture), was applicable to a private treble damage antitrust action brought in a Federal District Court in New York. However, the question as to the applicable New York statute was rendered moot, as to one of the defendants, by the court's finding that the Connecticut statutes of limitations (the cause of action arose in Connecticut) controlled the case against it. As to another defendant, the applicability of the Connecticut statutes was yet to be determined.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.100.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Proper Judicial District—Where Suit May Be Brought—"Transacting Business"—Instructions to Jury.—A Delaware corporation which solicited orders for the purchase of bananas in Connecticut and maintained a permanent office there, staffed with personnel who (1) collected the proceeds of local sales, (2) maintained local bank accounts, (3) received and investigated claims by local purchasers, (4) arranged for customers to use the trademark of the corporation's "parent," and (5) arranged for the service departments of the corporation's jobbers and dealers to provide customers with technical and promotional assistance was "transacting business" in Connecticut within the meaning of Section 12 of the Clayton Act. The test of venue under that section is "the practical, every-day business or commercial concept of doing business or carrying on business 'of any substantial character' . . . ." Technical criteria, such as "mere solicitation" or "solicitation plus," are not determinative. Thus, a trial court which told a jury that "the mere solicitation of business and the mere presence of a soliciting agent of a foreign corporation will not suffice to bring the corporation within the terms of 'doing business' and to make it present in the state so as to subject it to process" defined "transacting business" to require a greater degree of business conduct than that demanded by the Clayton Act.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9008.210, 9014.35.

For the plaintiff: Austin, Burns, Appel & Smith, New York, N. Y. Of counsel: Arnold, Fortas & Porter, Washington, D. C. (Thurman Arnold, Abe Krash and Stuart J. Land); Robert E. Nickerson, Greenwich, Conn.; Blackwell Smith, New York, N. Y.; and Ernest Leff, Colchester, Conn.

For the defendants: Davis, Polk, Wardwell, Sunderland & Kiendl, New York, N. Y. Of counsel: Theodore Kiendl, Ralph M. Carson, Edwin J. Jacob, and Hal F. Reynolds.

Reversing and remanding an order of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, pursuant to 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,881. For prior opinions of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,057; 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,876; 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,532, 68,446, 68,445, and 68,343; and 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,232.

Before: SWAN, HINCKS and MOORE, Circuit Judges.

[Appeals]

SWAN, Circuit Judge [In full text]: This is an appeal by plaintiff and cross-appeal by defendants from different paragraphs of an interlocutory order entered October 14, 1958 which involved rulings with respect to the statute of limitations applicable in this action for treble damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act. Leave to appeal was granted to both parties under the recently enacted Interlocutory Appeals Act, 28 U. S. C. A. § 1292(b).

Plaintiff, a Connecticut corporation, was engaged in the business of selling in that state bananas purchased from defendants. Defendant United Fruit Company, a New Jersey corporation, is a producer of bananas grown in Central and South America and transported by vessel to the United States. Defendant Fruit Dispatch Company, a Delaware corporation, is a wholly owned subsidiary of United Fruit and is the importer and distributor of United Fruit's bananas. On September 3, 1953 plaintiff filed its complaint in the Southern District of New York, alleging violations by defendants of the federal anti-trust laws from 1946 to the date of suit and seeking recovery of treble damages. Concededly plaintiff's cause of action, if any, arose in Connecticut.

[Statutes of Limitations]

There being no applicable federal statute of limitations,[1] it was conceded that the federal courts look to the New York statutes of limitation. See Bertha Building Corp. v. National Theatres Corp. [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,444] filed herewith. Pursuant to the so-called "borrowing statute" of New York, section 13 of the Civil Practice Act,[2] defendants pleaded the Connecticut one year statute[3] and in the alternative the three year statute.[4] Defendants also pleaded the three year New York statute of § 49(3) Civil Practice Act and in the alternative

[1] The federal statute, 15 U. S. C. A. § 15(b), was not enacted until July 1955.

[2] Section 13 Civil Practice Act provides: "Where a cause of action arises outside of this state, an action cannot be brought in a court of this state to enforce such cause of action after the expiration of the time limited by the laws of this state or of the state or country where the cause of action arose * * *"

[3] Conn. Gen. Stats. § 8325.

[4] Conn. Gen. Stats. § 8316.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

the six year statute of § 48(2) Civil Practice Act. In December 1957 a preliminary jury trial was held in accordance with the opinion in Bertha Building Corp. v. National Theatres Corp. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,818], 2 Cir. 248 F. 2d 833, cert. den. 356 U. S. 936, to determine whether the defendants were "without the state" of Connecticut, as contended by plaintiff, during each of the six years preceding the commencement of this action.

The Connecticut tolling statute provides that the time during which a defendant is "without the state" shall be excluded in computing the Connecticut period of limitations.[5] Judge Levet ruled that the "transacting business test" of section 12 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 22, was not applicable to the issue of whether defendants were "without the state" for purposes of the Connecticut tolling provision. Judge Levet's opinion embodying that ruling is reported in [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,876] 158 F. Supp. 153. The jury's verdict on the preliminary trial found that both defendants were without the state of Connecticut during the entire period in question.

Following the preliminary jury trial, Judge Levet filed an opinion, reported in [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,881] 158 F. Supp. 160, holding that the applicable statute of limitations is the three year limitation prescribed by § 49(3) Civil Practice Act rather than the six year period of § 48(2), as claimed by plaintiff. This ruling precluded plaintiff from recovering any damages for the period prior to September 3, 1950. A jury trial was then had on the merits of plaintiff's cause. When the jury was unable to agree on a verdict, a mistrial was declared and a new trial ordered. For the purposes of this new trial, pursuant to Rule 16 of the Fed. Rules Civ. Proc., Judge Levet entered the order which is before us on appeal. His ruling on the New York statute of limitations is set out in the first paragraph of this order and plaintiff's appeal challenges its correctness. For the reasons stated in our opinion in Bertha Building Corp. v. National Theatres Corp. [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,444], filed herewith, Judge Levet's ruling that the New York three year statute rather than the New York six year statute is applicable if the Connecticut statutes of limitation are tolled, must be reversed.*

[Issues]

Defendants' appeal challenges the second and third paragraphs of the aforesaid order. The second paragraph incorporates Judge Levet's ruling as to the non-applicability of the "transacting business" test of section 12 of the Clayton Act. The third paragraph denied defendants' several motions to set aside the jury's verdict in the preliminary trial as contrary to the weight of the evidence and contrary to law, and for a directed verdict n.o.v.

[Tolling of Statute]

On the defendants' appeal it is necessary to construe the Connecticut tolling statute in order to determine as to each defendant whether the pertinent Connecticut statute of limitations has been tolled; if so the pertinent New York statute will be applicable. The first question presented is the correctness of Judge Levet's ruling that the defendants' presence in Connecticut for purposes of applying the Connecticut tolling statute is to be measured by whether they were sufficiently transacting business there to sustain service of process upon them under the law of Connecticut rather than by whether they were transacting business there under the broader standards of section 12 of the Clayton Act which govern the propriety of venue in a federal anti-trust suit.[6] This section of the Clayton Act was considered at length in Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Materials Co., 273 U. S. 359. At pages 372-373 the opinion states:

> "And we think it clear that, as applied to suits against corporations for injuries sustained by violations of the Anti-Trust Act, its necessary effect was to enlarge

[5] Conn. Gen. Stats. § 8330.

* The pertinent New York statute will become applicable only if a shorter Connecticut statute has been tolled. As we hold in a later part of this opinion, the defendant Fruit Dispatch is entitled to a ruling, by way of a directed special verdict in the trial of the limitations issue, that as to it the Connecticut statute has not been tolled. Consequently the case against it will be controlled by the pertinent Connecticut statute.

[6] 15 U. S. C. A. § 22 reads as follows: "§ 22. District in which to sue corporation

Any suit, action, or proceeding under the antitrust laws against a corporation may be brought not only in the judicial district whereof it is an inhabitant, but also in any district wherein it may be found or transacts business; and all process in such cases may be served in the district of which it is an inhabitant, or wherever it may be found."

the local jurisdiction of the district courts so as to establish the venue of such a suit not only, as theretofore, in a district in which the corporation resides or is 'found,' but also in any district in which it 'transacts business'—although neither residing nor 'found' therein—in which case the process may be issued to and served in a district in which the corporation either resides or is 'found'; and, further, that a corporation is engaged in transacting business in a district, within the meaning of this section, in such sense as to establish the venue of a suit—although not present by agents carrying on business of such character and in such manner that it is 'found' therein and is amenable to local process,—if in fact, in the ordinary and usual sense, it 'transacts business' therein of any substantial character. * * *"

"We are further of opinion that a corporation is none the less engaged in transacting business in a district, within the meaning of this section—which deals with suits respecting unlawful restraints upon interstate trade—because of the fact that such business may be entirely interstate in character and be transacted by agents who do not reside within the district. * * *"

And at page 374, the court added:

"To construe the words 'or transacts business' as adding nothing of substance to the meaning of the words 'or is found,' as used in the Anti-Trust Act, and as still requiring that the suit be brought in a district in which the corporation resides or is 'found,' would to that extent defeat the plain purpose of this section and leave no occasion for the provision that the process might be served in a district in which the corporation resides or is found. And we find nothing in the legislative proceedings leading to its enactment which requires or justifies such a construction."

See also United States v. Scophony Corp. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,238], 333 U. S. 795, 807-808; United States v. National City Lines [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,259], 334 U. S. 573, 583.

It seems clear, therefore, that plaintiff could have filed its complaint in the federal court in Connecticut, if the defendants were "transacting business" there within the meaning of that phrase as construed in the Eastman Kodak decision, and could have had process served upon them in another district. Plaintiff, however, contends that Connecticut would nevertheless hold that the running of its statutes of limitations was suspended because under Connecticut law the defendants could not have been served with process.

[Controlling Law]

Since an action for treble damages under the anti-trust laws can be brought only in a federal court, there is of course no Connecticut decision which decides the precise point in issue here. The purpose of the Connecticut tolling statute, however, as clearly stated in Dorus v. Lyon, 92 Conn. 55, 57, 101 A. 490, 491 is "to preserve the plaintiff's right of action during a period when, by reason of the defendant's absence, it was impossible to commence an action in personam against the defendant." Accord Sage v. Hawley, 16 Conn. 106, 114-115. Although it is stated in Clegg v. Bishop, 105 Conn. 564, 136 A. 102, 104, that the object of the tolling statute is "to preserve the right of action during the absence of the defendant when it was impossible to serve him with process" we cannot regard that statement as supporting the plaintiff's position here. In the Clegg case, unlike the present case, service of process was required to subject the defendant to suit in Connecticut.

Consequently, we think it consonant with the purpose of the Connecticut tolling statute to hold that as a matter of Connecticut law the state's statutes of limitations were not suspended if the defendants were subject to suit in Connecticut under section 12 of the Clayton Act. Certainly we cannot see that any discernible policy of the Connecticut tolling statute or of the state would be furthered by holding otherwise. See Bauserman v. Blunt, 147 U. S. 647, 657, wherein the court said:

"In the absence of express statute or controlling adjudication to the contrary, two general rules are well settled * * * 2d. The bar of the statute cannot be postponed by the failure of the creditor to avail himself of any means within his power to prosecute or to preserve his claim."

See also Bertha Building Corp. v. National Theatres Corp. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,818], 248 F. 2d 835, 836; Hansen Packing Co. v. Swift & Co. (S. D. N. Y.), 27 F. Supp. 364.

However, we need not rest our holding here entirely on our view of how the Connecticut courts would decide this question if it could come before them. Even should the plaintiff's interpretation of Connecticut law be correct, we would nevertheless be constrained to hold as a matter of federal law that in a suit to enforce a federal claim, the existence of a federal statute rendering the defendant subject to suit in Connecticut precludes the adoption of state service of process rules to determine whether the defendant was without the state within the meaning of a state tolling statute. Cf. Rawlings v. Ray, 312 U. S. 96, 98 (1941); Bomar v. Keyes, 2 Cir. 162 F. 2d 136, 141; cf. also Ragan v. Merchant's Transfer & Warehouse Co., 337 U. S. 530, 533 (1948). While state law may be adopted by federal law where Congress has not spoken, in order to fill the interstices of federal enactments, it may not be adopted where it supplants or conflicts with existing federal law. Cf. Holmberg v. Armbrecht, 327 U. S. 392.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

["Transacting Business"]

Plaintiff argues that the question whether the jury should have been instructed with respect to the "transacting business" test of the Clayton Act is moot, because Judge Levet, despite his opinion rejecting that test, in fact charged the jury to find the defendants present if they believed the defendants "transacted business with a fair measure of permanence and continuity" within the state. But a reading of the full charge makes plain that he defined "transacting business" to require a greater degree of business conduct within the state than that demanded by the Clayton Act. For example, the jury was told that > "the mere solicitation of business and the mere presence of a soliciting agent of a foreign corporation will not suffice to bring the corporation within the terms of 'doing business' and to make it present in the state so as to subject it to process."

This plainly was an inadequate exposition of the test of "transacting business" as expounded in Eastman Kodak v. Southern Photo Materials Co., supra; United States v. Scophony Corp., supra; and United States v. National City Lines, supra. Technical criteria such as "mere solicitation" or "solicitation plus" are not determinative under section 12. The test of venue under section 12 is > "the practical, every-day business or commercial concept of doing business or carrying on business 'of any substantial character' * * *"

United States v. Scophony Corp. at page 807.

It is undisputed on this record that Fruit Dispatch solicited orders in Connecticut and performed other acts of business there.[1] Obviously, during the period in issue Fruit Dispatch was transacting business there within the meaning of section 12 of the Clayton Act. In our opinion it was entitled to a directed verdict that the Connecticut statute of limitations was not tolled as to it.

[Agency]

The remaining question with respect to the Connecticut tolling statute is whether Fruit Dispatch transacted business in Connecticut in the capacity of an agent of United Fruit and therefore made the latter equally amenable to suit within the state under section 12 of the Clayton Act. See United States v. Scophony [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,238], 333 U. S. 795; Waldron v. British Petroleum Co., Ltd. [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,653], 149 F. Supp. 830 (S. D. N. Y.); Rayco v. Chicoppee Manufacturing Corp., 148 F. Supp. 588 (S. D. N. Y.); United States v. Watchmakers of Switzerland, Inf. C. [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,096], 133 F. Supp. 40 (S. D. N. Y.). The jury's verdict that United Fruit was not present in Connecticut cannot stand because of the improper instruction regarding the test of transacting business. Since the jury found under the improper charge that Fruit Dispatch was not doing business in Connecticut it was rationally compelled to find that United Fruit was equally not present in the state. Therefore no finding may be attributed to the jury on the question of whether Fruit Dispatch transacted business in Connecticut as an agent of United Fruit.

[1] Fruit Dispatch maintained a permanent office in Hartford, Connecticut, whose personnel: (1) annually solicited orders for $2,500,000. to $3,000,000. worth of bananas and forwarded these orders to Fruit Dispatch's New York office for acceptance or rejection, (2) collected the proceeds of Connecticut sales and deposited them in bank accounts maintained in Connecticut by Fruit Dispatch for the purpose or regularly transmitting the funds to New York, (3) received and investigated claims by Connecticut purchasers and forwarded them to New York for determination, (4) arranged for customers to use United Fruit's trademark, and (5) arranged for Fruit Dispatch's jobbers and dealers service departments to provide customers with technical and promotional assistance.

Defendant United Fruit contends that under a proper test it is entitled to a directed verdict that it was present in Connecticut. At the preliminary trial officers of both defendant corporations testified about various managerial functions of Fruit Dispatch, including the price at which it sold bananas, which were supervised or controlled by officers of United Fruit during the period in issue. In rebuttal, plaintiff relied on two documents which it maintains showed that Fruit Dispatch acted as an independent contractor and not as an agent of United Fruit and contends that it is entitled to a directed verdict in its favor as against United Fruit. In our opinion the record does not justify a directed verdict for the plaintiff or United Fruit. See Bertha Building Corp. v. National Theatres Corp. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,818], 2 Cir. 248 F. 2d 833, 835.

[Reversed and Remanded]

Both on plaintiff's and the defendants' cross-appeals the judgment must be reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with the foregoing opinion. It is so ordered.

[¶ 69,446] Charles Lawlor and Mitchell Pantzer, co-partners, trading as Independent Poster Exchange v. National Screen Service Corporation, Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corp., Columbia Pictures Corp., Loew's Incorporated, RKO Radio Pictures Inc., 20th Century Fox Film Corporation, United Artists Corp., Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., Paramount Film Distributing Corp.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. No. 12,793. Argued May 27, 1959. Filed August 27, 1959.

On Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. C. WILLIAM KRAFT, JR.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Monopolization—Exclusive Manufacturing and Distribution Agreements—Accumulation of Copyright Licenses—Parallel Action in Selection of Licensee—Motion Picture Advertising Accessories.—Exclusive licenses under which motion picture producers and distributors granted to a manufacturer-distributor the right to manufacture and distribute their motion picture advertising accessories were not invalid per se under the antitrust laws; therefore, a trial court's dismissal of a company's action charging that it was injured in its business of leasing such accessories to motion picture exhibitors was affirmed. Exclusive agreements are not per se violative of the antitrust laws and are permitted in circumstances where the facts disclose a course of conduct and reasonableness of action not prohibited by the antitrust laws.

Standard motion picture advertising accessories created and manufactured for one picture could only be used in connection with that picture; therefore, they were not competitive articles. Each of the motion pictures was copyrighted, and the license agreements required the manufacturer-distributor to manufacture such accessories utilizing scenes and incidents from these pictures. The copyright law confers upon the owner of the copyright a limited monopoly and, as an incident thereof, confers upon the owner the right to license others. Such a license may be exclusive, and, if so, it grants the right to exclude others. Copyrights cannot be used to deter competition, or to extend the monopoly, or to break down competition in other areas; however, in the instant case, the articles which were licensed for manufacture and distribution were noncompetitive in nature and, therefore, no mere increase in the number of licenses obtained by one individual accomplished a restraint upon trade or limitation in the source of supply. The mere accumulation of copyright licenses is not in and of itself illegal. On the basis of the record, the accumulation of copyright licenses by the manufacturer-distributor was not used for improper purposes.

Each of the motion picture producers and distributors had the right to choose the person with whom it wished to deal, and the use by competitive units of the same distributor is not necessarily a limitation on their competition. Furthermore, while a conspiracy may be established by a showing of adherence to concerted action which has been contemplated or invited, the plaintiff-company failed to show any arrangement, plan, or scheme among the motion picture producers and distributors. The evidence showed that they, acting independently, as a result of substantial losses in their accessory business, decided to license an outsider to perform that phase of their business. They contracted with the manufacturer-distributor because no comparable firm was available to undertake the task. The most that could be said was that the business climate affected each of the motion picture companies in a substantially similar way, and they individually decided to extricate themselves from a losing proposition. Also, it was found that a settlement agreement in a prior suit was entered into voluntarily by the company. Under that agreement, the manufacturer-distributor granted the company sublicenses.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.360; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2530.16, 2540.12, 2580, 2610.304, 2610.500, 2610.554.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Damages and Injunctive Relief—Proof of Damages—Injury to Nonexisting Business—Demand to Engage in Business.—A trial court finding that a company engaged in the business of leasing standard motion picture advertising accessories to motion picture exhibitors suffered no damage or injury to its business or property as a result of exclusive licenses, under which motion picture producers and distributors granted to a manufacturer-distributor the right to manufacture and distribute advertising accessories, was upheld on review. It was contended that specialty accessories, as distinguished from standard accessories, formed a large part of the business of the manufacturer-distributor, and that such accessories were not made available to the company. Admitting that it never participated in the specialty accessory rental business, the company attributed this inactivity to the fact that such accessories had been obtainable only from the manufacturer-distributor. However, the company did not show that the manufacturer-distributor refused to supply such accessories, and the evidence established that the company never held itself out as a renter of specialty accessories.

Also, the company never attempted to obtain from any of the motion picture companies licenses under which it would manufacture accessories, and it expressly stated that it did not desire such licenses. In the absence of such demand upon the part of the company, there can be no recovery in an antitrust action.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9011, 9011.350.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Damages and Injunctive Relief—Appeal and Error—Trial Court's Findings of Fact.—The contention that a trial court's findings of fact were erroneous because the court allegedly accepted many of the findings proposed by the defendants was rejected. The reviewing court was asked to accept the plaintiffs' version of the facts and, in effect, to ignore the trial court's findings, that is, to try the case de novo. For "triers of fact totally to reject an opposed view impeaches neither their impartiality nor the propriety of their conclusions." Rule 52 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure directs the reviewing court not to set aside findings of fact unless clearly erroneous. Where the evidence would support a conclusion either way, a "choice between two permissible views of the weight of evidence is not 'clearly erroneous.'" Furthermore, even the plaintiffs did not contend that the trier of fact uncritically adopted all of the defendants' tendered findings of fact nor could they deny that a substantial number of the findings were uncontested.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9015.80.

For the appellants: Francis T. Anderson, Philadelphia, Pa.

For the appellees: Louis Nizer, New York, N. Y., for Natl. Screen Service Corp.; Louis J. Goffman, Philadelphia, Pa., for Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corp.; and W. Bradley Ward, Philadelphia, Pa., for Columbia Pictures Corp., Loew's Inc., Paramount Film Distributing Corp., RKO Teleradio Pictures, Inc. (formerly RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.), TCF Film Corp. (formerly Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp.), United Artists Corp., and Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.

For a prior decision of the U. S. Supreme Court, see 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,630, vacating a decision of the U. S. Court of Appeals, Third Circuit, 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 69,446

¶ 68,509, reversing decisions of the U. S. District Court, Eastern District of Pennsylvania, 1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,919 and 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,122. For a prior opinion of the U. S. Supreme Court, see 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,061, reversing U. S. Court of Appeals, Third Circuit, 1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,709, which affirmed U. S. District Court, Eastern District of Pennsylvania, 1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,619; for prior opinions of the U. S. District Court, Eastern District of Pennsylvania, see 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,217, 68,216, and 1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,760, 62,603.

Before GOODRICH, KALODNER and STALEY, Circuit Judges.

Opinion of the Court

[Prior Proceedings]

By STALEY, Circuit Judge, [In full text]: In this long-protracted litigation, plaintiffs Charles Lawlor and Mitchell Pantzer seek injunctive relief and money damages pursuant to Sections 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. §§ 15, 26, averring violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2.

The plaintiffs, in 1942, instituted a treble-damage suit, also praying an injunction, against National Screen Service Corporation and three of the eight producers who are defendants in the present action. By stipulation of the parties the suit was dismissed with prejudice on April 21, 1943. On August 18, 1949, the present complaint was filed seeking an injunction and treble damages for the period from 1943 to 1949. In 1951 Judge McGranery granted plaintiff's motion for summary judgment as against National Screen, but a final decree was never framed. Thereafter, in 1953, Judge Kirkpatrick granted defendants' motion to dismiss on the grounds that the 1943 judgment was res judicata of this claim. This court affirmed the judgment, [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,709] 211 F. 2d 934 (C. A. 3, 1954). The Supreme Court reversed, [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,061] 349 U. S. 322 (1955), and remanded the case. Chief Judge Kirkpatrick thereupon entered summary judgment against National Screen and upon review this court reversed, [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,509] 238 F. 2d 59 (1956). Certiorari was granted and the Supreme Court vacated the judgments and remanded the cause to the district court for trial, [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,630] 352 U. S. 992 (1957).

The case was then tried to the court, without a jury, and after a lengthy trial the court concluded that none of the defendants had violated the antitrust laws. The district court made 140 findings of fact and 12 conclusions of law. Based upon the foregoing, the court entered a formal order on October 31, 1958, dismissing the action as to all defendants, and the plaintiffs appealed. In effect the trial court held that plaintiffs had failed to sustain their burden of proof. For the plaintiffs to succeed on this appeal they must show that erroneous legal tests were applied to essential findings of fact or that the findings themselves were clearly erroneous within Rule 52(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. United States v. E. I. duPont de Nemours & Co. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,369], 351 U. S. 377 (1956).

[Advertising Accessories]

This case involves a field of endeavor collateral to the distribution and exhibition of motion picture films, the distribution of motion picture advertising accessories. These accessories consist primarily of lithographed posters containing photographs of scenes from the pictures which they are intended to advertise, and other articles for theater lobby and billboard display in and about motion picture theaters.[1] They are designed to stimulate public attendance at the current or future exhibition of the particular motion picture for which they are created.

[Parties]

Plaintiffs, as partners trading under the name of Independent Poster Exchange, have been engaged since 1940 in the business of leasing standard accessories to motion

[1] Traditionally certain types of accessories have become known in the film industry as "standard accessories." The standard accessories involved in this case are:
(a) 8 × 10 inch "stills" (black and white photographs);
(b) 11 × 14 inch lobby displays;
(c) 22 × 28 inch lobby displays;
(d) 14 × 36 inch insert cards;
(e) one sheet;
(f) three sheets;
(g) six sheets;
(h) twenty-four sheets.
Additional accessories of varied sizes and shapes have been conceived and used in the industry and have become generally known as "specialty accessories."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

picture exhibitors in the Philadelphia motion picture area (comprising eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey, and Delaware). Defendant National Screen, during part of the period covered by this suit, was engaged, among other things, in the business (a) of distributing to exhibitors advertising accessories for motion pictures of some producers; and (b) of creating, manufacturing and distributing such accessories of other producers; and for part of the period in suit (c) of creating, manufacturing and distributing such accessories of all of the producers or distributors alleged here to be involved. The other defendants are the eight major American motion picture distributors, hereinafter referred to as the film companies.[2]

[Standard Accessories]

Inasmuch as motion pictures are dependent in great measure upon effective advertising for their success, the film companies necessarily expend large amounts of money for that purpose. The direct interest of the motion picture distributors in the results of this advertising is pointed up by the fact that the pictures are at times licensed at a rental based upon a percentage of box office receipts. Among the numerous means of advertising employed in such promotions are the local pin-point advertising by the exhibitors which includes standard accessories. The court found that regular use by exhibitors of such accessories is one of the essential means of obtaining maximum attendance at and revenue from the exhibition of motion pictures; however, the degree to which they are responsible for motion picture patronage is not established.

Standard accessories have been in use for many years and, historically, the general practice had been for the motion picture company to design and manufacture the various types of accessories and distribute them to exhibitors through the company's branch offices or exchanges. As standard accessories cannot be used for any motion picture other than the one for which they are created, and as it is impossible to predict accurately the future success of a motion picture and therefore the quantity of accessories that will be required, there is an obsolescence risk that varies from item to item.

[Poster Renters]

As it is a practice in the industry to exhibit feature motion pictures in a number of theaters on successive runs, the same accessories may be repeatedly used by different exhibitors. This fact resulted in the appearance upon the business scene of what came to be known as "poster renters." These individuals or organizations were unconnected with any producer or distributor of motion pictures, but rather obtained supplies of standard accessories and rented them to exhibitors for use with the particular picture being exhibited. The supplies were originally obtained by purchase from the film companies' exchanges, from exhibitors, or from other poster renters. By the nature of their business they were in competition with the local exchanges of the film companies for exhibitor customers. The poster renters offered a complete or almost complete rental service for accessories of all the major film companies, while the local exchanges serviced only their own films. The latter, however, made them available along with the film itself. Thus each had advantages, and by 1940 there was at least one poster renter in business in nearly every motion picture exchange area.

[Exclusive Licenses]

As a result of the competition from poster renters, the obsolescence risk, the cost of maintaining a special accessories department, the supervision and personnel requirements both in the national offices and the district exchanges, Paramount in 1939 recognized that the accessories feature of its business was operating at a substantial annual loss. Although it was apparent that one possible solution for reducing the losses was to increase the license fees, this alternative was considered undesirable as it was likely to decrease the use of such advertising and therefore be self-defeating. The Paramount executives concluded that it was preferable to delegate the tasks of creating and distributing standard accessories to an independent contractor who possessed the experience, skill and facilities necessary to successfully undertake the operation. Paramount approached National Screen in the latter part of 1939 with a proposition to turn over these functions to it. National Screen, although it was not then in the business of creating standard accessories, had been engaged, since about 1935, in the business of producing and distributing certain motion picture specialty accessories. It had invested substantial sums in and was chiefly responsible for the development of a full line of specialty accessories. Under contracts licensing it to do so, National Screen was producing and distributing to exhibitors specialty accessories for films produced or distributed by United Artists, Loew's, and Columbia.

[2] During the period involved in this case, defendants Columbia Pictures Corporation, Loew's Incorporated, RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. (subsequently RKO Teleradio Pictures, Inc.) and Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation (subsequently TCF Film Corporation) were major producers and distributors of motion pictures in the United States. Defendants United Artists Corporation and Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation (formerly Vitagraph, Inc.) were major distributors of motion pictures, the former for independently produced pictures and the latter for pictures produced by its parent company, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. Defendant Paramount Film Distributing Corporation, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Paramount Pictures, Inc., was a major distributor of motion pictures produced or released by its parent. Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., a wholly-owned subsidiary of Universal Pictures Company, Inc., was a major distributor of motion pictures produced by its parent.

Paramount indicated that it would require National Screen to maintain a local branch in each city where Paramount had a film exchange, to open these new offices and staff them at its own expense, to manufacture and distribute a full line of standard accessories for Paramount pictures, and to purchase its existing inventory of standard accessories. As these obligations would involve substantial expenditures, National Screen required that it be given an exclusive license to produce and distribute Paramount standard accessories for a five-year term. On December 22, 1939, the parties formally entered into such a contract, to expire on January 31, 1945.[3]

Shortly thereafter, RKO, which also had a long history of unprofitable results from its accessories business and had even engaged an expert in the field to no avail, was approached by National Screen with an offer to undertake distribution of its accessories. On January 31, 1940, Advertising Accessories, Inc., the affiliate of National Screen, entered into a five-year contract with RKO to manufacture and distribute, under exclusive license, a full line of standard accessories.[4]

Subsequently, discussions between Advertising Accessories, Inc., and Universal ensued; however, no contract was consummated as the parties were unable to agree on terms. During 1940 Columbia also considered transferring its accessories responsibilities to National Screen but was reluctant to do so fearing a loss of control over this important means of advertising. Negotiations with Warner did, however, result in a non-exclusive license agreement for the distribution of Warner standard accessories on September 26, 1940.[5]

At approximately the same time, plaintiffs initiated their business in Philadelphia, announcing to exhibitors by printed notices their entry into the business of renting standard accessories. They procured their supplies of standard accessories for Columbia, Loew's, Fox, United Artists, Universal and Warner pictures at the exchanges in Philadelphia maintained by the respective companies. In addition they indicated to exhibitors their willingness to buy such accessories from them provided they had not been released over two months. The film companies, during the period that they manufactured and distributed standard accessories, made them freely available to plaintiffs who obtained only such items for which they had firm orders from exhibitors. Thus they were neither required nor did they maintain a full line of accessories, buying only infrequently the larger items such as 24-sheets and 6-sheets.

National Screen beginning in 1940, in addition to manufacturing and distributing standard accessories for RKO and Paramount, rented standard accessories for pictures of other film producers which it obtained from the several exchanges. The following year, it began negotiating a manufacturing and distributing contract with Loew's which had been experiencing losses in regard to this aspect of its business. After consultation with its branch exchange managers and in an effort to turn these financial losses into an ensured profit, Loew's entered into a [3] The contract was extended until December 31, 1949, by a letter agreement dated December 28, 1945. The original contract also obligated National Screen's affiliate, Advertising Accessories, Inc. The affiliate merged with National Screen on July 18, 1941.

[4] This contract was later extended to January 31, 1950, by a supplemental agreement dated October 6, 1944.

[5] This agreement was for a term of one year and was extended by letter agreement for successive yearly periods up to and including August 31, 1945.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

ten-year exclusive contract with National Screen on February 6, 1942. Loew's, however, agreed to furnish the completed art work and still negatives from which the mats would be prepared. At plaintiffs' request Loew's arranged for them to obtain standard accessories from National Screen in the future, and their requirements were supplied under this arrangement until April 21, 1943.[6]

[Settlement Agreement—Sublicensing]

Early in 1942, plaintiffs organized an association of independent poster renters. At its initial meeting it was determined that an antitrust action be brought against National Screen, Paramount, RKO, and Loew's. The suit (entitled Allied Poster and Supply Corporation v. National Screen Service Corp., Civil Action No. 2472) was instituted by plaintiffs and twelve others and alleged that the three existent exclusive licenses and contemplated licenses of a similar character constituted a violation of the antitrust laws. After protracted negotiations the suit was settled on April 21, 1943. The plaintiffs therein agreed to a dismissal with prejudice by the district court and executed a general release to National Screen, while National Screen agreed to grant plaintiffs a sublicense under which it undertook to make available for distribution a full supply of whatever accessories it was then manufacturing under license or would manufacture under future licenses. The district court in the instant case expressly found that the settlement agreement was entered into by the plaintiffs with full knowledge and understanding of its terms, after careful consideration and upon the advice of counsel.

Over a period of years following this settlement, National Screen entered into contracts for the manufacture and distribution of standard accessories of Universal, Columbia, United Artists, Warner Brothers, and Fox. The district court found that each of the film companies involved in this suit entered into the contracts for a good and sufficient economic reason, namely, to terminate an unprofitable feature of its business. These findings were based upon the testimony of responsible executive officers of each of the companies that they had neither consulted nor conferred with executives of other film companies in arriving at their individual decisions, but rather had done so solely for valid business reasons that did not depend in any way upon the action of any other company with respect to a similar arrangement.

As additional companies entered into contracts with National Screen, plaintiffs, pursuant to the sublicense agreement, obtained standard accessories for the pictures produced by the new companies from National Screen. The original sublicense agreement was extended for another five-year term, terminating on April 30, 1951. Although the instant complaint contained allegations that National Screen had deliberately been slow in deliveries and utilized tie-in arrangements to frustrate plaintiffs in their competition, the the district court found that plaintiffs had offered no evidence sufficient to sustain these allegations. The court also found that plaintiffs had other sources for standard accessories, some licit and at least one illicit.

Since the settlement of the Allied case in 1943, National Screen has granted 24 sublicenses, eleven to parties who were not plaintiffs in that suit. It was additionally found that during the period covered by this suit poster renters in other motion picture areas manufactured and distributed standard accessories of various types. The plaintiffs, however, never attempted to manufacture or obtain the right to manufacture or fabricate any kind of accessories.

During the years in controversy, 1943-1949, plaintiffs' gross income doubled and profits increased. In competition with National Screen for exhibitor-customers, plaintiffs succeeded in increasing their clientele mostly at the expense of National Screen. The prices plaintiffs paid to National Screen varied from item to item; however, despite an inflationary spiral and increases in the prices plaintiffs charged their customers, the prices National Screen charged were not increased at all until May 1, 1949. Furthermore, the pre-May 1, 1949, prices averaged substantially less than those which the film companies had formerly charged. This situation obtained even after the May 1, 1949, increase.

[6] After April 21, 1943, plaintiffs procured supplies from National Screen under the terms of a license agreement.

[Appeal—Contentions]

Appellants reply on three main arguments in an effort to obtain reversal of the judgment below, namely (1) per se invalidity of the exclusive licenses granted National Screen,[7] (2) the erroneous nature of certain findings of fact, and (3) "that on the facts found plaintiffs are entitled to judgments for both injunction and damages against all defendants."

[Validity of Licenses]

Consideration of the initial contention need not detain us unduly for the issue of per se invalidity of these exclusive agreements was extensively discussed in Lawlor v. National Screen Service Corp. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,509], 238 F. 2d 59 (C. A. 3, 1956). As was stated at page 65, "exclusive agreements are not per se violation of the anti-trust laws and are permitted in circumstances where the facts disclose a course of conduct and reasonableness of action not prohibited by the anti-trust laws." On appeal, the Supreme Court stated, "We agree with the Court of Appeals that the motion for summary judgment should have been denied. [Summary judgment had been entered by the district court on the ground that the contracts were invalid per se.] However, in our view, this disposition of the case made it unnecessary for the Court of Appeals to pass on any other issue than that of the per se invalidity of exclusive contracts under the Sherman Act." Lawlor v. National Screen Service Corp. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,630], 352 U. S. 992 (1957).

[Findings of Fact]

Appellants in their main brief make an oblique attack on the extensive findings of fact made by the district court. They imply that the findings are erroneous because the district court allegedly accepted many of those proposed by the defendants. A study of the record, the proposed findings, and the undisputed facts lends no credence to what is not even dignified by a direct argument. Plaintiffs ask us to accept their version of the facts and, in effect, to ignore the district court's findings, that is, to try the case de novo. Extensive citation of authority is not necessary to point up the fallacy of this argument. The Supreme Court had occasion to consider the problem in United States v. Yellow Cab Co. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,522], 338 U. S. 341 (1949), where it was stated "that for triers of fact totally to reject an opposed view impeaches neither their impartiality nor the propriety of their conclusions." Rule 52, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, directs us not to set aside findings of fact unless clearly erroneous. Where the evidence would support a conclusion either way, a "choice between two permissible views of the weight of evidence is not 'clearly erroneous.'" Id. at page 342. Furthermore, even plaintiffs do not contend that the trier of fact uncritically adopted all the defendants' tendered findings of fact nor can they deny that a substantial number of the findings were uncontested.

[Injury to Business]

In their reply brief plaintiffs take issue with four specific findings, namely, 138, 72, 41, and 116. Finding 138 is to the effect that during the period in suit "plaintiffs suffered no damage or injury to their business or property as a result of any action of any of the defendants herein complained of by the plaintiff." In refutation of this finding, plaintiffs contend that specialty accessories formed a large part of National Screen's business and they alleged that these accessories were not made available to them by National Screen. Admitting that they have never participated in the specialty accessory rental business, they attribute this inactivity to the fact that such accessories, since 1940, have been obtainable only from National Screen. Plaintiffs have not here pointed to any evidence that National Screen refused to supply speciality accessories. Indeed, the mass of credible evidence is to the effect that from the inception of plaintiffs' business they never held themselves out as renters of specialty accessories, they purchased only two specialty type accesories (40 x 60 posters) during the period when those accessories were available from the film companies and lost money with respect to them, they refrained from purchasing specialty accessories from another available source even though one of the partners was [7] "Statement of Questions Involved.

"1. Are the federal antitrust laws violated when each of the eight major American motion picture companies grants to the same person, on a profit-sharing basis, an exclusive license, of national scope, to service exhibitors with advertising posters?" Appellants' Brief, page 1.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

active in the organization of that source, and, finally, as late as May 9, 1949, in a letter to the Attorney General of the United States, plaintiffs in describing their business made no mention of specialty accessories but rather stated, "Our own company performs in eastern Pennsylvania, south Jersey and Delaware, distributing these standard accessories to the motion picture theatre accounts, either through outright sale or on a rental basis." Plaintiffs also predicate their claim of damages or injury upon the fact that press books[8] published by the film companies contained information that standard accessories were available from National Screen, the fact that posters manufactured and obtained from National Screen bore a printed notice on their face indicating that they were the property of National Screen,[9] and that National Screen's gross receipts, in the Philadelphia area during 1943-1949, on standard accessories were 4½ times that of plaintiffs. On the basis of the above summarized facts, plaintiffs assert that they have proved both the fact of damage and amount of loss. They cite for this proposition Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,445], 327 U. S. 251 (1946); Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co., 282 U. S. 555 (1931); Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Materials Co., 273 U. S. 359 (1927). These cases, however, merely stand for the proposition that have established the fact of damage or legal injury, the difficulty of determining the amount of damage will not preclude a recovery. Here there was a finding of fact, clearly borne out by the record, that there was no damage or legal injury. The evidence outlined above, relied upon by appellants here, certainly falls far short of that which would be necessary to overturn a finding of fact of the trial court.

[Other Findings]

We have considered the exceptions noted in the reply brief with regard to findings of fact 72, 41 and 116. They amount merely to quibbles concerning the meaning of language that is clear on its face. Finding of fact 72 is illustrative of this. It relates to the settlement agreement that terminated the prior litigation. On the basis of substantial evidence in the record, the district judge found that the agreement had been entered into voluntarily. At the most, the evidence cited by the palintiffs merely indicates the motives that impelled the plaintiffs to enter into what they admitted to be a voluntary agreement.

Finally, we are drawn to what plaintiffs have termed "the point of overriding importance," i.e., whether or not, on the facts found by the district court, plaintiffs are entitled to both an injunction and damages against all the defendants. Of course, this issue is disposed of, as we have noted above, by the district court's explicit finding, upon the record, that no cognizable damages or legal injury were caused plaintiffs.

[Demand]

There are, in addition, other considerations which compel the same result. Plaintiffs have never attempted to obtain from any of the film companies licenses under which they themselves would manufacture accessories and, in fact, have expressly stated that they do not desire such licenses. In the absence of such demand upon the part of plaintiffs, the courts have consistently held that there can be no recovery in an antitrust action. Webster Rosewood Corp. v. Schine Chain Theatres, Inc. [1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,282], 263 F. 2d 533, (C. A. 2, 1959); J. J. Theatres, Inc. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,757], 212 F. 2d 840 (C. A. 2, 1954). See also Milwaukee Towne Corp. v. Loew's, Inc. [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,891], 190 F. 2d 561 (C. A. 7, 1951), cert. denied, 342 U. S. 909 (1952).

[Copyright Licenses]

The district court found that standard accessories created and manufactured for one motion picture can only be used in connection with that picture. Thus they are not competitive articles. It was also found that each of the motion pictures is copyrighted and the license agreements required National Screen to manufacture standard accessories utilizing scenes and incidents from these movies. The copyright law confers upon the owner of the copyright a limited monopoly as regards his copyrighted material and as an incident thereof confers upon the owner the right to license others. The license may be exclusive and, if so, by its very nature it grants the right to exclude others. Goldsmith v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 143 F. 2d 466 (C. A. 2), cert. denied, 323 U. S. 774 (1944). This is not to say that owners may use their copyrights to deter competition or to extend the monopoly or to break down competition in other areas. United States v. Paramount Pictures [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244], 334 U. S. 131 (1948); United States v. Griffith [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,246], 334 U. S. 100 (1948). Here, however, the articles being licensed for manufacture and distribution are noncompetitive in nature and, therefore no mere increase in the number of licenses obtained by one individual accomplishes a restraint upon trade or limitation in the source of supply. In the closely akin patent field this situation and its legal effect have been before the courts on a number of occasions. In United States v. Winslow, 227 U. S. 202 (1913), perhaps the leading case, Justice Holmes was called upon to consider whether the formation of the United Shoe Machinery Company by the owners of three basic but noncompetitive patents, all employed in the manufacture of shoes, constituted the new corporation a monopoly. He stated that "The machines are patented, making them is a monopoly in any case, the exclusion of competitors from the use of them is of the very essence of the right conferred by the patents * * *. [I]t is hard to see why the collective business should be any worse than its component parts." More recently the Supreme Court had occasion to review the problem in Automatic Radio Mfg. Co. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,634], 339 U. S. 827 (1950), and confirmed the facts that the mere accumulation of patents is not in and of itself illegal. We see no rational basis for treating copyrights any differently than patents, and a careful study of the record convinces us that this accumulation of copyright licenses was not used for improper purposes.

[8] A printed pamphlet published by the film companies for each picture giving suggestions or advice to exhibitors with respect to their advertisement of the picture.

[9] The printed notice read as follows:
"Property of National Screen Service Corp. Licensed for display only in connection with the exhibition of this picture at your theatre. Must be returned immediately thereafter."

[Exclusive Dealerships]

It is abundantly clear to this court that the plaintiffs, by their own choice, are nothing more than jobbers in the field of standard accessories, and thus come within the purview of cases involving exclusive dealerships such as Locker v. American Tobacco Co., 218 Fed. 447 (C. A. 2, 1914), where it was stated at page 450:

> "We are unable to discover anything illegal in a manufacturer of tobacco disposing of his goods to a jobber to sell to retailers, or, if he deems it advisable, to change his policy, and sell direct to the retailer himself. Why may he not do so? One who desires to become a jobber has no right to complain because the manufacturer chooses another to do this work, unless the manufacturer owes some duty to consign his product, or a part of [sic] thereof, to him."

As was said by the court in Interborough News Co. v. Curtis Publishing Co. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,129], 225 F. 2d 289, 293 (C. A. 2, 1955), "Use by competitive units of the same local distributor is not necessarily a limitation on their competition. After all, Interborough [plaintiffs herein are similarly situated] had no vested interest in the wholesaling of magazines and reprints in New York City or elsewhere."

[Parallel Action]

One last aspect of this case deserves mention. In an effort to show a conspiracy, plaintiffs rely upon United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244], 334 U. S. 131 (1948), and Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,205], 306 U. S. 208 (1939), which hold that conspiracy may be established not only by express agreement but also by a showing of adherence to concerted action which has been contemplated or invited. Not only have the plaintiffs here failed in their proof of an "arrangement," "plan," or "scheme" but the great weight of credible evidence clearly shows that the film companies, acting independently, as a result of substantial losses in their accessory business, decided to license an outsider to perform that phase of their business. They contracted with National Screen because no comparable firm was available to undertake the task. The most that can be gleaned from the factual pattern is that the business climate affected each of the film companies in a substantially similar way and they individually decided to extricate themselves from a losing proposition. Judge Holtzoff, in deciding Orbo Theatre Corp. v. Loew's, Inc. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,869], 156 F. Supp. 770 (D. C. 1957), affirmed per curiam, [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,185] 261 F. 2d 380

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

(C. A. D. C., 1958), cert. denied, 359 U. S. 943 (1959), aptly pointed out the relevant considerations:

"* * * Parallel action may indeed be concerted action, but it may also be due to the fact that the persons concerned arrived at the same simple solution of a common business problem. Here the problem was a comparatively simple one, and the solution reached was more or less obvious. If the various officers and employees involved in the decision refrained from testifying on this point, the court might well draw an adverse inference. On the other hand, considering the fact that there was absolutely no evidence of the alleged conspiracy, beyond the taking of parallel action; that each of the participants denied any communication or consultation with any of the co-defendants; and that none of the witnesses was in any way impeached or gave any testimony that was inherently incredible, several of them being members of the bar, the Court is not justified in finding that the actions were jointly planned or concerted. In fact, the Court cannot do so without also reaching the conclusion that some of these witnesses testified falsely. There is, however, no basis for ascribing such reprehensible action to any of them. The Court, therefore, concludes that the plaintiff did not establish by a preponderance of the evidence that there had been a conspiracy on the part of the defendants * * *." 156 F. Supp. at pages 775-776.

[Summary of Financial Data]

At the argument of this appeal, we were presented with a motion to vacate an order of the district court directing that plaintiffs shall not employ the full text of the financial terms and provisions of the license agreements between National Screen and its licensors, the film companies. The order provided that the full text of other provisions of the agreements might be used but that only a summary of the financial terms, to be prepared by National Screen, might be used. Inasmuch as the precise terms were not necessary to plaintiffs' case, and seeing no compelling reasons for vacating the order, the motion will be denied.

[Affirmed]

Judgment will be affirmed.

[¶ 69,447] National Utilities of Gainesville, Inc. v. General Gas Corporation.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia, Gainesville Division. Civil Action No. 820. Filed August 1, 1959.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Price Discrimination—Practices Constituting Discrimination Under Clayton Act, Section 2(a)—Cutting Prices in Locality Serviced by Local Competitor—Purpose of Price Cutting—Effect on Competition—Destruction of Competitor.—An interstate seller of liquefied petroleum gas was temporarily enjoined from continuing in effect a general price reduction in a local area, where it was found that the seller's price reduction in an area serviced by a local competitor, while maintaining its prices in adjacent areas, was likely to lessen competition substantially, and would tend to create a monopoly in violation of Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act. Price cutting is lawful, if considered as a separate transaction and without reference to its purpose, even though the sale price is below cost. However, the competition ceases to be normal and becomes illegal when a seller invokes the lower price as a means of destroying competition. Here, the local competitor's net worth would be completely depleted in approximately 11 months if it lowered its own prices to the interstate seller's reduced prices. Thus, the offer to sell to the local competitor's customers at a price which, if met by it, would destroy its business, tended to eliminate that local firm as a competitor, and would probably lessen competition substantially (the local firm allegedly had 20 per cent of the business in the area) and tend to create a monopoly (the interstate seller allegedly had 25 per cent of the business in the competitive area). Competition is the antithesis of monopoly and "any elimination of competition is a movement in the general direction of monopoly."

The court noted, however, that sales at cut prices which had been negotiated on a "customer basis" did not appear to be illegal. Discrimination is prohibited only where it is probable, and not merely possible, that competition will be lessened or a monopoly created.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3505.840, 3506.250, 3506.440, 3506.500, 3506.620, 3508.545.

Price Discrimination—Meeting Competition Under Clayton Act, Section 2(b)—Competitor's Price Cutting on "Customer Basis"—Justification for "Area" Price Reduction.—A seller of liquefied petroleum gas which, in a particular trade area, reduced its prices to a level at which a local competitor could not sell and survive, while maintaining its normal prices in adjacent areas, failed to establish the "good faith meeting of competition" defense under Section 2(b) of the Clayton Act. It seemed clear that the seller's competitors were cutting prices on a customer basis, and that the seller, "becoming tired of the struggle customer by customer, declared war with a drastic price reduction" over the entire area in which the local seller competed. While the local competitor had approximately 1500 customers in the area and the seller had approximately 1800 customers in that same area, the seller, in seeking to justify its area price reduction, identified only 12 to 15 customers which had received the benefit of price cuts from its competitors. There were general allegations that those competitors had offered to sell at reduced prices, but there was no contention that they had put into effect any general price reductions against the seller. Hence, it appeared that the seller, in order to meet price cuts that were offered by its competitors from time to time on a customer basis, had announced a general price cut over the entire area.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3515.500.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Injunctive Relief from Violations of Antitrust Laws—Price Discrimination—Necessary Averments—Irreparable Injury—Destruction of Competitor's Business.—A local seller of liquefied petroleum gas was granted an injunction which required an interstate seller to "restore the general price structure" as it existed in a particular area prior to the interstate seller's general reduction of its prices in that area. It seemed clear that continuing in effect that price reduction during the pendency of the action would result in immediate irreparable loss to the local seller, inasmuch as its net worth would be completely depleted in approximately 11 months if it sold at the interstate seller's reduced prices. However, the injunction in no way invalidated the business obtained by the seller in competing with its competitors on a customer basis; it only enjoined the seller from continuing in effect the general price cuts which the court found were discriminatory, were likely to lessen competition substantially, and would tend to create a monopoly.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9022.05, 9022.50, 9024.70.

For the plaintiff: Joseph H. Blackshear, John N. Crudup, and Charles Dent Bostick, Gainesville, Ga.

For the defendant: Wheeler, Robinson, Norton & Thompson, Gainesville, Ga.

[Price Discrimination Action]

Boyd Sloan, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, National Utilities of Gainesville, Inc., hereinafter sometimes referred to as "National," is engaged in the selling and delivering of liquefied petroleum gas in nine counties of Northeast Georgia and it brings this action under Title 15, U. S. C. A., §§ 2, 13, 15 and 26, and Title 28, U. S. C. A., § 1337 and seeks injunctive and other relief against the defendant.

The defendant, General Gas Corporation, sometimes hereinafter referred to as "General," conducts the same type business as plaintiff but in several states, including most of the counties comprising North Georgia and all of the counties in which plaintiff does business. Plaintiff contends that the defendant is guilty of unlawful discriminations in price cutting, and should be enjoined.

A show cause order was issued by this Court and the matter came on for hearing on Monday, July 27, 1959; evidence was received by affidavit, oral arguments of counsel were heard, and thereafter written arguments and briefs were filed on behalf of each party and the matter is now before the Court for determination.

[Trade Involved—Liquefied Petroleum Gas]

It appears from the evidence that General Gas Corporation, in 1954, acquired all of the capital stock of the Automatic Gas

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Company, Inc. which corporation was engaged in the business of selling liquefied petroleum gas to consumers in the Gainesville, Georgia, area here involved and that since that time it has been actively engaged in such business.

General Gas Corporation was and is engaged in the business of selling and distributing liquefied petroleum gas in Louisiana, Mississippi, Georgia and portions of Alabama and South Carolina.

General Gas Corporation services its distribution of liquefied petroleum gas from three headquarters or area towns, to-wit: Clarkesville, Athens and Gainesville. The counties served by these offices being as follows:

Clarkesville: Banks (part), Habersham, Rabun, Stephens, Franklin.

Athens: Clarke, Oglethorpe, Banks (part), Barrow (part), Jackson (part), Hart, Oconee, Walton, Madison.

Gainesville: Hall, White, Lumpkin, Banks (part), Forsyth, Dawson, Gwinnett (part), Jackson (part), Barrow (part).

Plaintiff, National Utilities of Gainesville, Inc., sells and distributes liquefied petroleum gas in Hall, Dawson, Lumpkin, White, Gwinnett, Forsyth, Banks, Habersham and Jackson and parts of Towns, Union, Rabun and Barrow Counties.

The sale and distribution of liquefied petroleum gas is highly competitive and in the three areas above described, which are served by General, there are some twelve other distributors of liquefied petroleum gas who compete with General in portions of the areas served by General.

No single competitor competes over the entire area served by General but each competitor competes in a portion of the area served by General.

[Quantity Discounts]

Since 1954 the price of liquefied petroleum gas in the area served by National has been 20¢ per gallon with a two cent per gallon discount for cash if paid within ten days from delivery, leaving a net price of 18¢ per gallon for domestic consumers.

Domestic consumers are generally considered in the trade to be those who consume the gas in homes or dwellings, while commercial users are generally considered to be quantity consumers who consume gas in business, factory or plant.

The price for commercial use has generally been two cents per gallon less than that charged for domestic use.

It has generally been the practice during the periods here involved for large commercial consumers to accept bids from various distributors for quantity purchases, and both plaintiff and defendant have competed in bidding for the business of large industrial users.

[Free Service]

It appears that the plaintiff gave free service to its customers in the form of repairs and servicing of equipment, charging only for such parts as were required in effecting such repairs, while the defendant, General, had a minimum service charge of $3.50 for each call.

It appears that such free service is the equivalent of a reduction in price paid for gas by the consumer of one cent per gallon.

[Economic Strength of Parties]

According to General Gas Corporation's annual report for 1958 published by Eisele & King, Libaire, Stout & Co., 50 Broadway, New York, New York, the sales of the company reached an all time high of 92,660,000 gallons during 1958. This compared with 81,039,000 gallons marketed in 1957 as shown by the annual report represents a 14.3 per cent gain in 1958. The report shows a net income for 1959 estimated at $302,710 after taxes as compared to $259,144 during the same period in 1958.

Throughout this trade area, the retail market for LP gas is a seasonal market, about 80 percent of the retail sales of all companies occurring in the eight months from September 1 to May 1. During the four months through August, the retail sale price of LP gas is at its lowest volume.

For the calendar years ending 31st of December shown below, plaintiff company sold the number of gallons of LP gas at the gross revenue and average price per gallon, as follows:

Calendar Year	Gallons Sold	Gross Revenue	Average Price Per Gallon
1957	886,629	$167,323.92	18.87
1958	1,436,414	258,910.87	18.02
*1959	819,035	148,878.09	18.17

* Five months 1959 ended May 31, 1959.

The plaintiff company does business on a 12 months fiscal year ending August 31st of each year. For the fiscal year ended August 31, 1958, plaintiff corporation sold and delivered 1,324,862 gallons of LP gas which yielded a dollar volume of $244,304.63. This business yielded a sale price of 18.44 cents per gallon net delivered. The net profit before taxes of the plaintiff for that year was $19,741.10. Since that was the last full year's business record available that period is used by plaintiff's accountant to demonstrate the effect of price reductions on the business, the following table shows the effect of price cuts:

1958 Price	Dollar Volume	Net Profit Before Taxes or Loss
At 18.44¢	$244,304.63	$19,741.10
If cut 1¢ to 17.44¢	231,056.01	6,492.48
If cut 2¢ to 16.44¢	217,807.39	(7,756.14) Loss
If cut 3¢ to 15.44¢	204,558.77	(20,004.76) Loss
If cut 4¢ to 14.44¢	191,310.15	(33,253.38) Loss
If cut 5¢ to 13.44¢	178,061.53	(46,502.00) Loss

Net earnings of National Utilities of Gainesville, Inc. for the year ended August 31, 1958 amounted to $19,741.10, income taxes in the amount of $6,475.08 were accrued on these earnings. At August 31, 1958, total retained earnings amounted to $14,289.83.

The total number of gallons of LP gas sold and delivered by National during this period was 1,324,862. During this period National received an average price of 18.44¢ per gallon net on retail sales of LP gas.

A reduction in the price of LP gas of 1¢ per gallon would reduce National's annual net profit by approximately $13,248.00, and each additional cut of 1¢ per gallon on LP gas would reduce the net profit or increase the net loss by approximately $13,248.00.

It is clear from the average sale price received by the plaintiff corporation that it has made no general price reduction but that any price reduction that it has made has been on a customer basis only.

[Price "War"]

It appears from the evidence here that competitors of the defendant corporation were cutting their prices from time to time on a customer basis and, while defendant contends that its broad price cuts in the Athens and Gainesville areas were good faith reductions to meet the equally low price of a competitor, it seems clear that there is this situation: The competitors of General were struggling for business and cutting prices on a customer basis and defendant, General, becoming tired of the struggle customer by customer, declared war with a drastic price reduction over the area in which plaintiff competes.

[Competitive Area]

It does not affirmatively appear from the record how many customer users of LP gas are located within the competitive area served by plaintiff and defendant. It does appear that plaintiff, National, has approximately 1500 customers which defendant contends constitutes twenty per cent of the business in this particular area. The defendant further contends that it has only twenty-five per cent of the business, and by applying the percentage to the number of plaintiff's total number of customers would indicate that defendant has some 1800 customers in the competitive area served by both plaintiff and defendant.

[Area Price Reduction—"Meeting Competition"]

In its affidavits in which it seeks to justify its area price reduction, the defendant only identifies a total of twelve to fifteen customers who have received and are receiving the benefit of price cuts from defendant's competitors, while there are general allegations that defendant's competitors are offering to sell at reduced prices, there is no contention that General's competitors have put into effect any general price reductions against defendant, so it appears that defendant, in order to meet price cuts that are offered from time to time on a customer basis by its competitors, has announced a general price cut over the entire Gainesville and Athens areas which includes substantially all of the area served by plaintiff, National, offering to sell its LP gas at prices with which General's competitors can not meet and survive.

At the time defendant started doing business in Gainesville, Georgia, it was doing approximately 60 per cent of the LP gas business in Hall and adjoining counties and the Childs Gas Company was doing approximately forty per cent of such business and since 1954 many other LP gas distributors have entered the Gainesville area as well as other areas adjacent thereto.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

It appears from the record here that in the struggle for business there has been, both on the part of plaintiff and defendant, price cutting in vying for the business of individual consumers, but there had not been until the action of the defendant here complained of, an overall price reduction to all consumers within the competitive area.

On June 4, 1959, defendant reduced its sales price to domestic consumers to 17¢ less 2¢ and on June 24, 1959, defendant reduced its price to all consumers in the Gainesville area to 13.5¢ net, except customers under contract.

The defendant continues to sell and deliver LP gas in adjacent and adjoining trade areas at the prevailing price of 18¢ per gallon net.

[Irreparable Loss to Plaintiff]

A reduction by plaintiff in the price of LP gas to 13.5¢ per gallon would result in National Utilities of Gainesville completely depleting its net worth in approximately eleven (11) months.

It seems clear that continuing in effect the reduction in the price of LP gas to 13.5¢ per gallon net will result in immediate irreparable loss to plaintiff company.

The Robinson-Patman Act provides, inter alia, as follows:

"(a) It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, * * * where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them: Provided, That nothing contained in * * * shall prevent differentials which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities or to such purchasers sold or delivered * * *:

"(b) Upon proof being made * * * that there has been discrimination in price or services or facilities furnished, the burden of rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section * * *: Provided, however, That nothing contained in * * * shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor." Clayton Act, § 2(a)(b) as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U. S. C. A., § 13(a)(b).

In the competitive relationship where the struggle is not one of any competitor against the other, but with the other for a common prize, a conflict exists because there is competition. Struggle is in the nature of things incidental to competitive activity. In the field of competition, struggle is natural and essential and the rules of law should be designed to regulate the contest. It is typical of the order of struggle that a competitor is permitted to injure his rivals in trade; the wrong stems out of a violation of the rules prescribed for the fair contest. Callmann, Unfair Competition and Trade-Marks, 2d Ed., Vol. 1, § 6.2(a).

["Good" and "Bad" Price Cutting]

Price cutting is a legally recognized competitive tactic. Schine Theatres v. United States [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,245], 334 U. S. 110, 120. Price cutting by itself does not fall under the stigma of unfair trading and this is so even though the reduction yields a sales price below cost. Sears, Roebuck & Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 258 F. 307; Andrew Jergens Co. v. Bonded Products Corporation, 13 F. 2d 417, 422; Remington-Rand v. Mastercraft Corporation, 67 F. 2d 218, 221. There is both good and bad price cutting.

Nothing prevents the seller from selling below cost if he wishes to do so; he is not under an affirmative duty to attempt to realize a profit. It is for the seller to decide whether he wishes to profit from a particular transaction.

[Purpose—Destruction of Competitor]

The act of price cutting itself is lawful if considered as a separate transaction and without reference to its purpose.

Price wars usually arise out of ordinary business competition. For example, A and B are competitors. Enraged at B's success, A decides to mass all his economic reserves and utterly destroy B. With such hostilities, normal competition ends. The lower price, which is a legitimate weapon in the arsenal of a business and is normally invoked to attract new customers, is now invoked as a means of destroying a competitor. The customer is merely the incidental beneficiary of the struggle between A and B. Price-cut follows price-cut until both are selling at a loss. He who has sufficient reserves to hold out the longer will inevitably triumph. The parallel struggle of competition has thus metamorphosed into a direct attack by one against the other. Though economic strength is still the most potent weapon in the battle, the competition, nevertheless, is now illegal. Callmann, Unfair Competition and Trade-Marks, 2nd Ed., Vol. 1, § 26.

[Unlawful Effect]

The action of the defendant in reducing its price to 13.5¢ per gallon net over its entire Gainesville area and thus offering to all of plaintiff's 1500 customers LP gas at a price which plaintiff can not meet and which will destroy plaintiff's business tends to eliminate plaintiff as a competitor and thus will probably lessen competition substantially and tend to create a monopoly.

Under the facts here, plaintiff would suffer irreparable injury if this is allowed to continue during the pendency of this action and the defendant will be enjoined to restore and preserve the status quo as it existed prior to its overall price-cut of June 4 and June 24, 1959.

The defendant contends that the grant of the injunction woud leave plaintiff's contracts inviolate while defendant's contracts with Rohr Aircraft Company and Scovil Manufacturing Company would be abrogated.

The injunction to be granted here will have no such effect; it will require the restoring of the status quo as it existed prior to the overall price cuts of defendant in its Gainesville area on June 4 and June 24, 1959, but does not hold to be illegal the negotiated customer sales at cut prices.

[Competition Defined]

Competition is defined as the effort of two or more parties acting independently to secure the custom (that is the trade or business) of a third party by the offering of the most favorable terms. It is the struggle between rivals for the same trade at the same time; the act of securing or endeavoring to gain what another is endeavoring to gain at the same time. Lipson v. Socony Vacuum Corporation [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,146], 87 F. 2d 265.

[Competition on "Customer Basis" Preserved]

The competition engaged in between plaintiff and defendant prior to June 4, 1959, even though it involved price-cuts, does not appear to have been illegal.

> "Discrimination in prices was not forbidden by the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. However under the Clayton Act, particularly as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 15, it is unlawful for a person engaged in commerce to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality where the effect may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly, but not otherwise. Although the statute forbids price discrimination which 'may' lessen competition or create monopoly, it is only where such effect is probable and not merely possible that the discrimination is forbidden by the statute. * * *" 58 C. J. S., § 50, at p. 1026, 1027.

Competition is the antithesis of monopoly and any elimination of competition is a movement in the general direction of monopoly. The injunction here granted shall in no way invalidate the business obtained by the defendant in competing with plaintiff and defendant's other competitors on a customer basis nor shall it prevent such competition in the future.

["General" Price Cuts Enjoined]

The order to be entered here shall restore the general price structure in the defendant's Gainesville area as it existed prior to June 4, 1959, that is 18¢ net for LP gas to domestic users and 2¢ less per gallon for commercial users, but preserving to both plaintiff and defendant the right to compete with each other and other competitors on a customer basis in the future as in the past. The injunction will enjoin defendant only from continuing in effect its general price-cuts of June 4 and June 24 which the Court has found to be discriminatory and likely to lessen competition substantially and would tend to create a monopoly.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

An order in conformity with the findings and conclusions here may be prepared and presented.

[¶ 69,448] The Atlas Building Products Company v. Diamond Block & Gravel Company.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit. No. 5990—May Term, 1959. Dated August 17, 1959.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of New Mexico. Waldo H. Rogers, District Judge.

Clayton and Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Acts

Price Discrimination—Practices—Geographic Pricing—Price Reductions in Single Competitive Area—Discriminating Between Non-competing Purchasers Located in Different Areas—Section 2(a) of Clayton Act and Section 3 of Robinson-Patman Act.—A manufacturer of cinder concrete building blocks, by selling at 23.1 cents per block in El Paso, Texas, and 20 cents per block in Las Cruces, New Mexico, discriminated in price between purchasers of the same class in the two areas in violation of Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act. The court, affirming a trial court's judgment in favor of a local competitor which had lost business by reason of the manufacturer's price reductions in the Las Cruces area, rejected the contention that "geographic price differentials or discriminations between noncompeting purchasers in different localities" are not actionable under Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, but only under Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act (for which a private cause of action does not lie). There is nothing in Section 2(a) to indicate that its prohibitions are restricted to discriminations between competing purchasers in the same area. The statute is not couched in terms of locality. Further, in Moore v. Mead's Fine Bread, 1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,906, the United States Supreme Court sustained a charge of geographic price discrimination between noncompeting purchasers under both Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act and Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act, pointing out that such practices were prohibited under the Clayton Act even before it was amended by the Robinson-Patman Act.

Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act, which imposes criminal penalties for some but not all of the same infractions prohibited by Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, is specific in its interdictions of geographic price discriminations. Section 2(a) is broader; it prohibits discriminations between different purchasers wherever located, whether competing or not, when the discrimination may substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. In Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,330, it was held that price cuts directed at local competitors were not discriminatory, apparently because there was no discrimination among the local competitors. That conclusion was apparently based on the theory that the statutory words "different purchasers" means competing purchasers. The present court rejected any such restriction upon Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, noting its conviction that geographic price discrimination employed for predatory ends is cognizable under that section or under Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act. Also, the court distinguished the present case from those brought by local purchasers against manufacturers (where competition between purchasers is essential to actionable price discrimination) and those in which the prohibited consequences were absent.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3505, 3505.620, 3505.750, 3508.545, 3551.10, 3591.90.

Price Discrimination—Effect on Competition Under Clayton Act, Section 2(a)—Factors Considered—Size and Economic Power of Defendant—Comparative Prices to Purchasers in Different Areas.—In an action charging a manufacturer of concrete building blocks with discriminating in prices by charging a lower price in a locality where it competed with a local seller than it charged in adjacent areas, it was significant that the manufacturer was the largest supplier of cinder concrete blocks in the "territory." It enjoyed a "virtual monopoly" in one Texas county and possessed "the dominant market power" in nearby counties in New Mexico, including the one in which it competed with the local seller. In that setting, it was fairly inferable that the manufacturer utilized its higher prices in the county where it had a virtual monopoly to stifle competition with its lower prices in the area served by the local seller. In other words, it was fairly inferable that the manufacturer had used its dominant market power for predatory ends. It was not error, therefore, for the trial court to instruct the jury that, in determining the tendency of the price discriminations to substantially lessen competition and create a monopoly, they could consider the size of the manufacturer, its economic power, and its comparative prices to purchasers in the two areas. The jury was also rightly instructed that it could compare the amount of the manufacturer's sales with the local competitor's sales and could consider the reasons given by purchasers for buying the manufacturer's blocks instead of those of its local competitor. Further, there was testimony that customers of the local seller inquired if it could meet the manufacturer's lower prices and, when it was forced to discontinue sales at those prices, they ceased buying from it and began buying from the manufacturer, thereby depriving the local competitor of its "bread-and-butter" business.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3506.200, 3506.500, 3506.620.

Price Discrimination—Effect on Competition Under Clayton Act, Section 2(a)—"Possible" or "Probable" Harm to Competition.—A trial court properly instructed a jury that a building block manufacturer's sales at lower prices in an area where it competed with a local seller, while maintaining higher prices in other areas, was an actionable price discrimination if there was a "reasonable possibility" of a substantial lessening in competition or a tendency to create a monopoly. The manufacturer objected to the use of the words "reasonable possibility," insisting that the court should have required a showing of "reasonable probability" of the proscribed effect. While there has been considerable discussion concerning the authoritative choice of the two phrases to define the statutory phrase "may be to substantially lessen competition . . .," the United States Supreme Court, in Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,247, deliberately adopted "reasonable possibility" over the more positive "reasonable probability" to indicate the required quantum of proof to show the prohibited harm. Here, however, the trial court did emphasize that such harm must not be "imaginary or illusive."

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3506.400.

Price Discrimination—Meeting Competition Under Clayton Act, Section 2(b)—Area Price Reduction to Meet Equally Low Price of Competitor—Isolated Sale by Single Competitor.—A manufacturer of concrete building blocks which was charged with violating Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act by selling at a lower price in an area where a local seller competed, while maintaining higher prices in other areas, failed to establish the "good faith meeting of competition" defense under Section 2(b). The manufacturer referred to a sale of pumice blocks by another of its competitors at a low price, and indicated that its reduced prices in the area were made to meet "an equally low price of a competitor." However, the evidence showed that the competitor's low price referred to was an "isolated sale and arose through a misunderstanding between the purchaser and the supplier." In any event, the jury was told that even though they believed that the manufacturer had discriminated in price, if they were satisfied that such discrimination was in good faith and only to meet an equally low price of a competitor, their verdict should be for the manufacturer, so long as the price reduction was not below the competitor's low price. Those instructions, considered together, correctly stated the antitrust law applicable to those facts.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3515.100, 3515.500, 3515.750.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Price Discrimination—Clayton Act, Section 2(a)—Constitutionality—Due Process—Definiteness and Certainty of Prohibitions.—Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, when construed as prohibiting "geographic price differentials or discriminations between noncompeting purchasers in different localities," is not so vague and indefinite as to be incapable of observance "in circumspect human conduct" and is not "fatally defective for want of due process." The generalized language of that section is not less definite and certain in the standards of conduct it proscribes than the restraint of trade and monopolization provisions of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, the criminal sanctions of which have long since been sustained as against the claim of unconstitutional vagueness. In addition, other related provisions of the antitrust laws of equally vague import have withstood the constitutional test.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3505.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Price Discrimination—Damages—Sufficiency of Proof—Proximate Cause—Economic Factors Other Than Defendant's Pricing Policies.—A jury which found that a manufacturer of concrete building blocks had been damaged in the amount of $10,000 by a competitor's price discrimination (selling in the competitive area at lower prices than its prevailing prices in other areas) had been properly instructed on the question of damages. The trial court had told the jury that the manufacturer had to prove its damages with reasonable certainty and not by guess and conjecture, but that if the damage was certain, "the fact that its extent is uncertain does not prevent a recovery." Also, the jury had been properly instructed on the question of "proximate cause." It was told that, if it should find that the competitor's pricing policies amounted to actionable price discrimination, the burden was still on the manufacturer to establish that its losses, if any, were proximately caused by such discriminations. The jury was also told that, if the manufacturer's losses were caused by legitimate competition or by such economic factors as (1) its inability to achieve or maintain an adequate inventory, (2) its inability to deliver its products to purchasers, (3) shut downs in its plants, (4) failure of materials and supplies, or (5) its failure to bid on business or solicit purchases, then their verdict should be for the competitor, since those factors could not be attributed to the competitor's pricing policies.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9011.560.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Damages Recoverable—Price Discrimination—Measure of Damages—Elements—Loss of Profits—Diminution of Assets—Accounting Procedures.—A jury award of $10,000 to a manufacturer of concrete building blocks whose business had been injured by a competitor's price reductions in the area was "very moderate." The jury was properly instructed that, in determining damages, it might consider as separate elements the plaintiff's loss of profits, if any, and the diminution of its assets. The competitor objected to that instruction on the ground that it permitted the jury to assess double damages for one wrongful act. However, the statute speaks of injury to "business and property." Those words have been construed in terms of (1) the difference between amounts actually realized from sales by the injured party and what it would have reasonably been expected to realize but for the unlawful acts complained of, and (2) the extent to which the value of the plaintiff's property had been diminished as a result of such acts.

Here, a public accountant analyzed the local manufacturer's production cost and computed the amount of business it might have reasonably been expected to receive if the higher prices in other areas had prevailed in the area where it competed with the defendant, and from that projected the plaintiff's profits "but for the price discrimination." The accounting procedures were not as satisfactory as the trial court thought they should have been, but they were sufficient. The evidence tended to show that, as a result of the defendant's pricing policies, the plaintiff had been deprived of business which it would have reasonably been expected to obtain under prices generally prevailing in another area, and that, as a result of the loss of that business, its profits dwindled, its cost of production increased, and the value of its business diminished.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9011.640.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Trial—Directed Verdicts—Sufficiency of Evidence to Take Case to Jury—Price Discrimination.—A Federal appellate court, affirming a trial court's judgment in favor of a building block manufacturer which had been injured in its business by a competitor's price reductions in the area where they competed, found that the evidence, considered in its entirety, was sufficient to support the judgment. Where the evidence and inferences fairly drawn therefrom are such that reasonable minded persons, in the exercise of fair and impartial judgment, might reach different conclusions upon crucial issues of fact, a motion for a directed verdict should be denied and the questions submitted to the jury. Here, the case was properly submitted to the jury on the theory that the burden was on the manufacturer to show, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the competitor discriminated in price between different purchasers of concrete cinder building blocks of like grade and quality.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9014.15.

For the appellant: John P. Eastham, Albuquerque, N. M. (of the firm Rodey, Dickason, Sloan, Akin & Robb), and J. F. Hulse, El Paso, Tex. (of the firm Scott, Hulse, Marshall & Feuille).

For the appellee: Dee C. Blythe, Clovis, N. M., and James T. Martin, Jr., Las Cruces, N. M.

Affirming a judgment of the U. S. District Court, District of New Mexico, 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,110.

Before MURRAH, PICKETT and BREITENSTEIN, Circuit Judges.

[Price Discrimination Action—Appeal]

MURRAH, Circuit Judge [In full text]: This is an appeal from a judgment for triple damages in a private antitrust suit, laid under Section 2(a) [1] of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 49 Stat. 1536, 15 U. S. C. A. 13(a).

[Geographic Price Discrimination]

The allegations are that the plaintiff-appellee, Diamond Block & Gravel Company, is a manufacturer and seller of cinder concrete building blocks to the building trade in Las Cruces, New Mexico and vicinity; that the defendant-appellant, Atlas Building Products Company, manufactures and sells the same products in El Paso, Texas and vicinity, where it has a virtual monopoly; and that it also sells those products to the building trade in Las Cruces and vicinity. The crux of the charge is that commencing in 1950, and continuing to the filing of this suit, the defendant has systematically sold its products in Las Cruces at prices actually lower than its comparable El Paso sales; that it employed its highest El Paso prices to finance its price war against competitors in New Mexcio, including the plaintiff; that such practices constitute price discriminations between different purchasers, the effect of which may be to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in commerce in building blocks, or to injure, destroy or prevent competition by the plaintiff with the defendant, and with persons who received the benefit of such discriminations, or with customers of either of them. The appellee then alleged that as a result of the acts complained of, it has been injured in its business in the sum of $200,000.00, for which it prayed judgment, to be tripled as required by law, and for reasonable attorney fees.

[Section 2(a) of Clayton Act]

The appellant moved to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted under Section 2(a), and upon denial pleaded, first, that its pricing policies were not discriminatory, but if so, they were made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor within

[1] "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce, where such commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States * * * and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination or with customers of either of them * * *."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

the meaning of Section 2(b), 15 USCA 13(b).[2] The case was submitted to the jury on the theory that the burden was upon the plaintiff to show by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant did in the course of commerce, directly or indirectly, discriminate in price between different purchasers of concrete cinder building blocks of like grade and quality; that price discrimination in the statutory sense means the giving to one of the purchasers an advantage in price not accorded or given to other purchasers. The jury was specifically told that a price discrimination as thus defined was not alone sufficient to sustain a claim under Section 2(a), for to be actionable, the evidence must show a "reasonable possibility" of a substantial lessening of competition or tendency to create a monopoly, or injure, destroy or prevent competition with any person who grants or receives the benefit of such discrimination. Thus, the jury was instructed that "a price discrimination may exist if a seller exacts different prices from its customers * * * where one leg of the price differential is across state lines and this differential affects or has a tendency to affect competition in the ways I have mentioned"; and that "the jury has the right to consider any difference in prices charged in El Paso, Texas on the one hand, and prices exacted by it [the defendant] in Dona Ana County, New Mexico [Las Cruces] on the other."

[Discrimination Between "Noncompeting" Purchasers]

The defendant objected to all of these instructions and to refusal of the court to instruct the jury that to be actionable under Section 2(a), the price discrimination must be between different purchasers in direct competition with each other; and that the court therefore erroneously permitted the jury to consider the difference in the defendant's prices in El Paso on the one hand, and Las Cruces on the other.

["Noncompeting" Purchasers—Section 3 of Robinson-Patman Act]

Thus, we have squarely presented the question whether the prohibitions of Section 2(a) are applicable to price discriminations between different, but noncompeting, purchasers of products of like grade and quality. The appellant takes the position that geographic price differentials or discriminations between noncompeting purchasers in different localities are not actionable under Section 2(a), but only under Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act, for which a private cause of action under Section 4 admittedly does not lie. And see Nashville Milk Co. v. Carnation Co. [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 68,915], 355 U. S. 373; and Safeway Stores, Inc. v. Vance [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 68,916], 355 U. S. 389.

In the first place, there is nothing in the statute to indicate that its prohibitions are restricted to price discriminations between competing purchasers in the same area. The statute is not couched in terms of locality. See Corn Products Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,363], 324 U. S. 726, 734. The purpose of this Section as an integral part of the antitrust legislative scheme is to prevent price discriminations in commerce which tend to injure competitive enterprise. To that end, it forbids a seller from charging different customers different prices for the same products with the effect of lessening competition. And, we know that market power is a ready means toward competitive injury. See Sen. Rep. 1502, 74th Cong., 2 Sess., 4 (1936); H. R. Rep. 2287, 74th Cong., 2 Sess., 8 (1936); 80 Cong. Rec. 9417 (1936). Furthermore, geographic price discrimination between noncompeting purchasers was asserted and sustained under both Sections 2(a) and 3 in Moore v. Mead's Fine Bread [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,906], 348 U. S. 115. Indeed, the court pointed out that such practices were prohibited under the Clayton Act even before the Robinson-Patman Amendment, citing Porto Rican American Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., 30 F. 2d 237. The court was sure that "Congress by the Clayton Act and the Robinson-Patman Act barred the use of interstate business to destroy local business, outlawing the price cutting employed by respondent." It went on to quote from a statement of Congressman Utterback, one of the Managers of the Robinson-Patman Amendment, that

[2] Section 2(b) pertinently provides:
"That nothing contained in sections 12, 13, 14-21, and 22-27 of this title shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor."

"Where, however, a manufacturer sells to customers both within the State and beyond the State, he may not favor either to the disadvantage of the other * * *."

And see also Maryland Baking Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,681], 243 F. 2d 716.

[Comparing Section 2(a) and Section 3]

It is agreed that Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act and Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act "overlap in some respects", but are in no way inconsistent with each other. Section 2(a) provides a civil remedy by way of triple damages, while Section 3 imposes criminal penalties for some but not all of the same infractions. Section 3 is specific in its interdictions of geographic price discriminations, while Section 2(a) is broader to prohibit the same practices between different purchasers wherever located, whether competing or not, when the effect of such discrimination may substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce. Antitrust legislation is concerned primarily with the health of the competitive process, not with the individual competitor who must sink or swim in competitive enterprise. But as a necessary incident thereto, it is concerned with predatory price cutting which has the effect of eliminating or crippling a competitor. For, surely there is no more effective means of lessening competition or creating monopolies than the debilitation of a competitor.

[Cases Distinguished]

Our case is clearly distinguishable from suits by a local purchaser against a manufacturer, where competition between purchasers is of course essential to actionable price discrimination. See Naifeh v. Ronson Art Metal Works [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,646], 117 F. Supp. 690, affmd. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,925], 218 F. 2d 292; Klein v. Lionel Corp. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,485], 237 F. 2d 13; Shaw's, Inc. v. Wilson-Jones Co. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,230], 105 F. 2d 331. Our case is also, we think, distinguishable on facts from Balian Ice Cream Co. v. Arden Farms Co. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,186], 231 F. 2d 356, in which, while the interstate manufacturer discriminated in price between different purchasers in distant localities, the difference in the price was held not to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the product sold. In short, the conclusive finding of the trial court negated the existence of any prohibited consequences or the possibility thereof.

[Anheuser-Busch Case]

The same legal issue was before the Seventh Circuit in Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission [1959 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,330], 265 F. 2d 677, where the court was presented with the basic question whether uniform local price cuts by an interstate manufacturer which disrupted the market to the injury of local competitors, were price discriminations within the proscription of Section 2(a). The court held that even though directed at local competitors, price cuts were not discriminatory, apparently because they did not discriminate among local competitors. This conclusion is apparently based upon the theory contended for here that the statutory words "different purchasers" means competing purchasers. We respectfully reject any such restriction upon Section 2(a). For, we are convinced that geographic price discriminations employed for predatory ends are cognizable under either Section 2(a) or Section 3, and it was therefore not error for the court to tell the jury that they might consider differences in price in El Paso County, Texas, and Dona Ana County, New Mexico, in determining whether the defendant was guilty of actionable price discrimination.

[Constitutionality—Due Process]

As thus construed and applied, the appellant says that the statute is so vague and indefinite as to be incapable of observance in circumspect human conduct, and is therefore fatally defective for want of due process. But we do not think the generalized language of Section 2(a) is any less definite and certain in the standards of conduct it proscribes than the restraint of trade and monopolization provisions of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, the criminal sanctions of which have long since been sustained as against the claim of unconstitutional vagueness. See Nash v. United States, 229 U. S. 373. "The law is full of instances where a man's fate depends on his estimating rightly, that is, as the jury subsequently estimates it, some matter of degree." Id. p. 377. Other related provisions of the antitrust laws of equally vague import have withstood the constitutional test. See F. & A. Ice Cream Co. v. Arden Farms [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,848], 98 F. Supp. 80; Elizabeth Arden, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,467], 156 F. 2d 132.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Sufficiency of Facts]

This bring us to the sufficiency of the facts to sustain the charge, and we think they are adequate.

[Price Differential]

It seems to be agreed that the appellant's prevailing El Paso prices to dealers and contractors during the period in question were 24¢ per standard block, less 10 per cent, plus 1½¢ delivery charge, or a delivered price of 23.1¢. And, there was evidence from which the jury was justified in finding that during the same period, the appellant's Las Cruces delivered price was 20¢, including a 3¢ haulage charge. There were variations in the prices to dealers and contractors, but the 20¢ delivered price was generally applicable to the principal building contractors. There was evidence to the effect that from the early part of 1952, when the appellee commenced business, it sold cinder blocks of the same grade and quality to the building trade for 23¢ per block, less 10 per cent, plus 1½¢ haulage, or a net of 22.2¢ delivered price; that in some instances it gave a 12 per cent discount to large contractors, or a net of 21.74¢; that in May 1953, the price was changed to 24¢, less 10 per cent, plus 1½¢ haulage, or a net of 23.1¢ delivered price. There was testimony to the effect that in April or May 1952, the contractors who had been purchasing blocks from appellee at the foregoing prices inquired whether it could meet a 20¢ delivered price; that thereafter appellee did sell blocks for two or three houses to one principal builder for 20¢ delivered price, but was forced to discontinue sales at this price; that this builder and other builders thereupon ceased to purchase blocks from appellee and thereafter purchased all of their blocks from the appellant.

[Economic Factors]

The appellant points to the fact that it sold much of its blocks through its dealers in Las Cruces and vicinity, and that those dealers sold blocks retail always in excess of 24¢, and sometimes as much as 27¢; that the appellee was actually in competition with appellant's dealers, between which there was no price discrimination; that the appellee was unable to compete for the contractors' trade because of its inability to supply their requirements due to lack of plant facilities and raw materials, production problems, failure to make special types of blocks needed in the building industry, wasteful increase in production costs, lack of sales organization, failure to maintain sufficient inventory, and other economic factors disabling the appellee from supplying the market demand in its trade area.

[Discrimination Between Purchasers in Different Areas]

There was evidence that during the prosecution period, the appellant sold $162,000.00 worth of blocks in the Las Cruces area for prices in excess of 24.1¢, but the evidence also showed without much dispute that during the same period, it sold $603,163.00 worth of blocks at prices lower than 24.1¢ in the same area. From this it is reasonable to say, as did the jury, that the appellant discriminated in prices between its purchasers in El Paso and its purchasers of the same class in the Las Cruces area.

[Effects on Competition—Factors]

As we have seen, the jury was emphatically told that only price discriminations resulting in proscribed harmful effects were actionable. But the jury was also told, rightly we think, that in determining the presence or absence of the harmful effects, if any, it could consider the size of the appellant and its economic power in the area in which it operates, the amount of blocks sold by appellant as compared to the amount sold by appellee, and the comparative prices at the consumer level, that is, the level of contractor and retail sales; and that they should take into consideration the reasons given by purchasers for purchasing appellant's or appellee's blocks. In that connection, however, the jury was advised that the antitrust laws were never intended as an "instrument to stifle or prevent competition, or as a means to create monopolies." That, "While its primary purpose was to give some measure of protection to the small business, as against unlawful practices by strong and powerful competitors, it does not exclude or preclude the large business from entering into any field and competing legitimately with others engaged in a like business enterprise." Thus, the jury was told that if the appellee failed to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the price discriminations, if any, had reasonably possible harmful effects as outlined in the statute, the verdict must be for the appellant.

[Effect on Plaintiff]

There was testimony that the appellant's 20¢ delivered price to the principal contractors deprived the appellee of its "bread-and-butter" business and prevented it from enlarging its plant facilities to take care of the demand, or to pursue a vigorous sales policy. There was evidence that in a healthy market the appellee could have enlarged its plant within a short time to enable it to compete for the business of the principal contractors in this particular area.

["Virtual Monopoly"—Dominant Market Power]

It is significant, we think, that the appellant was the largest manufacturer and supplier of cinder concrete blocks in this territory. It enjoyed a virtual monopoly in El Paso County, and possessed the dominant market power in nearby counties in New Mexico, including Dona Ana County. In this setting, it is fairly inferable that the appellant utilized its higher El Paso prices to stifle competition with its lower prices in the Las Cruces area. In other words, that the appellant utilized its dominant market power for predatory ends. It was not error, therefore, for the trial court to instruct the jury that in determining the tendency of the price discriminations to substantially lessen competition and create a monopoly, they could consider the size of the appellant, its economic power and its comparative prices to purchasers in the El Paso and Las Cruces areas. Cf. Moore v. Mead's Fine Bread, supra; United States v. Griffith [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,246], 334 U. S. 100.

["Meeting Competition" Defense]

In defense of its pricing policy, appellant refers to a sale of pumice blocks by a competitor, not the appellee, for 20¢ delivered price, and indicates that its 20¢ delivered price was made to meet an equally low price of a competitor. But the evidence shows that the 20¢ delivered price was an isolated sale and arose through a misunderstanding between the purchaser and the supplier. In any event, the jury was told that even though they believed by a preponderance of the evidence that the appellant did discriminate in price, if they were satisfied by the same preponderance of the evidence that such discrimination was in good faith and only to meet an equally low price of a competitor, their verdict should be for the appellant, so long as the price reduction was not below the competitor's low price. And see Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,746], 340 U. S. 231. We think these instructions, considered together, correctly state the antitrust law applicable to these facts.

["Probable" or "Possible" Competitive Effects]

As we have seen, the jury was positively instructed that appellant's price dscriminations, if any, were actionable if there was a "reasonable possibility" of a substantial lessening in competition or tendency to create a monopoly. The appellant objected to the use of the words "reasonable possibility", insisting that the court should have required a showing of a "reasonable probability" of the proscribed effect on commerce.

The use of both phrases to mean the same thing in Corn Products Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, supra, has provoked considerable discussion concerning the authoritative choice of the two to define the statutory phrase "may be to substantially lessen competition * * *" which, in our judgment, needs no definition. Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co. [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,247], 334 U. S. 37; E. Edelmann & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,558], 239 F. 2d 152; Whitaker Cable Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,559], 239 F. 2d 253; Moog Industries v. Federal Trade Commission [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,527], 238 F. 2d 43. But whatever may be said for the use of the words "reasonable probability" as a basis for judicial action (see Mr. Justice Jackson dissenting in Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., supra), the fact remains that for good or bad, the Supreme Court has deliberately adopted "reasonable possibility" over the more positive "reasonable probability" to indicate the required quantum of proof to show the prohibited harm. Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., supra.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

While the court did tell the jury that reasonable possibility of harmful results was sufficient, it did emphasize that such harm must not be "imaginary or illusive". We cannot say that the trial court erroneously used the phrase "reasonable possibility" instead of "reasonable probability".

[Proximate Cause]

The appellant also complains of the refusal of the trial court to give its requested instructions on proximate cause. But the jury was told clearly and unmistakably that even though it should find that the appellant's pricing policies amounted to actionable price discrimination, the burden was on the appellee to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that the losses, if any, were proximately caused by such price discriminations; that loss of business occasioned by inability to achieve or maintain an adequate inventory, inability to deliver its products to purchasers, by shut downs in its plant, failure of material and supplies, or failure to bid on business or solicit purchases, could not be attributable to the appellant's pricing policies; and if, therefore, the jury found that the loss of business was caused by any of these factors or by legitimate competition, their verdict should be for the defendant. The jury was instructed in language too clear for doubt that there must be a causal connection between the losses sustained, if any, and the unlawful acts of the appellant. Under these instructions we think the question of proximate cause was properly submitted to the jury. And see Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Co., 282 U. S. 555.

[Damages]

The ascertainment of requisite damages to the appellee's business and property was submitted to the jury on the theory that it was incumbent on the appellee to prove such damages with reasonable certainty, not by guess and conjecture. But, "If the damage is certain, the fact that its extent is uncertain does not prevent a recovery." Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Co., supra. See also Kobe, Inc. v. Dempsey Pump Co. [1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,312], 198 F. 2d 416; Leader Clothing Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y., 237 F. 2d 7; Wells Truckways v. Burch, 247 F. 2d 194; Bigelow v. R. K. O. Radio Pictures [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,445], 327 U. S. 251.

[Loss of Business—Accounting Procedures]

On the question of damages and the amount thereof, the appellee relied on the testimony of one of its partners, who produced the records of the Company on sales and cost of production, and who also testified concerning the appellee's sales policies in the Las Cruces area in its attempts to compete with the appellant. Generally, the testimony reflected an increased cost of production commensurate with decreased production resulting from diminished sales. A public accountant analyzed the appellee's production cost and computed the amount of business the appellee might reasonably be expected to receive if El Paso prices (i. e. 21.6¢ f. o. b.) had prevailed, and from that projected the appellee's profits but for the price discrimination. A manufacturer's agent, familiar with the block building business, and particularly the production methods and procedures prevalent in the business, testified that the appellee could have expeditiously enlarged its production facilities to meet the demand and compete for its fair share of the business in a flourishing market. The accounting procedures employed by the appellee to show damages were not as satisfactory as the trial court thought they should have been, but that they were sufficient. We agree that the evidence tended to show that as a result of the appellant's pricing policies, the appellee had been deprived of business which it would have reasonably been expected to obtain under prices generally prevailing in the El Paso area; and that as a result of the loss of this business, its profits dwindled, its cost of production increased, and the value of its business was diminished.

[Profit Losses and Diminution of Assets]

In that regard the jury was instructed that in determining damages it might consider as one of the elements, any profits that may have been lost by appellee in its business; and that it might also consider as another element of damages the extent to which the value of appellee's profit or the net worth of its assets had been diminished as a result of the price discrimination. The appellant objected to this instruction on the ground that it permitted the jury to assess double damages for one wrongful act.

The statute speaks of injury to "business or property". And see Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. A. 15.[3] And, those words in their ordinary sense have been construed in terms of (1) the difference, if any, between the amounts actually realized by the injured party and what it would have reasonably expected to realize from sales but for the unlawful acts complained of; and (2) the extent to which the value of the petitioner's property had been diminished as a result of such acts. See Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson, supra; Kobe, Inc. v. Dempsey Pump Co., supra; Bigelow v. R. K. O. Pictures, supra. We think both loss of profits in business and diminishment of the assets were proper elements of damage, and the trial court did not err in so submitting the case to the jury.

[Relevance and Probative Value of Testimony]

The appellant also challenges the testimony of the accountant and the manufacturing agent as wholly outside the scope of the case and the knowledge of the witnesses, and as based upon hypothetical facts having no basis in the evidence and contrary thereto. Much of the accountant's testimony was of doubtful relevance, and the court excluded parts and confined other parts within narrow range. We think in the last analysis the weight and probative value of the testimony they gave concerning the amount of damages was for the jury under instructions of the court.

["Moderate" Award of Damages—Judgment Affirmed]

As the trial court observed, the jury award of $10,000.00 was "very moderate" under the proof of the amount of sales and the worth of the business involved. We have recently restated the general rule that "on a motion for directed verdict upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to take the case to the jury on the crucial issue or issues of fact, the evidence and the inferences fairly to be drawn from the evidence must be considered in the light most favorable to the party against whom the motion is directed. And if the evidence and the inferences fairly drawn therefrom—viewed in that manner—are such that reasonable minded persons in the exercise of fair and impartial judgment may reach different conclusions upon the crucial issue or issues of fact, the motion should be denied and the question submitted to the jury." Transcontinental Bus System, Inc. v. Taylor, 265 F. 2d 913. See also Linn v. Ula Uranium, Inc., 265 F. 2d 916; Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson, supra. We agree with the trial court that the evidence, considered in its entirety, is sufficient to support the judgment of the court, and it is affirmed.

[¶ 69,449] Pevely Dairy Company v. Milk Wagon Drivers and Dairy Employees Union Local 603.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri, Eastern Division. No. 58 C 396 (3). Filed June 19, 1959.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Labor Unions—Exemptions under Clayton Act, Sections 6 and 20, and Norris-LaGuardia Act—Absence of Conspiracy with Non-labor Groups—Labor Agreement "Affecting Price Structure" of Milk—"Illegality Per Se" Doctrine.—A dairy's agreement with a truck drivers' labor union to pay delivery truck drivers on a "commission" system was not illegal per se under Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. The dairy contended that the agreement was forced upon it by the union,

[3] Section 4 provides in material part: "Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor * * *."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

that the "excessive and illegal" commissions affected the price of milk, and that "any agreement, including labor contracts, which results in affecting the price structure, is illegal per se." The court concluded, however, that the "illegality per se" doctrine does not apply to a labor union, and that such an organization is immune from Sherman Act liability unless it is found to have conspired with non-labor groups for purposes not connected with legitimate labor ends. The courts have held that when the Sherman Act is read in connection with the Norris-LaGuardia and Clayton Acts, a union acting for a labor goal, in the absence of a conspiracy with outside groups, cannot be in violation of the Sherman Act. Here, there was no allegation or proof of a combination or conspiracy with a non-labor group.

The court distinguished the instant case from those cited as authority for the proposition that a union, even when acting alone, does not have an unlimited license to escape the antitrust laws. Here, there was a true employer-employee relationship. Since the union negotiated, on behalf of the dairy's employees, a contract providing for certain salaries and commissions, it would have been difficult for the court to state that those agreements did not concern "conditions of employment."

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2101.063, 2101.100, 2101.265, 2111.

For the plaintiff: Alexander Kerckhoff and E. C. Hartman, St. Louis, Mo.

For the defendant: Harry H. Craig, St. Louis, Mo.

Opinion

[Labor Unions Under Antitrust Laws]

WEBER, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff filed its Complaint against defendant Union under §§ 1 and 4 of Title 15, U. S. C. A., known as the Sherman Antitrust Act, in which it alleges that Articles 14 and 15A of its contract with defendant[1] are in violation of the Act and are illegal and in restraint of trade and commerce among the several states.

["Excessive Commissions"—No Conspiracy Alleged]

Plaintiff's Complaint generally alleges that these Articles were forced upon it by the Union in their bargaining session; that it is prohibited from employing independent contractors to distribute or sell its milk and dairy products in competition with other milk processers who have signed the identical contract and who have independent contractors delivering such products in the same area; that under the point commission basis for wholesale store route drivers, it has been compelled to pay some of them up to $20,000 per year for 8 hours work per day, 5 days per week; that such wholesale store route drivers average 120% more per week than home delivery route drivers and 40% to 150% more than all other defendant Local employees; that such excessive and illegal commission payments affect the price of milk, interfere with plaintiff's reasonable and competitive cost of delivery, and adversely affect both plaintiff and the consuming public; that it is compelled to compete with other companies who have not contracted with defendant Union; that this contract was forced upon plaintiff for the sole purpose of restricting, restraining

[1] The Articles of the Contract are too lengthy to quote verbatim, so the Court is setting them forth in essence, as follows:

Article 14 provides a minimum wage scale for retail, mixed retail, wholesale bulk and wholesale store routes, and tank and tractor drivers, route foremen, and route drivers. The wage scale in each category provides for a base pay per week, for overtime, for raises based on seniority and for paid vacations.

In addition to the base pay clauses, provision is made for monthly commissions to be paid on a point basis. The determination of points is set forth in detail in the contract, but may be generally stated to provide points for 1 quart of milk, or its equivalent in cream, ice cream, butter and cheese.

The only part of Article 14 of the contract about which plaintiff complains in its Complaint is with reference to the commissions for "wholesale store routes". The commissions therein provided for increase upon a point basis beginning at 15,000 to 50,000 points per month at 1½¢ per point; 50,000 to 60,000 points per month, 2¢ per point; in excess of 60,000, 3¢ per point.

Article 15A provides that during the life of the contract the employer will operate all wholesale and retail routes by "its employees and by no others and shall not engage independent contractors or outside persons, firms or corporations to do the type of work which is recognized as the work of the employees". (An exception was made to independent contractors presently engaged.)

and preventing competition and; that trade is restrained between the several states. (It should be noted that the Complaint is void of any allegation of conspiracy or combination.)

Defendant joined issue upon these allegations and the cause proceeded to trial before the Court without a jury.

[Economics]

Without overburdening this Opinion by details of the evidence, suffice it to say, that plaintiff's proof tended to establish that a certain percentage of the wholesale store route drivers would receive around, and even in excess of, $20,000 per year and that such wages and commission were considerably in excess of all other employees of plaintiff, even in the same category. An economist testified for plaintiff that an increase in commissions as unit deliveries increased, was poor economics; that good economics would require that as production increased, the cost should go down. Testimony further established the interstate character of plaintiff's operation and the effect of this phase of the contract as reflected in the price of milk.

[Acquiescence—Alternative]

Plaintiff's evidence further established that due to the perishable nature of its products a shutdown as the result of a strike would be disastrous; that plaintiff would lose its source of supply as well as its wholesale and retail customers, that such had been the experience in the industry and therefore plaintiff had no alternative but to enter into the contract.

[Negotiations]

It may further be pointed out that the negotiations on this contract proceeded in the following fashion: all of the dairies in this community met with the defendant's negotiators to attempt to reach agreement upon a contract; when a contract was not reached with the whole group, the Union then announced its plans to negotiate individually and elected one other dairy in the community with which to negotiate; the Union later announced to the remainder of the dairies that it had reached agreement with the one dairy; that thereafter all of the dairies, including plaintiff, signed a similar contract.

Defendant produced only one witness, the head of the Local, who substantiated the method of negotiations and testified that the employees receiving the high wages were older employees with considerable seniority. He also stated that the contract was negotiated with the intent of providing job security and to prohibit destruction of the Local's wage scale.

[Issues]

The pleadings and the testimony boil down the issues in this matter to two propositions: (1) is a union within contemplation of the Sherman Act, and if so, (2) can a union be in violation of the restraint of trade prohibitions of the Act when it acts singly, i.e., without combining with a non-labor group.

[Agreements Affecting Price Structure—Legality]

Plaintiff contends that any agreement, including labor contracts, which result in affecting the price structure, is illegal per se. This contention is not supported by the court decisions.

In Adams Dairy Co. v. St. Louis Dairy Co., et al. [1958 TRADE CASES ¶ 69,158], (8th CCA, 1958), 260 F. 2d 46, 54, (and in which this plaintiff was a defendant) the court said:

> "It should also be emphasized that this controversy bears another feature vitally distinguishing it from the cases where the 'Illegality Per Se' doctrine was applied, in that a labor union was a participant in the activities which culminated in the 1950 contract. Under decisional law, a labor organization is immune to Sherman Act liability unless it is found to have conspired with non-labor groups for purposes not connected with legitimate labor ends. Allen Bradley v. Local Union No. 3, 325 U. S. 797, 65 S. Ct. 1533, 89 L. Ed. 1939. See also United States v. Hutcheson, 312 U. S. 219, 232, 61 S. Ct. 463, 85 L. Ed. 788; Annotation, 29 A. L. R. 2d 323, 408. As urged by the Union, when labor organizations are involved, it is necessary to look apart from the Sherman Act, and consider it in conjunction with the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 730, and the Norris-LaGuardia Act, 47 Stat. 70."

[Exemption]

In effect, what the courts have said is that when the Sherman Act (which has no specific provision for exemptions of unions from the restraints provided in the Act) is read in connection with the Norris-LaGuardia and Clayton Acts (which exempt unions where a labor dispute is involved) then, a union acting for a labor goal or end and absent conspiracy or combination with outside groups, cannot be in violation of the Sherman Act. See Allen Bradley v. Local Union No. 3, supra [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,386].

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Employer-Employee Relationship]

Plaintiff has cited Columbia River Packers Ass'n., Inc. v. Hinton, et al. [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,185], (1943), 315 U. S. 143; I. P. C. Distributors, Inc. v. Chicago Moving Picture Machine Operators Union [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,107], (N. D. Ill., 1955), 132 F. Supp. 294, 299, as authority for the proposition that a union acting alone does not have an unlimited license to escape the antitrust laws. These cases, however, are distinguishable from the present type of case. They involve situations where there is not an employer-employee relationship. In Ring v. Spina, et al. [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,347], (2nd CCA, 1945), 148 F. 2d 647, at l.c. 651, the Court said,

> "* * * the exception (i.e., the exclusion of the union from violation of the Sherman Act, § 17, Title 15, U. S. C.) will not apply unless an employer-employee relationship is 'the matrix of the controversy'." (Parenthesis supplied.)

In the case at hand there is a true employer-employee relationship. The defendant Union has negotiated the contract in question on behalf of the plaintiff's employees. The contract provides for certain salaries and commissions and, in addition, that the employees of the plaintiff should be the only ones entitled to deliver the milk. It would be difficult for this Court to state that these agreements entered into on behalf of plaintiff's employees did not concern "conditions of employment". See, e.g., Milk Wagon Drivers' Union v. Lake Valley Farm Products, Inc., et al. [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,070], (1940), 311 U. S. 91.

[Agreement with Non-Labor Groups]

Other cases cited by plaintiff on this proposition, viz., Hawaiian Tuna Packers Ltd. v. International Longshoremen's Union, (D. C. Hawaii, 1947), 72 F. Supp. 562 [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,587], and United States v. Milk Drivers and Dairy Employees Union [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,813], (D. C. Minn., 1957), 153 F. Supp. 803, are situations where it was found that the union had entered into agreement with non-labor groups. Therefore, these cases are not authority for plaintiff's contention.

["Unfair Labor Practices"—NLRB Jurisdiction]

Plaintiff also cites for this proposition Bakery Sales Drivers Local Union No. 33 v. Wagshal, 333 U. S. 437, Pacific Gamble Robinson Co. v. Minneapolis & St. L. Ry. Co., (D. C. Minn., 1949), 85 F. Supp. 65; Teamsters Union v. Hanke, et al., (1950), 339 U. S. 470; Penello v. International Union, U. M. W. A., (D. C. C., 1950), 88 F. Supp. 935. These cases likewise are not in point. They were not brought under the Sherman Act. They involved situations where the union was either striking or refusing to bargain over a certain matter which management was contending constituted an "unfair labor practice." There was no contract entered into by the parties and, therefore, it was the "unfair labor practice" that was the basis of the action.

If it is an "unfair labor practice" that plaintiff is complaining of, Norris-LaGuardia and Taft-Hartley provide it with a forum, as the N. L. R. B. has primary jurisdiction over such labor disputes. See California Ass'n v. Building and Const. Council, (9th CCA, 1949), 178 F. 2d 175; United Brick & Clay Workers v. Junction City Clay Co. [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,523], (6th CCA, 1946), 158 F. 2d 552; International Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union v. Sunset Line & Twine Co., (D. C. Calif., 1948), 77 F. Supp. 119; LeBaron v. Kern County Farm Labor Union, (D. C. Calif., 1948), 80 F. Supp. 151. Protection can even be had before actual industrial strife materializes to obstruct commerce. See Labor Board v. Bradford Dyeing Ass'n., (1940) 310 U. S. 318, 326; NLRB v. J. L. Hudson Co., 135 F. 2d 380, cert. den. 320 U. S. 740 (1943); NLRB v. Rath Packing Co., (8th CCA, 1940), 115 F. 2d 217.

["Illegality Per Se" Doctrine]

It is this Court's conclusion that the "Illegality Per Se" doctrine does not apply to a labor union and that such an organization is immune to Sherman Act liability unless it is found to have conspired or combined with non-labor groups for purposes not connected with legitimate labor ends. Adams Dairy Co. v. St. Louis Co., et al., supra.

[Economic Theories]

The evidence offered by plaintiff as to the economic unsoundness of the contract in regard to these high commissions being paid some of the drivers and the further fact that its failure to sign the contract would cause a strike and destroy its suppliers and customers, is certainly a situation which must give plaintiff vital concern.

However, the courts cannot be called upon to choose sides between differing economic theories. It is the courts' function to view the pleadings and the evidence within the purview of the act upon which plaintiff has bottomed its case. As pointed out in the Allen Bradley Co. v. Union, supra, at l.c. 810-811:

> "It is true that many labor union activities do substantially interrupt the course of trade and that these activities, lifted out of the prohibitions of the Sherman Act, include substantially all, if not all, of the normal peaceful activities of labor unions. * * * a union's exemption from the Sherman Act is not to be determined by a judicial 'judgment regarding the wisdom or unwisdom, the rightness or wrongness, the selfishness or unselfishness of the end of which the particular union activities are the means.' United States v. Hutcheson, (312 U. S. 219, 232). Thus, these congressionally permitted union activities may restrain trade in and of themselves. There is no denying the fact that many of them do so, both directly and indirectly. Congress evidently concluded, however, that the chief objective of Anti-trust legislation, preservation of business competition, could be accomplished by applying the legislation primarily only to those business groups which are directly interested in destroying competition."

[Judgment for Union]

The plaintiff, having chosen its forum and having based its case entirely upon the provisions of the Sherman Act, has failed to produce any proof of conspiracy or combination with a non-labor group and thus has entirely failed to make a case within the confines of its pleading and the decisions applicable thereto. Therefore, an Order shall be entered finding the issues against the plaintiff and for the defendant.

[¶ 69,450] John I. Okerberg, Jr. v. Robert Crable and Carl E. Kersley.

In the Kansas Supreme Court. No. 41,348. Opinion filed July 10, 1959.

Appeal from the Franklin District Court, FLOYD H. COFFMAN, Judge.

Kansas Antitrust Laws

Combinations and Conspiracies—State Antitrust Laws—Practices—Territorial Division of Markets—Milk Haulers' Allocation of Routes for Delivery to Single Receiving Plant—Rule of Reason.—An agreement dividing route "territories" among milk "haulers" transporting milk from producers' farms to only one particular receiving plant in Kansas did not have the effect of eliminating competition in the transportation of milk to that plant by third persons in violation of Kansas "restraint of trade" statutes. The trial court had concluded that the signers of the agreement had bound themselves to prevent any other member-hauler, or any other person besides "the hauler who owned that territory," from receiving the "freight" on milk delivered to that plant (excepting deliveries by the producer himself). Reversing the trial court's ruling that the agreement was void, the court noted that the old rule as to limitations of time and space with respect to contracts in restraint of trade has given way to the modern doctrine of "reasonableness." Thus, the real test is never whether there is any restraint, but whether the restraint is reasonable under the facts and circumstances of the particular case. Further, reasonableness depends upon "fundamental elements of common fairness." Here, all of the producers were generally charged the same hauling rates within a particular route territory of a "can" hauler, whether the milk went to the plant in question or to some other plant, and irrespective of the distance from the farm to the receiving plant. Thus, the agreement did not work any hardship on the milk producers. Also, there was competition between the plant in question and other plants in the territory, competition between the haulers who had signed the agreement and the haulers for other plants, no price fixing, and no requirement that the producers sell to that plant. In addition, producers could haul their milk to that plant in their own trucks if they did not wish to use the services of the hauler who "owned" the route territory in which they were located.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2345, 2429.

Combinations and Conspiracies—State Antitrust Laws—Action to Enforce Contract—Defenses—Antitrust Violations—Burden of Proof.—In an action seeking to enforce an agreement dividing route "territories" among milk "haulers" engaged in transporting milk from producers' farms to a particular receiving plant, the trial court improperly concluded that "although there was no direct evidence to establish that hauling rates would be less if the milk haulers' agreement were not in effect, such an agreement being contrary to the declared public policy of the state is presumed to be injurious to the public welfare." Any presumptions must be in favor of the validity of the agreement, not its invalidity; thus, the burden was on the defendant at all times to prove the invalidity of the agreement. There is no presumption that a contract is illegal, and one who denies his liability under a contract which he admits having entered into must make the fact of illegality apparent. The presumption is in favor of innocence, and the taint of wrong is a matter of defense.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2407.

For the appellant: Basil W. Kelsey, Ottawa, Kan., argued the cause (Winton A. Winter was with him on the brief).

For the appellees: John C. Gage, Kansas City, Mo., argued the cause (William S. Bowers, Ottawa, Kan., was with him on the brief).

Syllabus by the Court

[Allocation of Milk Route Territories]

1. As more fully appears in the opinion, pursuant to certain milk route territory regulations covering all independent milk trucks, whether can or bulk tank type, delivering milk from producers to the Bennett Creamery Company in Ottawa, Kansas, plaintiff, a can milk hauler, as the result of conversion by three of his producers from the can to the bulk tank system, transferred them to defendants who failed and refused to make the payment required to be made to plaintiff under the above-mentioned regulations. Plaintiff thereafter filed this action seeking a money judgment. The record is examined and it is held: (1) The regulations herein concerned are reasonable and valid; (2) the trial court did not err in refusing to amend the findings of fact but it did err in its conclusions of law based on those findings; and (3) the trial court further erred in entering judgment in favor of defendants.

2. There is no presumption that a contract is illegal. He who denies his liability under a contract which he admits having entered into must make the fact of illegality apparent. The presumption is in favor of innocence, and the taint of wrong is a matter of defense.

3. The old rule as to limitations of time and space with respect to contracts involving restraint of trade has given way to the modern doctrine of reasonableness and the real test is never whether there is any restraint but always whether the restraint is reasonable under the facts and circumstances of the particular case. (Heckard v. Park, 164 Kan. 216, 188 P. 2d 926, 175 A. L. R. 605, 617.)

The opinion of the court was delivered by Robb, Justice [In full text]: This is an appeal from the trial court's final judgment in favor of appellees (defendants) against appellant (plaintiff) and from that court's order overruling plaintiff's motions to modify its findings of fact and conclusions of law and for a new trial.

[Contract Action]

The petition sought a money judgment of $1,229.50 based on a contract entered into by certain independent milk truck operators (haulers) who transported milk in cans from the farms of producers to the Bennett Creamery Company plant in Ottawa. The contract was captioned:

> "Milk Route Territory Regulations Covering All Independent Milk Trucks Delivering Milk From Producers to the Bennett Creamery Co., Ottawa, Kansas, February 6, 1957."

The contract provided, in substance, that milk routes were to be recognized by number and color, and when routes overlapped roads should be colored to denote route territory on a route map to be kept and locked in a glass case in the haulers' office at Bennett's plant; any route change was to be made by not less than "three committee members" at the request of the haulers desiring the change and with all affected haulers present; a hauler had to serve all producers in his territory who sold to Bennetts and he would be penalized if he forfeited a producer's business; far-reaching routes would be protected from encroachment by new and nearer routes; (the compensation feature of the contract is covered in the trial court's findings of fact appended hereto). The remaining portion of the contract required the regulations to be signed by all haulers and posted with the route map, indicating their acceptance of both.

The contract and route map were in effect for a number of years (the record does not reflect the exact number) but it has been at least since the 1951 flood because a new route map was made up at that time.

[Sale of "Territory"]

In February, 1957, in order to provide for a more modern and efficient method of hauling milk from refrigerated bulk tanks on producers' farms via a hauler's bulk tank truck to Bennetts, an additional paragraph (item 10) was added to the regulations whereby it was agreed that tank hauling rights could be sold and transferred by a can hauler to a bulk tank hauler under one of two proposed payment plans. The payment plan with which we are here concerned was the first, or cash, payment plan, under which cash was to be paid within thirty days after the first bulk tank hauling and was to be computed at the "minimum rate of 50¢ per lb. average of previous 12 months daily average weight." The average weight was determined by dividing the total pounds of milk produced during the previous twelve months by 365, or if the period was less than twelve months, by dividing the total number of pounds by the number of days shipped. Such sale to a purchasing hauler would be final and binding and without recourse except that if a bulk tank farmer-producer reverted to cans within twelve months, then the territory owner (can hauler) had to refund the pro rata share of the purchase price to the bulk tank hauler. If the change back to cans occurred after a year then no refund was to be made but the bulk tank hauling rights were not thereby lost to the tank hauler or his successor.

Item 10 further provided that if a producer who converted from cans to bulk tank had not sold to Bennetts for more than a year, then no payment was to be made by the tank hauler to the territory owner (the can hauler). Item 10 was to be applied to bulk tank milk and did not affect previous can milk regulations. The regulations went with the territory and bound the successor. The Haulers' Committee would decide any bulk tank question not covered by item 10. At least ten haulers were required to call a meeting of route owners and a two-thirds majority of all route owners was required to change the regulations. A total of 34 haulers, including appellant and both appellees here, signed the regulations.

The issues were made up and both appellant and the appellees filed requested findings of fact and conclusions of law. The trial court's comprehensive and complete findings and conclusions, as finally amended, are hereto appended and made a part hereof.

Since the trial court's findings are supported by the evidence, they are conclusive on appeal. (Davis-Wellcome Mortgage Co. v. Long-Bell Lumber Co., 184 Kan. 209, 336 P. 2d 469.) We believe that findings No. 11, 12, 18, and 27 substantially contain the theory set out in the suggested additional findings of appellant submitted in connection with his motion to modify the trial court's findings and we do not deem it necessary to discuss this claim of error.

[Existence of Competition]

Without repeating, we are of the opinion the last-mentioned findings establish the fact that there was competition between Bennetts and other plants in the territory in question and that there was competition between the signers of the regulations and the haulers for other plants. This competition was active in the territory under consideration here. If the producer did not wish to use the services of the hauler on his territory, he could haul the milk to Bennetts in his own truck but if he wished to use the services, the hauler was compelled to furnish them.

[Effect on Prices]

Under the trial court's findings 7 and 8, which refer to federal regulations control-

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

ling this particular business, it is apparent why the parties do not make a material issue as to whether the territory regulations affect the price of milk and its by-products to the consumer. It is admitted, and the record shows, that the trial court was not confronted with, nor did it determine, any application or effect of the Federal Anti-Trust Laws and by reason thereof we shall not consider them in this appeal. In other words, this court is committed to the rule that it will not pass upon an issue which has not previously been presented to the court below. (In re Estate of Cramer, 183 Kan. 808, 816, 332 P. 2d 554.)

[Kansas "Restraint of Trade" Statutes]

The case was tried and decided by the trial court under two of our "restraint of trade" statutes. G. S. 1949, 50-101 in pertinent part reads:

"A trust is a combination of capital, skill, or acts, by two or more persons, firms, corporations, or associations of persons, or either two or more of them, for either, any or all of the following purposes:

"First. To create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce, or aids to commerce, or to carry out restrictions in the full and free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by the laws of this state.

. . .

"Third. To prevent competition in the manufacture, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or commodities, or to prevent competition in aids to commerce.

"Fourth. To fix any standard or figure, whereby its price to the public shall be, in any manner, controlled or established, any article . . . of produce or commerce intended for sale, use or consumption in this state.

"Fifth. To make . . . any contract . . . by which they shall bind . . . themselves not to . . . transport any article or commodity . . . of . . . commerce or consumption below a common standard figure; or by which they shall agree . . . to keep the price of such article, commodity or transportation at a fixed or graded figure . . . to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves or others in transportation . . . of any such article or commodity . . . that its price may in any manner be affected. And any such combinations are here declared to be against public policy, unlawful and void."

G. S. 1949, 50-112, in part, provides:

"That all arrangements, contracts . . . which tend to prevent full and free competition in the . . . transportation or sale of articles . . . of domestic growth or product raw material . . . which tend to advance, reduce or control the price or the cost to the producer or to the consumer . . . are hereby declared to be against public policy, unlawful and void."

[Legality of Agreement—Cases Considered]

In support of their argument that the agreement herein is contrary to public policy, illegal per se, and void, appellees rely on a number of our contract cases and we will examine some of them. The agreement in State v. Smiley, 65 Kan. 240, 69 Pac. 199, 196 U. S. 447, 25 S. Ct. 289, 49 L. ed. 546, was entered into by all the grain buyers of a certain market for the express purpose of preventing competition among the buyers. It was for the further purpose and effect of pooling the profits of the grain trade and the formation of a grain trust among the buyers. State v. Wilson, 73 Kan. 343, 84 Pac. 737, concerned an agreement among the members of an association, which practically controlled the business at a great commercial center, that they would make no purchases or sales for others without charging as a commission for their services at least 50¢ for each head of cattle handled. This obviously created a restriction in the full and free pursuit of that business. In Mills v. Ordnance Co., 113 Kan. 479, 215 Pac. 314, a contract providing for the purchase and sale of tractors with the price fixed at which the purchaser should sell the tractors was held illegal because it was violative of the anti-monopoly statutes of this state. The contract involved in McGregor v. Bank, 114 Kan. 356, 219 Pac. 520, related to a settlement between a borrower and a bank and was held to be void because it was unfair and unjust to third persons, namely, creditors of the bank. A secret arrangement was entered into by the plaintiffs in Gard v. Holmes, 132 Kan. 443, 295 Pac. 716, whereby Holmes, a mortician in Wichita, was to hire one Schultz, a mortician in Anthony, Kansas, so as to discontinue Schultz as a competitor to the plaintiffs who ran the only other mortuary in Anthony, but examination of that opinion shows a relaxing of the strict rule of the common law and our earlier cases by use of the following language:

> "If these plaintiffs had made a fair and open bargain to buy out Schultz' business and had bound him to stay out of the undertaking business in Anthony and thereabout for one year or ten, we would have little hesitation in upholding the contract."

The contract in United Artists Corp. v. Mills, 135 Kan. 655, 11 P. 2d 1025, was declared to be invalid on two grounds but we are concerned with only the one under G. S. 1949, 50-101, Fifth, fixing the exhibitors' price for admission at no less than ten cents. The contract in Patterson v. Glass Co., 91 Kan. 201, 137 Pac. 955, was held bad because by it and other similar contracts, the company sought to control the output and price of window-glass factories throughout the country. This case was later cited in Joslin v. Steffen Ice & Ice Cream Co., 143 Kan. 409, 412, 54 P. 2d 941, wherein plaintiff, a retailer, had to buy all the ice he required from Steffens at thirty cents a hundred weight and sell it at not less than forty cents a hundred weight. This court there said such an agreement resulted in the consumer having "to foot the bill." A manufacturer may set his price at which he will sell his product but he and his buyer cannot agree as to the price the retailer will charge third parties.

[Prevailing Rule]

A more exhaustive discussion of many of the cases cited by appellees appears in Morrison v. Bandt, 145 Kan. 942, 67 P. 2d 584, cited and relied upon by appellant. In that case the transaction was void because it sought, by securing title and possession of certain grain elevator property, to control the price of grain and prevent competition. The rule that must prevail in cases of this character from McBratney v. Chandler, 22 Kan. 692, was quoted and followed in the Morrison case. It read:

> " 'That which is bad destroys that which is good, and they perish together.' "

The quotation from the McBratney case, as set out in the Morrison case, continued:

> " 'There is no presumption that a contract is illegal. He who denies his liability under a contract which he admits having made, must make the fact of its illegality apparent. The burden of showing it wrong is on him who seeks to deny his obligation thereon. The presumption is in favor of innocence, and the taint of wrong is [a] matter of defense.' "

Pohlman v. Dawson, 63 Kan. 471, 65 Pac. 689, also cited by appellant, concerned a contract to sell a barber shop wherein the court enjoined the seller from working in a competing barber shop under the agreement made that he "should not engage in the barber business in any manner in Russell, Kan."

[Test of Legality—Reasonableness]

An instructor in vocal training sued a pupil for an accounting and for specific performance of their contract and this court reversed the trial court's order sustaining a demurrer to the petition. (Heckard v. Park, 164 Kan. 216, 188 P. 2d 926, 175 A. L. R. 605, 617.) Therein is included a full treatment of the authorities cited by appellant here. Consideration and mutuality of the contract were also discussed which settles those questions now before us since, on the one hand, appellant has surrendered his three customers to appellees, and on the other hand, appellees have received them and have enjoyed their business and the income it has produced for them. The Heckard case recognized that no "hard-and-fast" rule governing all such contract cases can be laid down. This court there held:

> "The old rule as to limitations of time and space with respect to contracts involving restraint of trade has given way to the modern doctrine of reasonableness and the real test is never whether there is any restraint but always whether the restraint is reasonable under the facts and circumstances of the particular case."

In the Heckard opinion, similarly to our present case, the solution of the question of reasonableness of a contract of the character there being considered was said to depend "upon fundamental elements of common fairness in view of the facts and circumstances of the parties."

["Common Fairness"]

Some of the circumstances to be considered in determining the fundamental elements of common fairness of the regulations in this case are that under finding eleven all of the producers of milk, none of which is a complaining party here, are generally charged the same hauling rates within a particular route territory of a can hauler whether the milk goes to Bennetts or to some other plant and irrespective of the distance from the farm to the receiving plant. Thus the regulations did not work any hardship on the milk producers. On the other hand, the producers had access, if they desired it, to the regular service of a hauler who knew and traveled all types of roads under all weather conditions, with proper equipment, so that the milk was picked up at approximately the same time every day if they used cans, or once every two days if they used the bulk tank system. Without such systematic and orderly regulations there would be overlapping of territories, excessive distances to be covered by haulers, and other circumstances whereby the producers could not be positive that all or any of the milk produced would reach its destination or what its condition would be when it arrived. As we view the regulations, the fundamental elements of common fairness, so far as the milk producers are concerned, are well established.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

The appellees through the regulations here being considered have been and now retain their territory as can haulers along with the three customers of appellant they obtained by reason of item 10. Under the reasoning of the Heckard case, this is not inimical to our "restraint of trade" statutes or to public policy.

We cannot agree with the trial court's second conclusion of law that the regulations had the purpose and effect of eliminating competition for the transportation of milk by third parties. So far as Bennetts and the signers of the regulations are concerned, the producers could haul their milk themselves, if they preferred. The entire plan is based on competition, as heretofore stated, and further discussion is unnecessary on this point.

From previous discussion we think that the trial court's findings do not support the third conclusion of law since there is no price-fixing of the milk or requirement that the producer must sell to Bennetts. At no time does the milk become the property of the hauler. Appellees have cited United States v. Nationwide Trailer Rental System [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,101], 156 F. Supp. 800, affirmed per curiam [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,828], 355 U. S. 10, 78 S. Ct. 11, 2 L. Ed. 2d 20, which is not controlling here because a federal law was there involved. That case shows what appellees contend and the trial court concluded as to the purpose and effect of these regulations but a careful study of that case shows the distinction between a void agreement, as there, and a valid and reasonable set of regulations such as we have here.

[Burden of Proof—Presumptions]

In regard to the fourth conclusion of law, we believe our previous discussion has determined it was not proper and especially is this true on the point of any presumptions. They must be in favor of the validity of the regulations and not the invalidity thereof. The burden at all times was on appellees to prove the invalidity of the regulations.

[Judgment Reversed]

We believe it will suffice to say in a summary way that while the trial court did not err in refusing to amend its findings of fact, in view of those findings it did err in concluding the regulations were void when they were, in fact, reasonable and valid. The result is the judgment must be reversed. It is so ordered.

"Findings of Fact

"1. Plaintiff, John I. Okerberg, Jr., is the owner and operator of Can Milk Route No. 6, delivering milk in cans from a specific territory to the Bennett Creamery Company plant at Ottawa, Kansas.

"2. Defendant, Robert Crable, was on February 2, 1957, the owner and operator of Can Milk Route No. 3 and No. 5, delivering milk in cans from two specific territories to the Bennett Creamery Company plant. Subsequently, in the summer of 1957, Crable sold route No. 3 to Keith Watts. Crable is now the owner and operator of Can Milk Route No. 5.

"3. Defendant, Carl E. Kersley, was on February 2, 1957, the owner and operator of Can Milk Route No. 18, delivering milk in cans from a specific territory to the Bennett Creamery Company plant. Several months later, Kersley sold Route No. 18, moved his permanent residence to Phoenix, Arizona, and was not a milk hauler when the petition herein was filed.

"4. For more than ten years can milk routes coming into Bennetts had been operated under an agreement between the milk haulers. The written agreement in effect prior to February 2, 1957, consisted of all of the provisions of 'Milk Route Territory Regulations Covering All Independent Milk Trucks Delivering Milk from Producers to The Bennett Creamery Company, Ottawa, Kansas,' being Plaintiff's Exhibit 1, except Item 10 thereof. The plaintiff and the defendants were parties to this agreement upon February 2, 1957, and prior thereto.

"5. On all can routes referred to herein as delivering to the Bennett Creamery Company there is and has been both Grade 'A' and Grade 'C' milk. There are approximately 1400 such producers of which 316 are Grade 'A' and the remainder are Grade 'C' who sell direct to Bennetts. The can milk haulers are required to use covered, insulated, truck beds which are designed to help keep the milk clean and prevent it from becoming too warm.

"6. All Grade 'A' milk, for more than eighteen months prior to and up to October 1, 1957, delivered to the Bennett plant was being purchased by Meyer Sanitary Milk Company, a Kansas corporation, lessee of the Grade 'A' receiving facilities of the plant owned by the Bennett Creamery Company, a Kansas corporation; and from October 1, 1957, to the present time, this Grade 'A' milk has been purchased by Pure Milk Producers Association of Greater Kansas City, Inc., which became lessee of the Grade 'A' receiving facilities of the plant.

"7. Meyer Sanitary Milk Company, and after October 1, 1957, Pure Milk Producers Association, have paid producers for this milk, making deductions from payment to producers for payment of hauling charges and paying the same to haulers. This Grade 'A' milk is normally shipped in bulk from said receiving station to Kansas City for use in bottling, the surplus or excess not required for said use, if any, being sold and transferred to Bennett Creamery Company for manufacturing purposes at a 'Class II' price, established by Federal Milk Marketing Order No. 13, which is approximately equivalent to the price for Grade 'C' milk. The Grade 'C' milk on these routes is sold and delivered to Bennett Creamery Company and processed in the Bennett Creamery Company manufacturing facilities.

"8. Pure Milk Producers Association of Greater Kansas City, Inc., is a cooperative marketing association, whose membership consist of Grade 'A' producers selling to handlers in the Greater Kansas City marketing area, as defined by Federal Milk Marketing Order No. 13. It is a bargaining or marketing cooperative, as distinguished from an operating cooperative. Its members are parties to a standard membership and marketing contract between themselves and the Association, whereby the Association has the right to control and direct the marketing of their milk.

"9. The Bennett Creamery Company has had since October 1, 1957, an agreement with Pure Milk Producers Association whereby the Association will cause to be delivered to the leased facilities at the Bennett plant milk of substantially all of its member can shippers who formerly delivered to Meyer Sanitary either at Bennetts or at the Lawrence receiving station. In practice a few Pure Milk members have transferred from Bennetts to other plants and Pure Milk has permitted such transfers by member producers. As many as 200 of the approximately 1400 producers who sell to Bennetts or through their plant have changed during a year to other plants or from other plants to Bennetts.

"10. Of the Grade 'A' producers delivering to the Pure Milk station at the Bennett plant, 80% to 90% are members of Pure Milk.

"11. Grade 'A' producers may transfer at any time from Bennetts to other plants willing to purchase their milk delivering into Kansas City, Lawrence, Topeka, Emporia or Council Grove, thus transferring their quota within the same Federal Marketing Area without any type of permit, unless they have voluntarily signed away this right to Pure Milk Producers Association and the Association enforces the right of directing the receiving plant to which the producers' milk should go. Such transfers have occurred since this action was filed and solicitations for transfers are going on currently. Hauling rates are generally the same for all producers within a route territory for the can milk routes of Bennetts and others, irrespective of distance from the receiving plant. Producers cannot transfer their marketing quotas to another Federal Order Market such as Wichita, except in the fall of the year.

"12. The plaintiff in the territory around Burlington, Kansas, covered by his Can Route No. 6 had competition for producers of both Grade 'C' and Grade 'A' milk from milk haulers who hauled to other than the Bennett plant. These competing plants included, from time to time: Meadow Gold of Topeka, through their Emporia receiving station, Pet of Iola; the Burlington cheese factory; a Parsons plant; two bottling plants at Emporia and other local smaller dairies. Some competition from plants other than Bennetts for milk from producers exists generally throughout the area served by the Milk Haulers who deliver milk to the Bennett plant. Grade 'A' bottlers, such as the two serving the city of Ottawa, which are not regulated by Federal Order and subject to federal marketing quotas have generally had an adequate and stable supply of milk and have been adding only very few producers.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

"13. Since the fall of 1957 a few individual Grade 'A' milk producers in the area surrounding Ottawa have converted from production and delivery of milk in cans to production and delivery in bulk. This conversion requires purchase by the producer of a farm bulk tank for the cooling and storing of the milk. It also necessitates the use of an over-the-road bulk tank truck, the milk being pumped from the farmer's tank into the tank truck and delivered in bulk. Conversion to bulk delivery makes possible the production and delivery of a cleaner, higher quality, milk. Some plants are paying a bonus of 10¢ per hundredweight for tank milk for a period of 36 months. It also makes possible greater efficiency and saving in hauling expense to the producer through bulk handling and every-other-day pickup in bulk, whereas can pickups must be made every day.

"14. The volume in the Bennett Creamery Company manufacturing plant is presently about 200,000 pounds per day, during the so-called 'flush season' of the year when volume is at its highest level. The capacity of the Bennett manufacturing plant is approximately 500,000 pounds per day and the ideal volume would be 350,000 to 400,000 pounds each day. The Bennett Creamery Company needs additional milk for manufacturing and has an interest in preventing loss or depletion of its milk supply.

"15. On February 2, 1957, Crable was anticipating the establishment of a bulk tank milk route for the collection of milk in tanks from the territories in which the milk haulers to the Bennett plant operated their various numbered routes including Can Milk Route No. 6 owned by the plaintiff and Can Milk Route No. 18 owned by the defendant, Carl Kersley. He thereafter purchased a truck for $4,000.00; leased a tank from Pure Milk Producers Association; qualified for a sampler's license to take samples, etc., at the farms; and commenced the operation of Pure Milk Route No. 14 on March 1, 1957. Galen Bristow owner of Can Milk Route No. 37, had, prior to February 2, 1957, established a bulk tank route which was designated as Pure Milk Route No. 13. Crable and Bristow collected Grade 'A' milk from the various can route territories from which milk was collected and transported to the Bennett plant by can haulers and transported the same usually to Meyer Sanitary Milk Company at Kansas City, Kansas. However, at the beginning, some tank milk was delivered to the Bennett plant. In the event of a surplus Crable and Bristow could be instructed to divert their loads direct to Bennetts. (See Finding No. 7) Crable's tank was usually filled for the trip to Kansas City by 'Topping it off' at the Bennett plant.

"16. On February 2, 1957, at a called annual meeting of the Milk Haulers Association, a discussion was had concerning the matters later set forth in item 10 of the regulations. The price to be paid by tank haulers to can haulers, upon conversion by a producer from can to tank, was the principal subject. An agreement was made at that meeting by a majority, including the affirmative vote of the plaintiff and the defendants, Robert Crable and Carl Kersley, all of whom were present. This agreement was later reduced to writing by the Route Committee and agreed to by all the route owners by their signing of the new regulations, Plaintiff's Exhibit 1, including all of the parties to this action.

"17. The Bennett Creamery Company did not sign Exhibit 1. The Bennett Creamery Company has through the years and does now acquiesce in the division of the milkshed served by Bennetts into territories by the haulers and the regulations adopted by the haulers; has been represented at milk haulers' meetings; has assisted in the administration of the agreement by the Milk Haulers Association and its Route Committee and has at all times been the custodian of the route map, Plaintiff's Exhibit 2, which is not changed except in the presence of a representative of Bennetts as well as the individual haulers affected by the change. Any change is by agreement between the haulers affected or as determined by the 'Milk Haulers Committee.' Meyers Sanitary Company, prior to October 1, 1957, and Pure Milk Producers Association, since that date, have likewise acquiesced in the haulers' agreement to the extent of deducting the haulers' charge from the proceeds payable to the producer and making payment thereof direct to the hauler.

"18. According to the regulations set out in Plaintiff's Exhibit 1 'all freight on milk hauled to The Bennett Creamery Co., which is produced in a specified territory shown on the (route) map is to be paid to the hauler who owns that territory as shown on the map.' Said regulations have been administered accordingly by the Milk Haulers Association with the consent, cooperation and assistance of The Bennett Creamery Company. Only the milk hauler in whose territory the milk is produced receives freight on the milk hauled by anyone other than the owner from his territory. A producer, if properly equipped, could, if he desired to do so, haul his own milk to Bennetts and the freight charge for the route territory in which the milk was produced would not be deducted from the price of milk so delivered by the producer thereof. A producer electing to sell Grade 'A' or Grade 'C' milk at the Bennett plant is required to use the services of the route owner in whose territory the milk is produced unless he hauls the milk himself.

"19. Under said Regulations, milk haulers were unable to and did set the price to producers for the hauling of their milk and raised the price without prior consultation with producers. Producers desiring to deliver their milk to the Bennett plant and to use the services of a hauler were in effect required to deliver on the truck of the hauler 'owning the territory' at the rate specified by that hauler because no other hauler could receive payment for hauling their milk. The acquiescence, cooperation, assistance and participation of Bennetts was present and required in achieving this result, in that deduction from payments to producers and payments of freight to haulers were made at the Bennett plant. The producers' only alternatives were (1) to haul his own milk or (2) to sell somewhere other than through the Bennett plant.

"20. The price paid by Bennett for Grade 'C' milk and the price paid by Myer Sanitary and Pure Milk for Grade 'A' milk is determined by federal orders, competition and other factors beyond the control of any of the parties to this action. The agreement between milk haulers, evidenced by Plaintiff's Exhibit 1, affects the amount received for Grade 'A' and Grade 'C' milk delivered to the Bennett plant in that the hauling charge fixed by the hauler, without competition from other Bennett milk haulers, is withheld from the purchase price of the milk.

"21. Under paragraph 10 of the Milk Haulers Regulations, Plaintiff's Exhibit 1, all haulers agree that the bulk or tank hauling rights will be sold for fifty cents (50¢) per pound on the average daily delivery of the producer for the previous twelve months under two plans set forth therein.

"22. The 50¢ per pound payment has been applied by separate agreement to bulk haulers who are neither signers of the regulations nor assignees thereof. For instance, Elvin Dillon agreed to make such payment for can milk converted to bulk and hauled on the tank route operated by him in a written agreement procured at the request of an officer of Bennett Creamery Company. Dillon had previously received a similar payment from 'Bennett' can milk haulers for producers who transferred to the Bennett plant and the Bennett can haulers from four or five can routes then owned by Dillon and previously delivering to the Lawrence-Meyer receiving station.

"23. The Regulations provide that 'the rights and benefits of the Regulations shall pass from a route owner to his successor and go with the territory, therefore, the buyer and seller of a route should consider these potential rights and benefits in negotiating the sale or transfer of a territory.' There have been numerous transfers of routes since February 2, 1957, and many of the persons signing Plaintiff's Exhibit 1 no longer have milk routes to the Bennett plant.

"24. Floyd Isch, can 211, Route 6, converted from a can producer of Grade 'A' milk to a bulk producer and transferred to Pure Milk Route No. 14 on July 15, 1957. The average daily weight of said producer was 1,202 pounds. This amount multiplied by 50¢ per pound amounts to $601.00. During the preceding year, the Grade 'A' milk of producer Isch had been sold and delivered to Meyer Sanitary Milk Company, a Kansas corporation, through the Bennett plant.

"25. Emil Hess, can 1, Route 6, converted from a can producer of Grade 'C' milk to a bulk producer and transferred to Pure Milk Route No. 14 on July 15, 1957. The average daily weight of said producer's milk was 543 pounds for the preceding period of 91 days during which he delivered to the Bennett Creamery Company. This amount multiplied by 50¢ per pound amounts to $271.50. Producer Hess transferred from another plant and did not deliver to the Bennett plant during the preceding year, with the exception of 91 days prior to July 15, 1957.

"26. Alfred Meyer, can 130, Route 6, converted from a can producer of Grade 'A' milk to a bulk producer and transferred to Pure Milk Route No. 14 on August 18, 1957. The average daily weight of said producer's milk was 714 pounds. This amount multiplied by 50¢ per pound amounts to $357.00. Producer Meyer sold and delivered his milk during the preceding year to Meyers Sanitary Milk Company, through the Bennett plant.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

"27. Competition exists in Route 6 and the other Bennett milk routes for the collection of Grade 'A' milk in bulk by tank from other haulers and companies. The defendants, Crable and Kersley, could have at all times obtained the conversion of Grade 'A' producers from can producers to tank producers who were and are being served by other haulers and companies competing with the haulers owning routes at The Bennett Creamery plant and competing with Bennetts, Myers Sanitary and Pure Milk.

"28. On or about January 6, 1958, Crable sold his truck (purchased in October, 1957, for $4,000.00) and assigned his interest in his tank lease and contract with Pure Milk to defendant Kersley for $6,500.00. Defendant Kersley thereafter moved his permanent residence from Phoenix, Arizona, to Ottawa, Kansas.

"29. Although plaintiff and defendants, as well as all the milk haulers mentioned herein, operate trucks for public use in transporting Grade 'A' and Grade 'C' milk produced by those producers residing in their respective route territories who desire to sell to or through the Bennett plant and therefore appear to be common carriers as defined by Section 660105 of the statutes of Kansas, there is no evidence that any of the parties have applied for and received a permit from the Kansas Corporation Commission to operate as common carriers. Therefore, the services performed and the rates charged by said parties have not been subject to the supervision and control of the Kansas Corporation Commission."

"Conclusions of Law

"1. The Milk Haulers Association is an unincorporated association of independent contractors engaged in the hauling of milk for producers desiring to sell milk to or through the Bennett plant. The members of the Milk Haulers Association are not agents or sole agents within the meaning of Section 16-112 of the statutes of Kansas.

"2. The members of the Milk Haulers Association, being the signers of the agreement designated 'Milk Route Territory Regulations Covering All Independent Milk Trucks Delivering Milk From Producers To The Bennett Creamery Co., Ottawa, Kansas,' (Ex. 1), and their assigns, have by said agreement bound themselves to divide the area from which milk is produced and delivered to the Bennett plant into territories and prevent any other member-hauler or other person beside 'the hauler who owns that territory' from receiving freight on milk hauled to the Bennett plant. The effect of this agreement and the operation thereof has been to eliminate competition for the transportation by third parties of milk from the producers desiring to deliver to the Bennett plant to said plant contrary to the following provisions of the statutes of the State of Kansas:

> "50-101 which prohibits a combination of the acts of two or more persons for the following purposes:
>
> "First, to create or carry out restrictions in aids to commerce, or to carry out restrictions in the full and free pursuit of any business.
>
> "Third, to prevent competition in the transportation of merchandise, produce or commodities, or to prevent competition in aids to commerce.
>
> "Fifth, to pool, combine or unite any interest they may have in connection with the sale or transportation of any article or commodity, that its price may in any manner be affected.
>
> "50-112 which prohibits all agreements between persons or corporations made with a view or which tend to prevent full and free competition in the transportation of articles of domestic growth and all such agreements designed or which tend to reduce or control the price or the cost to the producer of any products or any other services (in this case transportation).

"3. Such an agreement which is contrary to the public policy of the State of Kansas as defined by the legislature in the statutes referred to above is by the provisions of Section 50-107 of the statutes of Kansas not enforceable in any of the courts of this state. Judgment will therefore be entered for the defendants.

"4. Although there was no direct evidence to establish that hauling rates would be less if the milk haulers agreement (Ex. 1) were not in effect, such an agreement being contrary to the declared public policy of the state is presumed to be injurious to the public welfare."

[¶ 69,451] Adolph Hohensee v. Akron Beacon Journal Publishing Company, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, Eastern Division. Civil Action No. 34891. Filed June 9, 1959.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Necessary Averments to State Cause of Action Under Antitrust Laws—Public Injury—Effect on Prices—Lessening of Competition.—An amended complaint in which a lecturer and seller of food products charged that he was compelled to discontinue his business activities in an area by various acts of harassment committed pursuant to a conspiracy in violation of the antitrust laws was defective because it could not be reasonably inferred that the public had suffered an injury in the sense in which that term is used in relation to the antitrust laws. It was alleged that, as a result of the claimed conspiracy, the public "was directly and indirectly substantially injured and damaged." However, there were no allegations which even remotely implied a restraint on competition in interstate commerce which "is shown to have or is intended to have an effect upon prices in the market or otherwise to deprive purchasers or consumers of the advantages which they derive from free competition." There was no showing that any of the defendants were in competition with the plaintiff, no allegation suggesting a business motive for their allegedly conspiratorial acts, and no allegation that they sought to accomplish any of the traditional objects which have been found actionable under the antitrust laws. More importantly, however, it did not appear that the alleged acts had any effect on prices or lessened or suppressed competition, essential elements of a private antitrust action.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.475.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Necessary Averments—General Requirements—Necessity for "Detailed and Specific" Complaint—Relationship of Parties.—An amended complaint charging a conspiracy in violation of the antitrust laws was deficient in failing to set forth in detail the relationship of the parties. An antitrust complaint must be detailed and specific. Here, the complaint failed to show the nature of the business of one of the defendants, the relationship of the various defendants, and the relationship of the named defendants to the several hundred "John Doe" defendants. Antitrust cases involve lengthy and expensive trials, and the courts are mindful of the possibility that a frivolous claim may become "a springboard from which the parties dive off into an almost bottomless sea of interrogatories, depositions and pre-trial proceedings on collateral issues. . . ."

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.170.

For the plaintiff: Adolph Hohensee, pro se.

For the defendants: C. Blake McDowell, Jr., of Brouse, McDowell, May, Bierce & Wortman, Akron, Ohio, for Akron Beacon Journal Publishing Co., John S. Knight, Robert Feldkamp, and Summit County Medical Assn., its officers, etc.; John Lansdale, Jr., and Peter D. Van Osterhout, Cleveland, Ohio, for American Medical Assn., its officers, etc.; Robert L. Myers, Akron, Ohio, for Better Business Bureau of Akron, Inc.; William H. Vodrey, Jr., East Liverpool, Ohio, for Brush-Moore Newspapers, Inc., and J. G. Green; and John R. Milligan, Jr., and Leroy J. Contie, Jr., Canton, Ohio, for W. J. Hine.

Re: Motion to File Amended Complaint

[Treble Damage Action]

McNamee, District Judge [In full text]: This Court has heretofore granted the motion of defendant American Medical Association to quash the service of summons upon said defendant and entered an order dismissing the action against said defendant. Motions to dismiss the Complaint on the ground that it failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted filed by all other defendants except The Summit County Medical Association were granted for the reasons set forth in this Court's Memorandum filed February 20, 1959 (171 Fed. Supp. 90). Pursuant to permission granted plaintiff moves for leave to file the Amended Complaint which is attached to his motion.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[Necessary Averments—Public Injury]

Notwithstanding the dismissal of the action against the American Medical Association, plaintiff named said defendant as a party in the proposed Amended Complaint. While the Amended Complaint contains averments not found in the original complaint, it fails to cure the basic defect of the original pleading. It is not reasonably to be inferred from the averments of the Amended Complaint that the public has suffered an injury in the sense that term is used in relation to the antitrust laws. On the contrary, the Amended Complaint, read as a whole, seems clearly to relate solely to a private controversy between plaintiff and defendants.

In Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,039], 310 U. S. 469, 500, the Supreme Court said:

> ". . . this Court has not departed from the conception of the Sherman Act as affording a remedy, public and private, for the public wrongs which flow from restraints of trade in the common law sense of restriction or suppression of commercial competition. In the cases considered by this Court since the Standard Oil case in 1911 some form of restraint of commercial competition has been the sine qua non to the condemnation of contracts, combinations or conspiracies under the Sherman Act, and in general restraints upon competition have been condemned only when their purpose or effect was to raise or fix the market price. (Citations) It is in this sense that it is said that the restraints, actual or intended, prohibited by the Sherman Act are only those which are so substantial as to affect market prices. Restraints on competition or on the course of trade in the merchandising of articles moving in interstate commerce is not enough, unless the restraint is shown to have or is intended to have an effect upon prices in the market or otherwise to deprive purchasers or consumers of the advantages which they derive from free competition." (Citations)

There are no allegations in the Amended Complaint which expressly state or even remotely imply a restraint on competition in interstate commerce which "is shown to have or is intended to have an effect upon prices in the market or otherwise to deprive purchasers or consumers of the advantages which they derive from free competition."

[Conspiracy Alleged]

The gist of plaintiff's claim is set forth in paragraphs 5 and 6 of the Amended Complaint, wherein he avers in substance that in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy, defendant, W. J. Hine, threatened to "throw plaintiff out of Canton;" that as a result of the alleged harassment and threats plaintiff was compelled to discontinue his lectures and sale of products in Canton, Ohio; that "he transferred his lectures and speeches to Akron, Ohio" where, according to plaintiff, defendants continued their conspiracy of harassment and threats and did unlawfully "screen and distort the true nature of his lectures; and did resort to unfair and unlawful methods to discourage the public from attending his said lectures." Plaintiff also re-avers in substance the allegations of libel and slander contained in his original complaint. As a result of these and other similar general allegations plaintiff claims he was damaged in the following respects:

(a) Destruction of lecture business;
(b) Destruction of products sales business;
(c) Destruction of health;
(d) Loss of freedom and liberty;
(e) Other losses and damages.

His allegation of public injury is stated as follows:

> "As a result of the foregoing combination and conspiracy in restraint of interstate trade and commerce the public was directly and indirectly substantially injured and damaged."

[Effect on Prices or Competition]

It does not appear that the defendants Summit County Medical Society or the Better Business Bureau of Akron are commercial organizations engaged in any business for profit. Nor does it appear that defendant, W. J. Hine, is engaged in business. The Beacon Journal Publishing Company and Brush-Moore Newspapers, Inc., obviously are commercial organizations but no showing is made that any of the defendants are engaged in competition with plaintiff or that in performing the alleged acts they were motivated by any purpose inimical to the public interest. Indeed, from all that appears, it is as reasonably to be inferred that the defendants were acting in the furtherance of the public interest as it is to draw the contrary inference. More importantly, it does not appear that the alleged acts of defendants had any effect on prices or lessened or suppressed competition. These are among the essential elements of a private antitrust action. Arthur v. Kraft Phenix Cheese Corp., 26 Fed. Supp. 824. There is no allegation that suggests a business motive for defendants' allegedly conspiratorial acts nor is there any allegation that defendants sought to accomplish any of the traditional objects which have been found to be actionable under the antitrust laws. Compare: Georgia v. Pennsylvania R. R. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,344], 324 U. S. 439; Terminal Warehouse v. Pennsylvania R. R. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,103], 297 U. S. 500.

[Relationship of Parties]

The Amended Complaint is deficient in other respects. It fails to set forth in detail the relationship of the parties. The nature of the business of defendant W. J. Hine, if any, is not shown. For aught that appears, said defendant may have been acting as a public official at the time of the alleged threats. Relationship of defendants who were residents of Canton and those who were residents of Akron does not appear and there is an absence of any indication of the relation of the named defendants to the several hundred John Doe defendants. It is settled that an antitrust complaint must be detailed and specific. Baim & Blank, Inc. v. Warren Connelly Co. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,285], 19 F. R. D. 108 (D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1956); Bader v. Zurich General Accident & Liability Ins. Co. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,277], 12 F. R. D. 437 (D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1956); Chas. Rubenstein, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Corp. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,456], 14 F. R. D. 401 (D. C. Minn. 1953).

Antitrust cases involve lengthy and expensive trials. The courts are mindful of the possibility that a frivolous claim in such an action may become "a springboard from which the parties dive off into an almost bottomless sea of interrogatories, depositions and pre-trial proceedings on collateral issues, most of which may have little relationship to the true issues of the case." New Dyckman Theater Corp. v. RKO Corp. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,853], 16 F. R. D. 203, at 206 (D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1956).

[Dismissal Granted]

The defendant, Summit County Medical Society, has moved for summary judgment. Its Motion will be treated as a motion to dismiss on the ground that plaintiff has failed to state a claim on which relief may be granted and, as so treated, the motion is granted.

[Leave to Amend Denied]

Plaintiff has been granted one opportunity to move to file an Amended Complaint. For the reasons indicated above, the proffered Amended Complaint fails to state a claim on which relief may be granted and it does not appear likely that if afforded another opportunity plaintiff could present such a claim.

The Motion for Leave to file an Amended Complaint is overruled and the action is dismissed at plaintiff's costs.

[¶ 69,452] Frank W. Babcock v. Crafts 20 Big Shows, Inc., et al.

In the California District Court of Appeal, Third District. Civ. No. 9553. Dated August 12, 1959.

Appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court of Sacramento County. ALBERT H. MUNDT, Judge. Reversed.

California Antitrust (Cartwright) Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—State Antitrust Laws—Contracts Not to Compete —Combining to Force Weaker Competitor Out of Business—Bidding for Privilege of Supplying Carnival Attractions to "Fairs."—A supplier of carnival attractions to fairs sufficiently stated a violation of the California antitrust law by alleging that three of its competitors conspired to drive him out of business by submitting joint bids which made it impossible for him to compete. It was alleged that they agreed to refrain from bidding in competition with each other, to bid unreasonably low if the supplier did not bid, and to bid higher (even if it permitted little or no profit to them) if he did bid. These allegations showed a combination formed with the intent to arbitrarily use its combined power to force weaker competitors out of business. If the combination were successful, it would stifle, or at least materially lessen, competition in the business. Thus, the purpose of the combination was to restrict competition by combining three of the dominant competitors in the field and eliminating the fourth. A combination made and maintained with those ends in view is unlawful.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2319.05.

Combinations and Conspiracies—State Antitrust Laws—Procedure—Sufficiency of Pleading—Injury to Business or Property as Pre-requisite to Right to Maintain Action.—A supplier of carnival attractions to fairs had a right, under the California antitrust law, to maintain an action for two-fold damages against three competitors which allegedly conspired to put him out of business. Enforcement of the statute is committed, in the main, to the attorney general and the district attorneys. However, private parties who have been injured in their business or property "by reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful" in the statute are permitted to recover two-fold damages. Here, the supplier alleged that its competitors, pursuant to the conspiracy, jointly bid or offered to pay $132,500 for the privilege of supplying carnival attractions to the 1957 California State Fair, but that they would have submitted a bid of only $106,500 if the supplier had made no bid. Thus, the supplier alleged that, but for the combination and the unlawful intent to drive him out of business, his own bid of $117,500 would have been the high bid, and he would have obtained the privilege in question. His claim that he suffered damages in the sum of $50,000 by being unlawfully deprived of that privilege was a sufficient pleading of injury to meet the test of a general demurrer.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2403, 2425.

For the appellant: Austin Clapp.

For the respondents: Charles Bagby.

[Restraint of Trade Action]

Action for damages suffered by reason of defendants' alleged unlawful combination in restraint of trade. Judgment for defendants after demurrer to complaint was sustained without leave to amend, reversed.

[Appeal]

Van Dyke, Presiding Justice [In full text]: This is an appeal from a judgment based upon an order sustaining a demurrer to plaintiff's amended complaint without leave to amend.

[Conspiracy Charged]

In substance the complaint alleges the following: Plaintiff and the defendants are all engaged in the business of buying exclusive privileges for supplying carnival attractions to various fairs and community celebrations in California. Prior to December, 1956, they were all in competition with each other and their position in the business was such that among them they did about 80 percent of the total business in the state. Competition was keen. During the year prior to the commencement of this action the defendants conspired and agreed to combine their capital and skill, with the purpose of creating and carrying out competitive restrictions in the business. To accomplish this they intended, by combining, to drive plaintiff out by making it financially impossible for him to compete with them, and then having thus come into a position of dominance and control they intended to fix and maintain unreasonably low prices for the privilege of supplying carnival attractions. Accordingly, they conspired and agreed that they would not bid for the privilege of furnishing carnival attractions in competition with each other, but would bid jointly, making unreasonably low bids if plaintiff did not bid, but if he did bid then they would jointly bid higher even though their joint bid would be at such a price as to permit little or no profit to them. Having so conspired, and plaintiff having bid for the privilege of supplying carnival attractions for the State Fair in 1957, the defendants submitted their joint bid substantially higher than plaintiff's bid, which they would not have done save for such plan and thereby obtained the privilege to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $50,000 through his loss of the privilege.

[California Antitrust (Cartwright) Act]

Section 16720 and following of the Business and Professions Code (the Cartwright Act) contain California's legislation banning combinations of capital, skill or acts in restraint of trade or commerce. Section 16720 provides that:

"A trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons for any of the following purposes:

"(a) To create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce.

". . .

"(c) To prevent competition in . . . ; sale or purchase of . . . any commodity."

[Allegations Sufficient]

The allegations are sufficient to state a violation of the statutes. They show a combination formed with the intent to arbitrarily use its combined power to force weaker competitors out of business. If the combination is successful it will stifle, or at least lessen materially, competition in the business. Clearly had the four parties combined they would be in a position of dominance in the field. The same effect will be reached if the purposes of the combination of three former competitors succeed in eliminating the fourth.

". . . [I]f it [the combination] arbitrarily used its power to force weaker competitors out of business, . . . it puts a restraint upon . . . commerce." (United States v. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., 188 F. 127, 151.)

". . . [P]laintiff does have the right to have its business protected if there is concert of action directed at plaintiff, which results in its removal from competition.

". . . A suppression of competition necessarily restrains commerce. . . . The purpose of the anti-trust laws . . . is thwarted if group-power is utilized to eliminate a competitor who is equipped to compete." (William Goldman Theatres, Inc. v. Loew's, Inc. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,401], 150 F. 2d 738, 742, 743.)

[Unlawful Purpose]

The purpose of the combination was to restrict competition by (1) combining three of the dominant competitors in the field and (2) eliminating the fourth. The combination made and maintained with those ends in view was unlawful.

[Right to Maintain Action—Injury]

A serious question is presented concerning the right of plaintiff to maintain the action. The enforcement of the legislation banning monopolistic combinations is committed in the main to the attorney general and to the district attorneys. Section 16750 sets up the conditions under which private actions can be maintained and limits such actions to persons who have been injured in business or property "by reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful" by the statutes. Such persons may sue to recover two-fold the damages sustained by them. Although the difficulties of proof may prove insurmountable we are not here concerned with that feature. Plaintiff has alleged that pursuant to the purposes of the combination respondents would have submitted a bid of $106,500 had plaintiff made no bid. But when plaintiff bid $117,500 then respondents submitted a bid of $132,500. He alleges that, but for the combination and the unlawful intent to drive him out of business, he would have been the high bidder and would have obtained the privilege; that by being unlawfully deprived of it he suffered damages in the sum of $50,000. We think there was here a sufficient pleading of injury by reason of the acts of the respondents to meet the test of a general demurrer.

[Judgment Reversed]

Accordingly, the judgment appealed from is reversed.

PEEK, J., and SCHOTTKY, J., concurred.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[¶ 69,453] Albert E. Robinson v. Stanley Home Products, Inc., and William J. Gahm, d.b.a. Plura Plastics.

In the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey. Civil Action, File No. 91-59. Filed June 29, 1959.

Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act

Price Discrimination—Brokerage Commissions—Applicability of Brokerage Prohibitions to Seller's Broker—Eliminating Broker and Reducing Prices to Purchaser—Legality—Right to Select Customers.—Allegations that a manufacturer of collapsible plastic cups and a purchaser of such products worked out an arrangement between themselves to dispense with the services of the seller's broker (thereby avoiding the payment of brokerage commissions) stated no cause of action under Section 2(c) and (f) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. It was alleged that the manufacturer granted, and the purchaser induced the manufacturer to grant, discounts "in lieu" of brokerage by eliminating the manufacturer's broker and selling directly to the purchaser at reduced prices. While the broker contended that Section 2(c) is an absolute prohibition of allowances in lieu of brokerage from sellers to buyers, it was held in Henry Broch and Company v. FTC, 1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,208, that "neither the language of § 2(c) nor its legislative history indicates that a seller's broker is covered by § 2(c)." Thus, the payment of brokerage, or sums in lieu of brokerage, to agents of a buyer is prohibited, but not the elimination of the seller's broker. As noted in the Broch case, brokerage fees are an item in the cost of distribution which the public must ultimately defray, and a seller's costs would be "frozen" if he was forbidden to make such reductions.

The provisions of Section 2(c) and (f) were evidently intended to be invoked by the broker's allegations that (1) the purchaser knew that the price reduction which it sought could only be accomplished by diverting the broker's commission to itself, and (2) that the purchaser's offer to buy at a reduced price effected a diversion of the broker's commission to the purchaser. However, it is elementary that a seller may select his own customers. The buyer's "intentions" could not limit the manufacturer's freedom to sell at a reduced price, even though the discount might have equalled the amount of the broker's commission and might have involved the elimination of the seller's broker.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3505.950, 3520, 3520.175, 3526, 3526.500.

For the plaintiff: Charles F. Sheeler, by Vincent Galvin.

For the defendants: Harkavy & Lieb, by Jerome S. Lieb, for William J. Gahm, d.b.a. Plura Plastics.

Opinion

[Price Discrimination—Brokerage Commissions]

Wortendyke, District Judge [In full text]: Defendant, William J. Gahm, doing business as Plura Plastics (Plura) has moved for an order striking the amended complaint for prolixity and non-conformity with Rule 8(a)(2) and (e)(1), for failure to state a claim against movant upon which relief can be granted, and for lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter; Rule 12(b)(6) and (1).

The first cause of action alleged is grounded upon §§ 13(c) and (f), and 15 of Title 15 of the United States Code. It is also alleged that there is diversity of citizenship between plaintiff (Robinson), a resident of Massachusetts, and Plura, a resident of New Jersey, but that the co-defendant Stanley Home Products, Inc. (Stanley) is a corporation of Massachusetts.

[Exclusive Representative—Termination]

It is further alleged that Stanley and Plura do business in interstate commerce, and that Robinson had agreed to act as exclusive New England representative, upon a commission basis, for the sale of Plura's products in that territory. Those products included collapsible plastic cups manufactured by Plura in New Jersey and shipped in interstate commerce. Stanley was allegedly one of the customers which Robinson had secured for Plura's products. After the initial order and reorder which Robinson had secured from Stanley, the latter made an offer directly to Plura to purchase large quantities of the cups at a substantially reduced unit price. The complaint charges that this price reduction "could be accomplished only by diverting to Stanley the commission otherwise payable to plaintiff," and that, upon its acceptance of Stanley's offer, "Plura forthwith terminated the plaintiff's services as New England representative."

[Clayton Act, Section 2(c) and (f)]

It is further alleged that the reduced price at which Stanley offered to purchase Plura's products was unreasonably low and not justified by any savings in manufacture, packaging or shipment. Robinson charges that Stanley desired to eliminate his services so that it might purchase at the substantially reduced price, thereby obtaining for itself the amounts of the commissions which would otherwise have been paid to Robinson. The foregoing acts of the defendants are alleged to be violations of subsections (c) and (f) of § 13 of Title 15 of the United States Code.[1] Subdivision (a) of § 13 of that title provides, in part:

> "(a) * * * That nothing contained in sections 12, 13, 14-21, and 22-27 of this title shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares or merchandise in commerce from selecting their own customers in bona fide transactions and not in restraint of trade * * *."

[Treble Damages Sought]

Incorporating by reference all of the preceding allegations of the amended complaint, Robinson, in paragraph 7, charges Plura with having breached its contract to pay commissions due to Robinson on sales to Stanley, for which he seeks recovery. The next succeeding paragraph, number 8, charges Stanley and Plura with having conspired to deprive Robinson of his rightful commissions as manufacturer's representative for Plura, and to divert those commissions to Stanley. In the concluding paragraph, number 9, the amended complaint charges Stanley with having induced Plura to breach the commission contract with Robinson. Robinson seeks treble damages from both defendants, and demands a jury trial.

[Questions Posed]

Plura's presently pending motion poses the following questions:

(1) Does the amended complaint state a cause of action under 15 U. S. C. § 13?

(2) Do the allegations of the amended complaint disclose a cause or causes of action upon which relief can be granted to Robinson against Plura?

(3) Do the allegations of the amended complaint disclose jurisdiction in this Court over the subject matter of the cause or causes of action therein set forth?

[Causes Asserted Under State Law]

It is obvious at the outset that in the last three numbered paragraphs of the amended complaint, summarized above, Robinson has rather inartistically endeavored to allege separate causes of action respectively, viz.:

(1) For damages for Plura's breach of commission contract with the plaintiff;

(2) For damages for the alleged conspiracy between Stanley and Plura to deprive Robinson of his commissions; and

(3) For damages for Stanley's inducement of Plura to breach the latter's commission contract with Robinson.

Each of the three foregoing causes of action is expressly asserted "under applicable State law."

[Federal Jurisdiction]

The jurisdiction of this Court with respect to these three causes of action depends upon a showing of diversity of citizenship AND the involvement of the statutory minimum monetary amount. 28 U. S. C. § 1332. While Robinson and Plura are citizens of [1] The cited subsections provide as follows:

"§ 13. DISCRIMINATION IN PRICE, SERVICES OR FACILITIES—PRICE: SELECTION OF CUSTOMERS.

* * *

"(c) It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to pay or grant, or to receive or accept, anything of value as a commission, brokerage, or other compensation, or any allowance or discount in lieu thereof, except for services rendered in connection with the sale or purchase of goods, wares, or merchandise, either to the other party to such transaction or to an agent, representative, or other intermediary therein where such intermediary is acting in fact for or in behalf, or is subject to the direct or indirect control, of any party to such transaction other than the person by whom such compensation is so granted or paid.

* * *

"(f) It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, knowingly to induce or receive a discrimination in price which is prohibited by this section."

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Massachusetts and New Jersey respectively, the co-defendant, Stanley, is a corporation of Massachusetts. Because the plaintiff and one of the defendants are citizens of the same State, a vital element of diversity is lacking. Walmac Co. v. Isaacs, 1 Cir. 1955, 220 F. 2d 108. Diversity of citizenship alone, however, without a claim or showing that the minimum requisite monetary amount is involved, would be insufficient to confer jurisdiction. 28 U. S. C. § 1332(a); McCoy v. Siler, 3 Cir. 1953, 205 F. 2d 498, cert. den. 346 U. S. 872. Nowhere in the amended complaint does the amount in controversy appear. There is nothing to show (1) that the amount of the commissions of which Robinson claims to have been deprived, or of the damages which he claims to have suffered by reason of the breach of his commission contract, exceeded or even equalled the sum of $10,000, exclusive of interest and costs. The attempt to incorporate by reference into each of paragraphs numbered 7, 8 and 9 the allegations of the preceding paragraphs of the amended complaint does not aid the plaintiff insofar as the causes of action alleged in the latter three paragraphs are concerned. The motion to strike paragraphs 7, 8 and 9 of the amended complaint, therefore, must prevail.

[Discounts "in Lieu" of Brokerage]

We consider now the sufficiency of the first six paragraphs of the amended complaint, which purport to set forth a cause of action under 15 U. S. C. § 15, based upon alleged violations of Section 13 of that Title. In his brief in opposition to the motion, plaintiff contends

> (1) "That the violation by the said Gahm consisted of granting to the defendant Stanley a discount in lieu of the payment of a brokerage fee from the said Gahm to Stanley on sales by Gahm to Stanley" and (2) "That Stanley induced and procured a violation of the antitrust laws of the United States, * * * when Stanley induced the said Gahm to grant such discount."

Plaintiff argues that section 2(c) of the Clayton Act, as amended, contains an absolute prohibition of allowances or sums in lieu of brokerage from sellers to buyers, and that the same section must be construed independently of section 2(a) thereof. Robinson also urges that a violation of section 2(c) may exist in the absence of price discrimination and without injury to the public interest. The independence of subparagraphs (a) and (c) of section 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, has long been recognized. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,242], 3 Cir. 1939, 106 F. 2d 667, at p. 677, cert. den. 1940, 308 U. S. 625. At page 678 of that opinion, the Circuit Court says:

> "The practice of paying brokerage, or sums in lieu of brokerage, to buyers or their agents by sellers was found by Congress to be an unfair trade practice resulting in damage to commerce. Paragraph (c) prohibits such practice." (Italics mine.)

See also Quality Bakers of America v. Federal Trade Commission [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,060], 1 Cir. 1940, 114 F. 2d 393.

[Seller's Broker Not Covered by 2(c)]

The situation confronting me upon the present motion is suggestive of that in Freedman v. Philadelphia Terminals Auction Co. [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,612], D. C. E. D. Pa. 1956, 145 F. Supp. 820. In the case at bar, as in Freedman, the operations of the defendant were unquestionably in interstate commerce. The cases are distinguishable, however, because in Freedman the defendant made a service charge against the plaintiffs for services not rendered, while in the complaint before us, there [are] no allegations that the defendant made any charge against or induced any payment from the plaintiff. What does clearly appear from the pleading here attacked is that Plura secured a customer, Stanley, allegedly as a result of the services of Robinson, and thereafter proceeded to deal directly with this customer, to which Plura accorded a price lower than that which Robinson had to quote to Stanley on the same product in order to cover his services.

Any doubt as to the meaning of § 2(c) as applied to the facts disclosed on the present motion, appears to have been dispelled by the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals, in 1958, in Henry Broch and Company v. Federal Trade Commission [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,208], 261 F. 2d 725, in the following language, at p. 728:

> "Neither the language of § 2(c) nor its legislative history indicates that a seller's broker is covered by § 2(c). * * * In the case before us, no agent of the buyer is involved. Petitioner is an agent solely of the seller."

The order of the Federal Trade Commission in the Broch case was set aside. The examiner there found that the broker, Broch, in agreeing to reduce his commission, made no payment, either directly or indirectly to the buyer. The opinion concludes, at p. 729:

> "Obviously an important element in the cost of food distribution is the commission paid by sellers to their brokers. If a seller is to be forbidden to meet competition by reducing an item of its cost of distribution, then to that extent his costs are frozen without regard for the welfare of the public which must ultimately defray the resultant costs of distribution." (Italics added.)

[Right of Customer Selection]

The Broch case was decided upon the evidence before the Commission. The motion before me, on the other hand, is addressed to the amended complaint. Keeping in mind the elementary principle that for the purpose of such a motion, all well-pleaded facts alleged in the complaint must be taken as admitted, our scrutiny of the first six paragraphs of this amended complaint discloses, with respect to §§ 2(c) and 2(f) of the Clayton Act, as amended, merely the following allegations, all in paragraph 6:

(1) Robinson secured Stanley as a customer for Plura.

(2) After an initial order and reorder by Stanley, Stanley's representatives suggested to Plura that Stanley might be willing to purchase large quantities of its product if Plura reduced its price.

(3) Upon the making of this offer by Stanley, Plura terminated Robinson's services as its New England representative, and thereafter accepted Stanley's offer to purchase directly in quantity at a price less by an amount equal to Robinson's commission than that which Robinson had been authorized to quote.

There are two allegations in the amended complaint which are evidently intended to invoke the provisions of § 2(c) and (f), namely, (a) that Stanley knew that the price reduction which it sought from Plura could be accomplished only by diverting Robinson's commission to Stanley, and (b) that Stanley's offer to purchase at such reduced price effected the diversion of Robinson's commission to Stanley. What Stanley may have known or anticipated in offering to purchase large quantities at a reduced price is immaterial to the right of Plura to eliminate the plaintiff as its broker. Stanley's intentions in making the offer to Plura could not limit Plura's freedom to sell to Stanley at a reduced price, even though it might involve the elimination of the seller's broker. Even if the amount of the discount given may have equalled the broker's commission, the seller was free to encourage the purchase of large quantities of his products by the allowance of such a discount. Henry Broch & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, supra. It is elementary that a seller may select his own customers. United States v. Colgate & Co., 1919, 250 U. S. 300; Brosius v. Pepsi-Cola Co. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,459], 3 Cir. 1946, 155 F. 2d 99.

[Eliminating Brokerage as Element of Cost]

The substance of paragraph 6 of the amended complaint is the charge that the defendants Plura and Stanley worked out an arrangement between themselves which enabled Plura to dispense with Robinson's services and avoid the payment to him of commissions as an element of selling cost. Such a charge, if true, is not equivalent to a cause of action under the Act relied upon. Chicago Sugar Co. v. American Sugar Refining Co. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,449], 7 Cir. 1949, 176 F. 2d 1, cert. den. 338 U. S. 948.

[No Cause of Action]

I conclude that the plaintiff has failed to plead a violation of §§ 2(c) and 2(f) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. No cause of action within this Court's jurisdiction is discerned in the remaining allegations. Therefore, the motion to strike the amended complaint in toto must prevail.

An order may be submitted in conformity with the views herein expressed.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

[¶ 69,454] United States v. Greater Blouse, Skirt & Neckwear Contractors' Association, Inc.; National Association of Blouse Manufacturers, Inc.; Slate Belt Apparel Contractors' Association, Inc.; Blouse and Waistmakers' Union Local 25, International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union; James Clemenza, a.k.a. Jimmy Brown; I. Lloyd Cabin; Charles Kreindler; Abraham Rosenthal; and Harry Strasser.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Cr. 158-181. Filed September 8, 1959.

Case No. 1434 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Combinations and Monopolies in Production of Ladies' Blouses—Sufficiency of Allegations of Indictment—"Injury to Public."—An indictment charging an individual with membership in a conspiracy to restrain and monopolize trade in the production of ladies' blouses was not "fatally defective" by reason of its failure to allege injury to the public. The court, denying a motion to dismiss the indictment, rejected as incorrect the individual's contention that proof of the raising or fixing of market prices was essential to sustain the charge. The United States Supreme Court, in Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 1940-1941 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,039, made the statement that "in general, restraints upon competition have been condemned only when their purpose or effect was to raise or fix the market price." However, that court has since limited the application of that doctrine in a case (Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., ¶ 69,316 of the TRADE REGULATION REPORTER) which also repudiated the requirement of public injury. There, the court held that a group boycott "is not to be tolerated merely because the victim is just one merchant whose business is so small that his destruction makes little difference to the economy." Here, the indictment alleged a group boycott, or, at least, a concerted refusal by traders to deal with other traders, which the Klor's opinion equated with group boycotts.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8025.570.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Combinations and Monopolies—Sufficiency of Allegations of Indictment—Duplicity—Double Jeopardy.—An indictment charging an individual with membership in a conspiracy to restrain and monopolize trade in the production of ladies' blouses was not "duplicitous." Denying a motion to dismiss the indictment, the court found that the allegations against the defendant were quite clear and could provide ample protection against double jeopardy. It was argued that, although each count charged one conspiracy starting about 1949 and continuing up to and including the date of the return of the indictment, the terms of the indictment revealed that "several distinct agreements are alleged in each count rendering those counts duplicitous." However, a single conspiracy may embrace several related conspiracies. Thus, the fact that the terms of the indictment did show that more than one agreement among the defendants was involved did not render the indictment duplicitous. Each count alleged a single continuing conspiracy; it was not necessary to break them up into several conspiracies merely because there were other agreements entered into to effectuate the conspiracy. Thus, the breaking-away and re-aligning of the various defendants did not detract from the continuation of the conspiracy, or necessitate the conclusion that another conspiracy was formed.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8025.540.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Combinations and Monopolies—Sufficiency of Allegations of Indictment—Vagueness and Uncertainty—Necessity for Detailed Pleading of Evidence.—An indictment charging an individual with membership in a conspiracy to restrain and monopolize trade in the production of ladies' blouses was not "too vague and uncertain to inform defendant of the charge against him." Denying a motion to dismiss the indictment, the court held that it met the requirements of Rule 7(c), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, namely, that the indictment "shall be a plain, concise and definite written statement of the essential facts constituting the offense charged." Here, the individual was named as a defendant, and the "defendants" were charged with conspiring and attempting to monopolize. There were allegations of sufficient facts to show an agreement among the defendants to acquire control and monopoly, and to restrain trade, in the manufacture and distribution of ladies' blouses. There is no requirement that overt acts be charged, and the defendant was not entitled to a detailed pleading of the evidence to be presented against him.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 1, ¶ 8025.500, 8025.660, 8025.740.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Trial—Severance of Single Defendant—Alleged Prejudice to Other Defendants.—Defendants charged with conspiring to restrain and monopolize trade in the production of ladies' blouses were denied a motion for the severance of a defendant who allegedly had been closely connected with notorious criminals and racketeers. It was contended that the participation of that defendant in the trial would "tar" the other defendants because of the jury's abhorrence of racketeers, and that he was brought into the case so that the Government could proclaim the case to be an assault on racketeering as well as an attack on business arrangements alleged to violate the Sherman Act. While articles highlighting the claim that the defendant in question had underworld connections had appeared in newspapers on the day the indictment was returned and on the following day, it could not be said that the defendants could not receive a fair trial merely because of that publicity. No case was cited and none was found where a severance was granted because of prejudice against one of the defendants, in the absense of a highly inflammatory and incriminating statement made by that defendant. If the severance were granted, the necessity of relitigating the issues would prejudice the Government. Also, the defendants at the second trial could have the advantage of knowing in advance exactly what evidence the Government expected to offer against them.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8029.750.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Combinations and Monopolies—Discovery and Inspection of Documents in Government's Possession.—Defendants charged with conspiring to restrain and monopolize trade in the production of ladies' blouses were denied motions under Rule 17(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure for the inspection and production of various documents in the Government's possession because of the "dragnet character" of the motions. The right of discovery granted by Rule 17(c) deals with material "obtained by the Government by solicitation or voluntarily from third persons," and "material which has been in the Government's possession from the time of its origin." However, "if defendants insist upon proceeding with catch-all descriptions they must at least list the evidentiary documents that are available to them elsewhere and exclude them from those demanded of the United States Attorney."

The defendants' further motions for discovery under Rule 16 (which deals with the inspection and copying of items "obtained from or belonging to the defendant or obtained from others by seizure or by process) were granted to the extent that it sought items the Government had obtained "by seizure or process." Since that rule cannot be used to get documents the Government obtained voluntarily, the motion was denied to the extent that it sought documents acquired in that manner. The court also ruled that a specific showing of "reasonableness and materiality" was not always a pre-requisite to discovery under Rule 16. Where the documents in the possession of the Government are too numerous for the defendants to identify, it is impossible to make a showing that they are material and that the request is reasonable.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8021, 8021.700.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Indictments—Defendants' Right to Additional Information—Bill of Particulars—Items Necessary for Preparation of Defense—Items Seeking Government's Evidence and Theory of Case.—In a criminal action charging defendants with conspiring to restrain and monopolize trade in the production of ladies' blouses, the court, attempting to balance the interest of the Government in the non-disclosure of its evidence against the interest of the defendants in being able to prepare their defense, granted the defendants' motions for a bill of particulars to the extent that they were reasonable and sought particulars necessary for the preparation of the defense. However, requests seeking the detailed evidence which the Government would offer and the theory on which the case would be tried were denied.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8025.800.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Indictments—Sufficiency of Allegations—Time Limitation on Making of Motions.—Defendants charged with conspiring to restrain and monopolize trade in the production of ladies' blouses were denied "motion for leave to make further motions" at "any time before trial," where, by an order of the court, a date had been fixed as the last day for the making of motions. The court disagreed with the contention that Rule 12(b)(2), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, which provides that the "failure of the indictment . . . to charge an offense shall be noticed by the court at any time during the pendency of the proceeding" permitted the defendants to disregard a direction of the court that such motions in advance of trial shall be made on or prior to a certain date. The court also noted that no cogent reason had been advanced as to why it should grant further permission for the making of motions at that time.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8025.

For the plaintiff: Lawrence Gochberg and Ronald S. Daniels, Attorneys, Department of Justice.

For the defendants: Milton J. Levy for Greater Blouse, Skirt & Neckwear Contractors Assn., Inc., James Clemenza, and I. Lloyd Cabin; Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison (Simon H. Rifkind, Jay H. Topkis, and John G. Simon, of counsel), and Lieberman, Katz & Aronson (Elias Lieberman and Morris P. Glushien, of counsel) for Local 25, ILGWU, and Charles Kreindler; Herbert Brownell, Jr. (Thomas F. Daly and William F. Hamilton, of counsel), for Slate Belt Apparel Contractors Assn., Inc.; Amen, Weisman & Butler (Herman L. Weisman, of counsel) for National Assn. of Blouse Manufacturers, Inc.; and Brower, Brill & Gangel (Joseph Brill, of counsel) for Harry Strasser.

Memorandum

[Criminal Antitrust Action]

DIMOCK, District Judge [In full text]: These are motions by all defendants in a criminal antitrust case in which three associations, one labor union and five individuals are charged with violations of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2, in the production of ladies blouses in a four state area.

[Motions]

Defendant Strasser moves under Rule 12, F. R. Crim. P., for dismissal of the indictment. All of the defendants, with the exception of defendant Strasser, move under Rule 14, F. R. Crim. P., for relief from an alleged prejudicial joinder of defendant Strasser, and, under Rules 16 and 17(c), F. R. Crim. P., for inspection and production of various documents in the Government's possession. All of the defendants move under Rule 7(f), F. R. Crim. P. for extensive bills of particulars. Finally, defendants ask leave to make further motions with respect to this indictment, after the Government's compliance with any requirements of this decision concerning bills of particulars and discovery and inspection, and at any time before trial. Each motion is opposed by the Government.

[Conspiracy and Monopoly Charged]

The indictment, in count 1, charges that defendants, and other co-conspirators not named as defendants, engaged in an unlawful combination and conspiracy, in restraint of interstate trade and commerce, in count 2 that they engaged in an unlawful combination to monopolize interstate trade and commerce, and in count 3 that they engaged in an attempt to monopolize interstate trade and commerce.

[Defendants]

Named as defendants are the following:

Greater Blouse, Skirt & Neckwear Contractors' Association, Inc. (hereinafter Greater), a New York corporation, claimed to be "an association whose members are contractors who produce, among other things, ladies' blouses and do business in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Connecticut";

Slate Belt Apparel Contractors' Association, Inc. (hereinafter Slate Belt), a Pennsylvania corporation, also claimed to be "an association whose members are contractors who produce ladies' blouses" and who do business in Pennsylvania and New York;

National Association of Blouse Manufacturers, Inc. (hereinafter National), a New York corporation, claimed to be "an association whose members are manufacturers or jobbers of ladies' blouses doing business in New York, New York";

Blouse and Waistmakers' Union, Local 25, International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union (hereinafter Local 25), claimed to be "a voluntary association, organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York" whose membership "consists of workers engaged in the production of ladies' blouses";

James Clemenza, employed by Greater since 1953 and its Executive Director since 1957;

I. Lloyd Cabin, alleged to have been "associated with either Greater or Slate Belt in an executive capacity" during the entire period of the indictment;

Charles Kreindler, alleged to have been the "Manager of Local 25 and a Vice President of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union" during the entire period covered by this indictment;

Abraham Rosenthal, claimed to have been President of National from in or about 1949, the beginning of the period covered by this indictment, to November 1950 and from November 1952 to September 1956;

Harry Strasser.

[Price Fixing, Allocating Market, and Exclusive Dealing]

The indictment charges the following:

In the ladies' blouse industry the term "contractor" refers to persons, firms or corporations "engaged in the business of producing ladies' blouses from uncut or cut material owned by the jobber or manufacturer for whom such person, firm or corporation is producing those blouses." A contractor, it is alleged, "owns the means of producing such blouses, hires labor and takes the risk of profit or loss in the conduct of his business." The terms "jobber" and "manufacturer" refer to a person, firm or corporation "engaged primarily in the business of selling ladies' blouses at wholesale, and who has some or all of those blouses produced by contractors."

"33. The aforesaid combination and conspiracy has consisted of a continuing agreement and concert of action among the defendants and co-conspirators, the substantial terms of which have been and are to: fix the prices the members of National would be required to pay to members of Greater and Slate Belt for blouse contracting work; allocate the blouse contracting work of members of National among the members of Greater and Slate Belt; require members of National to use members of Greater and Slate Belt exclusively to do blouse contracting work; establish a policing and enforcing system to prevent violations of the conspiracy; impose penalties or damages for violations of the conspiracy; and require manufacturers and jobbers of ladies blouses who were not members of National either to join National or to conform to the aforesaid terms of the conspiracy.

"34. During the period covered by the indictment the said combination and conspiracy has been effectuated by various means and methods including, among others, the following:

"(1) In 1949 Slate Belt was formed by a group of contractors in Pennsylvania. Late that year, some time in October, Slate Belt affiliated with Greater. Under their affiliation agreement, Slate Belt's members became members of Greater. And Slate Belt was bound by all agreements made, or to be made, by Greater with Local 25 and National.

"(2) At about the same time, Greater, National and Local 25 evolved a plan to stabilize the blouse industry in New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Connecticut. Carrying out this plan, Greater and National entered into an agreement in 1950 under the terms of which (1) prices to be paid contractors were fixed; (2) blouse contracting work of the members of National was allocated among the members of Greater and Slate Belt; (3) members of National were required to give their contracting work exclusively to members of Greater and Slate Belt; (4) members of Greater and Slate Belt were required to work exclusively for members of National; (5) an enforcement system through an industry Impartial Chairman was established.

"(3) In conjunction with the Greater-National agreement, Local 25 entered into separate agreements with National and Greater. These agreements provided that blouse contracting work of members of National was to be allocated among the members of Greater and Slate Belt; penalties were to be imposed upon members of National for violation of the allocation system; and an enforcement system was promulgated utilizing the same industry Impartial Chairman named in the Greater-National agreement.

© 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

"(4) All the above described agreements were in effect during the period 1950 through 1952. And during such period, Local 25 and National conducted a campaign to force non-member jobbers and manufacturers either to join National or to conform substantially with the terms of the Greater-National agreement. The Greater-National-Local 25-Slate Belt arrangements continued through 1952.

"(5) In 1953, however, Slate Belt, dissatisfied with its alliance with Greater, broke away from Greater. Slate Belt then entered into indepedent agreements with National and with locals of the ILGWU located in Pennsylvania. Slate Belt's agreement with National provided for a continuation of an allocation system, but it substantially changed the price fixing provisions of the 1950 Greater-National agreement. Greater also entered into separate contracts with National and with Local 25 providing for a continuation of an allocation scheme, but its new agreement with National also substantially changed the price fixing provisions of the 1950 Greater-National agreement. In this same period, National entered into an agreement with Local 25 continuing the allocation scheme specified in the 1950 National-Local 25 agreement. All of the 1953 agreements were to expire in late 1955 or early 1956.

"(6) In 1955, some months before these agreements were to expire, co-conspirator Northeast Department, ILGWU, refused to renew Slate Belt's independent agreements with its Pennsylvania locals. Slate Belt was informed that there would be only one union contract governing the contractors in the blouse industry, namely one between Local 25 and Greater. Thereafter, in the fall of 1955, Slate Belt again entered into a contract with Greater under which Slate Belt was bound by all agreements made, or to be made, by Greater with Local 25 and National. Defendant Harry Strasser, who had no apparent connection with the ladies' blouse industry, was instrumental in arranging Slate Belt's reaffiliation with Greater.

"(7) Following the rejoining of Greater and Slate Belt, Greater and National entered into negotiations for a new contract to replace the 1953 agreements which were to expire in early 1956. However, a dispute arose between Greater and National concerning the prices members of National would pay to members of Greater and Slate Belt for blouse contracting work, and the manner of fixing such prices. Defendant Harry Strasser played a major role in the settlement of this dispute. Growing out of this settlement Greater and National entered into an agreement which, among other things, provided for an effective system of price fixing, allocation of the blouse contracting work of National's members among the members of Greater and Slate Belt, and a requirement that members of National give their blouse contracting work exclusively to members of Greater and Slate Belt. Contemporaneously, Local 25 entered into agreements with Greater and National providing, among other things, for allocation of the blouse contracting work of National's members among the members of Greater and Slate Belt.

"(8) The 1956 agreements referred to above were effective at least until December 31, 1958. During this period organized policing of the industry was carried out by Greater, Local 25 and Slate Belt to enforce the price fixing and allocation provisions of the agreements. One of the results of this policing activity was that members of National, who contracted to have blouses made by members of Greater and Slate Belt at prices below those fixed in the 1956 Greater-National agreements, and without the prior approval of Greater and National, were forced to pay additional monies to the members of Greater and Slate Belt.

"35. The combination and conspiracy hereinbefore alleged has had the following effects, among others:

Manufacturers and jobbers of ladies blouses belonging to National have had to pay higher prices to the contractors—members of Greater and Slate Belt.

Manufacturers and jobbers of ladies blouses belonging to National have not been able to work with contractors of their own choosing.

Manufacturers and jobbers of ladies blouses belonging to National have not been able to distribute their work among contractors in the manner they desired.

Manufacturers and jobbers of ladies blouses, not members of National, have been brought into the conspiracy or made to abide by its terms.

Contractors producing ladies blouses, not members of Greater or Slate Belt, have been deprived of an opportunity to work for members of National.

Competition among contractors belonging to Greater and Slate Belt has been eliminated."

Paragraph 33 is made applicable to counts 1 and 2 and paragraphs 34 and 35 are made applicable to all three counts. The following discussion will deal with these motions in the order in which they were set forth at the outset of this opinion.

I. Defendant Strasser's Motion for Dismissal of the Indictment

[Public Injury]

Defendant Strasser attacks the legal sufficiency of the indictment on the grounds (1) that it "is fatally defective in that it has failed to allege an essential ingredient of the offense, namely, 'injury to the public'", (2) that "it is too vague and uncertain to inform defendant of the charge against him," and (3) that "all three counts are duplicitous."

Strasser expands his first contention to say that the indictment is defective because it fails to allege that the purpose or effect of the conspiracy was to raise or fix the market price or to cause harm to the consuming public. He says that the Supreme Court has said "in general, restraints upon competition have been condemned only when their purpose or effect was to raise or fix the market price." Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,039], 310 U. S. 469, 500. He also cites Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,025], 288 U. S. 344, 360, for the proposition that the > "mere fact that the parties to an agreement eliminate competition between themselves is not enough to condemn it."

The argument is that the Sherman Act condemns restraints upon competition only when their purpose or effect is to raise or fix the market price or result in harm to the consuming public, that proof of such purpose or effect is therefore essential to sustain a charge of violation, and that since there was no such allegation in the indictment the indictment is insufficient. Strasser's view of the elements necessary to sustain a Sherman Act violation is incorrect. The Supreme Court, in the Apex Hosiery Co. case, did indeed make the statement quoted above as to the necessity of effect on market price but that court has since limited its application in a case which also repudiated the requirement of public injury.

[Klor's Case]

In the recent case of Klor's v. Broadway-Hale Stores [1959 Trade Cases ¶ 69,316], 359 U. S. 207, a retail seller of household appliances brought an action for treble damages and an injunction against a chain of department stores and ten national manufacturers and their distributors claiming that the defendants conspired to restrain and monopolize commerce by agreeing among themselves either not to sell to plaintiff or "to sell to it only at discriminatory prices and highly unfavorable terms." 207 U. S. at 209. The defendants sought summary judgment and dismissal of the complaint for failure to state a cause of action, alleging that there were hundreds of other household appliance retailers selling the items which defendants refused to sell to plaintiff and arguing that the agreement of the defendants did not injure the public. The District Court dismissed the complaint and entered summary judgment for defendants [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,495] on the ground that this "purely private quarrel" did not amount to a "public wrong proscribed by the [Sherman] Act." The Ninth Circuit affirmed, stating that "a violation of the Sherman Act requires conduct of defendants by which the public is or conceivably may be ultimately injured." [1958 Trade Cases ¶ 69,007] 255 F. 2d 214, 233. On review by the Supreme Court the judgment was reversed and the case remanded for trial. The court held that a group boycott, such as was there alleged,

> "is not to be tolerated merely because the victim is just one merchant whose business is so small that his destruction makes little difference to the economy."

The complaint failed to allege any effect on market prices but the court required that its pronouncement on that subject in the Apex Hosiery case "be considered in the light of the fact that the defendant in that case was a labor union." 359 U. S. at 213, fn. 7. The complaint was therefore held to state a cause of action.

[Labor Union]

It is true that one of the defendants here is a labor union like the defendant in the © 1959, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.

Apex Hosiery case. That particular defendant has not joined in the motion to dismiss, however, so the question of its liability without an allegation of effect on market prices does not now arise. The indictment in this case alleges a group boycott like that in the Klor's case, or at least a concerted refusal by traders to deal with other traders which the Klor's opinion equates with group boycotts. Hence the indictment survives Strasser's motion to dismiss insofar as it is based on failure to allege effect on market prices or public injury.

[Vagueness and Uncertainty]

